

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

Incorporating the LAW TIMES REPORTS

LAW JOURNAL
REPORTS

1968
VOLUME 2

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases

CYRIL KING, Q.C.

Bencher of the Middle Temple

Editor

J. T. EDGERLEY

of the Inner Temple and Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law

LONDON

BUTTERWORTHS

ENGLAND: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (PUBLISHERS) LTD.
 LONDON: 88 Kingsway, W.C.2
AUSTRALIA: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (AUSTRALIA) LTD.
 SYDNEY: 20 Loftus Street
 MELBOURNE: 473 Bourke Street
 BRISBANE: 240 Queen Street
CANADA: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (CANADA) LTD.
 TORONTO: 14 Curity Avenue, 16
NEW ZEALAND: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (NEW ZEALAND) LTD.
 WELLINGTON: 49/51 Ballance Street
 AUCKLAND: 35 High Street
SOUTH AFRICA: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (SOUTH AFRICA) LTD.
 DURBAN: 33/35 Beach Grove

©
 Butterworth & Co (Publishers) Ltd.
 1968

HOUSE OF LORDS

THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF GREAT BRITAIN: THE RT. HON. LORD GARDINER

LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY

THE RT. HON. LORD REID
THE RT. HON. LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST
THE RT. HON. LORD HODSON
THE RT. HON. LORD GUEST

THE RT. HON. LORD PEARCE
THE RT. HON. LORD UPJOHN
THE RT. HON. LORD DONOVAN
THE RT. HON. LORD WILBERFORCE
THE RT. HON. LORD PEARSON

COURT OF APPEAL

THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF GREAT BRITAIN

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND: THE RT. HON. LORD PARKER

MASTER OF THE ROLLS: THE RT. HON. LORD DENNING

PRESIDENT OF THE PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION:

THE RT. HON. SIR JOCELYN SIMON

THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE WILLMER
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE HARMAN
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE DANCKWERTS
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE DAVIES
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE DIPLOCK
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE RUSSELL

THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE SALMON
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE WINN
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE SACHS
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE EDMUND DAVIES
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE WIDGERY
THE RT. HON. LORD JUSTICE FENTON ATKINSON

CHANCERY DIVISION

THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF GREAT BRITAIN

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE LLOYD-JACOB
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE CROSS
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE BUCKLEY
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE PENNYCUICK

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE PLOWMAN
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE UNGOED-THOMAS
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE STAMP
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE GOFF

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE MEGARRY

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND: THE RT. HON. LORD PARKER

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE STABLE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE ASHWORTH
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE HINCHCLIFFE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE PAULL
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE MELFORD STEVENSON
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE THESIGER
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE PHILLIMORE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE NIELD
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE HOWARD
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE VEALE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE MEGAW
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE LAWTON
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE MACKENNA
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE MOCATTA
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE THOMPSON
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE BRABIN
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE ROSKILL
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE LYELL
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE JOHN STEPHENSON

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE MILMO
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE CANTLEY
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE BROWNE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE WALLER
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE JAMES
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE BLAIN
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE CUSACK
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE CHAPMAN
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE WILLIS
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE SWANWICK
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE DONALDSON
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE GEOFFREY LANE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE O'CONNOR
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE CRICHTON
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE COOKE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE FISHER
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE CAULFIELD
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE BRIDGE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE SHAW

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

PRESIDENT: THE RT. HON. SIR JOCELYN SIMON

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE KARMINSKI
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE WRANGHAM
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE LLOYD-JONES
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE CAIRNS
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE BAKER
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE ORMROD
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE REES
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE PAYNE

THE HON. MR. JUSTICE FAULKS
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE STIRLING
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE CUMMING-BRUGE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE LATEY
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE PARK
THE HON. MRS. JUSTICE LANE
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE ORR
THE HON. MR. JUSTICE BRANDON

REPORTERS

HOUSE OF LORDS	S. A. HATTEEA, Esq.	Barrister-at-Law
PRIVY COUNCIL	S. A. HATTEEA, Esq.	Barrister-at-Law
COURT OF APPEAL [CIVIL DIVISION]	 F. GUTTMAN, Esq.  F. A. AMIES, Esq.  HENRY SUMMERFIELD, Esq. 	Barristers-at-Law
COURT OF APPEAL [CRIMINAL DIVISION]	N. P. METCALFE, Esq.	Barrister-at-Law
COURTS-MARTIAL APPEALS	N. P. METCALFE, Esq.	Barrister-at-Law
CHANCERY DIVISION	 JENIFER SANDELL  JACQUELINE METCALFE  R. W. FARRIN, Esq. 	Barristers-at-Law
QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION and COURTS OF ASSIZE	 M. DENISE CHORLTON  J. M. COLLINS, Esq.  MARY COLTON  K. B. EDWARDS, Esq.  T. M. EVANS, Esq.  D. M. HUGHES, Esq.  GWYNEDD LEWIS  DEIRDRE MCKINNEY  OM. P. MIDHA, Esq.  K. DIANA PHILLIPS  BRIAN POCOCK, Esq.  KAUSHALYA PURIE  ELLEN B. SOLOMONS 	Barristers-at-Law
RATING CASES	F. A. AMIES, Esq.	Barrister-at-Law
REVENUE CASES	F. A. AMIES, Esq.	Barrister-at-Law
PROBATE AND DIVORCE	ALICE BLOOMFIELD	Barrister-at-Law
ADMIRALTY	N. P. METCALFE, Esq.	Barrister-at-Law
RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES COURT	MARY COLTON	Barrister-at-Law

CITATION

These reports are cited thus:

[1968] 2 All E.R.

REFERENCES

These reports contain references, which follow after the headnotes, to the following major works of legal reference described in the manner indicated below—

HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, SIMONDS EDITION

The reference 2 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 20, para. 48, refers to paragraph 48 on page 20 of Volume 2 of the third edition of Halsbury's Laws of England, of which Viscount Simonds is Editor-in-Chief.

HALSBURY'S STATUTES OF ENGLAND, SECOND EDITION

The reference 26 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 138, refers to page 138 of Volume 26 of the second edition of Halsbury's Statutes.

ENGLISH AND EMPIRE DIGEST

References are to the "Blue-Band" volumes of the Digest, and to the Continuation Volumes of the "Blue-Band" or replacement volumes.

The reference 31 DIGEST (Repl.) 244, 3794, refers to case No. 3794 on page 244 of Digest Replacement Volume 31.

The reference DIGEST (Cont. Vol. B) 287, 7540b, refers to case No. 7540b on page 287 of Digest Continuation Volume B.

HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

The reference 12 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS 124, refers to page 124 of Volume 12 of Halsbury's Statutory Instruments, first edition.

A reference to a volume as "1st Re-issue" refers to the first re-issue of the appropriate volume of Halsbury's Statutory Instruments; references to subsequent re-issues are similar.

ENCYCLOPAEDIA OF FORMS AND PRECEDENTS

The reference 15 ENCY. FORMS & PRECEDENTS (3rd Edn.) 938, Form 231, refers to Form 231 on page 938 of Volume 15 of the third edition, and the reference 7 ENCY. FORMS & PRECEDENTS (4th Edn.) 247, Form 12, refers to Form 12 on page 247 of Volume 7 of the fourth edition, of the Encyclopaedia of Forms and Precedents.

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME 2

	PAGE		PAGE
A. (AN INFANT), Re [CH.D. AND C.A.]	145	CALLINAN, HAMBLETON v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	943
A.M.F. INTERNATIONAL, LTD. v. MAGNET BOWLING, LTD. [Q.B.D.]	789	CARASU, LTD. v. SMITH [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	529
ABADESA, THE [ADM.]	726	CARBERRY v. DAVIES [C.A.]	817
ABBOTT LABORATORIES, LTD. v. CARMODY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [CH.D.]	879	CARL-ZEISS-STIFTUNG v. HERBERT SMITH & Co. (A FIRM) [C.A.]	1002
ADAMSON, FOX v. [H.L.]	411	CARL-ZEISS-STIFTUNG v. HERBERT SMITH & Co. (A FIRM) (No. 2) [CH.D.]	1233
ADEDIGBA, Ex parte . R. v. BOW ROAD DOMESTIC PROCEEDINGS COURT [C.A.]	89	CARMODY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), ABBOTT LABORATORIES, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	879
ALBION STREET (22), WESTMINSTER, Re [C.A.]	960	CARTWRIGHT v. POST OFFICE [Q.B.D.]	646
ALTMANN, FORSPAN v. [CH.D.]	760	CHAMBERLAIN (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), WISDOM v. [CH.D.]	714
AMOCO (U.K.), LTD., CHATSWORTH INVESTMENTS, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	288	CHAPMAN v. EARL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1214
ANDREWS, THOMPSON v. [C.A.]	419	CHAPMAN v. WEEKES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1214
ANGEL, R. v. [C.A.]	607	CHATSWORTH INVESTMENTS, LTD. v. AMOCO (U.K.), LTD. [CH.D.]	288
APPLEBY v. SLEEP [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	265	CHAUDHURI, JACOBS v. [C.A.]	124
ASTLEY INDUSTRIAL TRUST, LTD. v. MILLER (OAKES, THIRD PARTY) [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	36	CLARK, Ex parte . R. v. UXBRIDGE JUSTICES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	992
AUSTIN (F.) (LEYTON), LTD. v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE [CH.D.]	13	CLEGG, A DEBTOR (No. 12 OF 1958), Re , Ex parte THE TRUSTEE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE DEBTOR v. [CH.D.]	425
B.R.B. v. J.B. [C.A.]	1023	COHEN v. DAILY TELEGRAPH, LTD. [C.A.]	407
BAKER, SCOTT v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	993	COLMAN (J. & J.), LTD. v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE [C.A.]	832
BAKER v. WILLOUGHBY [Q.B.D.]	236	COMMISSIONER OF STAMP DUTIES, THOMPSON v. [P.C.]	896
BALL'S SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	438	COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE, AUSTIN (F.) (LEYTON), LTD. v. [CH.D.]	13
BAMFORD v. BAMFORD [CH.D.]	655	COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE, COLMAN (J. & J.), LTD. v. [C.A.]	832
BANDAR PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. DARWEN (J. S.) (SUCCESSORS), LTD. [Q.B.D.]	305	COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE, GALLAHER, LTD. v. [C.A.]	820
BANFIELD ( decd. ), Re [CH.D.]	276	CONWAY v. RIMMER [H.L.]	304
BARCLAY, R. v. [C.A.]	53	COROCRAFT, LTD. v. PAN AMERICAN AIRWAYS, INC. [Q.B.D.]	1059
BARRUS (E. P.) (CONCESSIONAIRES), LTD., ROCKWELL MACHINE TOOL CO., LTD. v. [CH.D.]	98	COVELL v. SWEETLAND [Q.B.D.]	1016
BELL, HEATON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [C.A.]	1156	CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (No. 3), SEL ANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1073
BELL v. INGHAM [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	333	CRESSWELL (TRUSTEES OF THE COBBETT SETTLEMENT) v. PROCTOR (TRUSTEES OF THE CONVENT OF THE HOLY FAMILY) [C.A.]	682
BELTON (S. T.) (TRACTORS), LTD., TEHERAN-ETROPE CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	886	CRITTENDEN, PARTRIDGE v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	421
BENNETT, R. v. [C.A.]	753	CUMMERS, R. v. [C.A.]	863
BERRY, BERSSEL MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	552	DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD. v. GARDNER [C.A.]	163
BERSSEL MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. v. BERRY [H.L.]	552	DAILY TELEGRAPH, LTD, COHEN v. [C.A.]	407
BEVERLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL, WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. [Q.B.D.]	104	DALE, R. v. [C.A.]	77
—, [C.A.]	1199	D'ARCY, MANN v. [CH.D.]	172
BILLS v. ROE [C.A.]	636	DARWEN (J. S.) (SUCCESSORS), LTD., BANDAR PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. [Q.B.D.]	305
BISSON, Ex parte . R. v. LEICESTER LICENSING JUSTICES (Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.)	351	DASS (AN INFANT) v. MASH [C.A.]	226
BLACK (THOMAS), LTD., HAVENHAND v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1037	DAVIDSON, SELDON v. [C.A.]	755
BLACKBURN (No. 2), Ex parte . R. v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR. [C.A.]	319	DAVIES, CARBERRY v. [C.A.]	817
BLACKBURN, OAK CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING SOCIETY v. [C.A.]	117	DEBTOR (No. 12 OF 1958), Re A. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE DEBTOR v. CLEGG [CH.D.]	425
BOARD OF TRADE, BRITISH OXYGEN CO., LTD. v. [CH.D.]	177	DEOKINANAN v. REGINAM [P.C.]	346
BOND, R. v. [C.A.]	1040	DIAMOND v. GRAHAM [C.A.]	909
BONE, E. v. [C.A.]	644	DICKSON, PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN v. [H.L.]	686
BOW ROAD DOMESTIC PROCEEDINGS COURT, R. v. Ex parte ADEDIGBA [C.A.]	89	DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS, SELVEY v. [H.L.]	497
BOWATER PAPER CORPN., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	936	DODD, ROGERS v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	22
BOWATER PAPER CORPN., LTD. v. MURGATROYD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [C.A.]	936	DONNELLY (FREDERICK), LTD., NORTHCOTE LAUNDRY, LTD. v. [C.A.]	50
BRANDISH v. POOLE [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	31	DUFFIN, TROTTER v. [CH.D.]	618
BRASSEY, LLOYD v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1228	DUNCAN ( decd. ), Re [PROB.]	395
BRAVDA v. BRAVDA [C.A.]	217	DUNNING & SON, LTD., WINDLE v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	46
BRAVDA ( decd. ), IN THE ESTATE OF [C.A.]	217	DURHAM FANCY GOODS, LTD. v. MICHAEL JACKSON (FANCY GOODS), LTD. [Q.B.D.]	987
BRISTOL RENT ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, R. v. Ex parte EARL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1214	EARL, CHAPMAN v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1214
BRITISH OXYGEN CO., LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE [CH.D.]	177	EARL, Ex parte . R. v. BRISTOL RENT ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1214
BRITISH RAILWAYS BOARD, KEANEY v. [C.A.]	532	ELECTROCHROME, LTD. v. WELSH PLASTICS, LTD. [GLAMORGAN ASSIZES]	205
BROWN v. BROWN [DIV.]	11	ELIA, R. v. [C.A.]	587
BROWN v. THOMPSON [C.A.]	708
BURGESS, R. v. [C.A.]	54
BURNSIDE v. HARRISON MARKS PRODUCTIONS, LTD. [C.A.]	286
CALLAGHAN (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), INGRAM (J. G.) & SON, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	918

	PAGE
ELVAN REINFORCED CONCRETE CO., LTD., KEATING v. [C.A.]	139
EMANUEL v. SMITH [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	529
ENFIELD (LONDON BOROUGH) v. LAVENDER GARDEN PROPERTIES, LTD. [C.A.]	401
EVANS, POPE v. [CH.D.]	743
F. v. F. [C.A.]	946
F.A. & A.B., LTD., LUPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [CH.D.]	1042
FAY, GARFIELD v. [PROB.]	395
FEENEY v. RIX [CH.D.]	569
FEJTEK'S (V. J.) OPPOSITION, Re, No. 13202 [CH.D.]	913
FISHER & LUDLOW, LTD., THORNTON v. [C.A.]	241
FLEMING (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. LONDON PRODUCE CO., LTD. [CH.D.]	975
FORSYTH v. ALTMANN [CH.D.]	760
FOX v. ADAMSON [H.L.]	411
GABLE CONSTRUCTION CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	968
GALLAHER, LTD. v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE [C.A.]	820
GALLIE v. LEE [CH.D.]	322
GARDNER, DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	163
GARFIELD v. FAY [PROB.]	395
GATLAND v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	100
GEORGE (LLOYD D.) & PARTNERS, LTD., JAUQUES v. [C.A.]	187
GIBSON v. UNION OF SHOP, DISTRIBUTIVE AND ALLIED WORKERS [CH.D.]	252
GIBSON, Ex parte , R. v. LLANDRINDOD WELLS JUSTICES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	20
GILBERT & PARTNERS (A FIRM) v. KNIGHT [C.A.]	248
GLOUCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. RICHARDSON [H.L.]	1181
GOLDSTEIN, MANN v. [CH.D.]	769
GOODCHILD v. GREATNESS TIMBER CO., LTD. [C.A.]	255
GOVSAMI, R. v. [C.A.]	24
GRAHAM, DIAMOND v. [C.A.]	909
GREATNESS TIMBER CO., LTD., GOODCHILD v. [C.A.]	255
GREEN, R. v. [C.A.]	77
GREYHOUND RACING ASSOCIATION, LTD., PETT v. [C.A.]	545
GRIMSDALE & SONS, LTD., HOLLAND COLOMBO TRADING SOCIETY, LTD. v. [H.L.]	444
GRIMSDALE & SONS, LTD. v. SUFFOLK AGRICULTURAL AND POULTRY PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION, LTD. [H.L.]	444
GUNNELL, WEST PENWITH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. [C.A.]	1005
HAGUE, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	1252
HAKLUYTT v. HAKLUYTT [C.A.]	868, 1022
HALL, MILK MARKETING BOARD v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	259
HALL, R. v. [C.A.]	1009
HAMBLETON v. CALLINAN [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	943
HANIE v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS [CH.D. and C.A.]	145
HANLEY SECURITIES, LTD. v. MALLETT [C.A.]	960
HARRIS, R. v. [C.A.]	49
HARRISON MARKS PRODUCTIONS, LTD., BURNSIDE v. [C.A.]	286
HARVEST LANE MOTOR BODIES, LTD., Re [CH.D.]	1012
HASTINGS LICENSING JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte LOVBOND (JOHN) & SONS, LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	270
HAVENHAND v. BLACK (THOMAS), LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1037
HEATON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BELL [C.A.]	1156
HIRD v. SMITH [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	529
HOLLAND COLOMBO TRADING SOCIETY, LTD. v. GRIMSDALE & SONS, LTD. [H.L.]	444
HOOD, R. v. [C.A.]	56
HUGHES, R. v. [C.A.]	53
HUNT, R. v. [C.A.]	1056
HUNTER v. SMITH'S DOCK CO., LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	81
INGHAM, BELL v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	333
INGRAM (J. G.) & SON, LTD. v. CALLAGHAN (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [CH.D.]	918
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., BOWATER PAPER CORPN., LTD. v. [C.A.]	936
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., GABLE CONSTRUCTION CO., LTD. v. [CH.D.]	968
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. HAGUE [C.A.]	1252
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. LONDON PRODUCE CO., LTD. [CH.D.]	975
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., MACPHERSON v. [CH.D.]	1241

	PAGE
INTRODUCTIONS, LTD. v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. [CH.D.]	1221
INTRODUCTIONS, LTD., Re [CH.D.]	1221
J.B., B.R.B. v. [C.A.]	1023
JACOBS v. CHAUDHURI [C.A.]	124
JACOBS v. LLOYD D. GEORGE & PARTNERS, LTD. [C.A.]	187
JONES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), SIMPSON v. [CH.D.]	929
KEANEY v. BRITISH RAILWAYS BOARD [C.A.]	532
KEATING v. ELVAN REINFORCED CONCRETE CO., LTD. [C.A.]	139
KENDALL (HENRY) & SONS (A FIRM) v. LILLICO (WILLIAM) & SONS, LTD. [H.L.]	444
KING v. REGINAM [P.C.]	610
KNIGHT, GILBERT & PARTNERS (A FIRM) v. [C.A.]	248
KNOTT, MOHAMED v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	363
LADYMAN v. WIRRAL ESTATES, LTD. [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	197
LAIRD, R. v. [C.A.]	77
LAVENDER GARDEN PROPERTIES, LTD., LONDON BOROUGH OF ENFIELD v. [C.A.]	401
LEE, GALLIE v. [CH.D.]	322
LEE-LEVITEN, MARLTON (AN INFANT) v. [C.A.]	874
LEICESTER LICENSING JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte BISSON [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	351
LIHW SAI WAH v. PUBLIC PROSECUTOR [P.C.]	738
LILLICO (WILLIAM) & SONS, LTD., KENDALL (HENRY) & SONS (A FIRM) v. [H.L.]	444
LITTLER v. LIVERPOOL CORPN. [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	343
LIVERPOOL CORPN., LITTLER v. [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	343
LLANDRINDOD WELLS JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte GIBSON [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	20
LLOYD v. BRASLEY [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1228
LYDDYD BANK, LTD. v. SMITH [CH.D.]	276
LONDON BOROUGH OF ENFIELD v. LAVENDER GARDEN PROPERTIES, LTD. [C.A.]	401
LONDON PRODUCE CO., LTD., FLEMING (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [CH.D.]	975
LONDON PRODUCE CO., LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [CH.D.]	975
LONGMAN, R. v. [C.A.]	761
LOPES v. VAJAPPA CHETTIAR [P.C.]	136
LOVBOND (JOHN) & SONS, LTD., Ex parte , R. v. HASTINGS LICENSING JUSTICES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	270
LUPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. F.A. & A.B., LTD. [CH.D.]	1042
LYCETT, R. v. [C.A.]	1021
MCGREGOR (ROBERT) AND SONS, LTD., ROE v. [C.A.]	686
MACKENZIE, WAKEHAM v. [CH.D.]	753
MCNAMAN CHILDS, LTD., YOUNG AND MARTEN, LTD. v. [H.L.]	1169
MACPHERSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	1241
MAGNET BOWLING, LTD., A.M.F. INTERNATIONAL, LTD. v. [Q.B.D.]	780
MALLETT HANLEY SECURITIES, LTD. v. [C.A.]	960
MANN v. D'ARCY [CH.D.]	172
MANN v. GOLDSTEIN [CH.D.]	769
MARFANI & CO., LTD. v. MIDLAND BANK, LTD. [C.A.]	573
MARLTON (AN INFANT) v. LEE-LEVITEN [C.A.]	874
MARSDEN, R. v. [C.A.]	341
MASIH, DASS (AN INFANT) v. [C.A.]	226
MAURICE (C.) & CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF LABOUR [C.A.]	1030
MAXWELLS OF EMSWORTH, LTD., MOORE v. [C.A.]	779
MECCA, THE [ADM.]	731
METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR., GATLAND v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	100
METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR., R. v. Ex parte BLACKBURN (No. 2) [C.A.]	319
METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR., WARNER v. [H.L.]	356
METROPOLITAN PROPERTIES CO., LTD. v. NOBLE [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	313
MICHAEL JACKSON (FANCY GOODS), LTD., DURHAM FANCY GOODS, LTD. v. [Q.B.D.]	987
MIDLAND BANK, LTD., MARFANI & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	573
MILLARD v. TURVEY [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	7
MILLER (OAKES, THIRD PARTY), ASTLEY INDUSTRIAL TRUST, LTD. v. [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	36
MILLER (T.A.), LTD. v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT [C.A.]	633
MILK MARKETING BOARD v. HALL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	259
MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT, T. A. MILLER, LTD. v. [C.A.]	633
MINISTER OF LABOUR, MAURICE (C.) & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	1030

MOHAMED v. KNOTT [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	563
MOORE v. MAXWELLS OF EMSWORTH, LTD. [C.A.]	779
MURGATROYD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), BOWATER PAPER CORPN. LTD. v. [C.A.]	936
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, PICKLES v. [C.A.]	598
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, Ex parte , R. v. TRENT RIVER AUTHORITY [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	273
NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD., INTRODUCTIONS, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	1221
NIXON, R. v. [C.A.]	33
NOBLE, METROPOLITAN PROPERTIES CO., LTD. v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	313
NORTH WESTERN GAS BOARD, PEARSON v. [MANCHESTER ASSIZES].	669
NORTHCOTE LAUNDRY, LTD. v. DONNELLY (FREDERICK), LTD. [C.A.]	50
NORTON-RADSTOCK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, RADSTOCK CO-OPERATIVE & INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, LTD. v. [C.A.]	59
NORWOOD (W.) & SONS, LTD., WARDAR'S (IMPORT & EXPORT) CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	602
OAK CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING SOCIETY v. BLACKBURN [C.A.]	117
OAKES, THIRD PARTY, ASTLEY INDUSTRIAL TRUST, LTD. v. MILLER [LIVERPOOL ASSIZES]	36
OSGERBY v. RUSHTON [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1196
OTTEWELL, R. v. [C.A.]	593
PAN AMERICAN AIRWAYS, INC., COROCRAFT, LTD. v. [Q.B.D.]	1059
PARADISE MOTOR CO., LTD., Re [C.A.]	625
PARSELY, SWEET v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	337
PARTRIDGE v. CRITTENDEN [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	421
PEARSON v. NORTH WESTERN GAS BOARD [MANCHESTER ASSIZES].	669
PETT v. GREYHOUND RACING ASSOCIATION, LTD. [C.A.]	545
PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN v. DICKSON [H.L.]	686
PHILLIPS, RICHARDS v. [C.A.]	859
PICKLES v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD [C.A.]	598
POOLE, BRANDISH v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	31
POPLE v. EVANS [CH.D.]	743
POST OFFICE, CARTWRIGHT v. [Q.B.D.]	646
PRACTICE DIRECTION (CHANCERY DIVISION: COSTS: REVIEW OF TAXATION) [CH.D.]	635
PRACTICE DIRECTION (CRIMINAL LAW: TRIAL: PLEA OF GUILTY) [C.A.]	144
PRACTICE DIRECTION (DIVORCE: COUNTY COURT LIST: NOTICE OF SETTING DOWN) [DIV.]	123
PRACTICE DIRECTION (DIVORCE: FORM OF PETITION) [DIV.]	88
PRACTICE DIRECTION (DIVORCE: LEGAL AID: COSTS: TAXATION) [DIV.]	443
PRACTICE DIRECTION (DIVORCE: PRACTICE: AGREEMENT BETWEEN PARTIES) [DIV.]	841
PRACTICE DIRECTION (HUSBAND AND WIFE: APPEAL: DELAY) [DIV.]	247
PRACTICE DIRECTION (HUSBAND AND WIFE: MATRIMONIAL HOME) [DIV.]	135
PRACTICE DIRECTION (HUSBAND AND WIFE: PROPERTY) [DIV.]	116
PRACTICE DIRECTION (OFFICIAL REFEREES: PRACTICE: REFERENCE TO REFEREE)	1213
PRACTICE DIRECTION (PROBATE: OMISSION OF WORDS FROM PROBATE OF WILL) [PROB.]	592
PRICE, R. v. [C.A.]	282
PRIOR (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), WOOD PRESERVA- TION, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	849
PROCEDURE DIRECTION (HOUSE OF LORDS: COSTS) [H.L.]	606
PROCTOR (TRUSTEES OF THE CONVENT OF THE HOLY FAMILY), CRESSWELL (TRUSTEES OF THE COBBETT SETTLEMENT) v. [C.A.]	682
PUBLIC PROSECUTOR, LIEW SAH WAH v. [P.C.]	738
R. v. ANGEL [C.A.]	607
R. v. BARCLAY [C.A.]	53
R. v. BENNETT [C.A.]	653
R. v. BOND [C.A.]	1040
R. v. BONE [C.A.]	644
R. v. BOW ROAD DOMESTIC PROCEEDINGS COURT, Ex parte ADEDIGBA [C.A.]	89
R. v. BRISTOL RENT ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, Ex parte EARL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1214
R. v. BURGESS [C.A.]	54
R. v. CUMMERSON [C.A.]	863
R. v. DALE [C.A.]	77
R. v. EMIA [C.A.]	587
R. v. GOSWAMI [C.A.]	24
R. v. GREEN [C.A.]	77
R. v. HALL [C.A.]	1009
R. v. HARRIS [C.A.]	49
R. v. HASTINGS LICENSING JUSTICES, Ex parte LOVIBOND (JOHN) & SONS, LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	270

R. v. HOOD [C.A.]	56
R. v. HUGHES [C.A.]	53
R. v. HUNT [C.A.]	1056
R. v. LAIRD [C.A.]	77
R. v. LEICESTER LICENSING JUSTICES, Ex parte BISSON [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	351
R. v. LLANDRINDOD WELLS JUSTICES, Ex parte GIBSON [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	20
R. v. LONGMAN [C.A.]	761
R. v. LYCETT [C.A.]	1021
R. v. MARSDEN [C.A.]	341
R. v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR., Ex parte BLACKBURN (No. 2) [C.A.]	319
R. v. NIXON [C.A.]	33
R. v. OTTEWELL [C.A.]	593
R. v. PRICE [C.A.]	282
R. v. R. [DIV.]	608
R. v. REYNOLDS [C.A.]	77
R. v. RICHARDSON [C.A.]	761
R. v. SALTER [C.A.]	951
R. v. SHILLINGFORD [C.A.]	200
R. v. SMITH (JOAN) [C.A.]	115
R. v. TRENT RIVER AUTHORITY, Ex parte NATIONAL COAL BOARD [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	273
R. v. UXBRIDGE JUSTICES, Ex parte CLARK [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	992
R. v. VANDERWALL [C.A.]	200
R. v. WALLETT [C.A.]	296
R. v. WEEKES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1214
RADSTOCK CO-OPERATIVE & INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, LTD. v. NORTON-RADSTOCK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL [C.A.]	59
REGINAM, DEOKINANAN v. [P.C.]	346
REGINAM, KING v. [P.C.]	610
REYNOLDS, R. v. [C.A.]	77
RICHARDS v. PHILLIPS [C.A.]	859
RICHARDSON, GLOUCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. [H.L.]	1181
RICHARDSON, R. v. [C.A.]	761
RIMMER, CONWAY v. [H.L.]	304
RIX, FRENEY v. [CH.D.]	569
ROCKWELL MACHINE TOOL CO., LTD. v. BARRUS (E.P.) (CONCESSIONAIRES), LTD. [CH.D.]	98
ROE, BILLS v. [C.A.]	636
ROE v. ROBERT MCGREGOR AND SONS, LTD. [C.A.]	636
ROGERS v. DODD [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	22
RUSHTON, OSGERBY v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1196
RUSSELL (J.) ELECTRONICS, LTD., Re [CH.D.]	559
S. (N.) (AN INFANT), Re [CH.D. AND C.A.]	145
SALTER, R. v. [C.A.]	951
SCOTT v. BAKER [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	993
SEARS v. SMITHS FOOD GROUP, LTD. [Q.B.D.]	721
SECRETARY OF STATE FOR DEFENCE v. WARN [H.L.]	300
SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS, HANIF v. [CH.D. AND C.A.]	145
SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS, SINGH v. [CH.D. AND C.A.]	145
SELANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (No. 3) [CH.D.]	1073
SELDON v. DAVIDSON [C.A.]	755
SELVEY v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS [H.L.]	497
SHILLINGFORD, R. v. [C.A.]	200
SHOUCAIR, UNITED DOMINIONS CORPN. (JAMAICA), LTD. v. [P.C.]	904
SIMPSON v. JONES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [CH.D.]	929
SINGH v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS [CH.D. AND C.A.]	145
SLEEP, APPLEBY v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	265
SMITH, CARASU, LTD. v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	529
SMITH (HERBERT) & CO. (A FIRM), CARL-ZEISS- STIFTUNG v. [C.A.]	1002
SMITH (HERBERT) & CO. (A FIRM) (No. 2), CARL- ZEISS-STIFTUNG v. [CH.D.]	1233
SMITH, EMANUEL v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	529
SMITH, HIRD v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	529
SMITH, LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	276
SMITH (JOAN), R. v. [C.A.]	115
SMITH'S DOCK CO., LTD., HUNTER v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	81
SMITHS FOOD GROUP, LTD., SEARS v. [Q.B.D.]	721
STAINES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL'S AGREE- MENT, Re [CH.D.]	1
STAINES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, TRIGGS v. [CH.D.]	1
STATUTE OF LIBERTY, THE [ADM.]	195
STREDOCESKA FRUTA NARODNI PODNIK'S APPLI- CATION, Re No. B.836429 [CH.D.]	913
SUFFOLK AGRICULTURAL AND POULTRY PRO- DUCERS ASSOCIATION, LTD., GRIMSDALE & SONS, LTD. v. [H.L.]	444
SWEET v. PARSEY [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	337
SWEETLAND, COVELL v. [Q.B.D.]	1016

	PAGE		PAGE
TEHERAN-EUROPE CO., LTD. v. BELTON (S.T.)		WARNER v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR. [H.L.]	356
(TRACTORS), LTD. [C.A.]	886	WEEKES, CHAPMAN v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	214
THOMPSON v. ANDREWS [C.A.]	419	WEEKES, R. v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	214
THOMPSON, BROWN v. [C.A.]	708	WEIR'S SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	1241
THOMPSON v. COMMISSIONER OF STAMP DUTIES		WELSH PLASTICS, LTD., ELECTROCHROME, LTD.
[P.C.]	896	v. [GLAMORGAN ASSIZES]	205
THORNTON v. FISHER & LUDLOW, LTD. [C.A.]	241	WEST PENWITH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v.
TICKLE v. TICKLE [DIV.]	154	GUNNELL [C.A.]	1005
TRENT RIVER AUTHORITY, R. v. Ex parte		WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. BEVERLEY
NATIONAL COAL BOARD [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	273	BOROUGH COUNCIL [Q.B.D.]	104
TRIGGS v. STAINES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL		[C.A.]	1199
[CH.D.]	1	WESTON, WHITE v. [C.A.]	842
TROTTER v. DUFFIN [CH.D.]	618	WHESOE, LTD. AND SHELL REFINING CO., LTD.,
TURVEY, MILLARD v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	7	WALTERS v. [C.A.]	816n
UNION OF SHOP, DISTRIBUTIVE AND ALLIED		WHITE v. WESTON [C.A.]	842
WORKERS, GIBSON v. [CH.D.]	252	WILLOUGHBY, BAKER v. [Q.B.D.]	236
UNITED DOMINIONS CORPN. (JAMAICA), LTD. v.		WINDLE v. DUNNING & SON, LTD. [Q.B.D. DIVL.
SHOUCAIR [P.C.]	904	CT.]	46
UXBRIDGE JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte CLARK		WIRRAL ESTATES, LTD., LADYMAN v. [LIVERPOOL
[Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	992	ASSIZES]	197
VALLIAPPA CHETTIAR, LOPES v. [P.C.]	136	WISDOM v. CHAMBERLAIN (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)
VANDERWALL, R. v. [C.A.]	200	[CH.D.]	714
VICKERS & BOTT, LTD., Re [CH.D.]	264	WOOD PRESERVATION, LTD. v. PRIOR (INSPECTOR
WAKEHAM v. MACKENZIE [CH.D.]	783	OF TAXES) [CH.D.]	849
WALLACE'S SETTLEMENTS, Re [CH.D.]	209	WOOTTON'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	618
WALLETT, R. v. [C.A.]	296	WORLD BEAUTY, THE [ADM.]	673
WALTERS v. WHESOE, LTD. AND SHELL REFIN-		YOUNG AND MARTEN, LTD. v. McMANUS CHILDS,
ING CO., LTD. [C.A.]	816n	LTD. [H.L.]	1169
WARDAR'S (IMPORT & EXPORT) CO., LTD. v.		ZIMMER MANUFACTURING CO., ZIMMER ORTHO-
NORWOOD (W.) & SONS, LTD. [C.A.]	602	PAEDIC, LTD. v. [CH.D.]	309
WARN, SECRETARY OF STATE FOR DEFENCE v.		ZIMMER ORTHOPAEDIC, LTD. v. ZIMMER MANU-
[H.L.]	300	FACTURING CO. [CH.D.]	309

INDEX

PAGE

APPOINTMENT

Fraud on power—Variation of trusts. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Variation of trusts by the court—Power of appointment).

APPORTIONMENT

Contributory negligence—Apportionment of responsibility. See NEGLIGENCE (Contributory negligence).

ARCHITECT

Independent contractor—Engaged to render services under architect employed by company associated with building owner—Whether firm of architects so engaged were independent contractors [A.M.F. INTERNATIONAL, LTD. v. MAGNET BOWLING, LTD.] . . . . . 789

Instructions—R.I.B.A. contract. See BUILDING CONTRACT (Sub contractors).

Remuneration—Quantum meruit—Existing contract for lump sum fee—Additional work. See CONTRACT (Quantum meruit—Existing contract).

ATTEMPT

Sentence. See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence).

ATTESTATION

Will. See WILL.

AUCTION

Bid—Dispute—When auctioneer may properly act on the footing that there is a "dispute respecting a bid"—What constitutes a bid—Necessity for bid to be communicated to auctioneer—National Conditions of Sale (17th Edn.) Condition 2 (3) [RICHARD v. PHILLIPS] . . . . . 859

AUDIENCE

Tribunal—Party's right to be legally represented. See TRIBUNAL (Procedure—Legal representation).

AUSTRALIA

See PRIVY COUNCIL.

BANK

Cheque—Conversion—Protection of bank acting in good faith and without negligence—New customer opening account using assumed name of payee of cheque—Reference of trustworthiness given to bank—Passport not required—Sufficiency of bank's enquiries and practice—Cheques Act, 1957 (c. 36), s. 4 (1) [MARFANI & Co., LTD. v. MIDLAND BANK, LTD.] . . . . . 573

Holder for value. See BILL OF EXCHANGE (Holder for value).

Duty of care—Contractual duty to customer to exercise care and skill—Mandate from company to pay cheques signed by directors does not relieve bank from duty of care in respect of such cheques—Whether conviction that answer given to enquiry would be false excuses making enquiry—Take-over bids—Absence of instructions to branch officials regarding transactions connected with take-over bids—Knowledge attributable to bank of misapplication of company's funds in acquisition of its own shares in a take-over transaction [SELANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (NO. 3)] . . . . . 1073

Justifiable assumption of honesty of explanation given—Whether bank liable in equity as constructive trustee or at common law for not making further enquiry [SELANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (NO. 3)] . . . . . 1073

BANKRUPTCY

Inquiry as to debtor's dealings and property—Summons to persons deemed capable of giving information—Discharged bankrupt—Summons to his personal representatives after his death—Executors were former partner of bankrupt, his accountant and his solicitor—Statement rendered by discharged bankrupt in his lifetime containing material for inquiry—Whether jurisdiction to make order against executors—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 25 (1)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952 No. 2113), r. 236 [Re A DEBTOR (NO. 12 OF 1953). Ex parte THE TRUSTEE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE DEBTOR v. CLEGG] . . . . . 425

Offences—Failure to give satisfactory explanation of manner of incurring substantial loss of part of bankrupt's estate—Bankrupt having been engaged in trade or business and having debts contracted in course of trade or business outstanding at date of receiving order—Whether absolute offence—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 157 (1) (c) [R. v. SALTER] . . . . . 951

BARRISTER

See COUNSEL.

BASTARDY

Affiliation proceedings. See AFFILIATION.

BILL OF EXCHANGE

Company—Name—Misdescription. See COMPANY (Name—Use of name).

Holder for value—Value given for cheque—Consideration not passing directly between holder and drawer—Whether drawer of cheque deemed holder for value as against drawer—Whether drawer of cheque became a party to it prior to the time when value was given—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 27 (2) [DIAMOND v. GRAHAM] . . . . . 909

BILLS OF QUANTITIES

See BUILDING CONTRACT.

BIRD

See ANIMAL.

BLOOD TESTS

Paternity, to determine. See DIVORCE (Infant—Jurisdiction).

BORSTAL TRAINING

See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence).

BREATH TEST

See ROAD TRAFFIC (Driving with blood-alcohol proportion above prescribed limit).

BUILDING

Alteration—Licence—Consent. See LICENSING (Jurisdiction—Consent to alteration of premises).

Building in course of construction—Fitness for specialist equipment. See BUILDING CONTRACT (Specialist contractor).

Industrial building—Capital allowances. See INCOME TAX (Allowance).

Rubble—Deposit of hopper in street. See HIGHWAY (Danger or annoyance to users).

BUILDING CONTRACT

- Bills of quantities—Terms—Provision for safeguarding against flood damage—Liability of building contractor [A.M.F. INTERNATIONAL, LTD. v. MAGNET BOWLING, LTD.] . . . . . 789
- Breach of contract—Fitness or quality of materials—Two warranties implied, fitness for purpose and good quality—Sub-contract for work and materials—Defective materials supplied—Material specified by contractors, manufactured only by one manufacturer—Specified material obtained but having undetectable defects, due to faulty manufacture, rendering it not of good quality—Material supplied and fixed by sub-contractor—Whether sub-contractor liable for supplying such material [YOUNG AND MARTEN, LTD. v. McMANUS CHILDS, LTD.] . . . . . 1169
- Indemnity—Scope—Whether extending to negligence of person to be indemnified. See INDEMNITY (Negligence).
- Occupier—Building contractors as well as building owners. See OCCUPIER (Negligence).
- Specialist contractor entering on building site on instruction of building owner to install equipment in building in course of erection—Building contractor concurring that building ready—Contractual and implied obligation of building owner that building ready to receive equipment—Damage to equipment by flood-water entering building—Exception clause inapplicable—Liability of building owner in contract—Liability of building owner and building contractors in tort [A.M.F. INTERNATIONAL, LTD. v. MAGNET BOWLING, LTD.] . . . . . 789
- Sub-contractors—Nominated suppliers—Alleged wrongful repudiation by building contractor—Defective materials supplied—Undetectable defect—Whether main contractor warrants impliedly the fitness of materials supplied by nominated supplier—Building contract—Architect—Instructions—Notice to determine contract on ground of delay exceeding one month—Notice given by contractor—Whether contractor in breach of contract or whether notice valid—R.I.B.A. form of contract, conditions, cl. 18 (v), cl. 20 [GLOUCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. RICHARDSON] . . . . . 1181

BURDEN OF PROOF

Loan. See MONEY (Loan).

BUSINESS PREMISES

See LANDLORD AND TENANT (New tenancy; Notice to quit).

CARRIAGE BY AIR

Carriage of goods—International carriage—Limitation of liability of carriers—Theft by carriers' servant—Air consignment note stating volume or dimension of goods—Proper law of contract—United States law—Paramountcy of English Act in action in England—Clause in air consignment note for limitation of liability at same limit as statutory limit—Clause not subject to abrogation in events specified in art. 9 or art. 25 of Sch. 1 to Act of 1932—Whether clause avoided by art. 23—Carriage by Air Act, 1932 (c. 36), Sch. 1, art. 8, art. 23 [COROCRAFT, LTD. v. PAN AMERICAN AIRWAYS, INC.] . . . . . 1059

CARRIERS

Delivery of goods to carrier—Passing of property in goods. See SALE OF GOODS (Transfer of property).

CERTIFICATE

Counsel, of. See PRACTICE (Trial—Lists).

CERTIORARI

Costs—Party not appearing—Matter litigated until after applicants' briefs delivered—Costs awarded against respondents, who did not appear on motion, up to date of notifying that they no longer contested the matter [R. v. HASTINGS LICENSING JUSTICES, Ex parte LOVIBOND (JOHN) & SONS, LTD.] . . . . . 270

Sentence—Variation on application for certiorari. See MAGISTRATES (Jurisdiction—Functus officio).

CHARACTER

Evidence of. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence).

CHARITY

- Benefit to community—Community home. See Religion—Residuary bequest to a community house, post.
- House to house collection—Company selling articles on door to door basis—Part of proceeds paid to a charity—Whether a "collection"—House to House Collections Act, 1939 (c. 44), s. 11 [EMANUEL v. SMITH] . . . . . 529
- Power—Collateral power—Objects of power not exclusively charitable—Gift by will to trustees of residuary estate on trusts for accumulation or for payment of income, and power after certain period to pay, or apply capital—Class of beneficiaries defined to include some clearly charitable objects and also some which might not be charitable objects in law—Whether provisions valid [Re WOOTTON'S WILL TRUSTS] . . . . . 618
- Religion—Residuary bequest to a community house—Gift for the furtherance of the work and purposes of the community—Community of persons leading simple pious lives—Object to do the will of God by practical Christianity—Community open to persons of any creed or who had none—Help given to any member of the public in need—Whether valid charitable gift for advancement of religion—Whether valid charitable gift for purpose beneficial to the public [Re BANFIELD (dec'd)] . . . . . 276
- Uncertainty—Opinion of trustees—Trust for such other organisation or body not being registered as a charity but in the opinion of the testatrix' trustees having charitable objects—Whether a valid charitable trust [Re WOOTTON'S WILL TRUSTS] . . . . . 618

CHEMIST

National Health Service—Supply of drugs. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (Pharmaceutical services).

CHEQUE

Bank's position. See BANK (Cheque; Duty of care).

Holder for value. See BILL OF EXCHANGE (Holder for value).

CHILD

Blood test—Power of court to order. See DIVORCE (Infant—Jurisdiction).

Child of the family—Matrimonial Causes Act 1965, s. 46 (2) (b). See DIVORCE (Infant—Child of the family).

Maintenance—Illegitimate child. See AFFILIATION.

CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS

- Protection—Recognition of foreign marriage—Potentially polygamous marriage—Fit person order—Nigerian girl of thirteen validly married by Nigerian Moslem law—Whether marriage recognised in England—Whether girl, living with her husband, exposed to moral danger or in need of care and protection—Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (c. 12), s. 62—Children and Young Persons Act 1963 (c. 37), s. 2 [MOHAMED v. KNOTT] . . . . . 563

CHOSE IN ACTION

- Writing—Disclaimer of gift—Whether writing necessary. See GIFT (Disclaimer).

CLUB

- Amusements with prizes. See GAMING (Amusements with prizes).

COFFEE BAR

- See REGISTRATION (Premises).*

COLLECTION

- House to house—Charitable purpose. See CHARITY (House to House collection).

COLLISION

- At sea. See SHIPPING.

COMMISSION

- Estate agent. See AGENT.

COMMONWEALTH IMMIGRANT

- Admission to United Kingdom—Refusal of admission—Application to make an infant seeking admission a ward of court—Wardship jurisdiction not exercisable so as to interfere with statutory control of immigration—Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962 (c. 21), s. 2 (1) [Re A. (AN INFANT)] . . . . . 145

COMMONWEALTH PREFERENCE

- See CUSTOMS.*

COMPANY

- Director—Powers—Take-over threat. See Ultra vires—Allotment of ordinary shares by directors to counter take-over bid, post.
Trustee—Credit balance at bank—Misapplication of moneys of company standing to its credit in account with its bank—Liability of director acting in accordance with the instructions of a third person not being a director—Knowledge of third person attributable to director—Whether director entitled to be relieved from liability—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 448 [SELANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (No. 3)] . . . . . 1073
- Directors—Life directors—Power to remove other directors—Joint power conferred on two permanent life directors—Construction of articles of association—Power not conferred by way of joint confidence but for securing the interests of the life directors—Whether power exercisable by survivor [BERSEL MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. v. BERRY] . . . . . 552
- Memorandum of association—Object clauses—Construction—Borrowing power declared as an object—Provision that objects were independent objects—Company's business changed and new business ultra vires—Money borrowed from bank, to which copy of memorandum was supplied—Whether borrowing power capable of being an independent object—Whether the borrowing from the bank was ultra vires [Re INTRODUCTIONS, LTD.] . . . . . 1221
- Name—Use of name—Bill of exchange—Incorrect description of drawee company by drawer—Acceptance signed by director of drawee company on bill containing incorrect description—Whether director personally liable for amount of bill—Whether plaintiffs estopped from enforcing liability—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 108 (1) (c), (4) [DURHAM FANCY GOODS, LTD. v. MICHAEL JACKSON (FANCY GOODS), LTD.] . . . . . 987
- Reduction of capital—Income tax. See SURTAX (Tax advantage).
- Registration—Restoration to register—Applicant a plaintiff in an action for damages against company—Petitioner's husband died as result of traffic accident—Whether plaintiff was a "creditor" of the company, for the purpose of maintaining her petition—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 353 (6) [Re HARVEST LANE MOTOR BODIES, LTD.] . . . . . 1012
- Restoration of name to register—Service of petition—Name of company struck off register in 1963—Sum of money subsequently becoming payable to company—Creditors' petition for restoration of company's name to register [Re VICKERS & BOTT, LTD.]* . . . . . 264
- Sale of business as going concern—Re-engagement of staff—Redundancy payments. See EMPLOYMENT (Redundancy—Re-engagement).
- Shares—Allotment—Directors' powers. See Ultra vires—Allotment of ordinary shares by directors to counter take-over bid, post.
Financial assistance for purchase of its own shares—Take-over—Payment from company's funds unlawful and avoided—Whether claim against directors as constructive trustees affected by illegality—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 54 [SELANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (No. 3)] . . . . . 1073
- Register—Rectification—Disclaimer of attempted gift inter vivos—No transfer required [Re PARADISE MOTOR CO., LTD.]* . . . . . 625
- Transfer—Proper instrument—Instrument that would attract stamp duty, not necessarily complying with all formalities of articles of association—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 75 [Re PARADISE MOTOR CO., LTD.]* . . . . . 625
- Ultra vires—Allotment of ordinary shares by directors to counter take-over bid—Directors empowered by articles to issue unissued shares—Directors' action approved by company in general meeting—Whether, assuming directors' action was not in best interests of company and in excess of their powers, the allotment could be ratified by the company in general meeting—Inherent residual power of company over unissued shares [BAMFORD v. BAMFORD] . . . . . 655
- Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Creditor's application—Disputed debt—Existence of debt disputed—Company unable to meet its debts as they fell due—Petitions presented by alleged creditors of two companies—Injunctions sought to restrain prosecution of petitions—Debts disputed on substantial grounds—Whether prosecution of petitions an abuse of process of the court—Whether injunctions should be granted [MANN v. GOLDSTEIN] . . . . . 769
- Voluntary winding-up—Petition for compulsory liquidation—Official Receiver's petition—Standard of proof of condition provided by s. 224 (2)—Misapplication of one sum by wrong payment out of company's assets—Dilatory conduct of liquidation—Liquidation nearly complete—Liquidator undertaking to pay into assets amount wrongly paid out and to complete liquidation with due despatch—Burden of proof that voluntary liquidation could not be continued with due regard to interests of creditors not discharged—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 224 (2) [Re J. RUSSELL ELECTRONICS, LTD.]* . . . . . 559

COMPENSATION

- Alternative statutory powers. Whether power carrying right to compensation should be exercised.
See STATUTE (Construction)—Confiscatory construction.
 Compulsory acquisition, on. See COMPULSORY PURCHASE.
 Nationalisation. Foreign—No compensation—Opposition to registration of trade mark. See TRADE MARK (Registration)—Opposition.

COMPULSORY PURCHASE

- Compensation—Purchase notice—Permission for additional development—Permission within five years of acquisition—Additional compensation—Land possessing certificate for residential development—Development at fifty-five habitable rooms per acre—Acquiring authority obtaining permission for one hundred rooms per acre—Increase constituting additional development—Land Compensation Act, 1961 (c. 33), s. 23 (1), (2), s. 29 (1) [LONDON BOROUGH OF ENFIELD v. LAVENDER GARDEN PROPERTIES, LTD.] .. .. . 401

CONDITION

- Contract—Conditional contract. See CONTRACT (Conditional contract).

CONFESSION

- Admissibility. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence); PRIVY COUNCIL (Guyana).

CONFLICT OF LAWS

- Affiliation—Child born abroad to mother domiciled abroad. See AFFILIATION (Jurisdiction).

CONFLICT OF LAWS

- Convention—International convention—Incorporated into municipal laws—Difference between United States and English law—Proper law of contract that of United States—English statute paramount in action in England [COROCRAFT, LTD. v. PAN AMERICAN AIRWAYS, LTD.] .. 1059 Divorce—Foreign decree—Recognition. See DIVORCE (Foreign decree).
 Marriage. Foreign marriage—Potentially polygamous—Protection of young persons. See CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS (Protection).

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

- Publication concerning legal proceedings—Criticism of administration of justice—Court of Appeal—Judgment regarding non-enforcement of gaming laws criticised—Error of fact in matter published—Right of fair comment on matters of public importance [R. v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR., Ex parte BLACKBURN (No. 2)] .. .. . 319

CONTRACT

- Accord and satisfaction. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.
 Agent—Undisclosed principal—Estoppel—No trust relationship with other party to contract.
See RES JUDICATA (Undisclosed principal).
 Breach—Inducement to commit breach of contract. See TORT (Inducement to commit breach of contract).
 Building. See BUILDING CONTRACT.
 Conditional contract—Passing of property—Contract for sale of a holding of shares subject to a condition precedent—Condition solely for benefit of purchaser—Waiver of condition open to purchaser at any time—Whether beneficial interest in shares passed to purchaser before condition was in fact waived or fulfilled [WOOD PRESERVATION, LTD. v. PRIOR (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] .. .. . 849
 Exception clause—Building contract—Negligence of owners and contractors. See BUILDING CONTRACT (Specialist contractor).
Latent defect—Sale of food stuffs—Implied warranty of fitness not excluded [HENRY KENDALL & SONS v. WILLIAM LILlico & SONS, LTD.] .. .. . 444
 Fitness—Materials—Contract for work and materials. See BUILDING CONTRACT (Breach of contract).
Sale of goods. See SALE OF GOODS (Implied condition of fitness).
 Illegality. See COMPANY (Shares).
 Implied—Lease—Covenant. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Lease—Covenant—Insurance).
 Joint contractors—Plaintiffs—All joint promises should be parties to action. See PRACTICE (Parties—Joinder of parties).
 Limitation of liability—Air transport. See CARRIAGE BY AIR.
 Novation—Debt—Extent—Whether extending to liability of borrower as constructive trustee in relation to money lent. [SELANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (No. 3)] .. .. . 1073
 Offer for sale or invitation to treat. See ANIMAL (Bird).
 Quantum meruit—Existing contract—Additional work—Need for implication of new contract and thus to get rid of old contract—Contract by surveyor to arrange, supervise, etc. specified building work estimated to cost £800 for fee of £30—Additional work bringing cost to £2,253 ordered by building owner and supervised by surveyor—No request by surveyor for increasing fee until after work completed—Whether surveyor entitled to more than £30 agreed fee [GIBSON & PARTNERS (A FIRM) v. KNIGHT] .. .. . 248
 Sale of Goods. See SALE OF GOODS.
 Statutory powers—Agreement not to exercise—Invalidity. See PUBLIC AUTHORITY (Statutory powers).
 Will—To leave property. See Writing—Oral contract, post.
 Writing—Oral contract that plaintiff should have deceased's house after his death—Part performance—Plaintiff gave up her flat and lived with deceased, looking after him and his house—Specific performance of oral contract decreed after deceased's death—Question of relief where it would have been fraudulent for deceased to repudiate contract for want of writing—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 40 [WAKEHAM v. MACKENZIE] .. .. . 783
Variation—Whether original contract rescinded, or remaining enforceable unvaried if variation unenforceable. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Jamaica—Money-lending—Mortgage).

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

- Generally. See NEGLIGENCE.

CONVENTION

- Statute effecting international convention. See CARRIAGE BY AIR (Carriage of goods—International carriage—Limitation of liability).

CONVERSION

Cheque. See BANK (Cheque).

CORPORATION

Ultra vires—Professional society. See TRADE (Restraint of trade).

CORROBORATION

Criminal cases. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence).

COSTS

Certiorari. See CERTIORARI.County court. See COUNTY COURT.House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS.Legal aid. See LEGAL AID.Taxation—Review of taxation—Procedure in Chancery Division—R.S.C., Ord. 62, r. 35
[PRACTICE DIRECTION] .. .. . 635

COUNSEL

Certificate—Length of hearing. See PRACTICE (Trial).Tribunal—Whether party entitled to be legally represented before domestic tribunal. See TRIBUNAL (Procedure—Legal representation).

COUNTERCLAIM

Dismissal—Want of prosecution. See PRACTICE (Want of prosecution).

COUNTY COURT

Appeal—Ruling that on the pleadings the burden of proof lay on the defendant, who therefore should begin—Whether appeal lies from such a ruling—Whether the ruling was a direction, decision or order within County Courts Act, 1959 (c. 22), s. 108 [SELDON v. DAVIDSON] .. . . . 755Costs—Hearing—Want of service of summons—Order made at hearing set aside—Costs of hearing made costs in cause—Defendant entitled to have order set aside ex debito justitiae without any terms being imposed as to costs of hearing [WHITE v. WESTON] .. . . . 842Divorce—Practice—Agreement and arrangement—Collusion and connivance. See DIVORCE (Practice).Hearing at Royal Courts of Justice. See DIVORCE (Practice—Trial).Jurisdiction—Mortgage—Possession—Whether jurisdiction over an action for possession is that applicable to an action for recovery of land or for enforcement of the mortgage—County Courts Act, 1959 (c. 22), s. 48 (1), s. 52 (1) (c) [WEST PENWITH DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GUNNELL] .. . . . 1005New trial—Further evidence—Expert evidence on handwriting—Alleged forgery of postscript in letter—Letter written in Punjabi—Written report of experts ultimately obtained by defendant some months after judgment at adjourned hearing to allow expert evidence—Expert in India—Amount in issue £298 10s.—Necessity of attendance of expert for cross-examination—Whether new trial should be granted [DASS (AN INFANT) v. MASIH] .. . . . 226Practice—Service of summons—Service by post—Sending to address originally supplied by defendant at time of accident—Defendant no longer resident there at time of service—Summons did not reach defendant—No service—C.C.R. Ord. 8, r. 8 (3)—Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63), s. 26 [WHITE v. WESTON] .. . . . 842

COURT

Contempt of court—Generally. See CONTEMPT OF COURT.Open court—Administration of criminal justice, in. [PRACTICE DIRECTION] .. . . . 144

COURT-MARTIAL

Civil offence—Consent of Director of Public Prosecutions required for institution of proceedings—Gross indecency between males one of whom under twenty-one years of age—"Proceedings"—Consent of Director of Public Prosecutions not obtained—Whether naval court-martial a nullity—Sexual Offences Act, 1956 (c. 69), s. 13—Naval Discipline Act, 1957 (c. 58), s. 42—Sexual Offences Act 1967 (c. 60), s. 8, s. 10 (2) [SECRETARY OF STATE FOR DEFENCE v. WARN] .. . . . 300Time limit—Sexual offences between males—Limitation of time under s. 7 of Act of 1967 applicable to proceedings under Naval Discipline Act, 1957 (c. 53), s. 42—Sexual Offences Act 1967 (c. 60), s. 7 (2) [SECRETARY OF STATE FOR DEFENCE v. WARN] .. . . . 300Conviction—Nullity—Quashing as distinct from allowing appeal [SECRETARY OF STATE FOR DEFENCE v. WARN] .. . . . 300

COURT OF APPEAL

Contempt—Criticism of decision—Error. See CONTEMPT OF COURT (Publications concerning legal proceedings).Evidence—Further evidence—Principle on which received—Judgment recovered against road contractors for negligence in leaving barrier on road unlighted—Subsequently evidence proffered by passenger in plaintiff driver's car that plaintiff was drunk at time of accident which gave rise to action—Passenger not approached by road contractors' solicitor until after judgment for plaintiff—Passenger then told people that plaintiff was drunk—Passenger disgruntled at not having received any part of money recovered for accident—Whether passenger's evidence obtainable with reasonable diligence before trial [ROE v. ROBERT MCGREGOR AND SONS, LTD.] .. . . . 636Judge's note—Substitution of note taken by solicitors—Appeal from official referee—Official referee's note available—Fuller note taken by appellant's solicitors—Application by appellant to substitute solicitors' note for official referee's—Agreement by official referee but objection by respondent—Discretion—In absence of agreement official referee's note should be the note used by the Court of Appeal—R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 12 (1) [THOMPSON v. ANDREWS] .. . . . 419

COVENANT

Restrictive—Covenant affecting land. See RESTRICTIVE COVENANT (Restrictive covenant affecting land).

CREDIT

Impeaching credit of witness. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence).

- Abortion—Corroboration—Direction to jury—Need for precise and clear direction—Issue whether doctor believed that patient was pregnant—Patient believing that she was pregnant with a child whom she did not wish to have [R. v. PRICE] .. .. . 282
- Appeal—Privy Council. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Malaysia).
- Carnal knowledge—Girl under sixteen—Married according to foreign law—Intercourse with husband—Prosecution should not be brought—Sexual Offences Act, 1956 (c. 69), s. 6 (1) [MOHAMED v. KNOTT] .. .. . 563
- Dangerous drugs. See DRUGS.
- Administering drug to woman to obtain intercourse—Intent to stupefy to enable more than one man to have unlawful sexual intercourse—Essence of the offence the administration of the drug—Indictment containing two counts in respect of one administration—One administration one offence—Conviction on second count quashed—Sexual Offences Act, 1956 (c. 69), s. 4 (1) [R. v. SHILLINGFORD] .. .. . 200
- Drunkenness—Disorderly conduct in public place. See INTOXICATING LIQUOR (Offences).
- Evidence—Admissibility—Impaching credit of witness. See Evidence—Credit, post.
- Method of obtaining evidence—Search not authorised by warrant. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Jamaica—Drugs—Dangerous drugs).
- Character of accused—Evidence of good character tendered—Bad character shown by cross-examination—Weight to be given by jury to both categories of evidence when assessing general credibility of accused [R. v. LONGMAN] .. .. . 761
- Imputation on character of prosecution witness—Discretion over allowing accused to be cross-examined as to his previous convictions—Whether any general rule to exclude such evidence where defence necessarily involved such imputations—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36), s. 1, proviso (f) (1) [SELVEY v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS] .. .. . 497
- Confession—Admissibility—Ruling by judge on admissibility—Whether in summing-up to jury subsequently judge should direct them that they must be satisfied that statement was voluntarily made before attaching any weight to it [R. v. BURGESS] .. .. . 54
- Inducement—Person in authority—Statement to friend put in same lock-up as appellant by police. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Guyana—Criminal law—Evidence).
- Corroboration—Accomplice—Duress by one accused alleged as defence by other accused—Direction to jury [R. v. BONE] .. .. . 644
- Direction to jury—Abortion. See Abortion, ante.
- Credit—Impaching credit of witness—Evidence of belief that witness not worthy of credit—Particular facts, circumstances and incidents forming basis of opinion not admissible in examination-in-chief [R. v. LONGMAN] .. .. . 761
- Intention. See Intention, post.
- Presumption—Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta—Whether sufficient to establish prima facie case. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Driving with blood-alcohol proportion above prescribed limit—Evidence).
- Witness—Accused to give evidence first for defence—Witnesses to fact remaining outside court. See Practice—Evidence—Witnesses, post.
- Duress—Defence—Burden of proof—Prosecution has onus of negating duress [R. v. BONE] .. 644
- Food. See FOOD AND DRUGS.
- Gross indecency—Consent of Director of Public Prosecutions required for institution of proceedings—One party to offence under twenty-one—Consent not obtained—Trial a nullity—Conviction quashed—Sexual Offences Act 1967 (c. 60), s. 8 [R. v. ANGEL] .. .. . 607
- Males, one under twenty-one—Consent of Director of Public Prosecutions. See COURT-MARTIAL (Civil offence).
- Highway—Danger or annoyance to users. See HIGHWAY (Danger or annoyance to users).
- Indictment—Amendment—Amendment before arraignment—Amendment of one count substituting receiving eight pictures for three pictures—Plea of guilty by accused to amended count—No injustice caused to accused—Whether amendment valid—Indictments Act, 1915 (c. 90), s. 5 (1) [R. v. HALL] .. .. . 1009
- Intention—Proof—Subjective test—Inference from evidence—Summing-up containing passages reminiscent of objective test—Conviction of murder—Substitution of conviction of manslaughter—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 8 [R. v. WALLETT] .. .. . 296
- Jury—Discharge. See Trial—Jury, post.
- Retirement of jury—Evidence after. See Practice—Evidence, post.
- Legal aid. See LEGAL AID.
- Manslaughter—Conviction substituted—Appeal from conviction of murder—Question of intent. See Intention—Proof, ante.
- Mens rea—Statutory offence—Whether liability in absence of mens rea. See BANKRUPTCY (Offences—Failure to give satisfactory explanation of manner of incurring substantial loss of part of bankrupt's estate).
- Drugs. See DRUGS (Dangerous drugs).
- Whether intention to deprive accused of defence by way of absence of mens rea to be imputed to Parliament. See DRUGS (Dangerous drugs—"Possession").
- Motor vehicle—Driving while uninsured. See INSURANCE (Motor insurance—Third party risks).
- Murder—Intent—Subjective test—Summing-up. See Intention—Proof, ante.
- Practice—Evidence—Retirement of jury—Further evidence—Charge of driving whilst disqualified—Jury, after retirement, inspecting car with consent and at wish of defence—No miscarriage of justice [R. v. NIXON] .. .. . 33
- Witnesses—Accused, if called, should give evidence before any other witness for the defence—Witnesses as to fact should remain outside the court until required to give evidence [R. v. SMITH (JOAN)] .. .. . 115
- Guilty plea—Statement of facts by prosecution in open court. See Trial—Plea—Plea of guilty, post.
- Receiving stolen property—Amendment of indictment. See Indictment—Amendment, ante.
- Road traffic offences. See ROAD TRAFFIC.
- Search—Warrant. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Jamaica—Drugs—Dangerous drugs—Evidence).

CRIMINAL LAW—continued

- Sentence—Appropriate sentence for existing offences to be imposed—Concurrent instead of consecutive terms of imprisonment imposed with a view to qualifying offender for an extended term under Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 37, if offence committed in future—Wrong in principle [R. v. LYCETT] . . . . . 1021
- Attempt—Offence both indictable and summary offence—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (c. 55), s. 19 (9) [BELL v. INGHAM] . . . . . 333
- Borstal training. See Sentence—Youthful offender, post.
- Extended term of imprisonment—Meaning—Power to impose a term longer than the maximum for the particular offence, but not to extend an appropriate shorter term to a length less than the maximum—Sentencing powers, not power for rendering applicable statutory provisions regarding release on licence—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 37 (2), (3), (5), s. 60 [R. v. OTTEWELL] . . . . . 593
- Hospital order—Court of Appeal substituting hospital order with restriction for sentence of imprisonment—Transfer direction previously made by Secretary of State—Medical evidence available on appeal—Mental Health Act, 1959 (c. 72), s. 60, s. 65, s. 72—Criminal Appeal Act 1966 (c. 31), s. 4 (2)—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 97 (7) [R. v. BENNETT] . . . . . 753
- Hospital order may be made for admission to a hospital in any part of the country where a vacancy exists—Mental Health Act, 1959 (c. 72), s. 60 [R. v. MARSDEN] . . . . . 341
- Legal aid to be offered before serious sentence. See LEGAL AID (Criminal cases—Grant—Practice).
- Release on licence—Not to be taken into account in imposing sentence [R. v. OTTEWELL] . . . . . 593
- Remission—Not to be taken into account in imposing sentence [R. v. OTTEWELL] . . . . . 593
- Suspended sentence—Substituted on application for certiorari. See MAGISTRATES (Jurisdiction—Functus officio).
- Youthful offender—Youthful offender absconding after sentence of borstal training—Further offence committed while at large—Sentence of fifteen months' imprisonment—Previous sentence of borstal training not served—Sentence of borstal training substituted—Criminal Justice Act, 1961 (c. 39), s. 3 (3) [R. v. HUGHES] . . . . . 53
- Time—Time limit for bringing prosecution—Indecent offences between males—Court-martial. See COURT-MARTIAL (Civil offence—Time limit).
- Trial—Juror—Disqualification—Juror recognising accused's wife when she appeared as witness and knowing from hearsay that accused had criminal record—Juror's knowledge not disclosed at trial to any other juror—Affidavit of juror read, as dealing only with extrinsic matters—Whether jury should be discharged [R. v. HOOD] . . . . . 56
- Jury—Affidavit of juror. See Trial—Juror—Disqualification, ante.
- Discharge of jury, who were at deadlock, without returning a verdict—No bar to accused being tried by another jury—Discharge of jury before two hours' deliberation—No majority verdict—Re-trial and conviction by a majority verdict—Whether conviction at re-trial should stand—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 13 [R. v. ELIA] . . . . . 587
- Plea—Plea of guilty—Statement of facts in open court by prosecution where no committal proceedings or committal proceedings which could not be fully reported—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 1 [PRACTICE DIRECTION] . . . . . 144
- Verdict—Inconsistent verdicts—Burden on appellant to satisfy the court that the verdicts could not stand together—Charges of grievous bodily harm to B. and of assault occasioning actual bodily harm to H.—Charges arising out of acts on same occasion—Issue of identity of single assailant—Appellant acquitted of causing grievous bodily harm to B. but convicted of assault occasioning actual bodily harm to H.—Whether verdicts could stand together [R. v. HUNT] . . . . . 1056
- Majority verdict—Whether procedure mandatory for all cases where jury divided. See Trial—Jury—Discharge of jury at deadlock without returning a verdict, ante.
- Witness. See Practice—Evidence—Witnesses, ante.

CURRENCY CONTROL

- Exchange control—Export—Smuggling money, Bank of England notes, out of the country—Contravention of the prohibition imposed by s. 22 of the Exchange Control Act, 1947—Whether in law an offence under Customs and Excise Act, 1952, s. 56 (2)—Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63), s. 38 (1)—Exchange Control Act, 1947 (c. 14), s. 22, Sch. 5, Pt. 3, para. 1 (1)—Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (c. 44), s. 56 (2) [R. v. GOSWAMI] . . . . . 24

CUSTODY

- Child—Divorce. See DIVORCE.

CUSTOMS

- Commonwealth preference—Consignment of goods to the United Kingdom—No through bill of lading—Mustard seed grown in Canada and shipped to United Kingdom via Holland—Whether consigned from Commonwealth preference area to United Kingdom—Import Duties Act, 1958 (c. 6), s. 2 (2) [J. & J. COLMAN, LTD. v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE] . . . . . 832
- Southern Rhodesia—Tobacco—Southern Rhodesia ceasing to be in Commonwealth preference area from midnight Nov. 18/19, 1965—Tobacco grown in Southern Rhodesia and consigned to United Kingdom before Nov. 19, 1965—Whether full duty payable—Import Duties Act, 1958 (c. 6), s. 2 (2), (3) (c), s. 12 (1)—Southern Rhodesia (Withdrawal of Commonwealth Preference) Order 1965 (S.I. 1965 No. 1954), art. 1—Southern Rhodesia (Withdrawal of Commonwealth Preference) (No. 2) Order 1965 (S.I. 1965 No. 1957) [GALLAHER, LTD. v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE] . . . . . 820
- Export—Money. See CURRENCY CONTROL.
- Imported goods—Interest—Deposit by way of security for unpaid duty made by importers in 1964—Notice specifying correct amount of duty payable given by commissioners in 1966—Repayment of security to importers ordered by court—Whether interest on security runs from date of deposit or date of notice—Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (c. 44), s. 255 (3), s. 260 (2) [J. & J. COLMAN, LTD. v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE] . . . . . 832
- Trade usage—Foreign principal—Contract through London correspondents with English sellers—Whether privacy of contract between foreign principal and sellers. See AGENT (Contract—Foreign undisclosed principal).

DAMAGE

- Apportionment of responsibility for damage. See NEGLIGENCE (Contributory negligence).
- Assessment—Appeal—Principle on which appellate court will intervene—No intervention unless assessment based on error in principle or assessment so clearly erroneous that it should be altered [BROWN v. THOMPSON] . . . . . 708

DAMAGE—continuedCollision at sea. See SHIPPING.Detinue. See DETINUE (Hire—Purchase—Sale of goods by hirer).Interest, on. See SHIPPING (Limitation of liability—Conversion rate).Mitigation—Shipping—Collision. See SHIPPING (Collision—Damages).

Personal injury—Subsequent further injury to plaintiff, as victim in a robbery, necessitating amputation of limb previously injured—Whether damages for injury originally caused by tortfeasor should be reduced by reasons of subsequent greater injury supervening [BAKER v. WILLOUGHBY] .. .. . 236

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIASee* NEGLIGENCE (Duty to take care—Property—Damage to property).DEATH DUTYAustralia—New South Wales. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Australia).DEBTCompany's winding-up. See COMPANY (Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Creditor's application).Income tax—Amount. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits).DECLARATION

Discretion to grant—Period of suspension from office almost expired—Declaration sought that trade union's decision to expel member, and subsequent decision on appeal to suspend him were ultra vires and void—Substantial issue not academic in character, when action brought—Whether declaration should be granted [GIBSON v. UNION OF SHOP, DISTRIBUTIVE AND ALLIED WORKERS] .. .. . 252

Jurisdiction—Professional society—Rule of conduct. See TRADE (Restraint of trade—Corporation—Professional society).DEEDNon est factum. See MISTAKE (Nature of document).DELAYDismissal of action for want of prosecution. See PRACTICE (Want of prosecution).Matrimonial proceedings—Appeals from magistrates' courts. See MAGISTRATES (Husband and wife—Appeal).DESERTIONSee* MAGISTRATES.DIRECTORGenerally. See COMPANY.DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONSConsent to institution of proceedings. See CRIMINAL LAW (Gross indecency—Consent of Director of Public Prosecution required for institution of proceedings).DISCLAIMERGift. See GIFT.DISCOVERY

Duty of solicitor—Ensuring that clients appreciate their duty in regard to disclosure on discovery—Wide scope of discovery—Preservation of relevant documents that might otherwise be subject to destruction in accordance with business routine [ROCKWELL MACHINE TOOL CO., LTD. v. E. P. BARRUS (CONCESSIONAIRES), LTD.] .. .. . 98

Production of documents—Privilege—Communications with foreign lawyers—Documents coming into existence for the purposes of proceedings contemplated in foreign courts—Action in England—Contemplated foreign litigation relating to same subject of dispute—English proceedings not contemplated until a date after that at which foreign proceedings were first contemplated—R.S.C., Ord. 24, r. 7 [Re DUNCAN (decd.)] .. .. . 395

Crown privilege—Documents produced for the inspection of the court—Documents to be made available in the litigation [CONWAY v. RIMMER] .. .. . 304

DISMISSALAction, of—Want of prosecution—Whether res judicata could be founded on such dismissal. See RES JUDICATA (Dismissal of action).Want of prosecution—Action. See PRACTICE (Want of prosecution).Delay. See PRACTICE (Want of prosecution).DISQUALIFICATIONDriving licence. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Disqualification for holding licence).DIVISIONAL COURTAppeal to—Magistrates' courts from—Matrimonial causes. See MAGISTRATES (Husband and wife—Appeal).DIVORCECollusion—Agreement or arrangement—Practice. See Practice—Agreement or arrangement, post. Costs—Legal aid (Costs). See LEGAL AID.

Custody—Estoppel—Adultery—Husband's allegation of adultery by wife with M. at holiday camp rejected at trial of divorce suit—Decree granted to husband on other grounds—Trial judge favourably impressed by M.'s evidence, unfavourably impressed by other witnesses, including husband and wife—Wife intending to marry M.—Subsequent custody proceedings concerning the child of the marriage, a boy aged nearly seven—Husband adduced in these further evidence of wife's adultery with M. at holiday camp—Whether this further evidence admissible notwithstanding doctrine of estoppel or res judicata [F. v. F.] .. .. . 946 County court—Practice. See Practice, post.Desertion—Intention—Medical advice. See MAGISTRATES (Desertion—Intention).

Foreign decree—Decree granted to wife in Sweden—Ground of divorce that parties had lived apart for a year and had not resumed cohabitation after grant of decree of judicial separation to wife in Sweden—Wife Swedish national resident in Sweden for past three years—Substantial connexion of wife with Sweden—Whether decree recognised by English court [BROWN v. BROWN] .. .. . 11

DIVORCE—continued

- Infant—Child of the family—Acceptance of child as one of the family—Knowledge of material facts necessary for acceptance—Child disowned as soon as husband knew of facts showing that child was not his—Whether child had been accepted as one of the family—Matrimonial Causes Act 1965 (c. 72), s. 46 (2) (b) [R. v. R.] . . . . . 608
- Jurisdiction—Paternity of child in issue—Blood test—Power of High Court judge to order blood test—Power not extending to divorce county court [D.R.B. v. J.B.] . . . . . 1023
- Judicial separation—Maintenance of wife—Lump sum payment—Additional to annual sum—Factors to be regarded—Cumulation of part of husband's pension as retired naval officer, thereby decreasing his income and increasing his capital—Wife's house in need of repair—Generous order for annual maintenance—Matrimonial Causes Act 1965 (c. 72), s. 20 (1) [HAKLUYTT v. HAKLUYTT] . . . . . 868
- Maintenance of wife—Agreement for paying maintenance—Duration—Divorce and re-marriage. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Maintenance agreement).
- Petition—Form of petition—Omission of information—Ex parte application before service—Matrimonial Causes Rules 1965 (S.I. 1965 No. 219), r. 9 (2), App. 2, Form 2 [PRACTICE DIRECTION] . . . . . 88
- Practice—Agreement or arrangement between parties—Reservation of trial to judge considering agreement or arrangement—Judge's direction noted on file—Regard to be had to direction when transfer of cause considered—Matrimonial Causes Act 1965 (c. 72), s. 5 [PRACTICE DIRECTION] . . . . . 841
- Trial—County court list—Date for hearing—Notice of setting down—Subsequent change of date needing good cause and consent of all parties [PRACTICE DIRECTION] . . . . . 123

DOCUMENT

- Admissibility in evidence—Expert's report on handwriting—Whether a statement tending to establish a fact—Document written in Punjabi—Expert living in India—Whether admissible under Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 25), s. 1 (1) [DASS (AN INFANT) v. MASHI] . . . . . 226
- Destruction—Routine destruction of business documents—Obligation to preserve documents relevant to discovery in current litigation. See DISCOVERY (Duty of solicitor).
- Discovery. See DISCOVERY (Production of documents).
- Production of. See DISCOVERY.

DOUBLE TAXATION

See INCOME TAX.

DRAINAGE

Land drainage. See LAND DRAINAGE.

DRINK

Road traffic. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Driving with blood-alcohol proportion above prescribed limit).

DRIVING LICENCE

Disqualification for holding. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Disqualification for holding licence).

DRUGS

- Dangerous drugs—Cannabis—Tenant of house—No knowledge that cannabis being smoked on premises—Rooms in house sub-let and in fact used for smoking cannabis—Whether tenant concerned in the management of premises used for smoking of cannabis—Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 (c. 15), s. 5 (b) [SWEET v. PARSLEY] . . . . . 337
- "Possession"—Unauthorised possession—Alleged lack of knowledge of contents of parcel containing prohibited drugs—Mental element in statutory offence—Whether absolute offence—Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 (c. 64), s. 1 (1) [WARNER v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMB.] . . . . . 356
- "Supply"—Accused injected another accused with heroin unlawfully in the latter's possession—Whether administering injection was supplying the drug—Dangerous Drugs (No. 2) Regulations 1964 (S.I. 1964 No. 1811), reg. 8—Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 (c. 15), s. 18 (a) [R. v. HARRIS] . . . . . 49
- Misuse—Unauthorised possession—Traces of amphetamine powder in urine—Whether in possession contrary to the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 (c. 64), s. 1 (1) [HAMBLETON v. CALLINAN] . . . . . 943
- Supply of, by chemist under National Health Service. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (Pharmaceutical services).

DRUNK

Disorderly conduct in public place. See INTOXICATING LIQUOR (Offences).

DURESS

Defence to criminal charge. See CRIMINAL LAW.

EMPLOYMENT

- Income tax—Perquisites—Car loan scheme. See INCOME TAX (Income—Perquisites or profits of office or employment).
- Redundancy—Dismissal by reason of redundancy—Owner farmer sold farm by public auction, and subsequently, by another public auction the live and dead stock—Incoming farmer bought only part of live and dead stock—Employee farm worker was re-employed by new owner without any break in employment and continued in similar work—Whether change of ownership of business—Whether employee entitled to redundancy payment from vendor farmer—Redundancy Payments Act 1965 (c. 62), s. 13 (1) (a) [LLOYD v. BRASSEY] . . . . . 1228
- Period of continuous employment—Riveter in service of ship-repairers for forty years with occasional breaks—Work of spasmodic nature, temporary dismissals and re-engagements—Last break in claimant's service for thirty-one days—Whether a temporary cessation of work which counted as a period of employment by reason of Contracts of Employment Act 1963 (c. 49) Sch. 1, para. 5 (1) (b)—Redundancy Payments Act 1965 (c. 62) s. 1 (1), Sch. 1, para. 1 (1) [HUNTER v. SMITH'S DOCK CO., LTD.] . . . . . 81
- Re-engagement—Offer in writing—Sale of part of business by vendor employers and re-engagement by purchasing employers—Circular letter not showing material differences between old and new terms of employment—Different terms as to notice, overtime wages and insurance scheme—Position as if re-engagement on new contract by vendor employers—Whether re-engagement was in pursuance of an offer in writing within Redundancy Payments Act 1965 (c. 62) s. 3 (2) (b), s. 13 (2) [HAVENHAND v. THOMAS BLACK, LTD.] . . . . . 1037

EQUITY

Equitable interest—Disclaimer—Whether writing necessary. See GIFT (Disclaimer).

Commission—Agreement to pay commission on introduction of person willing to sign a document capable of becoming a contract to purchase—Misrepresentation as to effect of written clause governing commission—Introduction of person who signed a contract subject to landlord granting licence to assign lease—Licence refused—Whether agent entitled to commission [JACQUES v. LLOYD D. GEORGE & PARTNERS, LTD.] . . . . .

187

ESTATE CONTRACT

Registration as land charge. See LAND CHARGE.

ESTATE DUTY

Discretionary trust—Exhaustive discretionary trust—Discretionary trust of income in favour of husband and wife continuing after death of husband in favour of wife alone—Wife recipient of all income throughout—Whether duty payable on whole of fund on husband's death—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 1, s. 2 (1) (b) [Re WEIR'S SETTLEMENT] . . . . .

1241

Passing of property—Discretionary trust—Whether within s. 2 (1) (b) of Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30) [Re WEIR'S SETTLEMENT] . . . . .

1241

ESTOPPEL

Estoppel by record—Res Judicata generally. See RES JUDICATA.

Estoppel in pais—Estoppel by conduct—Maintenance—Arrears. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Maintenance agreement—Duration).

Estoppel by negligence—Assignment of leaseholds—Non est factum—Whether mortgagee of leaseholds could maintain estoppel. See MISTAKE (Nature of document).

Res judicata—Divorce—Custody. See DIVORCE (Custody).

EVIDENCE

Admissibility—Res gestae. See Res gestae, post.

Appeal—Further evidence. See COURT OF APPEAL.

Confession. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Guyana).

Corroboration—Criminal cases. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Criminal proceedings, in. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence; Practice).

Expert—Official referee, before. See PRACTICE (Reference to referee—Procedure).

Further evidence—Retirement of jury, after. See CRIMINAL LAW (Practice).

Method of obtaining—Whether evidence admissible if illegally obtained. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Jamaica—Drugs—Dangerous drugs).

Presumption—Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta—Criminal prosecution. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Driving with blood-alcohol proportion above prescribed limit—Evidence).

Radar—Photographic record. See SHIPPING (Collision).

Res gestae—Health—Belief of patient regarding his health—Whether evidence of what doctor told patient as to his state of health admissible [TICKLE v. TICKLE] . . . . .

154

Statement, document, in. See DOCUMENT (Admissibility in evidence).

Tribunal—Rules of evidence governing admissibility in court of law not applicable—Logically probative evidence admissible before tribunal—Town planning inquiry—Letter written admitted in evidence—Other evidence given by witnesses on oath—Letter relied on—Finding based on letter upheld [T. A. MILLER, LTD. v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT] . . . . .

633

EXAMINATION

Bankruptcy—Private examination. See BANKRUPTCY (Inquiry as to debtor's dealings and property).

EXCEPTION

Clause of exception. See SALE OF GOODS.

EXCHANGE CONTROL

See CURRENCY CONTROL.

EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR

Bankrupt—Discharged bankrupt—Whether jurisdiction to order inquiry against executors concerning bankrupt's dealings. See BANKRUPTCY (Inquiry as to debtor's dealings and property).

EXPERT

Witness. See EVIDENCE.

EXPORT

Report—Whether statement of fact. See DOCUMENT (Admissibility in evidence—Expert's report on handwriting).

FACTORY

Gangway—Meaning—Whether roadway in factory area was a gangway. See Passage—Freedom from obstruction, post.

Lighting—Roadway in Factory—Lighting equipment sufficient but light not turned on in early morning before full daylight—Employee going to work at 6.45 a.m. tripped on coil of wire in roadway and fell—Whether breach of obligation to make effective provision for securing and maintaining sufficient lighting—Factories Act, 1961 (c. 34), s. 5 (1) [THORNTON v. FISHER & LUDLOW, LTD.] . . . . .

241

Passage—Freedom from obstruction—Roadway thirty feet wide in factory area—Employee coming to work in early morning tripped on coil of wire in roadway—Pavement of roadway normally obstructed—Roadway not swept at night—Whether roadway a "passage" or "gangway"—Factories Act, 1961 (c. 34), s. 28 (1) [THORNTON v. FISHER & LUDLOW, LTD.] . . . . .

241

Statutory duty—Breach—Lighting. See Lighting, ante.

Passages. See Passage, ante.

FAIR COMMENT

See LIBEL.

FEEDING STUFFS

See AGRICULTURE.

FITNESS

Contract for work and materials. See BUILDING CONTRACT (Breach of contract).

FOOD AND DRUGS

Pre-packed foods—Sale. See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (Pre-packed goods).

Sale—Drug—Supply by chemist under National Health Service. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (Pharmaceutical services).

Milk not of the substance demanded—Warranty as defence—Milk Marketing Board—Milk sold by farmers to board under warranty—Milk purchased by wholesaler from board under warranty—Pasteurisation, testing and bottling by wholesalers—Subsequent sale to retailer—Sale by him to sampling officer—Excess of penicillin in milk—Board brought into proceedings consequent on defence of wholesalers relying on warranty—Whether defence of warranty by farmers available to board—Food and Drugs Act, 1955 (c. 16), s. 115 (1) [MILK MARKETING BOARD v. HALL] .. .. . 259

FOREIGN DECREE

Validity. See DIVORCE.

FOREIGN PROCEEDINGS

Privilege—Documents prepared for foreign litigation. See DISCOVERY (Production of documents—Privilege).

Gaming—Amusements with prizes—Permit obtained under s. 49 (1) of, and Sch. 6 to, the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 for installation of gaming machines—These gaming machines complied with the conditions of s. 49 (3)—Previously existing activities, lawful under s. 32 and s. 33, comprising bingo, French boule and two gaming machines were continued—Whether these previously existing activities were “amusements with prizes” and whether their continuance contravened s. 49 (2)—Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 (c. 2) s. 32, s. 33, s. 49—Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1964 (c. 78), s. 2 [FOX v. ADAMSON] .. .. . 411

GAS

Escape—Explosion—Whether Gas Board liable. See NEGLIGENCE (Res ipsa loquitur).

GIFT

Advancement—Presumption—Stepson. See Disclaimer, post.

Disclaimer—Finality of disclaimer. See Disclaimer—Knowledge of nature of donee's possible claim, post.

Knowledge of nature of donee's possible claim—Finality of oral disclaimer of attempted gift inter vivos—Disclaimer operating by way of avoidance not by way of disposition of equitable interest—Writing not required under Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 53 [Re PARADISE MOTOR CO., LTD.] .. .. . 625

Writing—Whether necessary. See Disclaimer, ante.

HIGHWAY

Danger or annoyance to users—Deposit of builders' hopper—Hopper six feet wide deposited on highway adjacent to kerb to collect builders' rubble—Consent of highway authority not obtained—Commercial convenience not lawful excuse—Road straight and well lit at night—Red lamps lit by hopper—Highway forty-three feet wide—Lorry ran into hopper at night—Lorry driver not, in the circumstances, endangered by hopper—Highways Act, 1959 (c. 25), s. 140 (1) [GATLAND v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR.] .. .. . 100

Maintenance—Standard of repair—Flagstone defective—Small triangular gap at corner, making a possible tripping point one half-inch in depth—Defect not a reasonably foreseeable cause of danger in a pavement in public use—Unevenness in pavement insufficient to give rise to cause of action in negligence or for breach of statutory duty—Highways Act, 1959 (c. 25), s. 44 (1) [LITTLE v. LIVERPOOL CORPN.] .. .. . 343

Negligence. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Negligence).

Non-repair—Standard of repair. See Maintenance, ante.

Street—Street works—Safety requirements—Statutory duty to fence and guard street that is broken up—Trench dug for sewer, but not fenced, guarded nor lighted during hour of darkness—Injury to pedestrian—No negligence by undertakers—Whether civil action for breach of statutory duty lay—Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950 (c. 39), s. 8 (1) (a) [KEATING v. ELVAN REINFORCED CONCRETE CO., LTD.] .. .. . 139

Widening—Improvement line—Overlapping town and country planning powers—Compensation. See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING (Development—Permission for development).

HIRE-PURCHASE

Detinue—Claim by owners—Damages. See DETINUE.

Mercantile agent. See AGENT (Mercantile agent—Possession of goods).

HOSPITAL

Order—Mentally disordered prisoner. See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence—Hospital order).

HOUSE OF LORDS

Costs—Order for costs other than by award to successful party—Letter within fourteen days of conclusion of hearing [PROCEDURE DIRECTION] .. .. . 606

HOUSE TO HOUSE COLLECTION

See CHARITY.

HUSBAND AND WIFE

Divorce. See DIVORCE.

Maintenance agreement—Duration—No express provision for duration or termination—Subsistence of marriage contemplated at time when agreement entered into—Decree absolute of divorce nearly four years later—Re-marriage of wife about four months after that—Thereafter husband paid towards arrears computed to date of wife's re-marriage—No claim to maintenance under agreement for period after re-marriage until more than four years after re-marriage, arrears claimed in respect of period since decree absolute—Whether agreement for maintenance ceased to have effect after decree absolute—Whether wife estopped from asserting claim [COVELL v. SWEETLAND] .. .. . 1016

Property—Matrimonial home—Protection against eviction—Procedure—Application may be heard by registrar—R.S.C., Ord. 32, r. 11—R.S.C., Ord. 89, r. 1, r. 3—Matrimonial Homes Act 1967 (c. 75), s. 1 [PRACTICE DIRECTION] .. .. . 135

Summary proceedings—Application—Procedure by originating summons—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17 [PRACTICE DIRECTION] .. .. . 116

ILLEGALITY

- Loan—Prohibition of financial assistance—Whether extends to defeat liability of borrower as constructive trustee [SELANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (No. 3)] .. 1073

IMMIGRANT

Commonwealth. See COMMONWEALTH IMMIGRANT.

IMPORT DUTY

Commonwealth preference. See CUSTOMS (Commonwealth preference).
Interest. See CUSTOMS (Imported goods).

IMPORTATION

Goods, of—Customs duty. See CUSTOMS.

INCOME TAX

- Allowance—Industrial building or structure—New factory comprising distinct blocks of buildings—Blocks connected by internal roads, etc.—Administrative block excluded from initial allowances, being regarded as an office if taken alone—All buildings viewed collectively found not to be a single industrial building or structure—Question of fact for commissioners—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 271 (3), (4) [ABBOTT LABORATORIES, LTD. v. CARMODY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] .. 879
- Casual profit on hedge against devaluation—Purchase of silver bullion—Profit on re-sale—Finding that other considerations influenced purchase unsupported by evidence—Whether adventure in the nature of trade—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), Sch. D, Case I [WISDOM v. CHAMBERLAIN (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] .. 714
- Change of ownership of trade. See Deduction in computing profits—Loss, post.
- Deduction in computing profits—Debt—Estimate of probable loss—No entry made in accounts in respect of debt—Greater part of debt subsequently released—Accounts re-opened—Whether debt to be entered at the figure remaining payable after release or at the estimate of probable loss which would have been made at the time of preparation of the accounts which were being re-opened [SIMPSON v. JONES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] .. 929
- Indebtedness set off against profits and subsequently released—Construction of enactment—Finance Act, 1960 (c. 44), s. 36* [SIMPSON v. JONES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] .. 929
- Loss—Carrying forward of loss—Change of ownership of trade—Transfer of trade by parent to subsidiary company—Parent company previously contracted to sell its holding of subsidiary company's shares to purchaser—Contract subject to condition precedent solely for benefit of purchaser—Waiver of condition by purchaser after transfer of trade to subsidiary—Whether beneficial ownership of shares had passed to purchaser before transfer of trade to subsidiary (viz., while contract remained conditional)—If so, terms of s. 17 of Act of 1954 not satisfied—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 342—Finance Act, 1954 (c. 44), s. 17* [WOOD PRESERVATION, LTD. v. PRIOR (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] .. 849
- Discontinuance of trade—Question of fact—Permanent discontinuance—Question of law whether trade was permanently discontinued for purposes of taxing enactment—Taxpayer company manufacturing pharmaceutical products—Sale of shares and business to public company—Proposed change from rubber to plastic components—Pilot plant to test commercial possibilities—Discontinuance of taxpayer company's operations—Manufacture of same products by public company's subsidiary—Marketing by public company—Sales in taxpayer company's name to its customers—Subsequent re-sale of shares and business—Restoration of taxpayer company's operations after nine months—Whether permanent discontinuance and commencement of new trade, or merely temporary suspension of trade and its resumption—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 127, s. 128, s. 342 [INGRAM (J. G.) & SON, LTD. v. CALLAGHAN (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] .. 918
- Double taxation—Relief—Credit of foreign tax against income tax—Computation—Tax borne by the body corporate—Attributable to proportion of "relevant profits" represented by dividends—Meaning of relevant profits—Profits in accounts of foreign body corporate or as assessed for foreign tax purposes—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 347, Sch. 16, para. 9 [BOWATER PAPER CORPN., LTD. v. MURGATROYD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] .. 936
- Income—Perquisites or profits of office or employment—Car loan scheme for employees—Adjustment of employee's wage to meet cost—Scheme terminable by fourteen days' notice—Adjustment was a reduction of wage rate, not a deduction from wages—Car loan not a taxable perquisite of employment—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 156 (Sch. E), as amended—Finance Act, 1956 (c. 54), s. 10, Sch. 2, para. 1 [HEATON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BELL] .. 1156
- Industrial building or structure. See Allowance, ante.
- Non-resident—Assessment in name of agent—Exemption for broker and "general commission agent"—Meaning of "general commission agent"—Company virtually sole agent of non-resident—Lack of generality of custom—Many non-broker like activities—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 370, s. 373 (1), proviso [FLEMING (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. LONDON PRODUCE CO., LTD.] .. 975
- Profits—Deduction. See Deduction in computing profits, ante.
- Casual profit—Profit from hedge against devaluation. See* Income—Casual profit, ante.
- Relief—Losses—"Trade" and stock-in-trade—Company dealing in shares and securities—Purchase of shares in other companies—Profit to be made by recovery of income tax on loss claims—Companies' dividends depreciating value of shares—Dividends to accrue over period of years—Not an adventure or concern in the nature of trade—Principle applicable in determining whether such a transaction was a trading transaction—Dividends paid partly out of accumulated profits to which s. 4 of the Act of 1955 applied—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 341—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1955 (c. 17), s. 4 [LUPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. F.A. & A.B., LTD.] .. 1042
- Succession to trade—Carrying forward loss. See Deduction in computing profits—Loss, ante.
Discontinuance. See Discontinuance of trade, ante.
- Tax advantage—Counteracting—Surtax. See SURTAX (Tax advantage).
- Trade—Whether trading transaction. See Relief—Losses, ante.

INDECENCY

Gross indecency. See COURT-MARTIAL (Civil offence); CRIMINAL LAW (Gross indecency).
See also CRIMINAL LAW (Drugs).

INDEMNITY

- Negligence—Building contract—Building owner negligent as well as building contractor, and both liable to specialist contractor for damage to his property on the site—Whether indemnity clause in building contract should be construed so as not to extend to building owner's liability for negligence* [A.M.F. INTERNATIONAL, LTD. v. MAGNET BOWLING, LTD.] .. 789
- [WALTERS v. WHESBOE, LTD. AND SHELL REFINING CO., LTD.] .. 816n.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR

Architect. See OCCUPIER (Negligence—Building owner).

INDICTMENT

Indictment—Generally. See CRIMINAL LAW (Indictment).

INDUCEMENT OF BREACH OF CONTRACT

See TORT.

INFANT

Action, by—Adoption of action on attaining full age. See PRACTICE (Parties—Infant).

Blood test—Power of court to order. See DIVORCE (Infant—Jurisdiction).

Child of the family—Matrimonial Causes Act 1965, s. 46 (2) (b). See DIVORCE (Infant—Child of the family).

Commonwealth immigrant—Admission to United Kingdom. See COMMONWEALTH IMMIGRANT.

Custody—Divorce proceedings, in. See DIVORCE (Custody).

Intoxicating liquor—Sale to. See LICENSING (Offence).

INJUNCTION

Interlocutory—Balance of convenience—Trade dispute. See TORT (Inducement to commit breach of contract).

INSURANCE

Fire insurance—Landlord and tenant. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Lease—Covenant—Insurance).

Motor insurance—Third party risks—Certificate of insurance—False statement for purpose of obtaining insurance certificate—Withholding material information for the like purpose—Whether guilty mind an element of the offence—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. 2 c. 16), s. 235 (2) [R. v. CUMMERSON] .. .. . 863

INTENTION

Criminal. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Pleading. See PLEADING (Particulars).

INTEREST

Customs duty—Deposit by way of security for unpaid duty. See CUSTOMS (Imported goods).

Rate of interest—Limitation of liability. See SHIPPING (Limitation of liability—Conversion rate).

INTOXICATING LIQUOR

Licensing. See LICENSING.

Offences—Drunk and disorderly in a public place—Whether enactment creating the offence was repealed before the replacing enactment in s. 91 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 was brought into operation—Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 12 (1)—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 91 (5), s. 103 (2), Sch. 7, Pt. 1—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (Commencement No. 1) Order 1967 (S.I. 1967 No. 1234), art. 1, Sch. 1 and Appendix thereto [OSGERBY v. RUSHTON] .. .. . 1196

INVESTMENT GRANT

See TRADE.

JOINDER OF PARTIES

Civil action. See PRACTICE (Parties).

JOINT ACCOUNT

Partnership—Single venture. See PARTNERSHIP (Authority of one partner to bind firm—Partnership with third party for single venture).

JOINT TENANCY

Business premises—New tenancy. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (New tenancy—Business premises—Application).

JUDGE

Notes—Appeal, for use on. See COURT OF APPEAL (Judge's note).

JUDGMENT

Declaratory. See DECLARATION.

Judicial decision as authority—Stare decisis—Long standing decision on statutory enactment subsequently repealed and replaced [R. v. BOW ROAD DOMESTIC PROCEEDINGS COURT, Ex parte ADEDIGBA] .. .. . 89

Title—Infant plaintiff having attained full age [CARBERRY v. DAVIES] .. .. . 817

JUDICIAL SEPARATION

Generally. See DIVORCE.

JURISDICTION

County court. See COUNTY COURT.

JURY

Criminal trial, at. See CRIMINAL LAW (Trial).

Discharge—During criminal trial. See CRIMINAL LAW (Trial—Jury).

Verdict—Criminal trial. See CRIMINAL LAW (Verdict).

JUSTICES

Licensing. See LICENSING.

See also MAGISTRATES.

LAND

Recovery of possession. See COUNTY COURT (Jurisdiction—Mortgage).

LAND CHARGE

Estate contract—Registration—Name of estate owner—Registration of estate contract in name of "Frank David Blackburn" when true name of estate owner was "Francis David Blackburn"—Registration not a nullity, but effective against purchaser who did not search or searched in wrong name—Search by subsequent intending mortgagee in name that was not estate owner's full correct name—Whether mortgagee deemed to have notice of estate contract—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 198 (1)—Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 10 (2) [OAK CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING SOCIETY v. BLACKBURN] .. .. . 117

Search—Official certificate of search—Conclusiveness—Search in name that was a version of estate owner's name but not his full correct name—Search in name "Francis Davis Blackburn", when true name was "Francis David Blackburn"—Estate contract registered in name "Frank David Blackburn" not revealed by search—Effect of certificate of search—Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 17 (3) [OAK CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING SOCIETY v. BLACKBURN] .. .. . 117

LAND DRAINAGE

- Drainage rates—Underground land—Application for determination that no rule should be levied in respect of land more than seven hundred feet below surface—Whether a horizontal section of underground land could be a portion of the district within the Land Drainage Act, 1930 (c. 44), s. 24 (7) [R. v. TRENT RIVER AUTHORITY, Ex parte NATIONAL COAL BOARD] .. 273

LANDLORD AND TENANT

- Business premises—Notice to quit. See Notice to quit, post.
- Landlord—User of premises—Liability—Dangerous drugs. See DRUGS (Dangerous drugs—Cannabis—Tenant of house).
- Lease—Covenant—Insurance—Repayment by lessee of amount of fire insurance premiums paid by lessor—Lessor to insure with reputable insurers—Whether implied term against lessor imposing unnecessary heavy burden on lessees in respect of premium [BANDAR PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD. v. DARWEN (J. S.) (SUCCESSORS), LTD.] .. 305
- Overridden by statutory powers. See NUISANCE (Sewer—Obstruction to flow of river caused by pipe of sewer constructed by local authority beneath river bed but becoming exposed as river bed washed away).*
- Creation of tenant's interest—Whether date of execution of lease or of subsequent commencement of term [NORTHCOTE LAUNDRY, LTD. v. FREDERICK DONNELLY, LTD.]* .. 50
- Matrimonial home of tenants—Matrimonial Homes Act 1967. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Property—Matrimonial home).
- New tenancy—Business premises—Application—Joint tenants—One joint tenant only applying—Applicant in sole occupation, carrying on former partnership business—Whether applicant "the tenant" and so entitled to apply for grant of new tenancy—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 65), s. 24 (1), s. 41 [JACOBS v. CHAUDHURI] .. 124
- Opposition by landlord—Intention to occupy premises for own business—Landlord's interest, a leasehold interest, created within five years—Date of creation—Whether date of execution of lease or of commencement of term—Sub-tenant's interest arising only on commencement of term, sub-tenant being also freeholder—Whether leasehold landlord debarred from opposition under s. 30 (1) (g)—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56), s. 30 (2) [NORTHCOTE LAUNDRY, LTD. v. FREDERICK DONNELLY, LTD.]* .. 50
- Notice to quit—Business premises—New tenancy for three years "from" May 1, 1963—First rent payable on May 1, 1963—Rent payable in advance—Notice terminating tenancy on Apr. 30, 1966—Validity of notice—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56), s. 25 (4) [LADYMAN v. WIRRAL ESTATES, LTD.] .. 197
- Rent—Regulated tenancy. See RENT RESTRICTION (Fair rent).
- Rent restriction. See RENT RESTRICTION.

LAW

- Preliminary point of law. See PRACTICE (Preliminary point of law).

LEGAL AID

- Costs—Taxation—Judgment or final order must include direction for taxation of costs of assisted person unless otherwise directed—Matrimonial causes—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1962 (S.I. 1962 No. 148), reg. 19 (3) [PRACTICE DIRECTION] .. 443
- Criminal cases—Grant—Practice—Offer of legal aid to be made by court where heavy sentence likely, even though accused pleads guilty—Sentence of thirty months' marginal—Duty of court to ensure representation where circumstances clearly require careful inquiry [R. v. GREEN] .. 77
- Delay—Appeals in matrimonial cases from magistrates' courts. See MAGISTRATES (Husband and wife—Appeal).

LIBEL

- Fair comment—Facts relied on to support plea must be facts existing at date of publication—Particulars pleaded in support of defence of fair comment included events occurring after publication of alleged libel—Particulars struck out [COHEN v. DAILY TELEGRAPH, LTD.] .. 407

LICENCE

- Intoxicating liquor. See LICENSING.

LICENSING

- Coffee bar. See REGISTRATION (Premises).
- Jurisdiction—Consent to alteration of premises—Old building, an hotel, completely demolished at time of application—Proposed replacement by a supermarket—"Premises" referred only to buildings—No jurisdiction to grant consent under Licensing Act 1964 (c. 26), s. 30 [R. v. HASTINGS LICENSING JUSTICES, Ex parte LOVIBOND (JOHN) & SONS, LTD.] .. 270
- Licence—Off-llicence—Original licence for sale of beer only—Amendment of law to reduce forms of off-llicence to two only—One form was for intoxicating liquor of all descriptions, the other was for sale of beer, cider and wine only—Renewal to be for licence of type nearest to the previously existing licence, viz., for sale of beer, cider and wine—Such licence similar to previously existing licence within s. 3 (3) (a) of Licensing Act 1964—Licensing Act 1964 (c. 26), s. 1 (3) (as amended by Finance Act 1967 (c. 54), s. 5 (1) (c), Sch. 7, para. 1 (b) (ii)), s. 3 (3) (a) [R. v. LEICESTER LICENSING JUSTICES, Ex parte BISSON] .. 351
- Offence—Sale of intoxicating liquor to person under eighteen years of age—Wife of holder of licence left in charge of licensed premises during his temporary absence—Sale of cider to boy of fourteen—No evidence that wife was contractually servant of, or was being paid by, or under control of licence-holder—Whether wife a servant of holder of licence for the purposes of the Licensing Act 1964 (c. 26), s. 169 (1) [BRANDISH v. POOLE] .. 31

LIGHTING

- Factory, at. See FACTORY (Lighting).

LIMITATION OF ACTION

- Extension of time limit—Discretion—Principle governing determination whether leave should be granted—Reasonable prospect of winning action and obtaining adequate damages on known position, if completely advised—Preliminary issue without evidence directed—Severe injury to plaintiff in 1961—Deterioration in 1965—Plaintiff alleged want of knowledge of future deterioration before 1965—Limitation Act 1963 (c. 47), s. 1 (3), s. 7 (4) [GOODCHILD v. GREATNESS TIMBER CO., LTD.] .. 255
- Leave to contend in an action that time limit not a defence—Application by member of trade union to union for advice—All reasonable steps taken by member—Attributability of injury first known by member when union's advice communicated to him in July, 1967—Nature of applicant's illness (silicosis) known to him in September, 1966—Disease contracted in employment before 1960—Leave granted ex parte—Limitation Act 1963 (c. 47), s. 7 (5) [PICKLES v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD]* .. 598

LIMITATION OF LIABILITYAir Transport. See CARRIAGE BY AIR.Sea transport. See SHIPPING (Limitation of liability).LISTSChancery Division. See PRACTICE (Trial).LOANContract. See MONEYMoneylender, by. See MONEYLENDERLOCAL AUTHORITYContract—Statutory powers—Agreement not to exercise—Invalidity. See PUBLIC AUTHORITY (Statutory powers).LOG BOOKMotor vehicle. See MOTOR VEHICLE (Registration book).LOOK-OUTDuty of railway authority to provide. See RAILWAY.MAGISTRATESDesertion—Intention—Medical advice that separation or temporary separation from wife required by husband's health—Intention on part of husband to make separation permanent [TICKLE v. TICKLE] .. 154Husband and wife—Appeal—Delay—Legal aid—Need to avoid unnecessary delay on appeals to Divisional Court [PRACTICE DIRECTION] .. 247*Divisional Court—Procedure—Notice of appeal, not case stated—Matrimonial Proceedings (Magistrates' Courts) Act, 1960 (c. 48), s. 11—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 73 (2)* [TICKLE v. TICKLE] .. 154*Protection of young persons—Potentially polygamous marriage—Wife under sixteen. See* CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS (Protection).Infant—Blood test—Whether jurisdiction to order. See DIVORCE (Infant—Jurisdiction).Jurisdiction—Functus officio—Sentence passed—Invalid sentence—Whether magistrates had jurisdiction to substitute valid sentence—Sentence substituted by Divisional Court on application for certiorari—Administration of Justice Act, 1960 (c. 65), s. 16—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 39 [R. v. UXBRIDGE JUSTICES, Ex parte CLARK] .. 992Licensing. See LICENSING.Procedure—Plea of guilty in accused's absence—Disqualification—Road traffic offence—No adjournment to enable accused to be present and to be heard in mitigation—Circumstances of disqualification within s. 5 (3) of Road Traffic Act, 1962—Whether order for disqualification should be quashed—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1957 (c. 29), s. 1 (2), proviso (iii) [R. v. LLANDRINDOD WELLS JUSTICES, Ex parte GIBSON] .. 20MAINTENANCEAffiliation proceedings. See AFFILIATION.Wife—Maintenance agreement. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Maintenance agreement).Judicial separation. See DIVORCE (Judicial separation).MALAYSIASee* PRIVY COUNCIL.MARRIAGEPolygamous—Potentially polygamous—Protection of young persons. See CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS (Protection).MASTER AND SERVANTIncome tax—Perquisites or profits of office or employment. See INCOME TAX (Income—Perquisites or profits of office or employment).Redundancy. See REDUNDANCY.MATRIMONIAL HOMEStatutory proceedings generally—Matrimonial Homes Act 1967. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Property—Matrimonial home).MEDICINEDrugs. See DRUGS.National health service—Prescription—Supply not sale of medicine. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (Pharmaceutical services).MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATIONSee* COMPANY.MENS REASubjective test. See CRIMINAL LAW (Intention—Proof).MENTAL HEALTHHospital order—Criminal proceedings. See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence—Hospital order).MERCANTILE AGENTSee* AGENT.MILKSee* FOOD AND DRUGS (Sale).MISREPRESENTATIONInnocent misrepresentation—Effect of clause in written document misrepresented—No entitlement to commission. See ESTATE AGENT (Commission—Agreement to pay commission on introduction of person willing to sign a document capable of becoming a contract to purchase).MISTAKENature of document—Assignment on sale—Deed assigning leasehold term to L. executed by assignor in belief that it was a deed of gift to her nephew, P.—Assignor a widow aged seventy-eight who did not read the document—Signature obtained by fraud—Assignment and deed delivered to L. who mortgaged the property to a building society—Action by widow raising non est factum—Whether assignment void against L.—Whether building society could maintain estoppel against widow [GALLIE v. LEE] .. 322

Currency control. See CURRENCY CONTROL.

Loan—Burden of proof—Receipt of money admitted by defendant—Allegation by defendant that money a gift, alternatively that it was not repayable when the action was brought—No presumption of advancement arising—Whether burden of proof lay on defendant [SELDON v. DAVIDSON] .. .. . 755

MONEYLENDER

Memorandum—Contents—Element of machinery for effecting transaction, not essential term of contract—Loan to be secured on lease—Borrower to pay premium for lease—Part of loan intended to be used, and used, to meet premium—Premium in fact paid, and lease obtained, by lender's solicitor as agent for borrower's solicitor before loan completed—Memorandum not stating that premium to be met out of loan—Whether memorandum complied with Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 6 (2) [Re 22, ALBION STREET, WESTMINSTER] .. .. . 960

Mortgage—Variation of rate of interest—No memorandum in writing complying with local law—Whether mortgage as originally executed enforceable. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Jamaica—Moneylending).

MORTGAGE

Moneylender, to. See MONEYLENDER.

Possession of mortgaged property—Mortgagee's right to recover possession—Whether action for the recovery of land. See COUNTY COURT (Jurisdiction—Mortgage).

Search—Land charge—Name of estate owner. See LAND CHARGE (Search).

MOTOR TRACTOR

See ROAD TRAFFIC.

MOTOR VEHICLE

Chassis, as. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Motor tractor).

Driving licence—Disqualification. See MAGISTRATES (Procedure).

Insurance. See INSURANCE (Motor insurance).

Negligent driving. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Negligence).

Registration book—Issue—Passing of title—New car [ASTLEY INDUSTRIAL TRUST, LTD. v. MILLER] .. .. . 36

MURDER

See CRIMINAL LAW.

NAME

Company. See COMPANY.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE

Pharmaceutical services—Supply of medicine or drug—Contractual relationship between chemist and National Health Service Executive Council that of contract for services—Supply of drug by chemist against a prescription—Whether a sale to executive council—Sliver of glass in bottle of medicine—Whether offence of selling drug not of the nature, etc. demanded—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 38—National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1966 (S.I. 1966 No. 1210), reg. 23, Sch. 4, Pt. 1—Food and Drugs Act, 1955 (c. 16), s. 2 (1) [APPLEBY v. SLEEP] .. .. . 265

NATIONALISATION

Foreign—No compensation—Application to register trade mark. See TRADE MARK (Registration—Opposition).

NEGLIGENCE

Bank. See BANK.

Collecting cheque. See BANK (Cheque—Conversion).

Contributory negligence—Appeal—Apportionment of liability—Principle on which appellate court will intervene—Apportionment by trial judge not interfered with save for error in principle or where clearly erroneous—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) [BROWN v. THOMPSON] .. .. . 708

Damages—Assessment—Appeal—Principle on which appellate court will intervene. See DAMAGES (Assessment—Appeal).

Subsequent greater injury supervening. See DAMAGES (Personal injury).

Driving of motor vehicle. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Negligence).

Duty to take care—Property—Damage to property—Consequential loss to plaintiffs who did not own the property damaged—Defendants damaged hydrant on industrial estate—Water supply cut off for repairs—Loss of a day's work at plaintiff's factory on same estate owing to water being cut off—Plaintiffs having no cause of action against defendants for negligence [ELECTROCHROME, LTD. v. WELSH PLASTICS, LTD.] .. .. . 205

Exclusion of indemnity. See INDEMNITY (Negligence).

Exclusion of liability. See BUILDING CONTRACT (Specialist contractor).

Highway. See HIGHWAY.

Occupier. See OCCUPIER.

Res ipsa loquitur—Explosion caused by escape of gas from underground metal gas main—Expert evidence that fracture of pipe due to frost, but pipe in good condition and no reasonable steps available to safeguard public from consequences of such fractures—Negligence not established [PEARSON v. NORTH WESTERN GAS BOARD] .. .. . 669

NEW SOUTH WALES

See PRIVY COUNCIL (Australia).

NEW TRIAL

Action. See COUNTY COURT.

NON EST FACTUM

Plea. See MISTAKE (Nature of document).

NOTICE TO QUIT

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

NOVATION

See CONTRACT.

NUISANCE

Highway. See HIGHWAY (Non-repair).

Principle of Rylands v. Fletcher—Escape of gas from main fractured by frost—Whether Gas Board liable for injury to householder by explosion of escaped gas. See NEGLIGENCE (Res ipsa loquitur).

Sewer—Obstruction to flow of river caused by pipe of sewer constructed by local authority beneath river bed but becoming exposed as river bed washed away—Damage to plaintiff's property from eddies caused—Sewer not out of repair—Whether any breach of duty to plaintiffs by statute or common law established—Covenant, in lease demising sewerage rights, that local authority would not interfere with flow of water in river—Benefit of covenant not assigned to plaintiffs subsequently becoming riparian owners—Statutory powers of sewage disposal overriding lease [RADSTOCK CO-OPERATIVE & INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, LTD. v. NORTON-RADSTOCK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL] .. .. . 59

NULLITY

Costs—Legal aid. See LEGAL AID (Costs).

Petition—Form of petition—Omission of information—Ex parte application before service—Matrimonial Causes Rules 1968 (S.I. 1968 No. 219), r. 9 (2), App. 2, Form 2 [PRACTICE DIRECTION] .. .. . 88

OCCUPIER

Negligence—Building owner—Installation of equipment by separate specialist contractor—Firm of architects engaged by architect-employee of company associated with building owner—Whether firm of architects independent contractors—Specialist contractor's equipment damaged by flood water during erection of building—Building owner relying on building contractors—Liability of building owner and building contractors for negligence and under Occupiers' Liability Act, 1957 (c. 81), s. 1 and s. 2 (4) (b) [A.M.F. INTERNATIONAL, LTD. v. MAGNET BOWLING, LTD.] .. .. . 789

Damages—Financial loss flowing from damage to property—Whether recoverable—Occupiers' Liability Act, 1957 (c. 81), s. 1 (3) (b) [A.M.F. INTERNATIONAL, LTD. v. MAGNET BOWLING, LTD.] .. .. . 789

OFFER

Invitation to treat distinguished. See ANIMAL (Bird).

OFFICIAL RECEIVER

Company—Winding-up—Petition—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 224 (2). See COMPANY (Winding-up—Voluntary winding-up—Petition for compulsory liquidation).

OFFICIAL REFEREE

Note—Court of Appeal—Official Referee's note used in absence of agreed note taken on behalf of parties. See COURT OF APPEAL (Judge's note).

Reference to—Procedure. See PRACTICE (Reference to referee).

OPEN COURT

Criminal justice—Administration in open court [PRACTICE DIRECTION] .. .. . 144

OPTION

Purchase—Freehold—Consideration invalid covenants—Whether option enforceable. See PUBLIC AUTHORITY (Statutory powers—Contract not to exercise).

PARTICULARS

Pleading. See PLEADING.

PARTIES

Civil action—Joinder of parties. See PRACTICE.

PARTNERSHIP

Authority of one partner to bind firm—Partnership with third party for single venture—Transaction involved was one that would be in usual way of partnership business—Firm of produce merchants—Joint venture with plaintiff in purchase and re-sale of potatoes arranged by one partner—Whether partnership bound—Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 5 [MANN v. D'ARCY] 172

PERQUISITES

Employment, of—Income Tax. See INCOME TAX (Income—Perquisites or profits of office or employment).

PERSONAL INJURIES

Action—Limitation of time. See LIMITATION OF ACTION.

PETITION

Divorce. See DIVORCE.

Nullity. See NULLITY.

PLEADING

Particulars—Condition of mind—Plaintiff's state of mind—Absence of intention to make a gift to woman with whom plaintiff lived as his wife—Particulars of facts relied on—House conveyed into name of defendant, the unmarried wife—Plaintiff claimed half share in proceeds of sale of house—Alleged that contributions made by him towards purchase of house were never intended as gift to the defendant—Whether particulars of allegation of absence of intention would be ordered—R.S.C., Ord. 18, r. 12 (1), (4) [FEENEY v. RIX] .. .. . 569

POLICE

Statement taken by—Admissibility. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence—Confession).

POSSESSION

Crime—Statutory offence—Mental element—Meaning of being in "possession" of prohibited substance. See DRUGS (Dangerous drugs).

POST OFFICE

Telegraphic lines. See TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

POWER

Company—Power for permanent directors to remove ordinary directors—Whether principle determining survivorship bare powers or powers annexed to an office applicable. See COMPANY (Directors—Life directors).

Uncertainty—Power to select beneficiaries. See CHARITY (Power—Collateral power).

Exercise—Fraud on power—Application to court for variation of trusts consequent on exercise of power—Principle of approach where question of fraud on power involved. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Variation of trusts by the court—Power of appointment).

General power—Exercise by will—Assets for appointor's debts—Consequential validity of State death duty legislation. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Australia—New South Wales—Death duty).

PRACTICE

County court. See COUNTY COURT.

Criminal court. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Declaratory judgment. See DECLARATION.

Discovery. See DISCOVERY.

Dismissal of action. See Want of prosecution, post.

Divorce. See DIVORCE.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Property—Summary proceedings).

Particulars—Condition of mind—Pleading. See PLEADING (Particulars).

Parties—Infant—Proceeding by next friend—Adoption of action on attaining majority—Title to subsequent proceedings [CARRBERRY v. DAVIES] 817

Joinder of parties—Joint contractors—One joint contractor suing alone—Other joint contractor unwilling to sue—No offer of indemnity for costs made by plaintiff to his joint contractor—Joint contractor did not object to being added as defendant, but defendant objected—Absence of offer by plaintiff of indemnity for costs to his joint contractor did not constitute a ground on which defendants could maintain their objection [BURNSIDE v. HARRISON MARKS PRODUCTIONS, LTD.] 286

Preliminary point of law—Test whether preliminary issue should be ordered—Decisive of litigation if point of law decided one way—Action by East German company against West German company—Claim by East German company against solicitors acting for West German company in respect of money for fees and disbursements received by solicitors in good faith from West German company—Preliminary issue ordered [CARL-ZEISS-STIFTUNG v. HERBERT SMITH & CO. (A FIRM)] 1002

Probate. See PROBATE.

Reference to referee—Procedure—Hearing of first summons—Delivery of pleadings—Solicitors to be ready to state nature of claim and defence—Directions and orders by referee—Date for trial of action—Expert evidence [PRACTICE DIRECTION] 1213

Third party procedure—Notice—Setting aside—Specific performance action on agreement for sub-lease for twenty-one years of part of land on which plaintiffs were erecting multi-storey car park and filling station—Subsequent agreement by defendants for underlease to third parties of multi-storey car park—Defendants issued third party notice for specific performance of agreement for underlease to third parties—Whether relief claimed against third parties substantially the same as relief claimed by plaintiffs against the defendants—Whether third party notice should be set aside—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1 (1) (b) [CHATSWORTH INVESTMENTS, LTD. v. AMOCO (U.K.), LTD.] 288

Title of proceedings—Infant adopting action on attaining full age. See PRACTICE (Parties—Infant).

Trial—Lists—Witness list—Estimate of expected duration—Revision of estimate in the light of supervening circumstances—Chancery Division [FORSPAN v. ALTMANN] 760

Tribunal, of. See TRIBUNAL.

Want of prosecution—Dismissal of action—Delay—Inordinate delay without excuse—Personal injury to infant plaintiff—No defence on liability—Defendants paid £500 into court—No prejudice to defendants—Action not to be dismissed [MARLTON v. LEE-LEVITEN] 874

Delay—Inordinate delay without excuse—Plaintiffs in default in not proceeding with action—Counterclaim by defendants—Defendants took no step to secure that counterclaim should be heard—No statutory time bar applicable—Defendants put on terms of abandoning counterclaim if they were to obtain order dismissing plaintiffs' action—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 1 (4) [ZIMMER ORTHOPAEDIC, LTD. v. ZIMMER MANUFACTURING CO.] 309

PRELIMINARY POINT OF LAW

See PRACTICE.

PRESS AND PRINTING

Contempt of court. See CONTEMPT OF COURT (Publications concerning legal proceedings).

PRESUMPTION

Advancement. See GIFT (Disclaimer).

Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta—Criminal prosecution. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Driving with blood-alcohol proportion above prescribed limit—Evidence).

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT

See AGENT.

PRIVILEGE

Discovery. See DISCOVERY (Production of documents).

Legal communications—Foreign lawyers. See DISCOVERY (Production of documents—Privilege—Communications with foreign lawyers).

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal—Special leave—Discretionary—Special leave refused even though appeal lay as of right under territorial legislation [LOPES v. VALLIAPPA CHETTIAR] 136

Australia—New South Wales—Death duty—Exercise of general power of appointment by will of person domiciled in New South Wales—Trust fund comprising shares situate outside New South Wales—Validity of legislation of New South Wales imposing death duty—Construction of New South Wales Stamp Duties Act, 1920-1965, s. 102 (2) (a), (2A). [THOMPSON v. COMMISSIONER OF STAMP DUTIES] 896

Guyana—Criminal law—Evidence—Confession—Inducement—Person in authority—Statement to friend put in same lock-up as appellant by police—Whether person in authority [DEOKINANAN v. REGINAM] 346

Jamaica—Drugs—Dangerous drugs—Evidence—Admissibility—Search of premises authorised by warrant—Warrant did not authorise search—Accused found on premises and searched—Warrant for search of person should expressly authorise such search—Dangerous drug found on accused—Discretion of court to admit evidence obtained as result of search [KING v. REGINAM] 610

	PAGE
PRIVY COUNCIL—Jamaica—continued
Moneylending—Mortgage—Variation of contract—Interest—Rate of interest raised—Increase accepted by mortgagor by letter—No provision in mortgage for raising rate of interest but principal repayable on demand—No written memorandum of variation complying with Moneylending Law—No memorandum in writing of original mortgage necessary—Whether mortgage enforceable without the variation in rate of interest—Moneylending Law of Jamaica (c. 254), s. 8 [UNITED DOMINIONS CORPN. (JAMAICA), LTD. v. SHOUGAIR]	904
Malaysia—Appeal—Right to appeal to Judicial Committee—Where appeal lies as of right and where it is discretionary—Courts of Judicature Act 1964, s. 74 [LOPES v. VALLIAPPA CHETTIAR]	136
Criminal law—Appeal—New ground for upholding conviction—Presentation of a different case involved—Leave to advance new ground refused—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 155 [LIEW SAI WAH v. PUBLIC PROSECUTOR]	738
Internal security—Possession of ammunition—Hand grenade bodies—Whether parts of hand grenades were ammunition within Internal Security Act, 1960 (No. 18 of 1960), s. 2, s. 57 (1) [LIEW SAI WAH v. PUBLIC PROSECUTOR]	738
PRIZES
Amusements with prizes. See GAMING.
PROBATE
Practice—Omission of words from probate of will—Application—Copy of order to be annexed to will [PRACTICE DIRECTION]	592
PRODUCTION
Documents, of. See DISCOVERY (Production of documents).
PROFESSION
Society—Rule of conduct—Restraint of trade. See TRADE (Restraint of trade—Corporation—Professional society).
PROOF
Burden of. See MONEY (Loan).
PUBLIC AUTHORITY
Statutory powers—Alternative or overlapping powers—Whether power carrying right to compensation should be exercised [WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. BEVERLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL]	104, 1199
Contract not to exercise—Option to purchase property—Consideration for option included covenant by local planning authority not to exercise statutory power of compulsory acquisition—Cricket field—Covenant ineffective in law—Contract granting option not reasonable bargain without effective covenant—Option unenforceable by local authority—Land charge in respect of option vacated [Re STAINES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL'S AGREEMENT]	1
Discretion—Approval of expenditure for purposes of investment grants—Departmental £25 rule [BRITISH OXYGEN, LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE]	177
PUBLIC HEALTH
Water—Works injuriously affecting water rights. See NUISANCE (Sewer—Obstruction to flow of river caused by pipe of sewer constructed by local authority beneath river bed but becoming exposed as river bed washed away).
PURCHASE TAX
Chargeable goods—"Furniture"—Built-in dressing table units which were unstable unless fixed between other units of furniture and to walls—Units easily removable—Whether chargeable to tax as furniture—Purchase Tax Act 1963 (c. 9) Sch. 1, Pt. 1, Group 11 [AUSTIN (F.) (LEYTON), LTD. v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE]	13
QUANTUM MERUIT
See CONTRACT.
RADAR
See SHIPPING (Collision).
RAILWAY
Look-out—Statutory duty to appoint look-out—Circumstances in which "danger is likely to arise"—Ganger and two men sent to do three-man job—Line on which no train scheduled but on which engine or diverted train might come at any time—Ganger told no train scheduled—Work proving more difficult than anticipated and ganger having to stand near live line—Ganger did not send for look-out—Ganger struck by train diverted on to line—Breach of statutory duty by railway authority—Whether sole responsibility of ganger—Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 (S.R. & O. 1902 No. 696), r. 9 [KEANEY v. BRITISH RAILWAYS BOARD]	532
RAPE
See CRIMINAL LAW.
RATE
Drainage rate. See LAND DRAINAGE.
RECTIFICATION
Company—Registers. See COMPANY.
REDUNDANCY PAYMENT
See EMPLOYMENT (Redundancy).
REFRESHMENT
Premises—Coffee bar—Whether "kept open". See REGISTRATION (Premises).
REGISTRATION
Company. See COMPANY.
Premises—Coffee bar—(Condition requiring premises should not remain open after 1 a.m.—Coffee bar defined as premises "kept open" for public refreshment—Refreshment served to members of public after permitted hour through open widow—Door of premises closed—Brighton Corporation Act 1966, s. 7 [ROGERS v. DODD])	22
Trade mark. See TRADE MARK.
RELIGION
Charitable purposes. See CHARITY (Religion).
RENT
Regulated. See RENT RESTRICTION (Rent).
Variation by deed—Stamp duty. See STAMP DUTY (Bond, covenant or instrument—Deed varying rent reserved by a lease).

RENT RESTRICTION

Matrimonial homes—Matrimonial Homes Act 1967. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Property—Matrimonial home).

Rent—Determination of fair rent—Cost of services—Management charge in respect of services—Selective employment tax in respect of staff—Rentals of residential staff's flats—Cost of central heating—Whether such management charge and S.E.T. allowable in calculating cost of services—Whether amount allowable in respect of rent of staff flats and of cost of central heating may be reduced below figure of actual cost, if smaller amount appropriate—Whether rent assessment committee bound to inspect staff flats—Rent Act 1965 (c. 95), s. 27, Sch. 3, para. 12 [METROPOLITAN PROPERTIES CO., LTD. v. NOBLE] . . . . . 313

Regulated tenancy—Determination of fair rent—Application—Failure to specify amount of rent sought to be registered—Whether fatal defect rendering application a nullity—Rent Act 1965 (c. 75), s. 26 (5), Sch. 3, para. 2—Rent Regulation (Forms, etc.) (England and Wales) Regulations 1965, S.I. 1965 No. 1976, reg. 7, Sch. 3, Form 4, para. 9 [CHAPMAN v. EARL] . . 1214

RES GESTAE

See EVIDENCE.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR

See NEGLIGENCE.

RES JUDICATA

Dismissal of action for want of prosecution—Whether estoppel by record can be founded merely on such dismissal [POPLE v. EVANS] . . . . . 743

Divorce—Custody proceedings. See DIVORCE (Custody—Estoppel).

Undisclosed principal—Contract for purchase of land entered into by C. acting as agent for principal whose identity and existence were unknown to vendor—Action by C. for specific performance—C. adjudicated bankrupt—Trustee in bankruptcy elected not to proceed with action—Undisclosed principal brought fresh action—Whether defendant could maintain res judicata based on the dismissal of C.'s action [POPLE v. EVANS] . . . . . 743

RESTRAINT OF TRADE

Resolution of society. See TRADE (Restraint of trade—Corporation).

RESTRICTIVE COVENANT

Restrictive covenant affecting land—Discharge or modification—Covenant imposed in February, 1963, application to modify in February, 1965—No change of circumstances affecting land—Applicants covenantors, respondents covenantees—Modification refused—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 84 (1) [CRESSWELL v. PROCTOR] . . . . . 682

REVENUE

Purchase tax. See PURCHASE TAX.

ROAD TRAFFIC

Disqualification for holding licence—Life disqualification—Offender aged twenty-eight—Previous disqualifications extending for some twelve years—Disqualifications not for bad driving—Whether life disqualification, depriving offender of all future opportunity for driving, should stand—Road Traffic Act, 1962 (c. 59), s. 5 [R. v. BOND] . . . . . 1040

Plea of guilty in accused's absence—Whether magistrates' court bound to adjourn before imposing obligatory disqualification under totting-up provisions. See MAGISTRATES (Procedure—Plea of guilty in accused's absence).

Driving licence—Endorsement—Common law misdemeanour—Attempt to commit offence of taking and driving away motor vehicle without consent of owner or other lawful authority—No power to order endorsement of offender's driving licence—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16), s. 217—Road Traffic Act, 1962 (c. 59), s. 7—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (c. 55), s. 19 (9) [BELL v. INGHAM] . . . . . 333

Driving with blood-alcohol proportion above prescribed limit—Evidence—Provision of specimen—Breath test—Device by means of which test carried out to be approved by Secretary of State—Whether maxima omnia presumuntur rite esse acta sufficient to establish prima facie case—Road Safety Act 1967 (c. 30), s. 1 (1), s. 2 (4), (7), s. 7 (1) [SCOTT v. BAKER] . . . . . 993

Heavy motor car—Lorry hired with driver from haulage contractors by quarry owners and loaded with tarmac at quarry owners' works—Quarry owners responsible for correct weight of lorry leaving works—Lorry overloaded and driven on road by haulage contractors' driver—Whether quarry owners were "using" lorry at the time—Whether contravention by them of Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16), s. 64 (2) as amended by Road Traffic Act, 1962 (c. 59), s. 8, Sch. 1, Pt. 2, para. 19—Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1966 (S.I. 1966 No. 1288), reg. 70 (1) [WINDLE v. DUNNING & SON, LTD.] . . . . . 46

Motor insurance. See INSURANCE (Motor insurance).

Motor tractor—Chassis—Chassis capable of being used for various types of vehicle but destined to be fitted with free engine body—Whether chassis a motor tractor—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16), s. 253 (1) (6) [MILLARD v. TURVEY] . . . . . 7

Motor vehicle—Chassis. See Motor tractor, ante.

Lorry. See Heavy motor car, ante.

Negligence—Contributory negligence—Appeal. See NEGLIGENCE (Contributory negligence—Appeal).

Driving of motor vehicle—Liability of owner—Car driven for purposes of car-owner's son—Test of whether car-owner's liability—Request by car-owner to drive car for son's purposes as distinct from permission by car-owner for use by son [CARBERRY v. DAVIES] . . . . . 817

Unlighted motor vehicle stationary on dark night—Prima facie evidence of negligence, there being no street lighting—Rebuttal of presumption of negligence [MOORE v. MAXWELLS OF EMSWORTH, LTD.] . . . . . 779

Offence—Insurance—Using of motor vehicle while uninsured. See INSURANCE (Motor insurance—Third party risks).

RYLANDS v. FLETCHER

See NEGLIGENCE (Res ipsa loquitur).

SALE

Conditional contract. See CONTRACT (Conditional contract).

SALE OF GOODS

Fitness—Fitness of building in course of construction to receive specialist equipment. See BUILDING CONTRACT (Specialist contractor).

Implied condition of fitness—Contract for work and materials. See BUILDING CONTRACT (Breach of contract—Fitness or quality of materials).

Merchantable quality—Exception clause for latent defects—Incorporation of such clause inferred from course of bargaining—Buyers and sellers members of London Cattle Food Association—Whether inference that buyers relied on sellers' skill and judgment should be made—Condition of fitness of ground nut extracts for re-sale for use for food for cattle or poultry—Unfit for food for poultry—Whether implied condition broken—Compounded food fed to pheasants—Remoteness of damage—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 14 (1), (2) [HENRY KENDALL & SONS (A FIRM) v. WILLIAM LILlico & SONS, LTD.] . . . . . 444

Particular purpose—Sale by description—Air compressors—Purpose of re-sale in Persia made known to seller—Buyers, a Persian company, undisclosed principals—Buyers relied on own skill and judgment—No warranty of fitness for re-sale in Persia implied—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 13 (1), s. 14 (1) [TEHERAN-EUROPE CO., LTD. v. S. T. BELTON (TRACTORS), LTD.] . . . . . 886

Intoxicating liquor. See LICENSING (Offence).

Mercantile agent. See AGENT (Mercantile agent).

Offer for sale or invitation to treat. See ANIMAL (Bird).

Purchase tax. See PURCHASE TAX.

Supply—Distinguished from sale. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (Pharmaceutical services).

Transfer of property—Unascertained goods in possession of third party—Passing of risk—Buyers' carrier given delivery note addressed to warehouseman—Goods for carrier put out on pavement from bulk by warehouseman before carrier's arrival—Delivery note accepted by warehouseman—Goods thereafter loaded by carrier—Goods at buyers' risk from time of acceptance of delivery note by warehouseman and indication by him to carrier of goods for transport to buyers—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 18, r. 5, s. 29 (3) [WARDAR'S (IMPORT & EXPORT) CO., LTD. v. NORWOOD (W.) & SONS, LTD.] . . . . . 602

Warranty—Food—Defence. See FOOD AND DRUGS (Sale).

SALE OF LAND

Search—Land charge—Name of estate owner. See LAND CHARGE (Search).

SATISFACTION

Debt. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

SEARCH WARRANT

Authority to search persons. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Jamaica—Drugs—Dangerous drugs—Evidence).

SELECTIVE EMPLOYMENT TAX

Refund—Appeal—Activities of employer qualifying for refund—Standard Industrial Classification, headings 500, 602—Determination of tribunal whether activities were within the scope of particular description in heading 602—Tribunal's decision on such a question not to be interfered with on appeal, if it could reasonably have been reached—Employer's business in laying electric cables—Whether engaged in distribution of electricity for public supply within heading 602—Selective Employment Payments Act 1966 (c. 32), s. 2 (2), (3) [C. MAURICE & Co., LTD. v. MINISTER OF LABOUR] . . . . . 1030

SENTENCE

Crime. See CRIMINAL LAW; MAGISTRATES (Jurisdiction).

Disqualification for holding licence. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Disqualification for holding licence).

Legal aid, before. See LEGAL AID.

SERVICE

County court. See COUNTY COURT (Practice).

SETTLEMENT

Variation of trusts—Court's approval sought under Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, s. 1. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Variation of trusts by the court).

SEWER

Nuisance—Obstruction by pipe of sewer in river bed. See NUISANCE (Sewer).

SHARE

Company, in. See COMPANY (Shares).

SHIPPING

Collision—Damages—Detention—Mitigation—Vessel on charter—Subsequent charter arranged before collision—Substitution of slower ship with smaller carrying capacity under current charter—Vessel becoming free before time when current charter would have ended—Subsequent charter brought forward to begin at earlier date—Assessment of value to owners of vessel of advancement of commencement of subsequent charter—Amount so computed allowed in mitigation of damages [THE WORLD BEAUTY] . . . . . 673

Interest—Rate of interest. See Limitation of liability, post.

Evidence—Radar echoes recorded mechanically—Real evidence—Radar not monitored by human agency—Whether photographic record admissible in evidence in collision action [THE STATUTE OF LIBERTY] . . . . . 195

Limitation of liability—Conversion rate—Rate prevailing at the date of decree—Devaluation of pound sterling after date of collision but before decree of limitation made—Rate for conversion of gold francs mentioned in s. 1 of the Act of 1958 varied after devaluation—Whether new conversion rate applicable—Interest on amount fixed as limit of liability—What rate of interest applicable—Merchant Shipping (Liability of Shipowners and Others) Act, 1958 (c. 62), s. 1 (3)—Merchant Shipping (Limitation of Liability) (Sterling Equivalents) Order 1967 (S.I. 1967 No. 1725), art. 2 [THE ABADENA] . . . . . 726

Rate prevailing at the date of decree—Devaluation of pound sterling after date of collision but before decree of limitation made—Rate for conversion of gold francs mentioned in s. 1 of the Act of 1958 varied after devaluation—Whether new conversion rate applicable—Interest on amount fixed as limit of liability—What rate of interest applicable—Merchant Shipping (Liability of Shipowners and Others) Act, 1958 (c. 62), s. 1 (3), (4)—Merchant Shipping (Limitation of Liability) (Sterling Equivalents) Order 1967 (S.I. 1967 No. 1725), art. 2 [THE MECCA] . . . . . 731

SMUGGLING

Money—Export. See CURRENCY CONTROL (Exchange control).

SOCIETY

Incorporated—Resolution in restraint of trade. See TRADE (Restraint of trade—Corporation).

SOLICITOR

Audience—Client's right to be legally represented. See TRIBUNAL (Procedure—Legal representation).

Costs—Alleged want of authority on part of foreign defendant corporation to instruct solicitors in England—Claim that solicitors accountable to plaintiff for money received from defendant on account of costs—Action still pending—Preliminary issue directed [CARL-ZEISS-STIFTUNG v. HERBERT SMITH & Co.] .. .. . 1002

Duty—Discovery—Ensuring that client understands obligation to give discovery. See DISCOVERY (Duty of solicitor).

Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits—Debt).

Liability—Trustee—Constructive trustee—Moneys on account of costs come to the hands of defendant's solicitors for the conduct of the defence in an action—Claim by plaintiff in that action that defendant company was trustee of all its assets for the plaintiff—Separate action by plaintiff claiming that solicitors were accountable to it for moneys received on account of costs from the defendant in the main action—Whether claim was contrary to public policy as obstructing the course of justice [CARL-ZEISS-STIFTUNG v. HERBERT SMITH & Co. (A FIRM) (No. 2)] .. 1233

Litigation—Action arising out of car accident—No duty on defendants' solicitor to interview passenger in plaintiff's car, presumably friend of plaintiff and possibly potential claimant against defendants [ROE v. ROBERT MCGREGOR AND SONS, LTD.] .. .. . 636

Note—Hearing before Official Referee—Whether substituted for his note. See COURT OF APPEAL (Judge's note).

Official referee—Practice on first summons. See PRACTICE (References to referee—Procedure).

Practice—Witnesses—Enquiry of presumptive witnesses for other side in litigation—Whether solicitor ought to make such enquiry. See Litigation, ante.

Tribunal—Whether party entitled to be legally represented before domestic tribunal. See TRIBUNAL (Procedure—Legal representation).

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

Commonwealth preference. See CUSTOMS (Commonwealth preference).

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE

Oral contract—Fraud—Contract that plaintiff should have deceased's house after his death. See CONTRACT (Writing—Oral contract that plaintiff should have deceased's house after his death).

Part performance—Contract that plaintiff should have deceased's house after his death. See CONTRACT (Writing—Oral contract that plaintiff should have deceased's house after his death).

Third party procedure—Defendant seeking specific performance of agreement by him with third party. See PRACTICE (Third party procedure—Notice).

STAMP DUTY

Bond, covenant or instrument—Deed varying rent reserved by a lease—Deed not itself a lease or tack for the purposes of charge to stamp duty—Chargeable as bond, covenant, etc.—Amount chargeable nevertheless limited to what would be chargeable if deed of variation were a lease or tack—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 77 (5), Sch. 1 [GABLE CONSTRUCTION CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] .. .. . 968

STATUTE

Commencement—Repeals—Different provisions brought in to operation on different dates—Construction of order appointing days [OSGERBY v. RUSHTON] .. .. . 1196

Construction—Confiscatory construction—Private rights of property not taken away without compensation, unless intention clearly expressed—General control of development under town planning legislation—Special control available in regard to road widening under highways legislation—Liability under special control to pay compensation, but not under general control—Whether general control exercisable in regard to matters within special control—Highways Act, 1959 (c. 25), s. 72—Town and Country Planning Act, 1962 (c. 38), s. 12, s. 23 [WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. BEVERLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL] .. .. . 104, 1199

Convention—Reference to convention—Different effect given to international convention in United States laws—Paramountcy of English Act. See CARRIAGE BY AIR (Carriage of goods—International carriage—Limitation of liability).

Criminal and penal statutes—Strict construction, not extending beyond clear meaning [LIEW SAI WAH v. PUBLIC PROSECUTOR] .. .. . 738

Imperative or directory requirement—Procedural provision—"Must"—Rent Act 1965 (c. 75), Sch. 3, para. 2 [CHAPMAN v. EARL] .. .. . 1214

Replacing enactment—Scope of enactment determined by court in 1849—Enactment subsequently repealed and replaced in similar terms by successive statutes—Changed social conditions—Whether intention of Parliament that determination of 1849 should still apply—Affiliation proceedings brought by mother of child born abroad when mother domiciled abroad—Doctrine of stare decisis inapplicable [R. v. BOW ROAD DOMESTIC PROCEEDINGS COURT, Ex parte ADEDIGBA] .. .. . 89

Offence—Absolute offence—Interpretation of enactment—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16), s. 235 (2) [R. v. CUMMERSON] .. .. . 863

Mens rea—Intention to deprive accused of defence by way of absence of mens rea not to be imputed to Parliament [WARNER v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR.] .. .. . 356

Whether an element of statutory offence. See BANKRUPTCY (Offences).

Power—Contract not to exercise—Invalidity. See PUBLIC AUTHORITY (Statutory powers).

Repeal—Reference to repealed enactment—Application to replacing enactment. See CURRENCY CONTROL (Exchange control—Export—Smuggling money, Bank of England notes, out of the country).

Retrospective operation—Customs duty—Commonwealth preference. See CUSTOMS (Commonwealth preference).

Validity—Colonial Act—Taxing enactment. See PRIVY COUNCIL (Australia—New South Wales—Death duty).

STATUTORY DUTY

Breach—Causation—Probability of prevention of accident—Failure to ensure lighting of roadway turned on. See FACTORY (Lighting).

Cause of action—Street works—Safety precautions. See HIGHWAY (Street—Street works).
Railway legislation. See RAILWAY.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENT

Appointing days for commencement of enactments. See STATUTE (Commencement).

STREET

Generally. See HIGHWAY.

STREET WORKS

Public. See HIGHWAY (Street works).

SUMMONS

Directions—Dismissal of action for failure to take out. See PRACTICE (Want of prosecution).

Official reference—Practice on first summons. See PRACTICE (Reference to referee—Procedure).

SURTAX

Tax advantage—Counteracting—Conclusiveness of finding of main object by Special Commissioners—Return of capital and capitalisation of profits—Bona fide commercial transaction—One of main objects found to be tax advantages to stockholders generally—Not a finding which no reasonable man could reach—What fraction of payment to stockholder quantified to counteract tax advantage—Finance Act, 1960 (c. 44), s. 28 (1), (3) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. HAGUE] 1252

Married woman not separately assessed—Return of capital and capitalisation of profits—Notice served on married woman—Whether she obtained tax advantage—Whether notice valid—Finance Act, 1960 (c. 44), s. 28 (1), (3), s. 43 (4) (g) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. HAGUE].. . . . 1252

SURVEYOR

Remuneration—Additional work—Lump sum fee originally agreed. See CONTRACT (Quantum meruit—Existing contract).

TAKE-OVER BID

Bank's position. See BANK (Duty of care—Contractual duty to customer to exercise care and skill).

Resisting. See COMPANY (Ultra vires—Allotment of ordinary shares by directors to counter take-over bid).

TAXATION

Costs. See COSTS.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES

Telegraphic lines—Placing of telegraph line across private land—Public interest—Consent of land owner sought by Post Office—Failure to give consent—"Amenities" not impaired—Two farming households in neighbourhood thereby deprived of telephone service—Whether failure to give consent was contrary to public interest—Wayleave—Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1916 (c. 40), s. 1 [CARTWRIGHT v. POST OFFICE] . . . . . 646

TENANCY

New tenancy under Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (New tenancy).

THIRD PARTY PROCEDURE

High Court. See PRACTICE.

TIME

Computation—Period within which an act may be done—New tenancy of business premises for three years "from" May 1, 1963—Rent payable in advance, first payment on May 1, 1963—Notice terminating tenancy on Apr. 30, 1966—Validity of notice—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56), s. 25 (4) [LADYMAN v. WIRRAL ESTATES, LTD.] . . . . . 197

Crime—Time limit for prosecution—Court-martial—Civil offence—Indecent offences between males. See COURT-MARTIAL (Civil offence—Time limit).

Extension of time. See LIMITATION OF ACTION.

TITLE

Legal proceedings. See PRACTICE (Title of proceedings).

TORT

Damages. See DAMAGES.

Inducement to commit breach of contract—Indirect inducement—Recommendation of federation of newsgagents, a trade association of retailers, to members to stop sale of newspaper—Federation seeking to induce breach of contract between wholesalers and newspaper proprietors—Ignorance of terms of contracts between proprietors and wholesalers no defence where act done without caring whether breach of contract caused—Interlocutory injunction granted [DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD. v. GARDNER] . . . . . 163

Interference with contractual relations—Unlawful means—Recommendation by trade association to members to stop orders of newspaper—Recommendation deemed a restriction presumed contrary to public policy—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (c. 68), s. 6 (7), s. 21 (1) [DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD. v. GARDNER] . . . . . 163

Negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

Development—Permission for development—Notification of decision—Reasons—Factors taken into account should be identified—Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1965 (S.F. 1965 No. 473), r. 13 (1) [WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. BEVERLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL] . . . . . 104, 1199

Refusal of permission—Alternative to exercising statutory power under Highways Act, 1959, s. 72, to prescribe improvement line with a view to road widening—Exercise of power under s. 72 would carry right to compensation, but refusal of development permission might not or might carry less compensation—Dismissal by Minister of appeal from refusal of permission—Whether Minister's decision valid—Highways Act, 1959 (c. 25), s. 72—Town and Country Planning Act, 1962 (c. 38), s. 17, s. 23 [WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. BEVERLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL] . . . . . 104, 1199

Enforcement notice—Appeal against notice—Evidence—Admissibility. See EVIDENCE (Tribunal).

Purchase notice—Compensation. See COMPULSORY PURCHASE (Compensation—Purchase notice).

TRADE

Change—Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits—Loss).

Discontinuance—Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Discontinuance of trade).

Investment grants—Machinery and plant—Gas manufacturers—Transporters and cylinders used for the sale and delivery of gas—Articulated vehicles—Hydrogen trailer, and individual gas cylinders, which were left with customers for the gas to be drawn off—Whether capital expenditure on provision of such new equipment for distributive purposes or storage purposes was eligible for investment grant—Discretion of Board of Trade over approval of capital expenditure—Low cost of individual items not by itself a sufficient ground for withholding investment grant when aggregate expenditure was substantial—Industrial Development Act 1966 (c. 34), s. 1 (1), (2) (a), (3) (b) (c), s. 13 (1) [BRITISH OXYGEN CO., LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE] .. 77

Mark. See TRADE MARK.

Restraint of trade—Corporation—Professional society—Resolution of members restricting trading activities of members—Part of code of professional conduct, binding in honour but enforceable only through disciplinary statutory committee—Justiciable issue—Member entitled to court's determination of validity of resolution—No evidence of reasonableness of restriction in public interest—Whether restriction in unreasonable restraint of trade—Whether ultra vires the society as not sufficiently related to relevant main object of society [PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN v. DICKSON] .. 686

Pleading—Justifying circumstances to be pleaded in defence [PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN v. DICKSON] .. 686

Usage. See CUSTOM (Trade usage).

TRADE MARK

Registration—Opposition—Confusion—Contrary to morality—Mark formerly used by opponent in connexion with his business in Czechoslovakia and Central Europe—Business nationalised in 1948 by Czechoslovakian law—No compensation paid—Opponent migrated to Canada—Nationalised business began exporting to United Kingdom—Such exporting continued thereafter—Opponent having established similar business in Canada began exporting to United Kingdom in 1960—Canadian exports small in comparison with exports from Czechoslovakian business—Whether Czechoslovakian business entitled to registration of mark—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), s. 11 [STREDOCESKA FRUTA NARODNI PODNIK'S APPLICATION, Re, No. B.36420] .. 913

TRADE UNION

Inducement to commit breach of contract—Unlawful means—Trade association. See TORT (Inducement to commit breach of contract).

Legal assistance—Advice not tendered before limitation period expired—Extension of time. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Extension of time limit).

Ultra vires—Suspension of member—Declaration sought that suspension void—Period of suspension almost expired. See DECLARATION (Discretion to grant).

TRIAL

Civil action—Practice. See PRACTICE.

High Court. See PRACTICE.

New. See COUNTY COURT (New trial).

TRIBUNAL

Evidence—Legal rules of evidence inapplicable. See EVIDENCE (Tribunal).

Procedure—Legal representation—Inquiry into matter affecting licence-holder's reputation and livelihood—National club rules silent as to procedure—Stewards of dog racing track inquiring into doping of dog and requiring trainer's presence at inquiry—Whether trainer entitled to oral hearing—Whether entitled to be represented by counsel and solicitor [PETT v. GREYHOUND RACING ASSOCIATION, LTD.] .. 545

TROVER

See BANK (Cheque—Conversion).

TRUST AND TRUSTEE

Constructive trustee—Participation in dishonest design—Elements requisite to establish liability as if participant were a trustee—Take-over transaction involving use of company's moneys for the acquisition of its shares on the take-over—Liability as constructive trustee based on reasonable inference from known facts and on alleged failure to make enquiry—Novation of debt created by loan of company's moneys—Whether extending to liability of borrower as constructive trustee [SELANGOR UNITED RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. CRADOCK (A BANKRUPT) (No. 8)] .. 1073

Solicitor—Money received for conduct of defence. See SOLICITOR (Liability—Trustee).

Discretionary trust—Interest of objects of trust—Separate but unquantified. See ESTATE DUTY (Discretionary trust—Exhaustive discretionary trust).

Power, not trust. See CHARITY (Power).

Variation of trusts by the court—Power of appointment—Fraud on power—Principle governing court's approach to question of approving proposed arrangement—Fair case for investigation whether fraud on power—Question to be resolved before arrangement approved—Factors of possible benefit to appointors, being life tenants of funds—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (c. 53), s. 1 (1) [Re WALLACE'S SETTLEMENTS] .. 209

Protective trusts—"Like" trusts to protective trusts—Determinable life interests—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (c. 53), s. 1 (2) [Re WALLACE'S SETTLEMENTS] .. 209

Revocation of beneficial trusts and resettlement—Rescission of clauses declaring beneficial interests and substitution of new clauses—Settlor's life interest—Testamentary power of appointment and interests in default of appointment removed—Whether arrangement leaving a substratum but effecting the purpose of the original trusts by other means was an arrangement "varying" the original trusts—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (c. 53), s. 1 (1) [Re BALL'S SETTLEMENT] .. 438

ULTRA VIRES

Company. See COMPANY (Memorandum of association; Ultra vires).

Contract—Statutory powers—Agreement not to exercise. See PUBLIC AUTHORITY (Statutory powers).

Corporation—Professional society. See TRADE (Restraint of trade—Corporation).

UNCERTAINTY

Trust—Charitable trust. See CHARITY.

USAGE

Trade. See CUSTOM (Trade usage).

VARIATION OF TRUSTS

Court, by. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Variation of trusts by the court).

VERDICT

Criminal trial. See CRIMINAL LAW.

WARD OF COURT

Immigrant—Admission to United Kingdom—Wardship jurisdiction excluded. See COMMON-WEALTH IMMIGRANT (Admission to United Kingdom).

WAREHOUSEMAN

Delivery of goods—Carrier accepting delivery of goods for transport to buyer—Passing of property in goods. See SALE OF GOODS (Transfer of property—Unascertained goods in possession of third party).

WARRANT

Search. See SEARCH WARRANT.

WARRANTY

Feeding stuffs. See AGRICULTURE (Feeding stuffs).

Food—Defence. See FOOD AND DRUGS (Sale).

Goods—Fitness of goods. See SALE OF GOODS (Implied condition of fitness).

WATER AND WATERCOURSES

Nuisance—Obstruction to flow of water. See NUISANCE (Sewer).

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

Pre-packed goods—Short weight—Testing—Time and place of testing—Single articles brought in by purchaser for testing—No other articles tested—Similar goods available elsewhere in locality—Whether other articles of same kind available for testing within the meaning of Weights and Measures Act 1963 (c. 31), s. 26 (7) [SEARS v. SMITHS FOOD GROUP, LTD.] . . . . . 721

WIFE

Income tax—Counteracting tax advantage—No separate assessment. See SURTAX (Tax advantage).

Maintenance—Judicial separation. See DIVORCE (Judicial separation—Maintenance of wife).
Maintenance agreement. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Maintenance agreement).

Matrimonial home—Matrimonial Homes Act 1967. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Property—Matrimonial home).

Young person—Under sixteen—Potentially polygamous foreign marriage. See CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS (Protection).

WILL

Attestation—Superfluous signature—Intention with which signature affixed—Will signed by four persons below word "witnessed"—First two signatures those of testator's daughters who were his sole residuary legatees—Presumption of signing as witnesses—Daughters signed at testator's request "to make it stronger" after independent witnesses had signed—Whether inference that daughters signed as witnesses was rebutted—Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15 [IN THE ESTATE OF BRAYDA (decd.)] . . . . . 217

Charity. See CHARITY.

Contract to leave property. See CONTRACT (Writing—Oral contract that plaintiff should have deceased's house after his death).

Gift—Community house—Residuary bequest to a community house—Whether a gift for the furtherance of the work of the community [Re BANFIELD (decd.)] . . . . . 276

Omission—Probate—Grant omitting words from will. See PROBATE (Practice).

Uncertainty—Power to select beneficiaries. See CHARITY (Power—Collateral power).

Witness. See Attestation, ante.

WINDING-UP

Company. See COMPANY.

WITNESS

Credit—Impeaching credit. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence—Credit).

Criminal proceedings, in. See CRIMINAL LAW (Practice—Evidence).

Expert—Official referee, before. See PRACTICE (Reference to referee—Procedure).

WRITING

Disclaimer—Whether writing necessary for disclaimer of gift. See GIFT (Disclaimer).

CASES NOTED

	PAGE
Abadesa, The ([1968] 2 All E.R. 726). Applied in The Mecca	731
Abbott v. Philbin (Inspector of Taxes) ([1960] 2 All E.R. 763; [1961] A.C. 352; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 255). Applied in Heaton (Inspector of Taxes) v. Bell	1156
Aberfoyle Plantations, Ltd. v. Cheng ([1959] 3 All E.R. 910; [1960] A.C. 115; [1959] 3 W.L.R. 1011). Considered in Wood Preservation, Ltd. v. Prior (Inspector of Taxes)	849
Ackland v. Lutley ([1889] 8 L.J.Q.B. 164). Considered in Ladyman v. Wirral Estates, Ltd.	197
Albion Street (22), Westminster, Re ([1967] 3 All E.R. 943; [1968] 1 W.L.R. 18). Reversed . C.A.	960
Allen v. F. O'Hearn & Co. ([1956] 3 All E.R. 830, 831; [1937] A.C. 218; 106 L.J.P.C. 16; 156 L.T. 150). Dicta of LORD ATKIN followed in Pople v. Evans	743
Allen v. Sir Alfred McAlpine & Sons, Ltd. ([1968] 1 All E.R. 543; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 366). Applied in Marlton (an infant) v. Lee-Leviten	874
—, Considered in Zimmer Orthopaedic, Ltd. v. Zimmer Manufacturing Co.	309
Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia ([1876] 2 Ch.D. 656; [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 399; 45 L.J.Ch. 453; 35 L.T. 78). Dicta of JAMES, L.J., applied in Re Dunean (decd.)	395
Annie Hay, The ([1966] 1 All E.R. 663; [1966] 2 W.L.R. 359). Dictum of BRANDON, J., applied in The Abadesa	726
Associated London Properties, Ltd. v. Williams (Inspector of Taxes) ([1947] 2 All E.R. 475). Dictum of MACNAGHTEN, J., applied in Gable Construction Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs.	968
—, ([1948] 1 All E.R. 442). Considered in Gable Construction Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs.	968
Automatic Self-Cleaning Filter Syndicate Co., Ltd. v. Cuninghame ([1906] 2 Ch. 34; 75 L.J.Ch. 437; 94 L.T. 651). Considered in Bamford v. Bamford	655
Baindail (otherwise Lawson) v. Baindail ([1946] 1 All E.R. 342; [1946] P. 122; 115 L.J.P. 65; 17 L.T. 320). Followed in Mohamed v. Knott	563
Baker v. Barclays Bank, Ltd. ([1955] 2 All E.R. 584; [1955] 1 W.L.R. 838). Dictum of DEVLIN, J., considered and applied in Marfani & Co., Ltd. v. Midland Bank, Ltd.	573
—, Dictum of DEVLIN, J., not followed in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Craddock (No. 3)	1073
Barnes v. Addy ([1874] 9 Ch. App. 244; 43 L.J.Ch. 513; 30 L.T. 4). Considered in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Craddock (No. 3)	1073
Bell Houses, Ltd. v. City Wall Properties, Ltd. ([1966] 2 All E.R. 690; [1966] 2 Q.B. 693; [1966] 2 W.L.R. 1345). Dictum of SIMON, L.J., distinguished in Re Staines Urban District Council's Agreement	1
Bennett v. Bennett ([1952] 1 All E.R. 413; [1952] 1 K.B. 249). Followed in Re Staines Urban District Council's Agreement	1
Bishop (Inspector of Taxes) v. Finsbury Securities, Ltd. ([1966] 3 All E.R. 105; [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1402). Considered in Lupton (Inspector of Taxes) v. F. A. & A. B., Ltd.	1042
Rodenham v. Hoskins ([1848-60] All E.R. Rep. 697; [1852] 21 L.J.Ch. 873). Dicta of SIR RICHARD KINDERSLEY, V.-C., applied in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Craddock (No. 3)	1073
Bowater Paper Corp. v. Murgatroyd (Inspector of Taxes) ([1968] 1 All E.R. 568; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 834). Affirmed . C.A.	936
Boyd-Gibbins v. Skinner ([1951] 1 All E.R. 1049; [1951] 2 K.B. 379). Distinguished in Scott v. Baker Bravda (decd.). In the Estate of ([1967] 2 All E.R. 1233; [1967] 1 W.L.R. 1080). Reversed . C.A.	993
Burford, Re ([1932] 2 Ch. 122; 101 L.J.Ch. 321; 147 L.T. 135). Applied in Chatsworth Investments, Ltd. v. Amoco (U.K.), Ltd.	217
Burgess v. Beetham Electric Equipment, Ltd. ([1942] 2 All E.R. 658; [1943] 1 K.B. 96; 112 L.J.K.B. 195; 168 L.T. 105). Held no longer applicable in Feeney v. Rix	288
Burrell v. A.-G. ([1936] 3 All E.R. 758; [1937] A.C. 256; 108 L.J.K.B. 134; 156 L.T. 86). Followed in Re Weir's Settlement	569
Bwila and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries ([1891] 1 K.B. 189; 80 L.J.K.B. 472; 104 L.T. 121). Applied in Gallie v. Lee	1241
Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg ([1911] 1 K.B. 189; 80 L.J.K.B. 472; 104 L.T. 121). Applied in Gallie v. Lee	322
Carlsberg, The ([1952] 1 All E.R. 20; [1952] A.C. 292). Considered in Baker v. Willoughby	236
Celia (Owners) v. Volturino (Owners) ([1921] All E.R. Rep. 117, 119; [1921] 2 A.C. 558, 563; 90 L.J.P. 393, 395; 126 L.T. 5, 7). Dicta not applied in The Abadesa	789
Chajutin v. Whitehead ([1938] 1 All E.R. 159; [1938] 1 K.B. 506; 107 L.J.K.B. 270; 158 L.T. 277). Considered in Warner v. Metropolitan Police Comr.	356
Chaplin, Re ([1963] Ch. 115; 102 L.J.Ch. 56; 148 L.T. 190). Applied in Re Banfield (decd.)	276
Charlesworth v. Holt ([1861-73] All E.R. Rep. 266; [1873] L.R. 9 Exch. 38; 43 L.J.Ex. 25; 29 L.T. 647). Distinguished in Covell v. Sweetland	1016
Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Inc.) v. Simpson ([1944] 2 All E.R. 60; [1944] A.C. 341; 113 L.J.Ch. 225; 171 L.T. 141). Applied in Re Wootton's Will Trusts	618
City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., Ltd., Re ([1924] All E.R. Rep. 485; [1925] Ch. 407; 94 L.J.Ch. 545; 123 L.T. 729). Considered in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Craddock (No. 3)	1073
Clay v. A. J. Crump & Sons, Ltd. ([1963] 3 All E.R. 687; [1964] 1 Q.B. 533; [1963] 3 W.L.R. 866). Applied in A.M.F. International, Ltd. v. Magnet Bowling, Ltd.	789
Coates (decd.), Re ([1955] 1 All E.R. 26; [1955] Ch. 495; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 959). Applied in Re Wootton's Will Trusts	618
Commissioners of Customs and Excise v. Harz ([1967] 1 All E.R. 177; [1967] 1 A.C. 760; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 297). Considered in Deakinanan v. Reginam	346
Conway v. Rimmer ([1968] 1 All E.R. 874; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 908). Inspection ordered	304
Cooper (Inspector of Taxes) v. Sandiford Investments, Ltd. ([1967] 3 All E.R. 835; [1967] 1 W.L.R. 1351). Applied in Lupton (Inspector of Taxes) v. F. A. & A. B., Ltd.	1042
Corbett v. Corbett ([1953] 2 All E.R. 69; [1953] P. 205; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1124). Considered in F. v. F.	946
Cotman v. Brougham ([1918-19] All E.R. Rep. 265; [1918] A.C. 514; 87 L.J.Ch. 379; 119 L.T. 162). Considered in Re Introductions, Ltd.	1221
Coulson (F.A.), Re, Ex parte Official Receiver (Trustee in Bankruptcy) ([1933] All E.R. Rep. 544; [1934] Ch. 45; 103 L.J.Ch. 31; 150 L.T. 5). Explained and followed in Re A Debtor (No. 12 of 1958)	425
Cranston's Will Trusts, Re ([1949] 1 All E.R. 571; [1949] Ch. 523; [1949] L.J.R. 1066). Distinguished in Re Paradise Motor Co., Ltd.	625
Cutler v. Wandsworth Stadium, Ltd. ([1949] 1 All E.R. 550; [1949] A.C. 412; [1949] L.J.R. 830). Principle stated by LORD NORMAN applied in Keating v. Elvan Reinforced Concrete Co., Ltd.	139
Davies v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1954] 1 All E.R. 597; [1954] A.C. 378; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 343). Applied in R. v. Price	282

	PAGE
Davis v. Davis ([1967] 1 All E.R. 126; [1967] P. 192; [1966] 3 W.L.R. 1161). Principle stated by
WILLMER, L.J., applied in Hakluytt v. Hakluytt	868
Debtor, A., Re (No. 946 of 1926) ([1939] 1 All E.R. 742; [1939] Ch. 501; 108 L.J.Ch. 228; 160
L.T. 352). Dictum of SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., applied in Re A Debtor (No. 12 of 1958)	425
Dickson v. The Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain ([1967] 2 All E.R. 558); [1967] Ch. 708;
[1967] 2 W.L.R. 716). Affirmed. H.L.	686
Donnellan v. Read (1824-34) All E.R. Rep. 639; 1 L.J.K.B. 269). Distinguished in Gable Construction Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs.	968
Dunn v. Chapman (1920) 2 Ch. 474; 89 L.J.Ch. 385; 123 L.T. 415). Considered in Oak Co-operative
Building Society v. Blackburn	117
Egan v. Langham Investments, Ltd. ([1938] 1 All E.R. 193; [1939] 1 K.B. 667; 107 L.J.K.B. 337;
159 L.T. 118). Distinguished in Re 22, Albion Street, Westminster	960
Elbingcr Act, fur Fabrication von Eisenbahn Material v. Claye (1873), L.R. 8 Q.B. 317; 42 L.J.Q.B.
152; 28 L.T. 406). Dictum of BLACKBURN, J., overruled in Teheran-Europe Co., Ltd. v. S. T.
Belton (Tractors), Ltd.	886
Emerald Construction Co., Ltd. v. Lowthian ([1966] 1 All E.R. 1013; [1966] 1 W.L.R. 691). Applied
in Daily Mirror Newspapers, Ltd. v. Gardner	163
European Society Arbitration Acts, Re ((1878), 8 Ch.D. 704; 48 L.J.Ch. 127; 39 L.T. 144). Dictum
of JAMES, L.J., distinguished in Mann v. D'Arcy	172
Everett v. Ribbands ([1952] 1 All E.R. 827; [1952] 2 Q.B. 206). Dictum of ROMER, L.J., applied in
Carl-Zeiss-Stiftung v. Herbert Smith & Co.	1002
Fisher v. Bell ([1960] 3 All E.R. 731; [1961] 1 Q.B. 394; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 919). Applied in Partridge
v. Crittenden	421
Fox v. Adamson ([1967] 3 All E.R. 902; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 42). Affirmed. H.L.	411
Gestetner (decd.), Re ([1953] 1 All E.R. 1150; [1953] Ch. 672; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1033). Applied in
Re Wootton's Will Trusts	618
Gloucestershire County Council v. Richardson (1967) 3 All E.R. 458). Affirmed. H.L.	1181
Gold Hill Mines, Re (1883), 23 Ch.D. 215; 49 L.T. 68). Dicta of LINDLEY, L.J., applied in Mann v.
Goldstein	769
Gramophone and Typewriter, Ltd. v. Stanley (1908-10) All E.R. Rep. 833; [1908] 2 K.B. 59; 77
L.J.K.B. 834; 99 L.T. 39). Considered in Bamford v. Bamford	655
Gray v. Fidler ([1943] 2 All E.R. 296, 297; [1943] K.B. 708, 709; 112 L.J.K.B. 635; 169 L.T. 198).
Dicta of MACDONALD, L.J., applied in F. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. v. Comrs. of Customs and Excise	13
Gray v. Lewis (1869), L.R. 8 Bq. 542, 543; 20 L.T. 287). Dicta of SIR RICHARD MALINS, V.-C., applied
in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Cradock (No. 3)	1073
— (1873), 8 Ch. App. 1056; 43 L.J.Ch. 291; 29 L.T. 16). Dictum of MELLISH, L.J., applied in
Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Cradock (No. 3)	1073
Green v. Fibreglass, Ltd. ([1955] 2 All E.R. 521; [1955] 2 Q.B. 245; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 71). Dis-
tinguished in A.M.F. International, Ltd. v. Magnet Bowling, Ltd.	789
Gregory (Maudmy), Re, Ex parte Norton v. Trustee ([1934] All E.R. Rep. 429; [1935] Ch. 65; 104
L.J.Ch. 1; 152 L.T. 58). Distinguished in Re A Debtor (No. 12 of 1958)	425
Griffiths (Inspector of Taxes) v. J. P. Harrison (Watford), Ltd. ([1962] 1 All E.R. 909; [1963] A.C. 1;
[1962] 2 W.L.R. 909). Considered in Lupton (Inspector of Taxes) v. F.A. & A.B., Ltd.	1042 Gulbenkian's Settlement Trusts, Re (1967) 3 All E.R. 15; [1968] Ch. 126; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 1113).
Applied in Re Wootton's Will Trusts	618
Hardwick Game Farm v. Suffolk Agricultural and Poultry Producer's Association, Ltd. ([1966]
1 All E.R. 309; [1966] 1 W.L.R. 287). Affirmed in part. H.L.	444
Haversham Grange, The ([1965] P. 307; 74 L.J.P. 115; 93 L.T. 733). Applied in Baker v. Willoughby	236
Heaton (Inspector of Taxes) v. Bell ([1965] 1 All E.R. 857; [1968] 1 W.L.R. 263). Reversed in part.
C.A.	1156
Hewitt v. Bonvin ([1940] 1 K.B. 188; 109 L.J.K.B. 223; 161 L.T. 360). Applied in Carberry v.
Davies	817
Hill-Venning v. Beszant ([1950] 2 All E.R. 1151). Distinguished in Moore v. Maxwells of Emsworth,
Ltd.	779
Hilton v. Westminster Bank, Ltd. (1926), 135 L.T. 362; 358). Dicta of ATKIN and BANKS, L.J.J.,
applied in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Cradock (No. 3)	1073
Hogg v. Cramporn, Ltd. ([1966] 3 All E.R. 420; [1967] Ch. 251; [1966] 3 W.L.R. 995). Followed in
Bamford v. Bamford	655
Holt's Settlement, Re ([1968] 1 All E.R. 470; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 653). Considered in Re Ball's Settlement	438
Howard v. Bodington ((1877), 2 P.D. 210, 211). Dictum applied in Chapman v. Earl	1214
Howatson v. Webb ([1907] 1 Ch. 549; 76 L.J.Ch. 353; 97 L.T. 733). Dictum of WARRINGTON, J.,
not followed in Gallie v. Lee	322
Howson v. Buxton ([1928] All E.R. Rep. 434; 97 L.J.K.B. 749; 139 L.T. 504). Distinguished in
Jacobs v. Chaudhuri	124
Hughes v. Metropolitan Ry. Co. ([1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 191; (1877), 2 App. Cas. 448; 46 L.J.Q.B.
586; 36 L.T. 934). Principle stated by LORD CAIRNS, L.C., applied in Durham Fancy Goods,
Ltd. v. Michael Jackson (Fancy Goods), Ltd.	987
Hull v. Hull ([1960] 1 All E.R. 378; [1960] P. 118; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 627). Doubted in F. v. F.	946
Hutchinson v. London and North Eastern Ry. Co. ([1942] 1 All E.R. 350; [1942] 1 K.B. 481; 111
L.J.K.B. 369; 166 L.T. 228). Considered in Keaney v. British Railways Board.	532
Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel ([1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 28; [1891] A.C. 531; 61
L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T. 621). Applied in Re Banfield (decd.)	276
Indyka v. Indyka ([1967] 2 All E.R. 689; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 510). Applied in Brown v. Brown	11
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Baddeley ([1955] 1 All E.R. 525; [1955] A.C. 572; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 552).
Distinguished in Re Banfield (decd.)	276
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Brook ([1967] 3 All E.R. 620; [1967] Ch. 255; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 1320).
Not followed in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Hague	1252
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Hague ([1968] 1 All E.R. 1096; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 825). Affirmed in part,
reversed in part. C.A.	1252
Irvine v. Union Bank of Australia (1877), 2 App. Cas. 366; 46 L.J.P.C. 87; 37 L.T. 176). Applied in
Bamford v. Bamford	655
Jackson (Francis) Developments, Ltd. v. Hall ([1951] 2 All E.R. 74; [1951] 2 K.B. 488). Distinguished
in Chapman v. Earl	1214
Johnson v. Comr. of Stamp Duties ([1956] 1 All E.R. 502; [1956] A.C. 331; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 454).
Distinguished in Thompson v. Comr. of Stamp Duties	896
Johnson v. Stephens and Carter, Ltd. ([1923] All E.R. Rep. 701; [1923] 2 K.B. 857; 92 L.J.K.B.
1048; 130 L.T. 106). Distinguished in Burnside v. Harrison Marks Productions, Ltd.	286
Jubilee (1897) Sites Syndicate, Re ([1899] 2 Ch. 205, 206; 68 L.J.Ch. 428; 80 L.T. 870). Dictum of
WRIGHT, J., not followed in Re J. Russell Electronics, Ltd.	559
K. (H.) (an infant), Re ([1967] 1 All E.R. 226; [1967] 2 Q.B. 617; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 962). Considered
in Re A. (an infant)	145
Keating v. Elvan Reinforced Concrete Co., Ltd. ([1967] 3 All E.R. 611). Affirmed. C.A.	139

	PAGE
Kingswood Estate Co., Ltd. v. Anderson ([1962] 3 All E.R. 593; [1963] 2 Q.B. 169; [1962] 3 W.L.R. 1102). Referred to in Wakeham v. Mackenzie	783
Kiteat v. King ([1930] P. 266; 99 L.J.P. 126; 143 L.T. 405). Distinguished and doubted in In the Estate of Bravda (dead.)	217
Kok Hoong v. Leong Cheong Kweng Mines, Ltd. ([1964] 1 All E.R. 300; [1964] A.C. 993; [1964] 2 W.L.R. 150). Considered in Pople v. Evans	743
L. Re ([1966] 1 All E.R. 25; [1968] P. 157; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 1052). Dictum of LORD DENNING, M.R., applied in B.R.B. v. J.B.	1023
La Roche v. Armstrong ([1922] All E.R. Rep. 311; [1922] 1 K.B. 485; 91 L.J.K.B. 342; 126 L.R. 699). Considered in Carl-Zeiss-Stiftung v. Herbert Smith &amp; Co. (a firm) (No. 2)	1233
Ladd v. Marshall ([1954] 3 All E.R. 715; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1459). Applied in Dass (an infant) v. Masih	226
—, Applied in Roe v. Robert McGregor &amp; Sons, Ltd.	636
Land Credit Co. of Ireland v. Lord Ferny (1870). 5 Ch. App. 763; 23 L.T. 439). Distinguished in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Craddock (No. 3)	1073
Lands Allotment Co., Ltd., Re ([1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 1032; [1894] 1 Ch. 616; 63 L.J.Ch. 291; 70 L.T. 286). Applied in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Craddock (No. 3)	1073
Leather Cloth Co. v. Brassey ([1862]. 6 L.T. 63). Considered in Bandar Property Holdings, Ltd. v. J. S. Darwen (Successors), Ltd.	305
Lee A Ba v. Public Prosecutor ([1968] 1 All E.R. 428; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 730). Distinguished in Liew Sai Wah v. Public Prosecutor	738
Lee v. Sankey (1873). L.R. 15 Eq. 211; 27 L.T. 811). Dictum of SIR JAMES BACON, V.-C., considered in Carl-Zeiss-Stiftung v. Herbert Smith &amp; Co. (a firm) (No. 2)	1233
Lester v. Garland ([1903-13] All E.R. Rep. 436). Considered in Ladyman v. Wirral Estates, Ltd.	197
Lilley v. Lilley ([1959] 3 All E.R. 283; [1960] P. 158; [1959] 3 W.L.R. 306). Followed in Tickle v. Tickle	154
Lloyd's Bank, Ltd. v. E. B. Savory & Co. ([1932] All E.R. Rep. 118; [1933] A.C. 233; 102 L.J.K.B. 237; 148 L.T. 298). Dictum of LORD WRIGHT considered in Mariani &amp; Co., Ltd. v. Midland Bank, Ltd.	573
Local Government Board v. Arlidge ([1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 8; [1915] A.C. 134; 84 L.J.K.B. 80; 111 L.T. 909). Dictum of VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C., distinguished in Pett v. Greyhound Racing Association, Ltd.	545
Lockyer v. Gibb ([1966] 2 All E.R. 655, 656; [1967] 2 Q.B. 248, 249; [1966] 3 W.L.R. 88, 89). Dictum of LORD PARKER, C.J., approved and criticised in Warner v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner	356
London and North Eastern Ry. Co. v. Berriman ([1946] 1 All E.R. 270; [1946] A.C. 313; 115 L.J.K.B. 140; 174 L.T. 161). Dictum of LORD SIMMONDS applied in Liew Sai Wah v. Public Prosecutor	738
Lord Advocate v. Reliant Tool Co. ([1968] 1 All E.R. 162; [1968] 1 W.L.R. 205). Dictum of LORD WILBERFORCE applied in C. Maurice &amp; Co., Ltd. v. Minister of Labour	1030
Maclean v. Workers Union ([1929] All E.R. Rep. 471; [1929] 1 Ch. 621; 98 L.J.Ch. 296; 141 L.T. 85). Dictum of MAUGHAM, J., not followed in Pett v. Greyhound Racing Association, Ltd.	545
Magnus v. National Bank of Scotland, Ltd. ([1888]. 58 L.T. 617; 57 L.J.Ch. 902). Followed in Pople v. Evans	743
Manchester Liners, Ltd. v. Rea, Ltd. ([1922] All E.R. Rep. 605; [1922] 2 A.C. 74; 91 L.J.K.B. 504; 127 L.T. 405). Not followed in Teheran-Europe Co., Ltd. v. S. T. Belton (Tractors), Ltd.	886
Marfani & Co., Ltd. v. Midland Bank, Ltd. ([1967] 3 All E.R. 967). Affirmed, C.A.	573
Marwick v. Codlin ([1874]. L.R. 9 Q.B. 509; 43 L.J.M.C. 169; 30 L.T. 719). Explained and distinguished in R. v. Leicester Licensing Justices, Ex parte Bisson	351
May v. May ([1929] All E.R. Rep. 484; [1929] 2 K.B. 386; 98 L.J.K.B. 770; 141 L.T. 629). Distinguished in Covell v. Sweetland	1016
Metropolitan Properties Co. (F.G.C.), Ltd. v. Lannon ([1968] 1 All E.R. 354). Applied in Metropolitan Properties Co., Ltd. v. Noble	313
Midland Bank, Ltd. v. Reekitt ([1932] All E.R. Rep. 90; [1933] A.C. 1; 102 L.J.K.B. 297; 148 L.T. 374). Applied in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Craddock (No. 3)	1073
Minister of Housing and Local Government v. Hartnell ([1965] 1 All E.R. 490; [1965] A.C. 1134; [1965] 2 W.L.R. 474). Applied in Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Beverley Borough Council	104
Morris v. Baron & Co. ([1918] A.C. 1; 87 L.J.K.B. 145; 118 L.T. 34). Applied in United Dominions Corporation (Jamaica), Ltd. v. Shoucair	904
Myers (G. H.) & Co. v. Brent Cross Service Co. ([1933] All E.R. Rep. 1314; [1934] 1 K.B. 55; 103 L.J.K.B. 128; 150 L.T. 98). Dictum of DT PARCQ, J., applied in Young and Marten, Ltd. v. McManus Childs, Ltd.	1169
National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers' Agreement, Re ([1965] 2 All E.R. 417; L.R. 5 R.P. 238; [1965] 1 W.L.R. 826). Considered in Daily Mirror Newspapers, Ltd. v. Gardner	163
Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden ([1961] 3 All E.R. 769; [1962] Ch. 832; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 999). Considered in Re Banfield (dead.)	276
New Brunswick Ry. Co. v. British & French Trust Corp., Ltd. ([1938] 4 All E.R. 754; [1939] A.C. 19; 105 L.J.K.B. 122; 160 L.T. 140). Dicta of LORD MAUGHAM, L.C., considered in Pople v. Evans	743
New Travellers' Chambers, Ltd. v. Cheese and Green ((1894). 70 L.T. 272). Dicta of KERKEWICH, J., applied in Mann v. Goldstein	769
Nordenfjelt v. Maxim Nordenfjelt Guns and Ammunition Co., Ltd. ([1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 18; [1894] A.C. 565; 63 L.J.Ch. 923; 71 L.T. 499). Dicta of LORD MACNAGHTEN applied in The Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain v. Dickson	686
Oak Co-operative Building Society v. Blackburn ([1967] 2 All E.R. 340; [1967] Ch. 1169; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 1426). Reversed, C.A.	117
Olanda, The ([1919] 2 K.B. 730). Principle stated by LORD DUNEDIN applied in Gilbert &amp; Partners (a firm) v. Knight	248
Oppenheimer v. Frazer and Wyatt ([1907] 1 K.B. 527; 76 L.J.K.B. 280; 97 L.T. 7). Dicta of CHANNELL, J., applied in Astley Industrial Trust, Ltd. v. Miller	36
Orbit Mining and Trading Co., Ltd. v. Westminster Bank, Ltd. ([1962] 3 All E.R. 565; [1963] 1 Q.B. 794; [1962] 3 W.L.R. 1256). Considered in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Craddock (No. 3)	1073
Ormond v. Crossville Motor Services, Ltd. ([1953] 2 All E.R. 753; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1120). Applied in Carberry v. Davies	817
Pacific Motor Auctions, Pty., Ltd. v. Motor Credits (Hire Finance), Ltd. ([1965] 2 All E.R. 105; [1965] A.C. 867; [1965] 2 W.L.R. 881). Explained in Astley Industrial Trust, Ltd. v. Miller	36
Padfield v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food ([1968] 1 All E.R. 699; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 941). Dictum of LORD REID applied in British Oxygen Co., Ltd. v. Board of Trade	177
Palser v. Grindling ([1948] 1 All E.R. 9; [1948] A.C. 314; [1948] L.J.R. 609). Dictum of VISCOUNT SIMON explained in F. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. v. Comrs. of Customs and Excise	13
Parish v. Judd ([1960] 3 All E.R. 36, 37; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 870, 871). Observations of EDMUND DAVIES, J., considered in Moore v. Maxwells of Emsworth, Ltd.	779
Pearson v. Rose & Young, Ltd. ([1950] 2 All E.R. 1033; [1951] 1 K.B. 289). Dicta of DENNING, L.J., applied in Astley Industrial Trust, Ltd. v. Miller	36

Penmount Estates, Ltd. v. National Provincial Bank, Ltd. ((1945), 173 L.T. 344). Considered in
Selangor United Estates, Ltd. v. Cradock (No. 3) . . . . .	1073
Practice Direction ((1962) 2 All E.R. 128; [1962] 1 W.L.R. 580). Amended by Practice Direction . .	635
Practice Direction ((1966) 2 All E.R. 981; [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1240). Cancelled by Practice Direction . .	88
Practice Note ((1964) 1 All E.R. 952; [1964] 1 W.L.R. 575). Cancelled by Practice Direction . . . .	592
Prior v. McManus Childs, Ltd. (Young and Marten, Ltd., Third Parties) ((1967) 3 All E.R. 451). Affirmed. H.L.	1169
R. v. Bell ((1822), 1 L.J.O.S.K.B. 42). Applied in Radstock Co-operative & Industrial Society, Ltd.
v. Norton-Radstock Urban District Council . . . . .	59
R. v. Blane ((1843-60) All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769; 18 L.J.M.C. 216; 13 L.T.O.S. 257). Overruled in R. v. Bow Road Domestic Proceedings Court, Ex parte Adedigba . . . . .	89
R. v. Charlesworth ((1861), 31 L.J.M.C. 33, 41; 5 L.T. 153, 155). Dicta of SIR ALEXANDER COCKBURN, C.J., and BLACKBURN, J.; applied in R. v. Elia . . . . .	587
R. v. Cook ((1959) 2 All E.R. 97; [1959] 2 Q.B. 340; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 616). Direction in, considered and explained in R. v. Longman. R. v. Richardson . . . . .	761
—, ((1959) 2 All E.R. 100, 101; [1959] 2 Q.B. 346; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 620). Dictum of DEVLIN, J., approved in Selvey v. Director of Public Prosecutions . . . . .	497
—, ((1959) 2 All E.R. 97; [1959] 2 Q.B. 340; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 616). Approved in Selvey v. Director of Public Prosecutions . . . . .	497
R. v. Deputy Industrial Injuries Commr., Ex parte Moore ((1965) 1 All E.R. 81; [1965] 1 Q.B. 456; [1965] 2 W.L.R. 89). Considered in T. A. Miller, Ltd. v. Minister of Housing and Local Govern- ment . . . . .	633
R. v. Flynn ((1961) 3 All E.R. 63; [1963] 1 Q.B. 737; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 914). Dictum disapproved in Selvey v. Director of Public Prosecutions . . . . .	497
R. v. Gray ((1900-03) All E.R. Rep. 62; [1900] 2 Q.B. 40; 69 L.J.Q.B. 505; 82 L.T. 535). Dictum of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN applied in R. v. Metropolitan Police Commr., Ex parte Blackburn (No. 2) . . . . .	319
R. v. Gunewardene ((1951) 2 All E.R. 290; [1951] 2 K.B. 600). Considered in R. v. Longman. R. v. Richardson . . . . .	761
R. v. Hudson ((1912) 2 K.B. 464; 81 L.J.K.B. 861; 107 L.T. 31). Approved in Selvey v. Director of Public Prosecutions . . . . .	497
R. v. Jenkins ((1945), 114 L.J.K.B. 425; 173 L.T. 311). Approved in Selvey v. Director of Public Prosecutions . . . . .	497
—, ((1945), 114 L.J.K.B. 431; 173 L.T. 314). Dictum of SINGLETON, J., approved in Selvey v. Director of Public Prosecutions . . . . .	497
R. v. Jennings ((1956) 3 All E.R. 429; [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1497). Not applied in Secretary of State for Defence v. Warn . . . . .	300
R. v. Judge Dutton Briant ((1957) 2 All E.R. 625; [1957] 2 Q.B. 497; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 249). Approved in West Penwith Rural District Council v. Gunnell . . . . .	1005
R. v. Lawrence ((1968) 1 All E.R. 579; [1968] 1 W.L.R. 841). Distinguished in R. v. Nixon . . . .	33
R. v. Leinster (Duke) ((1923) All E.R. Rep. 187; [1924] 1 K.B. 311; 93 L.J.K.B. 144; 130 L.T. 138). Followed in R. v. Salter . . . . .	951
R. v. Lewis ((1908-10) All E.R. Rep. 654; (1909), 78 L.J.K.B. 722; 100 L.T. 970). Applied in R. v. Elia . . . . .	587
R. v. Maqsd Ali, R. v. Ashiq Hussain ((1965) 2 All E.R. 464; [1966] 1 Q.B. 688; [1965] 3 W.L.R. 229). Considered in The Statue of Liberty . . . . .	195
R. v. Martin ((1961) 2 All E.R. 747; [1962] 1 Q.B. 221; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 17). Considered and applied in R. v. Hall . . . . .	1009
R. v. Rouse ((1904) 1 K.B. 184; 173 L.J.K.B. 60; 89 L.T. 677). Approved in Selvey v. Director of Public Prosecutions . . . . .	497
R. v. Rowton ((1861-73) All E.R. Rep. 549; (1865), 34 L.J.M.C. 57; 11 L.T. 745). Distinguished in R. v. Longman. R. v. Richardson . . . . .	761
R. v. St. Mary Abbots, Kensington Assessment Committee ((1891) 1 Q.B. 378; 60 L.J.M.C. 52; 64 L.T. 240). Applied in Pett v. Greyhound Racing Association, Ltd. . . . .	545
R. v. Selvey ((1968) 1 All E.R. 94; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 1637). Affirmed. H.L. . . . . .	497
R. v. Turner ((1944) 1 All E.R. 599; [1944] K.B. 463; 114 L.J.K.B. 45; 171 L.T. 246). Approved in Selvey v. Director of Public Prosecutions . . . . .	497
R. v. Warn ((1968) 1 All E.R. 339; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 131). Affirmed. H.L. . . . . .	300
R. v. Warner ((1967) 3 All E.R. 98; [1967] 1 W.L.R. 1200). Affirmed. H.L. . . . . .	356
R. v. Wilson, R. v. Marsdall-Graham ((1967) 1 All E.R. 797; [1967] 2 Q.B. 406; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 1094). Considered in Deokinanan v. Resinam . . . . .	346
R. v. Wilson, Ex parte Pereira ((1952) 2 All E.R. 706; [1953] 1 Q.B. 59). Overruled in R. v. Bow Road Domestic Proceedings Court, Ex parte Adedigba . . . . .	89
Rabett v. Commr. of Stamp Duties ((1929) A.C. 444; 98 L.J.P.C. 140; 140 L.T. 509). Followed in Thompson v. Commr. of Stamp Duties . . . . .	896
Radstock Co-operative & Industrial Society, Ltd. v. Norton-Radstock Urban District Council ((1967) 2 All E.R. 812; [1967] Ch. 1094; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 588). Affirmed. C.A. . . . . .	59
Ratnam v. Cumarasamy ((1964) 3 All E.R. 933; [1965] 1 W.L.R. 8). Approved in Lopes v. Valliappa Chettiar . . . . .	136
Reid v. Langlois ((1849), 19 L.J.Ch. 341). Dictum of LORD COTTENHAM, L.C., applied in Re Duncan ( decd. ) . . . . .	395
Richards v. Phillips ((1967) 3 All E.R. 876; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 14). Affirmed. C.A. . . . . .	859
Robertson's Will Trusts, Re ((1960) 3 All E.R. 146, n.; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 1050). Considered in Re Wallace's Settlements . . . . .	209
Robinson-Scott v. Robinson-Scott ((1957) 3 All E.R. 473; [1958] P. 71; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 842). Applied in Brown v. Brown . . . . .	11
Royal Crown Derby Porcelain Co., Ltd. v. Russell ((1949) 1 All E.R. 755; [1949] 2 K.B. 429). Principle stated by LORD DENNING, M.R., applied in R. v. Bow Road Domestic Proceedings Court, Ex parte Adedigba . . . . .	89
Ryder Installations, Ltd., Re ((1966) 1 All E.R. 455; [1966] 1 W.L.R. 527). Dictum of BUCKLEY, J., considered in Re J. Russell Electronics, Ltd. . . . .	559
Salmon v. Quinn & Axtens, Ltd. ((1909) 1 Ch. 311; 78 L.J.Ch. 367; 100 L.T. 161). Considered in Bamford v. Bamford . . . . .	655
Sandwell Parks Colliery Co., Re ((1928) All E.R. Rep. 651; [1929] 1 Ch. 277; 98 L.J.Ch. 229; 140 L.T. 612). Considered in Wood Preservation, Ltd. v. Prior (Inspector of Taxes) . . . . .	849
Sayer Trust, Re ((1956) 3 All E.R. 600; [1957] Ch. 423; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 261). Applied in Re Wootton's Will Trusts . . . . .	618
Scott v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ((1936) 3 All E.R. 752; [1937] A.C. 174; 166 L.J.Ch. 36; 156 L.T. 33). Followed in Re Weir's Settlement . . . . .	1241
Sheggia v. Gradwell ((1963) 3 All E.R. 114; [1963] 1 W.L.R. 1049). Distinguished in Jaques v. Lloyd D. George & Partners, Ltd. . . . .	187
Simpson v. Thompson ((1877), 3 App. Cas. 279; 58 L.T. 1). Applied in Electrochrome, Ltd. v. Welsh Plastics, Ltd. . . . .	205

	PAGE
Slater v. Worthington's Cash Stores (1930), Ltd. ([1941] 3 All E.R. 28; [1941] 1 K.B. 488; 111 L.J.K.B. 91). Distinguished in Radstock Co-operative & Industrial Society, Ltd. v. Norton-Radstock Urban District Council	59
Stadium Finance, Ltd. v. Robbins ([1962] 2 All E.R. 638; [1962] 2 Q.B. 674; [1962] 3 W.L.R. 460). Dicta of WILLMER, L.J., applied in Astley Industrial Trust, Ltd. v. Miller	36
Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd. ([1934] All E.R. Rep. 324; [1934] 2 K.B. 313; 103 L.J.K.B. 617; 151 L.T. 397). Dicta of MACKINNON, J., applied in Astley Industrial Trust, Ltd. v. Miller	36
Standard Securities, Ltd. v. Hubbard ([1967] 2 All E.R. 622; [1967] Ch. 1056; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 214). Distinguished in Chatsworth Investments, Ltd. v. Amoco (U.K.), Ltd.	288
Steen v. Law ([1963] 3 All E.R. 770; [1964] A.C. 287; [1963] 3 W.L.R. 802). Applied in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Cradock (No. 3)	1073
Strachan, Re ([1895] 1 Ch. 445, 447, 448; 64 L.J.Ch. 324, 325; 72 L.T. 177, 178). Dicta of LINDLEY and SMITH, L.J.J., applied in Re Duncan ( dec'd. )	395
Tcheran-Europe Co., Ltd. v. S. T. Belton (Tractors), Ltd. ([1968] 1 All E.R. 585; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 523). Applied in part, reversed in part. C.A.	886
Telegraph Construction Co., Re ([1870] L.R. 10 Eq. 384; 39 L.J.Ch. 723; 22 L.T. 649). Dictum of SIR WILLIAM JAMES, V.-C., applied in Re Harvest Lane Motor Bodies, Ltd.	1012
Tennant v. Smith ([1892] A.C. 150; 61 L.J.P.C. 11; 66 L.T. 327). Applied in Heaton (Inspector of Taxes) v. Bell	1156
Tetan v. O'Dea ([1950] 2 All E.R. 695; sub nom. O'Dea v. Tetan ([1951] 1 K.B. 184). Overruled in R. v. Bow Road Domestic Proceedings Court, Ex parte Adedigba	89
Thacarah, Re ([1938] 2 All E.R. 4). Distinguished in Re Banfield ( dec'd. )	276
Theems, The ([1938] P. 197; 107 L.J.P. 139; 159 L.T. 392). Not followed in The Mecca	731
—, [1938] P. 201; 107 L.J.P. 140; 159 L.T. 394). Dicta considered in The Abadesa	726
Thomson v. Clydesdale Bank, Ltd. ([1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 1169; [1893] A.C. 282; 62 L.J.P.C. 47; 68 L.T. 156). Considered in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Cradock (No. 3)	1073
Towler's Settlement Trusts, Re ([1963] 3 All E.R. 759; sub nom. Re T.'s Settlement Trusts [1964] Ch. 153; [1963] 3 W.L.R. 987). Distinguished in Re Ball's Settlement	438
Underwood (A. L.) Ltd. v. Bank of Liverpool and Martins Bank ([1924] All E.R. Rep. 230; [1924] 1 K.B. 775; 93 L.J.K.B. 690; 131 L.T. 271). Considered in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Cradock (No. 3)	1073
United Dominion Trust (Commercial), Ltd. v. Eagle Aircraft Services, Ltd. ([1968] 1 All E.R. 104; [1968] 1 W.L.R. 74). Applied in Wood Preservation, Ltd. v. Prior (Inspector of Taxes)	849
Vie Mill, Ltd., Re ([1913] 1 Ch. 465; 82 L.J.Ch. 231; 108 L.T. 444). Considered in The World Beauty Vickers, Sons & Co. v. Siddell ([1890], 15 App. Cas. 496; 60 L.J.Ch. 105; 63 L.T. 590). Distinguished in Chapman v. Earl	1214
Victor Battery Co., Ltd. v. Curry's, Ltd. ([1946] 1 All E.R. 519; [1946] Ch. 242; 115 L.J.Ch. 148; 74 L.T. 266). Dicta of ROXBURGH, J., not followed in Selangor United Rubber Estates, Ltd. v. Cradock (No. 3)	1073
Walters v. Whessoe, Ltd. and Shell Refining Co., Ltd. ([1960], [1968] 2 All E.R. 816n). Followed in A.M.F. International, Ltd. v. Magnet Bowling, Ltd.	789
Wadsworth, Re ([1944] 2 Ch. 245; 83 L.J.Ch. 731; 111 L.T. 436). Applied in Re Banfield ( dec'd. )	276
Worthington Urban District Council v. Wigan Coal and Iron Co., Ltd. ([1919] 1 Ch. 159; 88 L.J.Ch. 60; 120 L.T. 242). Distinguished in Radstock Co-operative & Industrial Society, Ltd. v. Norton-Radstock Urban District Council	59
Wrexham Bank, Ltd. v. Beverley Borough Council ([1968] 2 All E.R. 104; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 1080). Reversed. C.A.	1199
Windsor Refrigerator Co., Ltd. v. Branch Nominees, Ltd. ([1961] Ch. 382). Dicta of LORD EVERSHER, M.R., not followed in Carl-Zeiss-Stiftung v. Herbert Smith & Co.	1002
Windsor v. Rezaimi (1-66), L.R. 1 Q.B. 395; 35 L.J.M.C. 166; 14 L.T. 568). Dicta of ERLE, C.J., applied in R. v. Ella	587
Worthington Harbour & Dock Board v. S.S. Towerfield (Owners) ([1950] 2 All E.R. 414; [1951] A.C. 112). Distinguished in A.M.F. International, Ltd. v. Magnet Bowling, Ltd.	789
Yandell v. Fisher ([1965] 3 All E.R. 158; [1965] 1 Q.B. 440; [1965] 3 W.L.R. 1002). Considered in Sweet v. Parsley	337
Ymeria Credit, Ltd. v. Latzer ([1961] 2 All E.R. 209; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 835). Dicta of HARMAN, L.J., not followed in Carl-Zeiss-Stiftung v. Herbert Smith & Co.	1002

STATUTES, ETC., NOTED

	PAGE
Administration of Justice Act, 1960 (c. 65), s. 16 .. .. .	992
Affiliation Proceedings Act, 1957 (c. 55), ss. 1, 4 .. .. .	89
Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59)—
s. 25 (1) .. .. .	425
s. 157 (1) (c) .. .. .	951
Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 (c. 2), s. 32, s. 33, s. 49 .. .. .	411
Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1964 (c. 78), s. 2 .. .. .	411
Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 27 (2) .. .. .	909
Brighton Corporation Act 1966, s. 7 .. .. .	22
Carriage by Air Act, 1932 (c. 36), Sch. 1, art. 8, art. 23 .. .. .	1059
Cheques Act, 1957 (c. 36), s. 4 (1) .. .. .	573
Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (c. 12), s. 62 .. .. .	563
Children and Young Persons Act 1963 (c. 37), s. 2 .. .. .	563
Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962 (c. 21), s. 2 (1) .. .. .	145
Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38)—
s. 54 .. .. .	1073
s. 75 .. .. .	625
s. 108 (1) (c), (4) .. .. .	987
s. 224 (2) .. .. .	559
s. 353 (6) .. .. .	1012
s. 448 .. .. .	1073
Contracts of Employment Act 1963 (c. 49), Sch. 1, para. 5 (1) (b) .. .. .	81
County Courts Act, 1959 (c. 22)—
ss. 48 (1), 52 (1) (c) .. .. .	1005
s. 108 .. .. .	755
Criminal Appeal Act 1966 (c. 31), s. 4 (2) .. .. .	753
Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36), s. 1, proviso (f) (ii) .. .. .	497
Criminal Justice Act, 1961 (c. 39), s. 3 (3) .. .. .	53
Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80)—
s. 1 .. .. .	144
s. 8 .. .. .	296
s. 13 .. .. .	587
s. 37 .. .. .	1021
(2), (3), (5) .. .. .	593
s. 33 .. .. .	992
s. 60 .. .. .	593
s. 91 (5) .. .. .	1196
s. 97 (7) .. .. .	753
s. 103 (2), Sch. 7, Pt. 1 .. .. .	1196
Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (c. 44)—
s. 56 (2) .. .. .	24
ss. 255 (3), 260 (2) .. .. .	832
Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 (c. 15)—
s. 5 (b) .. .. .	337
s. 13 (a) .. .. .	49
Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 (c. 64), s. 1 (1) .. .. .	356, 943
Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) .. .. .	226
Exchange Control Act, 1947 (c. 14), s. 22, Sch. 5, Pt. 3, para. 1 (1) .. .. .	24
Factories Act, 1961 (c. 34), s. 5 (1), s. 28 (1) .. .. .	241
Factors Act, 1889 (c. 45), s. 2 (1) .. .. .	36
Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926 (c. 45), s. 2 (2) .. .. .	444
Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), ss. 1, 2 (1) (b) .. .. .	1241
Finance Act, 1954 (c. 44), s. 17 .. .. .	849
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1955 (c. 17), s. 4 .. .. .	1042
Finance Act, 1956 (c. 54), s. 10, Sch. 2, para. 1 .. .. .	1156
Finance Act, 1960 (c. 44)—
s. 28 (1), (3) .. .. .	1252
s. 36 .. .. .	929
s. 43 (4) (g) .. .. .	1252
Food and Drugs Act, 1955 (c. 16)—
s. 2 (1) .. .. .	265
s. 115 (1) .. .. .	259
Highways Act, 1959 (c. 25)—
s. 44 (1) .. .. .	343
s. 72 .. .. .	104, 1199
s. 140 (1) .. .. .	100
House to House Collections Act, 1939 (c. 44), s. 11 .. .. .	529
Import Duties Act, 1958 (c. 6)—
s. 2 (2) .. .. .	832
(3) (c) .. .. .	820
s. 12 (1) .. .. .	820
Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10)—
ss. 127, 128 .. .. .	918
s. 156 ( Sch. E ), as amended .. .. .	1156
s. 271 (3), (4) .. .. .	879
s. 341 .. .. .	1042
s. 342 .. .. .	849, 918
s. 347, Sch. 16, para. 9 .. .. .	936
ss. 370, 373 (1), proviso .. .. .	975
Sch. D, Case 1 .. .. .	714
Indictments Act, 1915 (c. 90) .. .. .	1009
Industrial Development Act 1966 (c. 34), s. 1 (1), (2) (a), (3) (b) (c), s. 13 (1) .. .. .	177
Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63)—
s. 26 .. .. .	842
s. 38 (1) .. .. .	24

	PAGE
Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), ss. 10 (2), 17 (3) .. .. .	117
Land Compensation Act, 1961 (c. 33), ss. 23 (1), (2), 29 (1) .. .. .	401
Land Drainage Act, 1930 (c. 44), s. 24 (7) .. .. .	273
Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56)—
s. 24 (1) .. .. .	124
s. 25 (4) .. .. .	197
s. 30 (2) .. .. .	50
s. 41 .. .. .	124
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20) —
s. 40 .. .. .	783
s. 53 .. .. .	625
s. 84 (1) .. .. .	682
s. 198 (1) .. .. .	117
Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) .. .. .	708
Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 12 (1) .. .. .	1196
Licensing Act 1964 (c. 26)—
s. 1 (3) ( as amended by Finance Act 1967 (c. 54), s. 3 (3) (a), s. 5 (1) (c), Sch. 7, para. 1 (b) )
(ii) .. .. .	351
s. 20 .. .. .	270
s. 169 (1) .. .. .	31
Limitation Act 1963 (c. 47)—
s. 1 (3) .. .. .	255
s. 7 (4) .. .. .	255
(5) .. .. .	598
Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (c. 55), s. 19 (9) .. .. .	333
Magistrates' Courts Act, 1957 (c. 29), s. 1 (2), proviso (iii) .. .. .	20
Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17 .. .. .	116
Matrimonial Causes Act 1965 (c. 72)—
s. 5 .. .. .	841
s. 20 (1) .. .. .	868
s. 46 (2) (b) .. .. .	608
Matrimonial Homes Act 1967 (c. 75), s. 1 .. .. .	135
Matrimonial Proceedings (Magistrates' Courts) Act, 1960 (c. 48), s. 11 .. .. .	154
Mental Health Act, 1959 (c. 72)—
s. 60 .. .. .	311, 753
s. 65, 72 .. .. .	753
Merchant Shipping (Liability of Shipowners and Others) Act, 1958 (c. 62)—
s. 1 (3) .. .. .	726
(4) .. .. .	731
Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 6 (2) .. .. .	960
National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 38 .. .. .	265
Naval Discipline Act, 1957 (c. 53), s. 42 .. .. .	300
Occupiers' Liability Act, 1957 (c. 31), ss. 1, 1 (3) (b), 2 (4) (b) .. .. .	784
Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 5 .. .. .	172
Protection of Birds Act, 1954 (c. 30), s. 6 (1), Sch. 4 .. .. .	421
Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950 (c. 39), s. 8 (1) (a) .. .. .	139
Purchase Tax Act 1963 (c. 9), Sch. 1, Pt. 1, Group 11 .. .. .	13
Redundancy Payments Act 1965 (c. 62)—
s. 1 (1), Sch. 1, para. 1 (1) .. .. .	81
s. 3 (2) (b) .. .. .	1037
s. 13 (1) (a) .. .. .	1228
(2) .. .. .	1037
Rent Act 1965 (c. 75)—
s. 26 (5), Sch. 3, para. 2 .. .. .	1214
s. 27, Sch. 3, para. 12 .. .. .	313
Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (c. 68), ss. 6 (7), 21 (1) .. .. .	163
Road Safety Act 1967 (c. 30), ss. 1 (1), 2 (4), (7), 7 (1) .. .. .	993
Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16)—
s. 8, Sch. 1, Pt. 2, para. 19, s. 64 (2) as amended by Road Traffic Act, 1962 (c. 59) .. .. .	46
s. 217 .. .. .	333
s. 253 (1), (6) .. .. .	7
(2) .. .. .	863
Road Traffic Act, 1962 (c. 59)—
s. 5 .. .. .	1040
s. 7 .. .. .	333
Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71)—
s. 13 (1) .. .. .	886
s. 14 (1) .. .. .	886
(2) .. .. .	444
s. 18, r. 5, s. 29 (3) .. .. .	602
Selective Employment Payments Act 1966 (c. 32), s. 2 (2), (3) .. .. .	1030
Sexual Offences Act, 1956 (c. 69)—
s. 4 (1) .. .. .	200
s. 6 (1) .. .. .	563
s. 13 .. .. .	300
Sexual Offences Act 1967 (c. 60)—
s. 7 (2) .. .. .	300
s. 8 .. .. .	300, 607
s. 10 (2) .. .. .	300
Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 77 (5), Sch. 1 .. .. .	968
Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1916 (c. 40), s. 1 .. .. .	646
Town and Country Planning Act, 1962 (c. 38)—
s. 12 .. .. .	104
s. 17 .. .. .	1199
s. 23 .. .. .	104, 1199
Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), s. 11 .. .. .	913
Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (c. 53)—
s. 1 (1) .. .. .	438
(2) .. .. .	209
Weights and Measures Act 1963 (c. 31), s. 26 (7) .. .. .	721
Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15 .. .. .	217

COMMONWEALTH AND OTHER TERRITORIES

PAGE

Courts of Judicature Act 1964, s. 74 .. .. .	136
Criminal Procedure Code, s. 155 .. .. .	738
Internal Security Act, 1960 (No. 18 of 1960), s. 2, s. 57 (1) .. .. .	738
Moneylending Law of Jamaica ( c. 254 ), s. 8 .. .. .	904
New South Wales Stamp Duties Act, 1920-1925, s. 102 (2) (a), (2A) .. .. .	896

RULES

Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 ( S.I. 1952 No. 2113 ), r. 236 .. .. .	425
C.C.R., Ord. 8, r. 8 (3) .. .. .	842
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 ( S.I. 1957 No. 619 ), r. 73 (2) .. .. .	154
Matrimonial Causes Rules 1968 ( S.I. 1968 No. 219 ), r. 9 (2), App. 2, Form 2 .. .. .	88
Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 ( S.R. &amp; O. 1902 No. 696 ), r. 9 .. .. .	532
R.S.C.—
Ord. 16, r. 1 (1) (b) .. .. .	288
Ord. 18, r. 12 (1), (4) .. .. .	569
Ord. 24, r. 7 .. .. .	395
Ord. 25, r. 1 (4) .. .. .	309
Ord. 32, r. 11 .. .. .	135
Ord. 59, r. 12 (1) .. .. .	419
Ord. 62, r. 35 .. .. .	635
Ord. 89, rr. 1, 3 .. .. .	135
Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1965 ( S.I. 1965 No. 473 ), r. 13 (1) .. .. .	104

REGULATIONS

Dangerous Drugs (No. 2) Regulations 1964 ( S.I. 1964 No. 1811 ), reg. 8 .. .. .	49
Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1962 ( S.I. 1962 No. 148 ), reg. 19 (3) .. .. .	443
Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1966 ( S.I. 1966 No. 1288 ), reg. 70 (1) .. .. .	46
National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1966 ( S.I. 1966 No. 1210 ), reg. 23, Sch. 4, Pt. 1 .. .. .	265
Rent Regulation (Forms, etc.) (England and Wales) Regulations 1965 ( S.I. 1965 No. 1976 ), reg. 7, Sch. 3, Form 4, para. 9 .. .. .	1214

ORDERS

Criminal Justice Act 1967 (Commencement No. 1) Order 1967 ( S.I. 1967 No. 1234 ), art. 1, Sch. 1 and Appendix .. .. .	1196
Merchant Shipping (Limitation of Liability) (Sterling Equivalents) Order 1967 ( S.I. 1967 No. 1725 ), art. 2 .. .. .	726, 731
Southern Rhodesia (Withdrawal of Commonwealth Preference) Order 1965 ( S.I. 1965 No. 1954 ), art. 1 .. .. .	820
Southern Rhodesia (Withdrawal of Commonwealth Preference) (No. 2) Order 1965 ( S.I. 1965 No. 1987 ) .. .. .	820

MISCELLANEOUS

National Conditions of Sale (17th Edn.), condition 2 (3) .. .. .	859
R.I.B.A. Form of Contract, cl. 18 (v), cl. 20 .. .. .	1181

WORDS AND PHRASES

	PAGE
Accept [ Acceptance of child as one of the family ]	608
Amenities [ Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1916, s. 1 ]	646
Ammunition [ Internal Security Act 1960 (Malaysia) ]	738
Amusements with prizes [ Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 ]	411
Available for testing [ Weights and Measures Act 1963, s. 26 (7) ]	721
Collection [ House to House Collection Act, 1939, s. 11 ]	529
Constructed	7
Creditor [ Companies Act, 1948 s. 353 (6) ]	1012
Danger is likely to arise	532
Dispute respecting a bid	859
From	197
Furniture	13
Gangway [ Factories Act, 1961, s. 28 ]	241
General commission agent	975
Kept open	22
Like (like trusts to protective trusts)	209
Machinery and plant [ investment grants ]	177
Must [ procedural enactment; whether imperative ]	1214
Offer for sale [ Protection of Birds Act, 1954, s. 6 (1) ]	421
Open—See “Kept open”
Passage [ Factories Act, 1961, s. 28 ]	241
Plant. See “Machinery and plant”
Possession [ Drugs ]	356, 943
Poultry	444
Premises [ Licensing Act 1964 ]	270
Proceedings [ Sexual Offences Act 1967, s. 8 ]	300
Relevant profits	936
Servant [ Licensing Act 1964, s. 169 (1) ]	31
Supply [ drugs ]	49
The tenant	124
Trade	1042
Using [ in contrast to causing to use ]	46
Varying [ Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 ]	438

CORRIGENDA

[1968] 1 All E.R.

- p. 1025. WHITE v. TAYLOR (No. 2). Line F.1: for “plaintiffs’ predecessor” read “defendants’ predecessor”; p. 1027, lines A.3 and 4: from the sentence “It was held that he could not,” delete the word “not”; p. 1036, line E.4: for “of any other necessary access to the Down” read “of any other means of access to the down”.
- pp. 1137, 1138. MEGGS v. LIVERPOOL CORPORATION. Lines C.2 and F.2: for “a quarter” read “three-quarters”.

[1968] 2 All E.R.

- p. 1. Re STAINES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL’S AGREEMENT. Line G.5: for “of a period” read “or a period”. Line G.6: for “or the issue” read “of the issue”.
- pp. 36, 38. ASTLEY INDUSTRIAL TRUST, LTD. v. MILLER. Lines H.5 and G.2, 3 respectively: for “The plaintiffs ... for the car” substitute “The plaintiffs’ cheque for the car was received.”
- p. 90. R. v. BOW ROAD DOMESTIC PROCEEDINGS COURT, Ex parte ADEDIGBA. Counsel for mother: for “Zwi Vardi” read “Zvi Vardy”.
- p. 164. DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD. v. GARDNER. Line A.1: delete the word “either”.
- p. 472. HENRY KENDALL & SONS v. WILLIAM LILICO & SONS, LTD. Line G.5: for “I do consider” read “I do not consider”; p. 492, line E.5: for “remuneration” read “examination”.
- p. 665. BAMFORD v. BAMFORD. Line D.5: for “so much power” read “no such power”.
- p. 1019. COVELL v. SWEETLAND. Line A.6: for “was a deed” read “was a separation deed”.

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

INCORPORATING THE LAW TIMES REPORTS AND THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

---

Re STAINES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL'S AGREEMENT. TRIGGS v. STAINES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Cross, J.), January 24, February 12, 1968.]

Public Authority—Statutory powers—Contract not to exercise—Option to purchase property—Consideration for option included covenant by local planning authority not to exercise statutory power of compulsory acquisition—Cricket field—Covenant ineffective in law—Contract granting option not reasonable bargain without effective covenant—Option unenforceable by local authority—Land charge in respect of option vacated.

In 1935 T. leased ten acres of land to a company, for the purposes of a cricket club, at a rent of £2 per annum for a term of ninety-seven years from Jan. 9, 1935, or a term commencing on that date and ending on the company as signing, underletting, etc., the demised property or any part thereof or entering into liquidation, whichever term should be the shorter. The company covenanted to use the property only as a cricket ground or for such other games as T. should approve. Some years later, with a view to resolving differences consequent on the defendant council, the planning authority, having proposed the reservation of the land as a "proposed public open space", T., the company and the defendant council entered into an agreement under seal dated June 27, 1939. By this agreement T. granted the defendant council the option to purchase the property for £3,140 on certain terms. The period during which the option should be exercisable was a period commencing on the date of the agreement and ending six weeks after the determination of the lease of a period not exceeding twenty-one years after the death of the survivor or the issue now living of His late Majesty King George V, whichever period should be the shorter. Clause 3 provided that if the council did not exercise the option to purchase by notice in writing within the time specified the land should be for ever released from reservation as a proposed open space, and should be available for immediate development for residential purposes in accordance with the defendant council's planning scheme. By cl. 5 the defendant council covenanted that so long as the land was occupied by the company as tenants thereof, the defendant council would not exercise the option to purchase or compulsorily acquire the land or any part thereof under statutory powers. By cl. 6 (a) T. agreed not to make any claim for compensation and by cl. 6 (b) the defendant council agreed not to make any claim for betterment. T. died in May, 1960. In September, 1965, the defendant council registered the agreement as a land charge. In April, 1967, the cricket field became vested beneficially in the plaintiff subject to the lease. On application by the plaintiff for a declaration that the agreement was unenforceable and for vacation of the land charge, it was conceded that cl. 3, the second half of cl. 5 and cl. 6 (b) of the agreement were, from the first, unenforceable by T. and the company against the defendant council, which could not validly contract not to exercise the relevant statutory powers.

Held: the enforceability of the agreement of 1939 depended on whether the bargain which it comprised would be one into which a reasonable man in T.'s position might have entered if he had appreciated that the ineffective covenants by the defendant council were unenforceable; in the present case the covenant not to exercise powers of compulsory acquisition was among those that were unenforceable, and in law the defendant council were free to exercise such power, so that they had not given and could not give the consideration that they purported to give, and, accordingly, the option was unenforceable by the defendant council and the land charge should be vacated (see p. 6, letters C, F and H, and p. 7, letter C, post).

Bennett v. Bennett ([1952] 1 All E.R. 413) followed.

Dictum of SALMON, L.J., in Bell Houses, Ltd. v. City Wall Properties, Ltd. ([1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 690) distinguished.

[As to the inability of a public authority to bind itself not to exercise its statutory powers, see 24 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 602, para. 1108; as to the inability to assign or delegate statutory powers, see 30 ibid., 689 para. 1328 and p. 699, para. 1341; and for cases concerning the granting of compulsory or permissive statutory powers for public purposes, see 11 DIGEST (Repl.) 103, 2-5.

As to the vacation of a registration of a land charge, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) pp. 77, 78, para. 161.]

Cases referred to:

Bell Houses, Ltd. v. City Wall Properties, Ltd., [1966] 2 All E.R. 674; [1966] 2 Q.B. 656; [1966] 2 W.L.R. 1323; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 104, 4475a.

Bennett v. Bennett, [1952] 1 All E.R. 413; [1952] 1 K.B. 249; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 807, 6344.

Goodinson v. Goodinson, [1954] 2 All E.R. 255; [1954] 2 Q.B. 118; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 1121; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 672, 622a.

Adjourned Summons.

This was an application under s. 10 of the Land Charges Act, 1925, by originating summons dated May 24, 1967, by Arthur Edmund Triggs, the plaintiff, against the Urban District Council of Staines, the defendants, whereby the plaintiff claimed (i) a declaration that an agreement dated June 27, 1939, and made between the defendant council and others was ultra vires the defendants and was void ab initio; (ii) alternatively, a declaration that the said agreement was unenforceable ab initio; (iii) alternatively, a declaration that the said agreement was not then enforceable in equity, and (iv) an order that the registration of the land charge class C (iv) alleged to have been created by one Walter Triggs in favour of the defendant council on June 27, 1939, which was registered on behalf of the defendant council against the plaintiff in the register of Land Charges at H.M. Land Registry on Sept. 30, 1965, under reference LC 135838/65 be vacated.

By a cross-summons dated July 25, 1967, the defendant council sought (A) a declaration that on the true construction of the agreement dated June 27, 1939, and as between the plaintiff both in his personal capacity and as the executor of Walter Triggs, deceased, on the one hand and the defendant council on the other hand, the option to purchase granted by cl. 1 of the said agreement and the ancillary provisions of cl. 2, 4, 6(a) and 7 thereof were subsisting and binding on the plaintiff; and (B) a declaration that on the true construction of the said agreement and as between the plaintiff and the defendant council the provisions of cl. 3, 5 and 6 (b) of the said agreement were ultra vires the defendant council and void ab initio. The facts are set out in the judgment.

A The case noted below* was cited during the argument in addition to the cases referred to in the judgment.

George Newsom, Q.C., and J. M. Henty for the plaintiff.

S. W. Templeman, Q.C., and P. A. Goodall for the defendant council.

Cur. adv. vult.

B Feb. 12. CROSS, J., read the following judgment: On Jan. 17, 1935, the late Walter Triggs leased ten acres of land at Laleham (which was then in Middlesex) to the Laleham Cricket and Sports Club, Ltd., of which he was the moving spirit. The lease, after reciting that the lessor had recently bought the land and erected a pavilion on it, demised it to the company at a rent of £2 per annum for a term

C “commencing on Jan. 9, 1935, and ending on the company assigning underletting charging or parting with the possession of the demised property or any part or parts thereof or attempting so to do (except as hereinafter authorised) or declaring itself to be a trustee of the same or entering into liquidation whether voluntary or otherwise (not being merely a voluntary liquidation for the purpose of reconstruction) or for the term of ninety-seven years from Jan. 9, 1935, whichever term shall be the shorter.”

D By the lease the company covenanted (inter alia) to use the demised property only as a cricket ground, or for such other games as might be approved by the landlord.

E Some years later the Staines Urban District Council, which under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, was the planning authority for the district, reserved the demised property in their provisional town planning scheme as a “proposed public open space”. Mr. Triggs and the company lodged objections to the proposed reservation and, with a view to resolving their differences, the three parties entered into an agreement under seal on June 27, 1939, most of which I must read. In it the Staines Urban District Council is called “the council” Mr. Triggs is called “the freeholder”, and the company is called “the tenant”. After reciting the proposed reservation of the land as a public open space and the objections which had been lodged to it, the agreement continued:

G “Now in consideration of the premises this deed witnesseth and it is hereby agreed and declared as follows:—

“1. The freeholder hereby grants unto the council the option to purchase the property hereinafter mentioned upon the following terms that is to say:—

H “(a) The period during which the option shall be exercised shall be either a period commencing on the date hereof and ending six weeks after the determination of the lease or a period not exceeding twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of the issue now living of His Late Majesty King George V whichever period shall be the shorter.

I “(b) The council to purchase for the sum of £3,140 all that piece or parcel of land in the parish of Laleham in the county of Middlesex having a frontage to the Ashford Road Laleham and known as the Laleham Cricket field which said piece or parcel of land is more particularly described on the plan annexed hereto and thereon edged pink.

“(c) The day for the completion of the purchase to be one month after the date upon which the council shall serve notice in writing upon the freeholder of its intention to exercise the said option or upon such earlier day as may be agreed between the freeholder and the council and subject always to the interest of the tenants in the said land.

“(d) The freeholder or the estate owner in fee simple for the time being of the said land to provide a root of title at least thirty years old.

---

* Attwood v. Lamont, [1920] All E.R. Rep. 55; [1920] 3 K.B. 571.

"(e) Vacant possession to be given on completion and any action which it shall be found necessary to take in order to secure vacant possession of the said land for the council to be taken at the expense of the freeholder or the estate owner in fee simple for the time being. The freeholder and the tenant shall have the right to remove all buildings and erections on the said land prior to completion, they making good all damage caused by such removal subject nevertheless to the right of the council to purchase such buildings and erections at a sum to be agreed by the surveyor to the freeholder and the district valuer.

"(f) Except as varied by the terms hereof these presents incorporate the National Conditions of Sale (13th Edn.) Provided nevertheless that cl. 20 of such conditions shall not apply.

"2. The freeholder so as to bind his successors in title and assigns and the tenants jointly and severally hereby covenant with the council that when he or they have been given notice (whether verbally or in writing) by any other of them to determine the lease or if the lease shall be determined otherwise than by notice he or they will forthwith inform the council in writing that he or they have received such notice or that the lease has been determined as the case may be.

"3. Provided nevertheless that if the council shall not exercise the option to purchase by notice in writing to the freeholder or his successors in title within the time specified in cl. 1 (a) hereof the said land shall be forever released from reservation as a proposed public open space and shall be available for immediate development for residential purposes in accordance with the planning scheme of the council (which shall be or be deemed to be amended or varied accordingly) at densities indicated on the said plan annexed hereto.

"4. Provided also that in the event of the council exercising the option to purchase hereby granted and taking a conveyance of the said property from the freeholder or his successors in title and paying the freeholder the said purchase price the freeholder hereby covenants for himself and his successors in title as aforesaid that he will not make any claim for compensation in connexion with the acquisition of the said land by the council and it is hereby agreed and declared that the freeholder and his successors in title shall not be entitled to any compensation in connexion with the said acquisition if the council shall exercise their option.

"5. The council hereby covenants that so long as the said land is occupied by the tenants as tenants thereof that they the council will not exercise the option to purchase or compulsorily acquire the said land or any part thereof under their statutory powers or any of them.

"6. In consideration of the covenants and agreements upon the part of the council and the freeholder herein contained:—

"(a) The freeholder for himself his successors in title and assigns hereby covenants not to make any claim for compensation from the council under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 and it is hereby agreed and declared that the freeholder his successors in title and assigns are not and shall not be entitled to any compensation in respect of the said property under the provisions contained in the said Act.

"(b) The council for itself and its successors in title hereby covenants not to make any claim for betterment or otherwise under the said Act from the freeholder and/or the tenants."

Mr. Triggs died on May 17, 1960, having by his will dated June 7, 1959, appointed the plaintiff, Arthur Edmund Triggs, his executor, and probate of Mr. Triggs' will was granted to the plaintiff on Dec. 6, 1962. On Apr. 11, 1967, the plaintiff assented to the vesting of the cricket field in himself beneficially, subject to and with the benefit of the lease. The land is still being used by the company as a sports ground and the lease is still on foot.

A On Sept. 30, 1965, the council registered the agreement as a land charge. The plaintiff has recently taken the point that the agreement of June 27, 1939, is void or unenforceable against him because the council was incapable of giving the consideration for it which it purported to give, and on May 24, 1967, he issued a summons against the council for a declaration to that effect and for the vacation of the registration of the land charge.

B Since the date of the agreement certain changes have taken place in what I may call the town planning position. On July 1, 1948, when the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, came into force, the Middlesex County Council became the town planning authority in place of the defendant council, and on May 19, 1960, the cricket field which had hitherto been reserved as a public open space was included in the proposed development plan of the Middlesex County Council as

C a private sports ground. Then on Apr. 1, 1965, by virtue of the London Government Act 1963, the Surrey County Council became the planning authority for the district. The Acts of 1947 and 1963 contained provisions transferring the benefit and burden of certain contracts entered into by the previous town planning authorities and it may be that the benefit of the agreement of June 27, 1939, is now vested in the Surrey County Council. That body has, however, stated

D that it does not wish to be added as a defendant and, as it is certainly not clear that the defendants, the Staines Urban District Council, have no longer any rights in the matter, I agreed at the request of counsel on both sides to decide the point at issue between the parties. If I decide that the agreement is enforceable, the question whether the benefit of it is vested in the Staines Urban District Council or the Surrey County Council can probably be settled by agreement

E between those bodies.

Before I come to the main point at issue, there is a question of the construction and effect of cl. 5 of the agreement to which I should refer. I think that the opening words of that clause govern both the covenants contained in it, that is to say, that the council only covenants not to exercise its statutory powers to acquire the land compulsorily (which was presumably a reference to s. 25 (1) of the Act

F of 1932), so long as the land is occupied by the company as tenants under the lease. I did not understand counsel for the plaintiff to dispute this; but he argued that if cl. 1 (a) was read together with cl. 5 the option granted by the agreement was void for perpetuity. The basis of the argument, as I understood it, was that cl. 5 showed that the option was intended to be exercisable after the determination of the lease and that the lease might well be still on foot after the expiry

G of the perpetuity period. The latter point is, of course, true. All the royal lives may determine more than twenty-one years before the expiry of the lease; but under cl. 1 (a) the council is bound to exercise the option, if it exercises it at all, within whichever of the two periods therein named is the shorter. Clause 5 merely says that the council cannot exercise the option while the lease is still on foot, with the result that if the perpetuity period runs out while the lease is still

H on foot, the option ceases to be exercisable.

I turn now to the main question. The general purpose of the agreement is clear enough. On the one hand, the council was ready to abandon any idea of acquiring the land as a public open space so long as it should be used by the company as a private sports ground. On the other hand, it wished to have the opportunity of buying the land for use as a public open space whenever the company ceased

I to use it as a private sports ground. If it did not then wish to buy the land, it was willing that the owner should be able to develop it as he chose. As the option had to be confined to the perpetuity period, there remained a remote possibility that the land would still be being used as a private sports ground under the lease after the end of the perpetuity period. In that event, although the option would no longer be exercisable, the council would have its powers under the town planning legislation. The difficulty which was overlooked by those who prepared the agreement was that the council could not effectively contract not to exercise its statutory powers or to abdicate its statutory duties. It is conceded by the council that cl. 3, the second half of cl. 5 and cl. 6 (b) were from the first provisions which were unenforceable by Mr. Triggs and the company against the council (1). A

What is the consequence of this? A similar problem was considered by the Court of Appeal in Bennett v. Bennett (2), and Goodinson v. Goodinson (3), in relation to covenants by a wife not to apply to the court for maintenance. The question, as I understand, is one of degree. If the void covenants form the whole or substantially the whole consideration for the promise which the plaintiff is seeking to enforce, then the plaintiff will be unable to enforce the defendants' promise. If, on the other hand, the void covenants form only a subordinate part of the consideration for the defendants' promise, so that their elimination will leave the bargain a reasonable one, the plaintiff will be able to enforce the defendants' promise, despite the fact that part of the consideration which the plaintiff gave is unenforceable. It is to be observed that the question is not whether the defendant would in fact have executed the document in question if he had appreciated that he would not be able to enforce the void covenants entered into by the plaintiff, but simply whether the bargain without these covenants would be one which a reasonable man in the position of the defendant might have entered into. B C

If one applies this principle to the present case it appears to me that cl. 3 and cl. 6 (b) of the agreement form a merely subordinate part of the consideration for which Mr. Triggs was giving the option. What was, one would suppose, of most interest to him was that the council should not go on with its scheme so long as the company wished to use the land as a sports ground. Clause 3 and cl. 6 (b) deal simply with the contingency of the option becoming exercisable because the lease had determined but the council not wishing to exercise it. Presumably it would exercise the option if the land was then worth more than £3,140 and the value of land is more likely to rise than to fall. So cl. 3 and cl. 6 (b) related to a situation which was not very likely ever to arise and in any case would probably not arise for a long time. If, therefore, the council could have effectively bound itself not to put its scheme into operation and not to take any steps to acquire the land compulsorily so long as the lease was in force, I would have thought that the grant of the option would be valid, notwithstanding that cl. 3 and cl. 6 (b) were unenforceable. The difficulty in the way of the council, however, is that the second half of cl. 5 is unenforceable too. No doubt as a practical matter, once the council had executed the agreement, there was no real risk that it would take any steps to put this part of the scheme into operation so long as the lease was on foot and the land was being used by the company as a sports ground, and if the parties had realised that the council could not bind itself legally in the matter Mr. Triggs might well have been prepared to grant the option for a nominal consideration in return for an honourable assurance by the council. In fact, however, he granted the option in consideration of a number of promises by the council which purported to be legally binding, but all of which were void and unenforceable against it. No doubt the council in fact stayed its hand and did so because it believed that it had bound itself to stay its hand as consideration for the grant of the option, but as a matter of law it was free to go on with its scheme notwithstanding the execution of the agreement. In these circumstances I think that the case is governed by Bennett v. Bennett (2) and that the option can never be exercised by the council. D E F G H

In conclusion I should refer to two subsidiary arguments advanced by counsel for the defendants. First, he pointed out that Mr. Triggs granted the option by a document under seal, which itself imports consideration. That, of course, is true and, had no other consideration been expressed, the grant might have been enforceable by reason of the seal; but I cannot think that the fact that the grant of the option was by deed can save it when all the expressed consideration is I

(1) Compare, e.g., Ayr Harbour Trustees v. Oswald, (1883), 8 App. Cas. 623.

(2) [1952] 1 All E.R. 413; [1952] 1 K.B. 249.

(3) [1954] 2 All E.R. 255; [1954] 2 Q.B. 118.

A void. Indeed, the document which the court had to consider in Bennett v. Bennett (5) was a deed.

Secondly, counsel referred to the doubt expressed by SALMON, L.J., in Bell Houses, Ltd. v. City Wall Properties, Ltd. (6), whether a defendant can take the point that the plaintiff had no power to enter into the contract which he is seeking to enforce. In that case, however, the plaintiff had already performed his part of the contract and the defendant was invoking the doctrine of ultra vires in order to avoid paying for what he had received. In this case, on the other hand, the plaintiff, if sued by the council on the agreement, would simply be saying that, by reason of the doctrine of ultra vires, the council had not given and could not give the consideration which they had purported to give. I do not think that SALMON, L.J.'s observations were directed to such a case at all.

C Therefore I will vacate the land charge.

On both summonses it was declared that the grant of the option contained in the agreement was not enforceable by the defendants, and it was ordered that the land charge which the defendants registered be vacated.

Solicitors: Shirley Turner & Harrison (for the plaintiff); Lees & Co., agents for Frank Entwistle, Staines (for the defendants).

D [Reported by JACQUELINE METCALFE, Barrister-at-Law.]

MILLARD v. TURVEY.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.), February 23, 26, 1968.]

E Road Traffic—Motor tractor—Chassis—Chassis capable of being used for various types of vehicle but destined to be fitted with fire engine body—Whether chassis a motor tractor—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. 2 c. 16), s. 253 (1), (6).

F The respondent drove a motor vehicle, a Bedford chassis, on a main road at speeds exceeding those permitted by law for a motor tractor as defined in s. 253 (6)* of the Road Traffic Act, 1960. The chassis had no cab, no rear to the cab, no doors, no roof, no windscreen and no seats for the accommodation of passengers. Its unladen weight was 3½ tons; it was capable of becoming a tipper, a tanker, or a goods carrying vehicle, though in fact it was being delivered for the purpose of having a fire engine body fitted to it. On appeal from dismissal of a charge of driving a motor tractor on a road at a speed greater than the maximum permitted speed,

G Held: the chassis was a motor vehicle but was not in the ordinary sense of the term a "motor tractor", since it was not designed to draw anything, and, as it was not clear that the classes of vehicles specified in s. 253 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, were exhaustive nor, if they were intended to be exhaustive, that there was not a casus omissus (per WINN, L.J., particularly as the word "constructed" in s. 253 showed that reference was being made to articles that were completely constructed), the offence had not been proved (see p. 9, letters C, F and H, and p. 10, letter H, post).

H Appeal dismissed.

[As to meaning of "motor tractor", see 33 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 419, para. 648; and for cases on motor tractors, see 45 DIGEST (Repl.) 75, I 226-229.

For the Road Traffic Act, 1960, s. 253, see 40 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 922.]

Case referred to:

Keeble v. Miller, [1950] 1 All E.R. 261; [1950] 1 K.B. 601; 113 J.P. 143; 45 Digest (Repl.) 72, 217.

(5) [1952] 1 All E.R. 413; [1952] 1 K.B. 249.

(6) [1966] 2 All E.R. 674 at p. 690; [1966] 2 Q.B. 656 at p.p. 693, 694.

* Section 253 (6) is set out at p. 8, letter I, to p. 9, letter A, post.

Case Stated.

This was a Case Stated by justices for Hampshire acting in and for the petty sessional division of Winchester county in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court sitting at Winchester on June 27, 1967. On Apr. 4, 1967, an information was preferred by the appellant, Frederick Neville Millard, against the respondent, Lionel Charles Turvey, charging that he on Feb. 8, 1967, at Compton in Hampshire unlawfully did drive a motor vehicle of a certain class or description, to wit, a motor tractor on a road called A.33, Winchester by-pass, at a speed greater than thirty miles per hour, the speed specified in Sch. 1 to the Road Traffic Act, 1960, as varied by the Motor Vehicles (Variation of Speed Limit) Regulations, 1962* as the maximum speed in relation to a vehicle of that class or description, contrary to s. 24† of the Road Traffic Act, 1960. The facts are summarised at letter E, infra. The justices were of the opinion that at the material time, viz., Feb. 8, 1967, (a) the chassis was a motor vehicle as defined in s. 253 (1) of the Act of 1960; and (b) that the chassis was a motor vehicle in the course of construction, that the purpose for which it was ultimately to be used was relevant in defining the class or description into which the motor vehicle would fall, and that the motor vehicle, in the condition in which it was at the material time, was not within the definition of "motor tractor" in s. 253 (6) of the Act of 1960. Accordingly the justices found the respondent not guilty of the offence alleged and dismissed the information.

The cases noted below‡ were cited during the argument in addition to the case referred to in the judgment.

M. C. B. West for the appellant.

R. K. Bain for the respondent.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: The short facts were that on Feb. 8, 1967, the respondent was driving a Bedford chassis on the A33 road on the way from the Vauxhall Works at Luton to Southampton. He admittedly while on that road drove at speeds varying between fifty and fifty-five miles an hour. This was a typical chassis that he was driving, with no cab, no rear to the cab, no doors, no roof, no windscreen, and no seats for the accommodation of passengers. Its unladen weight was three tons ten cwt., and the chassis was capable of becoming a tipper, a tanker, or a goods carrying vehicle, though in fact it was being delivered to a firm in Southampton where a fire engine body was going to be fitted.

The prosecution case here was that this chassis was a motor vehicle within the Road Traffic Act, 1960, and that by reason of the fact that it was not a motor car as defined in that Act or a heavy motor car, or a motor cycle, or an invalid carriage, or a light locomotive, or a heavy locomotive, it was a motor tractor, and a motor tractor is a vehicle which cannot be driven on the roads at more than thirty miles an hour. The justices found in the first place that this was a motor vehicle, "motor vehicle" being defined in s. 253 (1) of the Act of 1960 as a mechanically propelled vehicle intended or adapted for use on roads. For my part, despite the fact that we have heard argument in this court to the contrary, I am quite satisfied that the justices were right in holding that this chassis was intended or adapted for use on roads. The more difficult question is whether it was a motor tractor, because only if it was a motor tractor was the driver committing an offence in going more than thirty miles an hour. The definition of "motor tractor" is to be found in s. 253 (6), and it is in these terms:

"In this Act 'motor tractor' means a mechanically propelled vehicle which is not constructed itself to carry a load, other than the following

* S.I. 1963 No. 204.

† For s. 24, see 40 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 731.

‡ Hubbard v. Messenger, [1937] 4 All E.R. 48; [1938] 1 K.B. 300; Daley v. Hargreaves, [1961] 1 All E.R. 552; Burns v. Currell, [1963] 2 All E.R. 297; [1963] 2 Q.B. 433; Childs v. Coghan, (1968), 112 Sol. Jo. 175.

A articles, that is to say, water, fuel, accumulators and other equipment used for the purpose of propulsion, loose tools, and loose equipment, and the weight of which unladen does not exceed seven tons and a quarter.”

The prosecution case is that this was a mechanically propelled vehicle, and that it was not constructed itself in the state it then was to carry a load. The justices held that it was not a motor tractor, feeling that they were entitled to take B the view that the chassis was a motor vehicle in the course of construction, and that the purpose for which it was ultimately to be used was relevant in defining the class or description. In my judgment they were wrong in approaching the matter in that way having regard to the decision of this court in Keeble v.
Miller (1), because it was there held that in construing the meaning of the word “constructed”, one ought to apply one’s mind to the question whether at the C time when the offence was alleged to be committed, the vehicle was constructed for the purpose of carrying loads.

In my judgment however it would be quite wrong, unless compelled so to do, to hold that this motor vehicle was a “motor tractor”. It may well be that the words that follow, namely, that it was not in its then state constructed to carry a load, are words apt to define a motor tractor; but this was not a motor D tractor in the ordinary sense of the word at all; nobody looking at this chassis could conceivably say: “There is a motor tractor.” It was not designed to draw anything, and the very words of definition which follow, namely that it “is not constructed itself to carry a load” show that the motor tractor under consideration was a motor vehicle which would in turn draw something which was constructed to carry a load. Accordingly, unless forced to do so I would not E hold that this vehicle was a motor tractor within the definition in the Act.

It is said and argued forcibly that I am bound so to hold because the classes of vehicles set out and defined in s. 253 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, are exhaustive of motor vehicles, and accordingly this being a motor vehicle, it must fall within one of the categories, and the only category within which it could fall would be the category of “motor tractor”. Looking at the section itself, it is by F no means clear that the classes there referred to are exhaustive, but it is to be observed that much the same categories, if not wholly the same, were set out in the Road Traffic Act, 1930 in s. 2 (1), which used these words:

“Motor vehicles, shall for the purposes of this Act and the regulations, be divided into the following classes . . .”

G No such words, it is true, appear in s. 253 of the Act of 1960, but it may well be that the legislature did have in mind that the classes there set out were intended to be exhaustive of the different classes of motor vehicles. Even if there was that intention, it does not follow that there is a casus omissus, and in my judgment a motor chassis is just such a case and does not come within any of the categories there set out, albeit it is a motor vehicle. In those H circumstances the prosecution have not in my judgment proved the offence, and I would agree with the justices, though for different reasons; accordingly this appeal should be dismissed.

WINN, L.J.: I agree and feel glad that it is not necessary, though at one time one was faced with the possible need, to hold, that this article, which quite clearly in everybody’s common understanding was a chassis, was a motor tractor
I for the relevant purposes. It was not drawing anything; it was not designed to draw anything, but it is nevertheless said that it was a motor tractor within
s. 253 (6) of the Road Traffic Act, 1960. For my own part, I attach importance to the use of the word in all these definitions in the section, or most of them, “constructed”; I think myself that it is right to give that word “constructed” the meaning of “completely constructed”, an article the construction of which has been finished, at any rate for the practical purpose for which it is at the material time being used. When one looks at some of these other subsections, that

(1) [1950] 1 All E.R. 261; [1950] K.B. 601.

connotation of the past participle "constructed" is quite acceptable; in sub-s. (2) a motor car means

"a mechanically propelled vehicle not being a motor vehicle or an invalid carriage, which is constructed itself to carry a load or passengers and the weight of which unladen—(a) if it is constructed solely for the carriage of passengers and their effects, is adapted to carry not more than seven . . ."

I wonder myself what would be the impact, if any, of those words on a motor vehicle which was intended to be a motor car to carry a load or passengers, and on which, though some rudimentary body had been placed, there was as yet no seat or any place where a passenger could conveniently or safely place himself. In sub-s. (5) an invalid carriage is a mechanically propelled vehicle with certain weight limitations, specially designed and constructed, not merely adapted, for the use of a person who is physically disabled—again emphasis on the completion of construction as being the moment at which the criterion is to be applied. Again in sub-s. (9), a special case dealt with by a process of deeming, in a case where a motor vehicle is so constructed that a trailer might by partial superimposition be attached to the vehicle and so on, that vehicle shall be deemed to be a vehicle itself constructed to carry a load. I venture to think that, if this be not a casus omissus, then the proper meaning of what has been enacted is that one must look at the end of the process of construction of the article, and say: as constructed as it stands, or in some cases, it may be, as adapted, for what use is it convenient, or of what is it capable? Fundamentally it is a matter to my own mind of the proper use of language in a section which is an offence creating section, and therefore should not have its meaning strained so as to impose criminal liability on members of the public otherwise than by straightforward intelligible language.

I have asked myself this question: supposing one saw a house in the course of construction of which only the first floor was complete, but it was known or indeed indicated by the nature of what had been built, that an upper storey would be added, would it be right to say: that is a bungalow because it is a dwelling-house not constructed to consist of more than one single ground floor? Or would an ordinary man say: that is a partly constructed two storey or three storey house?

I think that the ordinary man looking at this article on the road would say: "This is a mechanically propelled vehicle which is to be completed by placing on it a body of one or other of several kinds to make it a vehicle constructed for use as a fire engine, a goods vehicle, or what have you." I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

ASHWORTH, J.: I also agree. I view it in the same way as LORD PARKER, C.J., that this vehicle, when one looks at it, does not come physically within what one normally conceives to be a motor tractor. For my part I see no difficulty in construing s. 253 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960 so as to provide first that there can be a motor vehicle within sub-s. (1), which is clearly one meaning, but that the vehicle is not brought within one of the following subsections defining specific classes. In other words this was a motor vehicle but not a tractor. I agree that the appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed. The court certified under s. 1 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, that a point of law of general public importance was involved, viz., whether the chassis in the present case was a motor tractor within the meaning of s. 253 (6) of the Road Traffic Act, 1960; but the court refused leave to appeal to the House of Lords.

Solicitors: Theodore Goddard & Co., agents for P. K. L. Danks, Winchester (for the appellant); Haxby-Jarvis & Malcolm-Brown, Coventry (for the respondent).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

BROWN v. BROWN.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Cumming-Bruce, J.), January 22, 1968.]

B

Divorce—Foreign decree—Decree granted to wife in Sweden—Ground of divorce that parties had lived apart for a year and had not resumed cohabitation after grant of decree of judicial separation to wife in Sweden—Wife Swedish national resident in Sweden for past three years—Substantial connexion of wife with Sweden—Whether decree recognised by English court.

C

The parties were married in Sweden in 1957, the husband having an English domicile of origin, and the wife being a Swedish national. After the marriage they lived in Holland and Switzerland. In March, 1963, the wife went back to Sweden where, in 1964, she obtained a decree of judicial separation on the ground of what was called long and irreconcilable incompatibility. In June, 1966, cohabitation not having been resumed, the wife petitioned and obtained a decree of divorce in Sweden by virtue of the law of Sweden that, where a decree of judicial separation had been granted, after a year the court had jurisdiction to pronounce a decree of divorce on the ground that the parties had lived apart for a period of at least a year and had not resumed cohabitation since the date of the decree of judicial separation. On petition by the husband,

D

Held: the Swedish decree of divorce was valid and entitled to recognition in England, because—

E

(i) the wife had been resident in Sweden for at least three years before applying for the decree, which period would have entitled the English court, if her residence had been in England, to exercise jurisdiction, and accordingly, recognition should be extended to the Swedish decree notwithstanding that the Swedish court exercised a jurisdiction in divorce that did not exist in English law (see p. 13, letter A, post; Robinson-Scott v. Robinson-Scott [1957] 3 All E.R. 473, applied); and

F

(ii) the wife had a real and substantial connexion with Sweden at the date of her petition for divorce, and that connexion had persisted ever since (see p. 13, letter B, post).

Indyka v. Indyka ([1967] 2 All E.R. 689) applied.

G

[As to recognition by English courts of foreign decrees of divorce, see 7 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 112, 113, para. 200; and for cases on the subject, see 11 DIGEST (Repl.) 481-483, 1079-1097.]

Cases referred to:

H

Angelo v. Angelo, [1967] 3 All E.R. 314.

Indyka v. Indyka, [1967] 2 All E.R. 689; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 510.

Robinson-Scott v. Robinson-Scott, [1957] 3 All E.R. 473; [1958] P. 71; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 842; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 246, 1097c.

Travers v. Holley and Holley, [1953] 2 All E.R. 794; [1953] P. 246; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 507; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 240, 1023a.

Petition.

I

This was a petition by the husband seeking a declaration that the marriage of the husband and the wife was validly dissolved by a decree of divorce pronounced in a civil court at Stockholm in Sweden on June 30, 1966. The facts are set out in the judgment.

A. A. R. Thompson for the husband.

The wife did not appear and was not represented.

CUMMING-BRUCE, J.: This is a petition seeking a declaration that the marriage of the husband to the wife was validly dissolved by a decree of divorce pronounced in a civil court in Sweden on June 30, 1966. The facts may be briefly stated as follows. The husband is a British national with an English domicile of origin; he is and has always been employed as an interpreter and translator. He lived in the United Kingdom from birth until 1957, when he went to work and live in The Hague with Royal Dutch Shell Co. Thereafter he went to live and work in the Bank of International Settlements in Basle, in Switzerland, and he is now still there working and living. He has never acquired a domicile of choice; his domicile of origin continues. On July 29, 1957, he married the respondent, a Swedish national, in Stockholm, Sweden. They went after the celebration of the marriage to live in Holland and then, as I have stated, in Basle. In 1959 their first child, a daughter was born; in 1962 a son was born. The children were born in Holland. The marriage broke down in Switzerland. It is clear from the correspondence that what happened was that, on Mar. 31, 1963, the wife went back to Sweden, her own country, with the children, and after a period of indecision, she wrote to her husband, on June 6, 1963, and said that she was not going to return to him, because she thought that she did not get on with him. She lived in Sweden until Sept. 9, 1964, on which date she obtained from the Swedish civil court a decree of judicial separation on the ground of what was called long and irreconcilable incompatibility. The law in Sweden, which has been proved by the evidence of a person qualified therein, is that, where a civil court in Sweden has granted a decree of judicial separation, after a year the court has jurisdiction to pronounce a decree of divorce on the ground that the parties have lived apart for a period of at least a year and have not resumed cohabitation since the date of the decree of judicial separation. On June 16, 1966, the wife petitioned for a decree of divorce, not having returned to her husband since the decree of judicial separation. On June 30, 1966, the Swedish civil court pronounced a decree of divorce; there was no appeal, and, on July 18, 1966, that decree became absolute.

In those circumstances, counsel for the husband has submitted that, the wife having been resident in Sweden for three years before she applied for a decree of divorce in Sweden, the case comes four-square within the ambit of the principle stated by KARMINSKI, J., in Robinson-Scott v. Robinson-Scott (1), and I agree and accept that submission. But he also submitted that, having regard to the development of the law consequent on the speeches and decision in Indyka v. Indyka (2) here the wife had a real and substantial connexion with Sweden where she has been living ever since she went there in March, 1963; and he submitted that the ratio decidendi of Indyka v. Indyka (2) was that the test that the court should now apply is to recognise a foreign decree where there is a real and substantial connexion between a resident wife and the country in which she is resident, even though the conditions of Travers v. Holley and Holley (3) cannot be applied. He reminded me of the decision of ORMEROD, J., in Angelo v. Angelo (4) and invited me to apply that principle in this case. The only matter that gave me any occasion for real consideration is whether, having regard to the speeches in Indyka v. Indyka (2), the rule in Travers v. Holley and Holley (3) applied in Robinson-Scott v. Robinson-Scott (1) was still an appropriate test of recognition in cases to which it would apply. Having looked at the speeches in Indyka v. Indyka (2), I take the view that a majority of their lordships approved the decision in Robinson-Scott v. Robinson-Scott (1), so that the principle there stated by KARMINSKI, J., remains one on which petitioners may rely in appropriate cases, though it is no longer the only test of recognition where domicile will not avail the petitioner. The second test which clearly emerges from the speeches of their lordships is that, where a wife can show a real and substantial connexion between herself and the country exercising jurisdiction thereto, this court will recognise the validity of the decree.

In the case before me, I therefore, make a declaration that the decree of the

(1) [1957] 3 All E.R. 473; [1958] P. 71.

(2) [1967] 2 All E.R. 689.

(3) [1953] 2 All E.R. 794; [1953] P. 246.

(4) [1967] 3 All E.R. 314.

A civil court of Stockholm, Third Division, whereby that court granted a divorce to the wife, is recognised as valid by the courts of this country, and had efficacy to dissolve the marriage of the husband petitioning this court. The grounds of my decision are that I am satisfied (a) that recognition should be granted on the principle of Robinson-Scott v. Robinson-Scott (5), which is still a valid test; and (b) that it has been shown that the wife, by the date of her petition for divorce in Sweden, had a real and substantial connexion between herself and that country, and that that connexion has persisted ever since.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Champion & Co., agents for Bonnett, Son & Turner, Hounslow (for the husband).

[Reported by ALICE BLOOMFIELD, Barrister-at-Law.]

F. AUSTIN (LEYTON), LTD. v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Stamp, J.), February 27, 28, 29, 1968.]

Purchase Tax—Chargeable goods—“Furniture”—Built-in dressing table units which were unstable unless fixed between other units of furniture and to walls—Units easily removable—Whether chargeable to tax as furniture—Purchase Tax Act 1963 (c. 9) Sch. 1, Pt. 1, Group 11.

The plaintiffs manufactured and sold by wholesale a built-in dressing table unit. It was constructed of timber and comprised a dressing table with two drawers inset between, and resting on, the timber sides which stood on the floor. A mirror was attached at the back. The two side timbers were also joined by a shelf above the mirror. The timbers extended above the shelf to form a topless compartment which was opened and closed by a flap door. The side timbers were joined by timber at the back of the mirror. The unit would stand on its own but lacked complete rigidity, having a small degree of instability. It was not designed for use as a free-standing dressing table, but was purposely designed to be fitted between other units manufactured by the plaintiffs, namely, built-in wardrobes. These would fit along the whole side of a room, the walls of the room constituting the back and sides of the wardrobe. The dressing table unit was secured to the wall by four plug brackets, to the wardrobe units on each side by screws, and sometimes to a batten on the ceiling. It was not necessary in order to preserve the stability of the fitments that they should be secured to the ceiling. The units could not easily be erected by an unskilled amateur, but were easily removable without appreciably damaging either the units or the fabric of the room. The plaintiffs sought a declaration that a dressing table unit was not “furniture” within Group 11* of Pt. 1 of Sch. 1 to the Purchase Tax Act 1963; or, if it was, that it was an article of a kind “ordinarily installed by builders as a fixture” within the description of goods specified in Group 11 as not being chargeable under that group.

Held: the dressing table units were chargeable to purchase tax as furniture within Group 11 because—

(5) [1957] 3 All E.R. 473; [1958] P. 71.

* Group 11 provides: “Comprising furniture, hardware, ironmongery, turnery, tableware, kitchen-ware and toilet-ware, being articles of a kind used for domestic or office purposes (a) articles not comprised below in this group . . . ten per cent.; (b) mirrors, whether framed or not . . . twenty-five per cent. Not chargeable under this group—Builders’ hardware, sanitary ware and other articles of kinds ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures.”

(i) the word "furniture" in Group 11 should be given its popular meaning, and the dressing table units, being easily removable and detachable without damage to the fabric of the house or themselves, had not become so attached to the house as to cease to be furniture in the ordinary sense of that word (see p. 16, letter H, p. 18, letters F and G, and p. 18, letter I, to p. 19, letter A, post).

Dicta of MACKINNON, L.J. in Gray v. Fidler ([1943] 2 All E.R. at pp. 296, 297) applied.

Dictum of VISCOUNT SIMON in Palser v. Grinling ([1948] 1 All E.R. at p. 9) explained.

(ii) the dressing table units did not fall within the description in Group 11 of articles excepted from the charge to tax, for they were not, at the present time "articles of kinds ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures" (see p. 19, letter H, post).

[As to chargeable goods for purchase tax, see 33 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 223-225, para. 383. For the Purchase Tax Act 1963 s. 2, Sch. 1, Pt. 1, Group 11, see 43 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1016, 1061.]

Cases referred to:

Customs and Excise Comrs. v. H. G. Kewley, Ltd., [1965] 1 All E.R. 929; [1965] 1 W.L.R. 786; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 625, 830b.

Gray v. Fidler, [1943] 2 All E.R. 289; [1943] K.B. 694; 112 L.J.K.B. 627; 169 L.T. 193; 31 Digest (Repl.) 653, 7564.

Palser v. Grinling, Property Holdings Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1948] 1 All E.R. 1; [1948] A.C. 291; [1948] L.J.R. 600; 31 Digest (Repl.) 651, 7541.

Wilkes v. Goodwin, [1923] All E.R. Rep. 61; [1923] 2 K.B. 86; 92 L.J.K.B. 580; 129 L.T. 44; 31 Digest (Repl.) 652, 7560.

Action.

This was an action begun by writ dated July 15, 1966, by the plaintiffs, F. Austin (Leyton), Ltd., wherein the plaintiffs, by their amended statement of claim claimed a declaration that the "Multiglide" built-in dressing table unit as manufactured and sold by the plaintiffs was not an article of furniture within Group 11 of Pt. 1 of Sch. 1 to the Purchase Tax Act 1963, or that it was an article of a kind ordinarily installed by builders as a fixture within the description in Group 11 of articles not chargeable under that group; and that the unit was not chargeable with purchase tax under that or any other group of the said Pt. 1 of Sch. 1. The defendants were the Commissioners of Customs and Excise. The facts are set out in the judgment.

H. Major Allen, Q.C., and Peter Rees for the plaintiff.

H. E. Francis, Q.C., and J. P. Warner for the Commissioners.

STAMP, J.: The plaintiffs in this case manufacture and sell by wholesale, inter alia, a built-in dressing table unit known as the Multiglide dressing unit. The question which I have to decide is whether a sale of this article attracts liability to purchase tax in respect of the article. The question turns on whether the article falls within the description in Group 11 of Sch. 1 to the Purchase Tax Act 1963. The description comprises "furniture, hardware, ironmongery, turnery, table-ware, kitchen-ware and toilet-ware, being articles of a kind used for domestic or office purposes. If the article is within that description, there is a further question whether it is excepted from the charge to tax by the effect of the direction under the heading in Group 11 "Not chargeable under this group". Under that heading are specified "Builders' hardware, sanitary ware and other articles of kinds ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures". The plaintiffs contend that the article is not within the description "furniture", or, if it is, that it is excepted from the charge under Group 11 because it is an article of a kind ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures.

The article when sold is in a sense a complete unit and will stand on its own. It is constructed of timber and comprises a dressing table with two

A dressing table drawers inset between, and resting on, the timber sides which stand on the floor. A mirror is attached to the back but is delivered as a separate parcel. There is a light above the mirror. The two side timbers are joined together as well by a shelf or top above the mirror as by the table piece and drawers. The side timbers extend above the shelf to form a compartment without a top, which is opened and closed by a flap door. The side timbers are also joined by timber at the back of the mirror. The design of the unit is illustrated by a drawing, exhibit "P.3". The unit stands solidly on its own, but lacks complete rigidity. It is not designed for use as a free-standing dressing table. It has a small degree of instability when standing free—an instability which would no doubt be increased if heavy articles were placed in the compartment over the dressing table part of the unit. No one would, in my judgment, use it as a free-standing piece of furniture. It could, perhaps, be fitted into a recess into which it happened to fit, but the evidence is that it has not been so fitted. It is designed to be fitted into other units manufactured by the plaintiffs, and not to serve any other purpose.

The plaintiffs also manufacture what are called built-in wardrobes. These wardrobes are made in a considerable number of different widths to be fitted along the whole side of a room, the two return walls of the room constituting the sides of the wardrobe, and the wall of the room to which they are fitted constituting the back of the wardrobe. They may also be fitted into a recess. The wardrobes also have a top shelf with flaps. The dressing table unit is designed to be fitted between two of these wardrobes, each unit deriving rigidity and support from the others. When fitted, the units form a continuous line of (without prejudice at the moment to whether this is a correct description) furniture, consisting of two wardrobes with a dressing table between them. If they are fitted properly, the gap between the top of the units and the ceiling will be scribed. The dressing table unit is secured to the wardrobe units on each side, and sometimes to a batten in the ceiling, although as far as I can see the installation instructions do not so direct. I find as a fact that it is not necessary, in order to preserve the stability of the fitments, that they should be secured to the ceiling. Although normally the units are arranged in the way that I have indicated, they may be arranged so that one or even both of the ends of the run, instead of being against a wall of the room, is fitted with an outside end. The dressing table unit can be at the end instead of in the middle of the run. A run comprising wardrobes with a dressing table unit between is well illustrated in the exhibit "P.5". The dressing table unit is secured to the wall at the back at four fixing points by plug brackets, and to the adjoining units by one and a quarter inch screws.

In the publicity the plaintiffs claim that the fitting of the Multiglide built-in wardrobes is not difficult, and that if one is handy with a screw driver one can do it oneself. The plaintiffs called evidence (which I accept) that the latter claim is untrue. Contrary to the plaintiffs' advertising claims, I find as a fact that the units cannot be easily erected by one unskilled person; it would have to be quite a skilled amateur to be able to do the job properly, and the evidence from a retailer was that one of their fitters would take two days or more to complete the job. Floors are not level, nor walls true, and the units must be fitted true and spaces filled in with packing of one sort or another. Scribing will be required from the top of the unit to the ceiling, both to close the other compartment and for clearance. The side members of the dressing unit project above the top of the unit for the purpose of this scribing. A batten is, as I have indicated, sometimes, but not always, affixed to the ceiling to give additional stability.

I find as a fact that the units are easily removable without doing more than insignificant damage to the units and without appreciable damage to, or alteration of, the fabric of the room or building. The only damage which there might be otherwise than minimal damage (in the minimal class I place the removal of the plugs in the wall) is that which might be caused by the removal of the ceiling batten, if such there be, which might involve some slight damage to the plaster of the ceiling. It was said that the removal would leave a wall of a different colour from the rest of the room, perhaps unfinished, and no doubt it would be a dirty and discoloured wall. This is, of course, equally true of the old fashioned, massive wardrobes often standing unmoved for decades. Though easily removable (the plaintiffs have advertised them as such, although they ceased to do so after the issue of the writ in this action), they would be unlikely to be of use in another room because they are made to fit the room in which they are installed. Their secondhand value would, I apprehend, be less than that of any conventional furniture which might happen not to fit into one's new house or flat when one moved.

The plaintiffs' built-in furniture is supplied through retail furnishers, and the plaintiffs also supply quantities of it on contract to persons building blocks of flats, so that the tenant or purchaser viewing the flat finds the built-in furniture in situ. They are hoping to develop this side of their business, but although there have been valuable contracts, there have not, as I understand it, been at present, many such contracts. Builders building houses, as distinct from flats, have similarly ordered the plaintiffs' built-in units to be installed in the course of the building. The plaintiffs have also supplied their built-in furniture where hotel improvements have been carried out. The figures are, in the view I take of the matter, of little importance, and I am, I think, asked not to mention them; they are however available if required. I have no evidence that today (it might differ in future) builders building flats or houses ordinarily do fit the plaintiffs' built-in furniture or the plaintiffs' dressing units to such flats or houses. Nor is there evidence that it is the ordinary thing to find built-in wardrobes or dressing table units, whether the plaintiffs' or not and whether as fixtures or otherwise.

The work of installation of the plaintiffs' built-in furniture, where the article is bought from a retail furnisher, may be done by a fitter employed by the retailer or may be put out to be sub-contracted by a building contractor specialising in this sort of work. The evidence on this part of the case is somewhat sketchy, being derived from two or three retailers. I am not persuaded that builders properly so called are normally employed in installing articles of this kind when they are supplied retail.

The question then is whether the units which I have endeavoured to describe—more particularly the dressing table unit—are articles of furniture within the description in Group 11 in Sch. 1 to the Purchase Tax Act 1963. If several articles commonly described as furniture are so constructed that they can be fastened together, and so matched that they run flush with each other and have the appearance of a single unit, they are of course nonetheless articles of furniture (or a single article of furniture) and it can, in my judgment, make no difference that they are placed along the whole length of a wall or fill a recess in the wall of the room which is furnished by them. Nor is their character as furniture affected by the fact the whole unit is embellished by the filling up of gaps and spaces between the unit and the ceiling or elsewhere; the unit still has all the characteristics of furniture in whatever sense that term is used, and the only question which, in my judgment, really has to be determined is whether this dressing table unit or dressing unit becomes so attached to the walls and ceiling of the room that it ceases to be furniture.

The matter is not untouched by authority; in Commissioners of Customs & Excise v. H. G. Kewley, Ltd. (1) it was admitted that free-standing units in a domestic house would properly be classed as furniture, and both HARMAN, L.J., and RUSSELL, L.J., thought the admission inevitable, HARMAN, L.J., adding the words (2) "furniture must be mobile" and RUSSELL, L.J., saying (3) "furniture is of its nature movable". These remarks, which are relied on by the plaintiffs in this case, are however in fact obiter, and they leave open the question, what degree

(1) [1965] 1 All E.R. 929.

(2) [1965] 1 All E.R. at p. 932, letter G.

(3) [1965] 1 All E.R. at p. 933, letter C.

A of immobility is necessary to deny the article the characteristic of furniture. The Court of Appeal in that case did not discuss that question and did not have the advantage of being referred either to the speech of VISCOUNT SIMON in Pulser v. Grinling, Property Holdings, Ltd. v. Mischeff (4) or the judgment of MACKINNON and DU PARCQ, L.JJ., in the Court of Appeal in Gray v. Fidler (5). Both these cases were cases under the Rent Acts where special considerations apply, but I do derive some guidance from what was said in those cases. Both MACKINNON and DU PARCQ, L.JJ., in the last-mentioned case took the view that the word "furniture" in the section there under review was to be construed as a common English word, and neither accepted the view that fixtures cannot be furniture. I borrow the language of MACKINNON, L.J., in that case and found my judgment in this part of the case on it. What he said was this (6):

C "It is not denied, of course, that beds and wardrobes are pieces of 'furniture'; but it is said that, to be 'furniture' within the section, a bed or a wardrobe must be a movable article, whereas these beds and wardrobes, and most of the articles specified in Sch. 2, are affixed by screws or other connexions to the walls or floors of the building. And being so fixed, and not movable in their normal user, they cannot be 'furniture' within the section.

D It was first said that 'furniture' must be 'movable', and the definition of the NEW OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY was invoked. This is as follows: Movable articles in a dwellinghouse, place of business, or a public building (now the prevailing sense) dating from 1573. I cannot agree that to constitute furniture the articles notoriously within that description must be movable. It seems to me that it would be absurd to say that members of the Bar have the use of no furniture in this court, and that my brethren and I have the use of no furniture except the chairs on which we are now sitting. Of course, articles of furniture are usually movable, and the definition of the NEW OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY is amply justified; but if a pedant had said to the late Dr. Murray: 'Barristers in the law courts sit on very uncomfortable wooden seats with very inconvenient desks in front of them. Those seats and desks are fixed to the floor. Do you say those seats and desks are not furniture?'. I feel sure he would have replied that he did not. I, personally, have no doubt that it is no part of the proper definition of 'furniture', in its ordinary meaning, that it must consist of movable articles. The briefest mental survey of my own house recalls many things that are fixed to the wall—mirrors, a bracket-clock, corner cupboards, many book-shelves, a medicine cupboard—

E which everyone would describe as articles of furniture. In houses I know in my earlier days there were many articles of Victorian mahogany which were certainly not movable (except by a powerful crane), and to screw them to floor or wall would have been a superfluity. But they were certainly 'furniture' though not movable by unaided human effort. A billiard table is only movable after it has been taken to pieces."

H Then a little later on he said (7):

I "Then it was said that, because these articles are fixed to the walls or floor they pass to the tenant under the demise of the flat, and the tenant does not enjoy their use under a contract for the use of chattels. Most of us have had experience of taking furnished houses for a term. But I have never known such an agreement to specify separately payment for the demised house, and payment for the use of the furniture. Indeed, the section now under consideration obviously contemplates a single amount payable to the landlord, and the judge has to inquire how much, if any, of that single payment by way of 'rent' is for the use of 'furniture'. I think the word 'furniture'

(4) [1948] 1 All E.R. 1; [1948] A.C. 291.

(5) [1943] 2 All E.R. 289; [1943] K.B. 694.

(6) [1943] 2 All E.R. at pp. 296, 297; [1943] K.B. at pp. 708, 709.

(7) [1943] 2 All E.R. at pp. 297, 298; [1943] K.B. at p. 710.

in this section is to be construed as a common English word, or, as BANKES, L.J., said in Wilkes v. Goodwin (8), 'the popular meaning of the word'. For articles to be 'furniture' within that meaning I do not think it is essential that they shall be movable, and though, of course, articles of furniture are commonly movable, I do not think they pass out of the popular meaning of furniture because they are fixed by a nail or a screw to wall or floor, I think that the judge was right in treating these beds and wardrobes as articles which come within the ordinary and popular meaning of furniture. In strictness, perhaps, one should add 'the ordinary or popular meaning of furniture at the present day'. For no doubt the ambit of the word has changed. The close-stool of our ancestors is as obsolete as the triclinium: the round bath and its accompanying can of my undergraduate days is gone. No one would speak of their substitutes, the apparatus of the water closet, or the bath in the bathroom as furniture. But, that would not be because they are fixed to floor or wall, but merely because they are not within the common or popular meaning of the word. A contrasted change may be that, whereas no one would include a fireplace within furniture, the electric fire which can stand anywhere, with a wire to a wall plug, probably would be called a piece of furniture. But there again that is not because it is movable, but because it is within the common or popular meaning."

DU PARCQ, L.J., gave a judgment which was to the same effect. VISCOUNT SIMON in Palser v. Grinling (9), in a speech with which the other lords of appeal agreed, did not accept the view expressed by the majority of the court in Gray v. Fidler (10) that for the purposes of the Rent Acts furniture must be given its ordinary, popular meaning, but I do not understand him to have disagreed with the judgments of MACKINNON and DU PARCQ, L.J.J., as to that popular meaning; on the contrary he, I think, recognised (although not for the purpose of the section which he was considering) that fixtures might be furniture in the popular sense. In my judgment, ordinary English words such as "furniture", where found in the Purchase Tax Act, 1963—which affects millions of Her Majesty's subjects and I know not how many tens of thousands of traders unfamiliar with legal language—ought to be given their popular meaning.

With the guidance given to me by the two lords justices in Gray v. Fidler (10), I conclude that these dressing units, easily removable as I find them to be, are furniture within the meaning of the head of charge.

If I am wrong in applying the popular test, then I apply the language of VISCOUNT SIMON in Palser v. Grinling (11), where he said:

"On the other hand, however, it is no less difficult, having regard to the obvious intendment of the section, to suppose that the legislature in speaking of the 'use of furniture' meant to recognise the law of real property to the extent of excluding from 'furniture' each and every fixture whatever the nature and degree of its attachment. In my opinion, the true view is that articles belonging to the landlord otherwise entitled to rank as 'furniture' for the purposes of s. 10 [of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923] should, if affixed to the fabric, be regarded as part thereof if they cannot be detached without appreciable damage to or alteration of the fabric or themselves. Otherwise they should be regarded as furniture."

As I have already said, I think that these dressing units with the wardrobes can be detached without appreciable damage to, or alteration of, the fabric, or themselves. Like the suit which has been made to measure for the owner, they may have little value in the market when separated, and it may be better, when

(8) [1923] All E.R. Rep. 61; [1923] 2 K.B. 86.

(9) [1948] 1 All E.R. 1; [1948] A.C. 291.

(10) [1943] 2 All E.R. 289; [1943] K.B. 694.

(11) [1948] 1 All E.R. at p. 9; [1948] A.C. at p. 314.

A one moves, to leave them where they are and hope to sell them on the spot, but this cannot, in my judgment, affect the question whether, while installed, they are furniture. That does not affect their mobility.

I turn to consider whether the unit in question falls within the section "builders' hardware, sanitary ware and other articles of kinds ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures" (12). As a matter of the ordinary meaning of the English language,

B the word "ordinarily", in my view, governs the whole of the rest of the phrase "installed by builders as fixtures" and does not serve to distinguish articles installed ordinarily as fixtures from those which are installed by builders, but not as fixtures. To fall within the category described, the articles must be both of a kind ordinarily installed by builders and of a kind ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures. Nor, in my judgment, does the word "ordinarily" serve to distinguish articles ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures from articles ordinarily installed as fixtures by persons who are not builders. The word "ordinarily" when read in conjunction with the opening words "builders' hardware, sanitary ware and other articles of kinds" and the concluding words "as fixtures" indicate, in my judgment, that what is meant by the words "ordinarily installed by builders" is that they are ordinarily installed in the course of building—articles

D which one would expect a builder to install as fixtures in the ordinary way and without any special instruction. The articles which are specifically spoken of are clearly articles which one would expect a builder to install as fixtures as a matter of course, because a builder when performing his function of building ordinarily installs them. A prospective purchaser viewing a house and finding no pipes, basins, baths, cisterns or w.c.s would, I venture to think, express surprise that

E such articles were not there, and he would do so because these articles are of kinds ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures. If, however, he said to the builder following him round "Why are there no fitted dressing tables?", the surprise would, I venture to think, be on the other side, and the question might appropriately be answered by the builder by some such remark as "builders in this country do not at present ordinarily install articles of that kind as fixtures",

F and, if the impertinent visitor remarked, "But I have been looking at some houses up the road where the builder has installed dressing tables as fixtures" the builder might, I think, patiently and, in my judgment, correctly reply "that is still today exceptional though the time may come when all furniture is ordinarily installed as fixtures". That day is, in my judgment, still before us. As I have indicated, I am assisted to the conclusion to which I have come on this part of

G the case by the consideration that the phrase in question is part of a longer description of articles which comprise articles of a kind which a builder does ordinarily install and does ordinarily install as fixtures—e.g. builders' hardware and sanitary ware—and if the latter part of the phrase is not to be construed as ejusdem generis with builders' hardware and sanitary ware, it would at least derive colour from those terms. But the whole description is of a genus,

H namely articles which a builder would install as fixtures. Since, in my view, the article in this case is not of a kind ordinarily installed by builders, I do not have to consider whether it is a fixture within the meaning of that word in the passage. I must dismiss the action.

Action dismissed.

I Solicitors: Brecher & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Solicitor, Customs and Excise.

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(12) These words are those of the exception provided in Group II in Sch. 1 to the Purchase Tax Act 1963.

R. v. LLANDRINDOD WELLS JUSTICES, Ex parte GIBSON.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.),
February 23, 1968.]

Magistrates—Procedure—Plea of guilty in accused's absence—Disqualification—Road traffic offence—No adjournment to enable accused to be present and to be heard in mitigation—Circumstances of disqualification within s. 5 (3) of Road Traffic Act, 1962—Whether order for disqualification should be quashed—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2 c. 29), s. 1 (2), proviso (iii).

The applicant was prosecuted for using a motor lorry without insurance. He notified the court of his intention to plead guilty, and he sent a statement of mitigating circumstances. The justices fined the applicant, ordered his licence to be endorsed and disqualified him for holding or obtaining a licence for a period of twelve months under s. 5 (3)* of the Road Traffic Act, 1962, without adjourning the case to enable him to be present. On an application for certiorari to quash the disqualification,

Held: the order for disqualification would be quashed, since not only did proviso (iii)† to s. 1 (2) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1957, require magistrates to adjourn before ordering disqualification but also the obligation to order disqualification imposed by s. 5 (3) of the Road Traffic Act, 1962, where there were appropriate previous convictions, would not apply if the magistrates were satisfied that there were sufficient grounds of mitigation (see p. 21, letter G, post).

[As to the procedure for pleading guilty, before a magistrates' court without attending the court, see 25 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 196-198, paras. 358, 359; and for cases concerning orders made by justices in the absence of the accused, see 33 DIGEST (Repl.) 218, 528-534, and DIGEST (Cont. Vol. B) 510, 640a.

For the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1957, see 37 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 627.

For the Road Traffic Act, 1962, s. 5, see 42 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 891.]

Motion for certiorari.

This was a motion by notice dated Feb. 13, 1968, on behalf of Anthony Samuel Gibson for an order of certiorari to remove and quash an order of disqualification made by the justices of the petty sessional division of Llandrindod Wells, in the county of Radnor, on Aug. 15, 1967, whereby they disqualified the applicant for holding or obtaining a licence to drive a motor vehicle for a period of twelve months on his conviction for using a motor lorry without insurance contrary to s. 201 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960. The grounds for the relief sought were that the justices dealt with the charge against the applicant in his absence under the provisions of s. 1 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1957, but that, contrary to s. 1 (2) proviso (iii), made the order for disqualification without adjourning the case and without giving the applicant an opportunity of being present.

* Section 5 (3) provides: "Where a person convicted of an offence specified in . . . Pt. 1 or . . . Pt. 2 [of Sch. 1 to this Act] has within the three years immediately preceding the commission of the offence and since the commencement of this Act been convicted on not less than two occasions of an offence specified in those Parts and particulars of the convictions have been ordered to be endorsed in accordance with s. 7 of this Act, the court shall order him to be disqualified for such period not less than six months as the court thinks fit, unless the court is satisfied, having regard to all the circumstances, that there are grounds for mitigating the normal consequences of the conviction and thinks fit to order him to be disqualified for a shorter period or not to order him to be disqualified."

† Section 1 (2), proviso (iii), so far as material, provides: "if the court proceeds under this section to hear and dispose of the case in the absence of the accused, the court . . . shall not without adjourning under [s. 14 (3) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952] order him to be subject to any disqualification."

A The applicant deposed that on or about July 28, 1967, he was served with a summons charging him with the offence against s. 201 on May 1, 1967, together with a statement of facts pursuant to the Act of 1957; the applicant notified the clerk to the justices that he desired to plead guilty and that the court should dispose of the case in his absence. On Aug. 15, 1967, the applicant was accordingly convicted; he was fined £10 for this offence and his licence was directed
B to be endorsed, and he was ordered to be disqualified as previously stated. He received no notice of adjournment before the order for disqualification was made, and deposed that the justices did not adjourn before making it. At the hearing before the justices, their clerk, so he stated by letter to the applicant's solicitors dated Jan. 23, 1968, read to the court mitigating circumstances outlined by the applicant; the letter of the justices' clerk further stated that in the circum-
C stances compulsory disqualification was automatic under the "totting up" rule. The memorandum of conviction entered in the magistrates' court for Aug. 15, 1967, showed four convictions under the new procedure, viz., offences on Feb. 12, 1967 (using lorry without excise licence), Apr. 19 (failing to produce licence), Apr. 19 (using lorry without insurance) and May 1, being the offence of that date previously mentioned. The applicant was fined for the first three D offences, his licence being also endorsed for the s. 201 offence of Apr. 19, 1967.

W. A. Macpherson for the applicant.

The respondents did not appear and were not represented.

E LORD PARKER, C.J.: The grounds on which this application is moved are that, since the summary procedure under s. 1 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1957, had been invoked and the applicant had pleaded guilty, the justices were not entitled to dispose of the matter in his absence without an adjournment, if they were minded to order him to be disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence to drive a motor vehicle. In a letter which the court has seen from the justices' clerk, it is said that the court did not adjourn to allow the applicant to be present in view of the fact that s. 5 (3) of the Road Traffic Act, 1962, applied:
F in other words, in view of what are commonly called the "totting" up provisions. The suggestion, I think, must be that if the justices have to disqualify, it is idle for them to adjourn the case for the applicant to be present. Counsel for the applicant has said that on the facts the magistrates were wrong and that s. 5 (3) was not applicable in all the circumstances.

G Assuming, however, facts which brought s. 5 (3) into operation, nevertheless the magistrates must adjourn before making any such disqualification. Not only does s. 1 (2), proviso (iii) of the Act of 1957 say "any disqualification", but it becomes apparent when one looks at s. 5 (3) of the Act of 1962 that the court's obligation to disqualify is subject to there being grounds for mitigating the normal consequences of the conviction. Accordingly the defendant in any
H case such as this must be given the opportunity of being present and advancing mitigating circumstances. I am quite satisfied that the order of certiorari should go to quash this order of disqualification.

WINN, L.J.: I agree.

ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

I Order of certiorari granted.
Solicitors: Ivens, Thompson & Green, Cheltenham (for the applicant).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROGERS v. DODD.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.),
February 27, 1968.]

Registration—Premises—Coffee bar—Condition requiring premises should not remain open after 1 a.m.—Coffee bar defined as premises “kept open” for public refreshment—Refreshment served to members of public after permitted hour through open window—Door of premises closed—Brighton Corporation Act 1966 s. 7.

It was a condition of the registration of the appellant's premises in Brighton as a coffee bar that they should “not remain open after 1 a.m.”. This condition was imposed under s. 7 (6)* of the Brighton Corporation Act 1966. At 1.40 a.m. hot dogs were being served through a window of the premises to members of the public in the street outside. The door of the premises was shut. By s. 7 (1)† of the Act of 1966 “coffee bar” meant any premises which “are kept open for public refreshment” between certain hours. On appeal against conviction of the appellant, the proprietor of the premises, of contravention of the condition imposed under s. 7 of the Act of 1966,

Held: “kept open” referred to keeping the premises open to allow the public to resort therein for the purposes of refreshment, and serving people in the street from a window was not a contravention of the condition; accordingly the conviction would be quashed (see p. 23, letters E and H, post).

Appeal allowed.

Case Stated.

This was a Case Stated by the justices for the county borough of Brighton and for the petty sessional division of Brighton in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court sitting at Brighton. On July 28, 1967, an information was laid by the respondent, William Ogilvy Dodd, against the appellant, Harry Rogers, and Baron Louis Kenyon Mendes Da Costa for that they on July 23, 1967, being persons concerned together in the management of premises “Jaconellis” 39, Kings Road, in the county borough of Brighton, did contravene a condition imposed by the council of the county borough of Brighton under s. 7 (6) (a) (v) of the Brighton Corporation Act 1966 on registering the said premises for use as a coffee bar under s. 7 aforesaid, namely that the said premises should not remain open after 1 a.m., contrary to s. 7 (6) (b) of the Act of 1966. The facts are summarised in the judgment. The justices were of the opinion that the premises were open at the time in question. They convicted the appellant and his co-accused.

The appellant appeared in person.

J. Wood for the respondent.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: The appellant's co-accused Da Costa, was the manager and the appellant was the proprietor of these premises which were registered for use as a coffee bar under the Brighton Corporation Act 1966. On registration, the council imposed a condition which originally read, “the premises shall not remain open after midnight”; but on a renewal of the licence or registration, that was changed to 1 a.m. On July 23 at 1.40 a.m. police officers observed that whereas the doors to the premises were closed and locked, there was a staff inside the premises who were serving through the open window hot dogs to a queue of persons outside. When Mr. Da Costa was approached and cautioned by the police he said: “The door is shut and I am serving through the window. We are not open.” When the appellant, the * Section 7 (6), so far as material, is set out at p. 23, letter C, post.

† Section 7 (1), so far as material, is set out at p. 23, letters D and G, post.

A proprietor was approached he said: "I shall be writing to the chief constable tomorrow. The door was shut and I think he is wrong." It was in those circumstances that the justices held, accepting the contention of the respondent, that at the material time the premises were open for use as a coffee bar within the meaning of the Act of 1966, that accordingly the condition had been contravened, and the appellant was guilty of this offence.

B Whether or not he was guilty of this offence clearly depends on the exact wording to be found in s. 7 of the Brighton Corporation Act 1966. A coffee bar has to be registered; and s. 7 (6) (a) provides:

C "The corporation may, on registering or renewing the registration of any premises for use as a coffee bar, impose conditions as to . . . (v) the hours of opening and closing the premises for use as a coffee bar so as to ensure that nuisance is not likely to be caused to residents in the neighbourhood."

Undoubtedly such a condition is one to avoid nuisance to residents in the neighbourhood, but the whole question is whether in the present case the condition had been contravened, in that the premises were not closed for use as a coffee bar. One asks oneself at once: what is meant by "for use as a coffee bar"? D One then goes back to s. 7 (1) where one finds that " 'coffee bar' means (a) any premises which are kept open for public refreshment at any time between the hours of eleven o'clock in the evening and five o'clock in the morning."

E It is in those circumstances that the respondent submits that these premises were open for public refreshment in the sense that public refreshment was being served therefrom. The sole question is whether that is the true meaning of "kept open" there, or whether the words "kept open" are not referring to the keeping open of the premises to allow the public to resort therein for the purpose of refreshment.

F In my judgment it is the latter. It seems to me that the mischief aimed at by the Act of 1966 is the congregation of the public in premises where no doubt they are served with refreshment, and where abuses are likely to occur in the sense of undue noise to the neighbourhood, peddling of drugs and other such matters. This is not an Act, as it seems to me, and was never intended to be an Act, to deal with the serving of members of the public in the street, and any nuisance that may result therefrom. I think confirmation is given to my view G when one goes on to read s. 7 (1) (b) which says:

" 'Coffee bar' means . . . any premises which are used by a club, organisation or body, and which, if they were kept open to the public, would fall within para. (a) of this definition."

H That as it seems to me clearly shows that when the words "kept open" are referred to, it is meant "kept open" to the public. Finally, I would say if one looks to the matters on which justices must be satisfied and the conditions other than those in s. 7 (6) (a), (v), they all point to matters which have to be considered in connexion with the public resorting to and being on the premises. For those reasons I have come to the conclusion, though somewhat regretfully, that the appeal succeeds and the conviction should be quashed.

I WINN, L.J.: I agree.

ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed. Conviction quashed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for W. O. Dodd, Brighton (for the respondent).

[Reported by OM. P. MIDHA, Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. GOSWAMI.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Salmon, L.J., Phillimore and Blain, JJ.), February 14, 15, 22, 1968.]

Currency Control—Exchange control—Export—Smuggling money, Bank of England notes, out of the country—Contravention of the prohibition imposed by s. 22 of the Exchange Control Act, 1947—Whether in law an offence under Customs and Excise Act, 1952, s. 56 (2)—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38 (1)—Exchange Control Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6 c. 14), s. 22, Sch. 5, Pt. 3, para. 1 (1)—Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2 c. 44), s. 56 (2).

The appellant pleaded guilty to offences charged under s. 56 (2)* of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, consisting in being knowingly concerned in the attempted exportation of goods with intent to evade the prohibition on their exportation imposed by s. 22† of the Exchange Control Act, 1947. He subsequently moved in arrest of judgment on the ground that smuggling money (bank notes) out of the country was not an offence against s. 56 (2). On appeal on the question whether such smuggling was such an offence,

Held: by providing that the “enactments relating to customs” should apply in relation to the provisions of Part 4 (which included s. 22) of the Exchange Control Act, 1947, para. 1 (1) of Sch. 5 to the Act of 1947 applied to the s. 22 prohibition the offence regarding importation created by s. 186 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, and para. 3 of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Act of 1947 extended the offence to prohibited exportation (see p. 28, letter B, post); and when the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, replaced the repealed s. 186 of the Act of 1876 (which by then had been amended, as regards punishment by the Finance Act, 1935, s. 15 and s. 12 of the Finance Act, 1943)), the substituted s. 56 (2) offence became applicable by virtue of s. 38 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889 and the words “enactments relating to customs” previously mentioned, to the prohibition enacted in s. 22 of the Exchange Control Act, 1947, with the consequence that the smuggling constituted an offence under s. 56 (2) and the appellant’s convictions should stand (see p. 28, letter I, and p. 29, letter D, post).

Per CURIAM: Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Exchange Control Act, 1947, contains a complete code for the enforcement of the three sections (s. 21, s. 22 and s. 23) constituting Part 4 of the Act of 1947; accordingly para. 1 (1)‡ of Pt. 2 of Sch. 5 does not cover a contravention of the provisions of Part 4 of the Act of 1947 (see p. 29, letters G and H, post).

Appeal dismissed.

[As to restrictions on import and export of bank notes, etc., see 27 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 125, 126, para. 205; as to the application of Customs Acts to export restrictions, see ibid., 126, 127, para. 206.

As to substitution and re-enactment of statutory provisions, see 36 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 474, 475, para. 719, text and note (d); and for cases on the subject, see 44 DIGEST (Repl.) 375, 2133-2139.

For the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 38, see 24 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 229.

For the Exchange Control Act, 1947, s. 22, Sch. 5, Part III, para. 1, see 16 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 582, 613.

For the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, s. 56, see 32 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 755.]

* Section 56 (2) is set out at p. 28, letter H, post.

† Section 22 (1), so far as material, reads: “The exportation from the United Kingdom of (a) any notes of a class which are or have at any time been legal tender in the United Kingdom . . . is hereby prohibited except with the permission of the Treasury.”

‡ Paragraph 1 (1) is set out at p. 29, letter E, post.

A Case referred to:

Stevens v. General Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., [1903] 1 K.B. 890; 72 L.J.K.B. 417; 88 L.T. 542; 67 J.P. 415; 44 Digest (Repl.) 375, 2135.

Appeal and application.

On Feb. 22, 1967, at the Central Criminal Court, the appellant, Amarendra Goswami, and two other men, Banthia and Cohen, were arraigned on indictment. The appellant pleaded guilty to ten counts, counts 2, 4, 5, 7, 9, 11, 12, 14 and 15 of knowingly being concerned in the exportation and one count (count 1) of attempted exportation of goods, viz., Bank of England notes, with intent to evade the prohibition on the exportation of such goods imposed by s. 22 of the Exchange Control Act, 1947, contrary to s. 56 (2) of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952. Other counts (to which the appellant also pleaded guilty) related to buying foreign currency (counts 3, 8 and 13) and gold (count 6) outside the United Kingdom from a person other than an authorised dealer contrary to s. 1 (1) of the Exchange Control Act, 1947. The Common Serjeant discharged the jury from giving a verdict in respect of Banthia and Cohen and ordered a new trial, sentence on the appellant being left to be passed by the judge at the re-trial. On Apr. 6, 1967, the case came before JUDGE KING-HAMILTON, Q.C., for trial. He decided not to sentence the appellant until the conclusion of the trial of Banthia and Cohen. On Apr. 14 and May 1, 1967, Banthia and Cohen were acquitted. On May 5, 1967, counsel for the appellant moved in arrest of judgment on all counts. JUDGE KING-HAMILTON, Q.C., acceded to the motion in respect of counts 3, 6, 8 and 13 and directed that an acquittal be entered on those counts and that proceedings on those counts be set aside. He rejected the motion in respect of the other counts and sentenced the appellant (a) to such a period of imprisonment as would result in his immediate discharge, and (b) to a fine of £25,000, with six months to pay, or twelve months' imprisonment in default. The appellant appealed against conviction with leave of the trial judge pursuant to a certificate granted under s. 3 (b) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. The ground of appeal was that the offences created by s. 56 (2) of the Act of 1952 related only to the exportation of goods, and that the exportation of money in contravention of s. 22 of the Act of 1947 was not an offence against s. 56 (2) of the Act of 1952. The appellant also applied for leave to appeal against sentence on the ground that it was excessive in all the circumstances, including the fact that he had been in custody from Oct. 6, 1966 (date of arrest) to May 5, 1967 (date of sentence).

The authorities and cases noted below* were cited in argument in addition to the case referred to in the judgment.

I. Percival, Q.C., and R. J. Merrett for the appellant.

M. J. Morris, Q.C., and W. W. Stabb for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 22. SALMON, L.J., read the following judgment of the court: This appeal concerns eleven counts to all of which the appellant originally pleaded not guilty. After having been put in charge of the jury he, however, changed his plea to one of guilty and accordingly, on the learned judge's direction, the * OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY, Vol. 2, C-D, p. 1723; ARCHBOLD'S CRIMINAL PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE (36th Edn.), para. 611; 16 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 582, 594, 611, 613; 21 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 327, 1157; 24 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 229; 26 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 219; 32 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 710, 755; R. v. Bakewell, (1857), 7 El. & Bl. 848; Wakefield & District Light Ry. Co. v. Wakefield Corpn., [1906] 2 K.B. 140; [1907] 2 K.B. 256; A.-G. v. Yorkshire (Woollen District) Electric Tramways, Ltd., [1907] 2 K.B. 991; The Noordam (No. 2), [1920] A.C. 904; R. v. Dickinson, [1920] 3 K.B. 552; Postmaster-General v. Birmingham Corpn., [1935] All E.R. Rep. 856; [1936] 1 K.B. 66; Pickett v. Fesq., [1949] 2 All E.R. 705; Abbott v. London County Council, [1951] 1 All E.R. 569; [1951] 2 K.B. 127; Brown v. Allweather Mechanical Grouting Co., Ltd., [1953] 1 All E.R. 474; [1954] 2 Q.B. 443.

jury found him guilty on all eleven counts. At a later stage counsel for the appellant moved in arrest of judgment. He contended amongst other things, that each of these counts was bad on the face of it. The learned judge ruled against this contention, and it is from that decision that the appellant now appeals by leave of the learned judge. A

The first count, in so far as it concerns this appellant, reads as follows:

“STATEMENT OF OFFENCE B

“Being knowingly concerned in the attempted exportation of goods with intent to evade the prohibition on the exportation of such goods imposed by s. 22 of the Exchange Control Act, 1947, contrary to s. 56 (2) of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952.

Particulars of Offence C

“Amarendra Goswami on Oct. 6, 1966, within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court [was] knowingly concerned in the attempted exportation of certain goods namely 3,000 £10 Bank of England notes with intent to evade the prohibition on the exportation of such notes imposed by s. 22 of the Exchange Control Act, 1947.”

The other ten counts are in the same form save that they each charge actual exportation and not a mere attempt. There is no dispute but that between March, 1964, and Oct. 6, 1966, the appellant smuggled some £120,000 out of the country. On Oct. 6, 1966, he was caught whilst attempting to bring the total up to £150,000. The appellant's main contention is that to smuggle money out of the country is not an offence against s. 56 (2) of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, and that the indictment is bad, in as much as each of the eleven counts charges an offence against that section. The case for the Crown is that smuggling money out of the country is made an offence against s. 56 (2) by virtue of the provisions of para. 1 (1) of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Exchange Control Act, 1947. D

In order to resolve this dispute, it is necessary to examine in some detail the Act of 1947. The first three parts of that Act impose certain restrictions and prohibitions which need not be recited. They do not relate to imports or exports. It is important, however, to observe that each of these restrictions and prohibitions is expressly stated to refer only to persons in or resident in the United Kingdom. Then comes Part 4 of the Act which deals with imports and exports. It contains a group of three sections. Section 21 concerns restriction of imports. Section 23 concerns payments for exports. Section 22 (which is the one most relevant to this appeal) concerns restriction of exports. The material words of this section are as follows: E

“(1) The exportation from the United Kingdom of (a) any notes of a class which are . . . legal tender in the United Kingdom . . . is hereby prohibited except with the permission of the Treasury.” G

It will be observed that this section does not make contravention of the prohibition which it imposes an offence. Section 34 (1), however, states that H

“The provisions of Sch. 5 to this Act shall have effect for the purpose of the enforcement of this Act.”

Part 3 of Sch. 5 relates exclusively to Part 4 of the Act and, in the view of this court, contains the code for its enforcement. Paragraph 1 (1) of Pt. 3 before its amendment in 1952 read as follows: I

“The enactments relating to customs shall . . . apply in relation to anything prohibited to be imported or exported by any of the provisions of Part 4 of this Act except with permission of the Treasury (e.g., Bank of England notes) as they apply in relation to goods prohibited to be imported or exported by or under any of the said enactments and any reference in the said enactments to goods shall be construed as including a reference

- A to anything prohibited to be imported or exported by any of the provisions of the said Part 4 except with permission of the Treasury."

Counsel for the appellant has argued that the words "enactments relating to customs" are confined to those statutory provisions which relate to the imposition of customs duties. This court rejects that argument. It involves much

- B too strained and narrow a construction and moreover, one which is plainly contrary to the manifest intention of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5. That part was designed to make, and in the view of this court does make, the importation or exportation of anything of which the importation or exportation is prohibited or restricted in Part 4 of the Act an offence of the same kind and punishable in the same way as the illegal importation or exportation of goods. The opening words of para. 1 (1) apply to any statutory provisions prohibiting the importation or
- C exportation of goods. We have heard an interesting discussion whether the word "enactments" refers to whole statutes such as the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, or merely to such parts of any statute as relate to customs—whatever that word may mean. Much would depend on the context in which the word "enactments" or the word "customs" is used. It is, however, quite unnecessary for the purpose of this appeal to attempt any definition of the word
- D "customs" or to decide whether or not the word "enactments" in para. 1 (1) of the Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Act of 1947 refers to the whole of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, since in the view of this court the word "enactments" clearly refers to any provisions of that Act prohibiting the importation or exportation of goods. One such provision is s. 186. In so far as it is material, it reads as follows:

- E "Every person who shall import . . . any prohibited goods or any goods the importation of which is restricted contrary to such prohibition or restriction . . . shall for each such offence forfeit either treble the value of the goods including the duty payable thereon or one hundred pounds at the election of the Commissioners of Customs; and the offender may either be
- F detained or proceeded against by summons."

- That section was clearly an offence creating section. It is true that it does not expressly state that it creates an offence, but the use of the words "offence" and "offender" make it plain that any contravention of the prohibition it contains amounts to an offence. Any doubt that there might otherwise have been on this score is removed by s. 15 of the Finance Act, 1935, which reads as
- G follows:

"Where a person is convicted of an offence under s. 186 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 . . . the court may, if it thinks fit, in lieu of ordering him to pay a penalty may order him to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years."

- H Then, by s. 12 of the Finance Act, 1943, the courts were empowered to impose a prison sentence as well as the penalty for such an offence.

- Section 186 made the illegal importation of goods an offence and provided (as amended by the Finance Acts of 1935 and 1943) penalties for that offence. Paragraph 1 (1) of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Act of 1947 which applied the provisions of s. 186 to Part 4 of the Act of 1947 clearly made the importation of Bank of England notes without permission of the Treasury (as prohibited by s. 21
- I of the 1947 Act) an offence under s. 186. Unless, however, special provision had been made under Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Act of 1947, s. 186 would not have bitten on the illegal exportation of Bank of England notes because s. 186 did not itself prohibit the exportation of goods or make their illegal exportation an offence. But Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 did make special provision by para. 3, which read:

"If anything prohibited to be exported by any provision of . . . Part 4 is exported in contravention thereof . . . the exporter shall be liable to the same penalty as that to which a person is liable for an offence to which s. 186 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (which relates amongst other things to illegally importing prohibited goods) applies.” A

Accordingly, it follows that if the appellant had committed the acts complained of and had been indicted prior to the time when the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, came into force he would have been guilty of an offence by virtue of the combined effect of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 of the Act of 1947 and s. 186 of the Act of 1876. B

It will be observed that, before the 1952 Act, in order to discover whether contravention of s. 22 of the 1947 Act was made an offence and, if so, what were the penalties for such an offence, you would have to go to s. 34 of Part 6 of that Act which in turn refers you to Sch. 5 to the Act. You would then have had to search through that schedule until you arrived at Pt. 3. You would then have had to read para. 1 (1) and para. 3 of that Part very carefully, which in turn would have sent you to s. 186 of the Act of 1876 the effect of which you would have discovered had been altered by s. 15 of the Finance Act, 1935 and s. 12 of the Finance Act of 1943. Since the Act of 1952 you would have to go still further afield. This is a shockingly circuitous and obscure way of creating an offence—and one for which there is no excuse. It would have been so easy and so simple to have added a section to Part 4 of the Act of 1947 providing that a contravention of any of the prohibitions or restrictions contained in that part of the Act constituted an offence punishable by a penalty not exceeding three times the value of the things illegally imported or exported and imprisonment for two years. The machinery for enforcement, namely compulsory detention, seizure and forfeiture, etc., could have been appropriately dealt with in one of the schedules to the Act. It is a great pity that simplicity and clarity, which ought to be the chief aim of parliamentary draftsmen, is so often sacrificed, as here, to a most pernicious fetish—legislation by reference. C

The Customs and Excise Act, 1952, was an Act D

“to consolidate with amendments certain enactments relating to customs and excise and to extend certain provisions of those enactments in any other matter in relation to which the Commissioners of Customs and Excise are for the time being required in pursuance of any enactment to perform their duties.” E

Schedule 12 to that Act repealed (a) the whole of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, with certain immaterial exceptions and (b) certain parts of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Exchange Control Act, 1947, namely the words in para. 1 (1) from “as they” to “enactments” and para. 3 and para. 5. Section 44 and s. 45 of the 1952 Act deal with offences in relation to importation and s. 56 with offences in relation to exportation of prohibited or restricted goods. Subsection (2) of s. 56, so far as is material, reads: F

“Any person knowingly concerned in the exportation...or in the attempted exportation..., of any goods with intent to evade any such prohibition or restriction as aforesaid [i.e., any prohibition or restriction relating to exportation of goods] shall be liable to a penalty of three times the value of the goods or one hundred pounds, ..., or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or to both, and may be detained.” G

Returning to para. 1 (1) of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Exchange Control Act, 1947, the words “the enactments relating to customs” now refer to the provisions relating to the import and export of goods contained in the Customs and Excise Act, 1952. These provisions are in substitution for and in addition to the former provisions contained in the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876. Accordingly, the provisions in the Act of 1952 relating to the import or export of goods should be construed as including a reference to anything prohibited to be imported or exported by the provisions of Part 4 of the Act of 1947. It follows, therefore, H

A that the word "goods" in s. 56 of the Act of 1952 is deemed to include Bank of England notes for this purpose. Paragraph 3 of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Act of 1947 was repealed (1) because it was no longer necessary in as much as the provisions of the Act of 1952 expressly prohibit export whereas s. 186 of the Act of 1876, which they repealed, did not do so. Why the words in para. 1 (1) of Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 were repealed is, perhaps, not altogether plain. They may have been thought to be redundant. Certainly, in the view of this court, the reason was not to allow persons smuggling Bank of England notes out of the country to escape being prosecuted under s. 56 (2) of the Act of 1952.

Counsel for the appellant has argued that the words "the enactments relating to customs" can refer only to such enactments as were in force in 1947. This court cannot accept that argument. The Act of 1952 repealed and re-enacted with modifications most of the provisions of the Act of 1876 including s. 186. Accordingly, the references in the Act of 1947 to the provisions of the Act of 1876 must be construed, unless the contrary intention appears, as references to the provisions so re-enacted in the Act of 1952—see the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 38 (1). Certainly no contrary intention appears. The modifications to the Act of 1876 contained in the re-enactment of 1952 no doubt include additions. Modifications by way of addition are, however, within s. 38 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (Stevens v. General Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. (2)).

Finally, this court must deal with an argument based on para. 1 (1) of Pt. 2 of Sch. 5 to the Exchange Control Act, 1947, on which counsel for the appellant strongly relied. That sub-paragraph in so far as it is material, reads as follows:

E "Any person in or resident in the United Kingdom who contravenes any restriction or requirement imposed by or under this Act . . . shall be guilty of an offence punishable under this Part of this schedule. Provided that an offence punishable by virtue of Pt. 3 of this schedule shall not be punishable under this Part of this schedule."

Counsel for the appellant argues that the contravention of any restriction imposed by the Act of 1947, including the restriction contained in s. 22 against exporting Bank of England notes, is made an offence by para. 1 (1) of Pt. 2 of Sch. 5. It may be, he says, that Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 provides for the punishment, but the offence is created by Pt. 2. If this argument is correct, the appeal would succeed because clearly the appellant's smuggling activities could not then have been an offence against s. 56 (2) of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952—and that is the only offence with which he is charged. This court is satisfied for the reasons already indicated that Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Exchange Control Act, 1947, contains a complete code for the enforcement of the three sections (s. 21, s. 22 and s. 23) comprising Part 4 of the Act of 1947. Certainly para. 1 (1) of Pt. 2 of Sch. 5 is somewhat inelegantly and even clumsily drafted. But its meaning is tolerably clear. The proviso shows that an offence punishable by virtue of Pt. 3 is not punishable under Pt. 2. Offences for contravention of Part 4 of the Act of 1947 are clearly punishable under Pt. 3 of Sch. 5. This court is, therefore, of the opinion that para. 1 (1) of Pt. 2 of Sch. 5 does not cover a contravention of the provisions of Part 4 of the Act of 1947. Such a contravention cannot constitute an offence punishable under Pt. 2 since, being punishable under Pt. 3, the proviso to Pt. 2 precludes it from being an offence punishable under Pt. 2, and it is only such contraventions as are not punishable as offences under Pt. 2 that are made offences under Pt. 2. If counsel for the appellant's argument were correct, one would expect to find a full stop after the word "offence" in para. 1 (1) of Pt. 2 and the paragraph to continue "such offences shall be punishable under this part of this schedule unless punishable under Pt. 3 of this schedule".

The view that Pt. 3 of Sch. 5 to the Exchange Control Act, 1947, is concerned with the enforcement of Part 4 of the Act and Pt. 2 of Sch. 5 is concerned only

(1) The repeal was effected by the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, s. 320 and Sch. 12.

(2) [1903] 1 K.B. 890.

with the enforcement of the first three Parts of the Act of 1947 gains supports, if any further support were needed, from the opening words of para. 1 (1) of Pt. 2 "Any person in or resident in the United Kingdom who contravenes ...". As mentioned at the beginning of this judgment, the restrictions imposed by the first three Parts of the Act are expressly stated to relate exclusively to persons in or resident in the United Kingdom. For these reasons this court agrees with the conclusions reached by the learned judge and this appeal is accordingly dismissed. A
B

[HIS LORDSHIP then considered the application for leave to appeal against sentence and concluded:] This court has paid the greatest attention to all these matters which have been so persuasively urged by counsel on behalf of the applicant. When all is said and done, however, the offences to which this man pleaded guilty are very grave offences carried out on a very large scale. He must have known the risks which he was running when he agreed to smuggle and did smuggle large quantities of currency out of England. He must have known that offences of this kind are particularly grave from the public point of view, because of the injury which they do to this country's economy, affecting every man, woman and child living there. It is said that a large part of the money found its way back. That may be so. £30,000 never left the country, because he was caught. That may well be so. £68,750 of the amount that he did take out has, however, never returned. These offences were carried out over a long period and were all part of a carefully prepared and daringly executed plan. In sentencing the accused, the learned judge, after imposing the fine of £25,000, said: C
D

"This is done not only to hurt you, but as an example to others who may be attempting to do the same thing and who may well be doing the same thing, in an attempt to dissuade them." E

The learned judge imposed this sentence obviously as a deterrent sentence. It seems to the court that no one can criticise the learned judge for considering that offences of this kind ought to be deterred by the severe sentences which, in the view of this court, they richly merit. Before leaving the application, this court would like to make plain that it fully appreciates that if the learned judge had imposed a sentence of twelve months' imprisonment, it would have meant that with the time he spent in custody awaiting trial, the applicant would have to spend nineteen months in prison. That is a sentence which in the opinion of this court, in all the circumstances, could not properly have been criticised, except possibly on the ground that it was too lenient. There are no grounds for interfering with the sentence and the application for leave to appeal is dismissed. The time for paying the fine will be extended to six months from today. F
G

Appeal dismissed. Application refused.

The court certified under s. 1 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, that a point of law of general public importance was involved, viz., whether the contravention of the prohibition imposed by s. 22 of the Exchange Control Act, 1947, in relation to notes, was an offence contrary to s. 56 (2) of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952; but the court refused leave to appeal to the House of Lords. H

Solicitors: Registrar of Criminal Appeals (for the appellant); Solicitor, Customs and Excise (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] I

A

BRANDISH v. POOLE.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.), February 23, 1968.]

B

Licensing—Offence Sale of intoxicating liquor to person under eighteen years of age—Wife of holder of licence left in charge of licensed premises during his temporary absence—Sale of cider to boy of fourteen—No evidence that wife was contractually servant of, or was being paid by, or under control of licence-holder—Whether wife a servant of holder of licence for the purposes of the Licensing Act 1964 (c. 26) s. 169 (1).

C

The holder of a justices' licence left his wife in charge of the bar during his temporary absence from the premises. While he was away she sold three bottles of cider to a boy fourteen years old without asking his age. On appeal by the wife against her conviction on a charge that she, being the servant of the holder of the justices' licence, knowingly sold intoxicating liquor to a person aged fourteen contrary to s. 169 (1) of the Licensing Act 1964,

D

Held: there being no evidence that the wife was a servant, as distinct from an agent, of the holder of the licence, e.g., by being under his control by reason of any contract, she was not his "servant" within the meaning of that term in s. 169 (1), and the conviction would be quashed (see p. 32, letter H, post).
Appeal allowed.

E

[As to the offence of selling or delivering intoxicating liquor to young persons, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 676, para. 1435, and SUPPLEMENT; and for cases on this subject, see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 99, 740-743.

For the Licensing Act 1964 s. 169 (1), see 44 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 623.]

Case Stated.

F

This was a Case Stated by justices for the petty sessional division of Stratford-upon-Avon in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court sitting at Stratford-upon-Avon. On June 8, 1967, an information was laid by the respondent against the appellant that she on May 18, 1967, at Stratford-upon-Avon in the county of Warwick being the servant of the holder of a justices' licence for the Masons Arms, Stratford-upon-Avon, did knowingly sell intoxicating liquor, namely, three quart bottles of cider, to a person, Brian James O'Donnell aged fourteen years, under the age of eighteen years contrary to s. 169 of the Licensing Act 1964. The justices heard the information on June 28, 1967, and found that the appellant was the wife of the holder of a justices' licence for the Masons Arms, Stratford-upon-Avon. There was no evidence before them that the appellant was remunerated by the holder of the licence for any work which she did on the premises or that she was under the control or bound to obey the orders of the holder of the said licence. The justices found that on May 18, 1967, at Stratford-upon-Avon in the county of Warwick the appellant knowingly sold three quart bottles of cider to Brian James O'Donnell who was aged fourteen years, and was under the age of eighteen years. The boy, O'Donnell and Police Sergeant Brian Seaton, who interviewed the appellant on May 19, 1967, gave evidence before the justices. The appellant also gave evidence in the course of which she said that on the evening of May 18, 1967, her husband, who was the licensee of the Masons Arms, had gone to a football match, leaving her in complete charge of the public house. The justices found that the information had been proved and they imposed a fine of £10 on the appellant. They stated the question for the opinion of the High Court as follows: whether, in the circumstances the appellant was in the position of a servant of the licensee of the Masons Arms, Stratford-upon-Avon, within the meaning of s. 169 of the Licensing Act 1964.

G

I

J. R. Peppitt for the appellant.

I. H. Davies for the respondent.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: On the evening of May 18, 1967, Mr. Brandish, the holder of a justices' licence for the Masons Arms, Stratford-upon-Avon, was away from the premises at a football match, and he left his wife, the present appellant, in the bar. At about 7.30 p.m. a schoolboy called O'Donnell went into the Masons Arms and bought and paid for three quart bottles of cider. If he had been sixteen all would have been well, because it was cider, but he was only fourteen. That resulted in the appellant being charged that she, being the servant of the holder of a justices' licence, did knowingly sell intoxicating liquor to a person Brian O'Donnell, aged fourteen years, contrary to s. 169 of the Licensing Act 1964. I should add on the facts that when Mrs. Brandish was questioned about this she said: "I remember selling it to him. He gave me 10s.". She made no enquiries whatever as to his age. The justices came to the conclusion, and I sympathise with them, that as a matter of common sense Mrs. Brandish, the present appellant, was left in charge of the bar that evening, she was doing all that would be expected of a barmaid, and that she was the servant of the licensee. They accordingly held that she had committed the offence, and fined her £10.

I confess that accords with common sense, but one has to look at the words of the statute. Section 169 (1) provides that:

"Subject to sub-s. (4) of this section, in licensed premises the holder of the licence or his servant shall not knowingly sell intoxicating liquor to a person under eighteen . . ."

Pausing there, it might be said that "servant" is used in the perfectly general sense covering an agent; but s. 169 (1) then continues:

"... nor shall the holder of the licence knowingly allow any person to sell intoxicating liquor to a person under eighteen."

In the first instance, it is an offence by the servant, and in the latter instance it is an offence by the holder of the licence, to allow not merely his servant but any person to sell intoxicating liquor to a person under the specified age. In my judgment one thing is perfectly plain, and that is that the appellant was the agent of the holder of the licence, and it might be said that the word "servant" in s. 169 (1) is used loosely to include "agent". It is clear, however, that when "agent" is intended in this statute, it says so; s. 59, for example, and there may be other illustrations, refers to "servant or agent". Of course the words "any person" in the latter part of s. 169 (1) would cover an agent as well as a servant. Accordingly, counsel for the respondent is really forced to say, and he argued at some length, that the appellant was indeed the servant of her husband. For my part I find it quite impossible to say that there was a shred of evidence that she was in the true sense a servant as opposed to an agent. There is no suggestion that there is any contract, there is no suggestion that there was any payment. Neither of those two matters were essential to create such a relationship, but more important there was no suggestion that she was under his control by reason of any contract or relationship of servant. She was merely lending a hand in her capacity as wife. I cannot see a shred of evidence that she was a servant in the narrower sense of the word, which I think must be given to the word in this subsection. I, with some regret, would allow the appeal.

WINN, L.J.: I agree.

ASHWORTH, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed. Conviction quashed.

Solicitors: J. E. Baring & Co., agents for Geoffrey Parker & Bourne, Stratford-upon-Avon (for the appellant); Vizard, Oldham, Crowder & Cash, agents for County Prosecuting Solicitor Stratford-upon-Avon (for the respondent).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

R. v. NIXON. R. v. SAME.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (DAVIES, L.J., ROSKILL AND CUSACK, J.J.),
March 4, 1968.]

Criminal Law—Practice—Evidence—Retirement of jury—Further evidence—Charge of driving whilst disqualified—Jury, after retirement, inspecting car with consent and at wish of defence—No miscarriage of justice.

B

The appellant Mr. N. was charged with driving whilst disqualified and the appellant Mrs. N., his wife, with aiding and abetting him in driving whilst disqualified. Evidence of police officers was that they had seen Mr. N. driving the car with Mrs. N. as a passenger in the front seat, but that, when the car had stopped and one of the officers walked back to it, he saw a movement going on in the front seat and, when he arrived at the car, Mrs. N. was in the driving seat and Mr. N. was in the passenger seat. The appellants denied that Mr. N. had been driving, saying that the car was quite small, that Mr. N. was heavily built and that Mrs. N. was pregnant at the time. In his closing speech, counsel then appearing for the appellants invited the jury to see the car. Shortly after the jury had retired, they asked if they could see the car, and counsel for the appellants renewed his request that they should do so. The jury inspected the car and, after returning for a short time, found the appellants guilty of the offences charged. On appeal against conviction,

C

D

Held: despite the breach of strict rule that no evidence of any kind might be admitted after the jury had retired to consider their verdict, there had been no miscarriage of justice since the irregularity had taken place with the express consent and at the express wish of the defence (see p. 35, letter H, and p. 36, letter A, post).

E

R. v. Lawrence ([1968] 1 All E.R. 579) distinguished.

Appeals dismissed.

F

[As to retirement of jury to consider their verdict, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 427, 428, para. 789.]

Cases referred to:

R. v. Gearing, [1968] 1 All E.R. 581, n.; [1968] 1 W.L.R. 344, n.; (1965), 50 Cr. App. Rep. 18; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 169, 3561b.

R. v. Lawrence, [1968] 1 All E.R. 579; [1968] 1 W.L.R. 341.

G

R. v. Sanderson, [1953] 1 All E.R. 485; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 392; 117 J.P. 173; 37 Cr. App. Rep. 32; 14 Digest (Repl.) 321, 3110.

Appeals and application.

These were appeals by the appellants, Stanley Leslie Nixon and Anne Nixon, his wife, against their convictions at Worcester quarter sessions on Nov. 23, 1967, before the deputy chairman (J. F. EVANS, Esq.) and a jury, Stanley Nixon of driving whilst disqualified and Anne Nixon of aiding and abetting him in the commission of that offence. Stanley Nixon was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and disqualified for 2½ years and his licence was endorsed. Anne Nixon also applied for extension of time for leave to appeal against her sentence to a fine of £20, disqualification for twelve months and endorsement of her licence. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court.

I

D. T. Hallchurch for the appellants.*

J. T. C. Lee for the Crown.*

DAVIES, L.J., delivered the following judgment of the court: These are appeals by leave of the single judge on a point of law. Leave was not really necessary in our view. It is a curious case and raises a point that has very recently been before this court. The appellant Stanley Leslie Nixon had been disqualified from driving a motor car for six months on Apr. 20, 1967, by the Gloucestershire magistrates. On July 1, 1967, early in the morning, at 3 a.m., two police officers, according to their evidence, saw a Vauxhall Viva motor car being driven by Mr. Nixon with the appellant Anne Nixon as a passenger in the front seat. They followed the car and eventually overtook it and signalled it to stop. One of the police officers walked back to the Vauxhall motor car and, according to him, he saw a movement going on in the front seat. He could not say precisely what movement it was. When he arrived at the motor car Mrs. Nixon was in the driving seat and Mr. Nixon was in the passenger seat. They both denied that Mr. Nixon had been driving; they said that Mrs. Nixon had been driving all the time. That was the question for the jury. The question whether or not they had changed places was put very clearly by the learned deputy chairman. They said that they had not, and the police said that they must have done. The account of the matter given by the appellants was supported by the argument which I will put in the words of the learned deputy chairman at the end of his summing-up:

* Counsel appearing on the appeal did not appear for the appellants or the prosecution at the trial.

"The next point on which [counsel for the accused (1)] places considerable reliance is this. He says that, in a Vauxhall Viva, quite a small motor car, with a transmission tunnel on which the gear lever is placed, with a fairly heavily built Mr. Nixon and with Mrs. Nixon, who though today of slight build and appearance was at the time seven or eight months pregnant, it would have been a very difficult manoeuvre to accomplish this change of seat in a few seconds. You have to consider what weight you can give to that. No doubt the prosecution would say to that, if required to put their submissions in a sentence, necessity is the mother of invention."

The jury retired at 2.50 p.m. They came back a quarter of an hour later, and this conversation took place:

"The deputy chairman: 'Members of the jury, have you a foreman?' Foreman of the jury: 'Yes, sir.' The deputy chairman: 'I understand that there is something you would like to see or a question you would like to ask, or something.' Foreman of the jury: 'I understand we were told when we were in here if we wished to see a Vauxhall Viva of the type under discussion we could do this. We would now like to, please, sir.' The deputy chairman [to counsel]: 'I suppose strictly as no application was made to take the jury to see it during the evidence in strictness the opportunity might be said to have passed, but I do not think one ought to be bound by any rule of that kind, do you?' Counsel: 'I do not, sir, as I made the suggestion to the jury.'"

Indeed, counsel for the appellants (1) had invited the jury to see the motor car during the course of his closing speech, as the learned deputy chairman pointed out.

"The deputy chairman: 'Quite. You invited them to do it in your closing speech.' Counsel: 'Indeed.' The deputy chairman: 'I think it is so very soon after the jury's retirement I cannot see any reason why they should not now go and see the car.' Counsel: 'Indeed, sir.' The deputy chairman: 'Would you like them to?' Counsel: 'Indeed, sir.'"

Then there was a discussion as to where the car would be and a decision to move it to the car park of the Shire Hall. The jurors went out, I gather in the presence of the jury bailiffs; then they went back to their room and in another quarter of an hour they came back and found Mr. Nixon guilty of driving while disqualified and Mrs. Nixon guilty of aiding and abetting him. He was then sentenced to six months' imprisonment, having a very bad record for this sort

(1) I.e., counsel appearing for Mr. and Mrs. Nixon at the trial.

A of offence, disqualified for two years and his licence was endorsed. She was fined £20, disqualified for twelve months and her licence was endorsed. Mrs. Nixon applies for an extension of time in which to appeal against that sentence, but her counsel in this court concedes that, if the conviction is sustained, there is nothing that he can usefully say about her sentence.

B As I have said, this point as to jurors after they have retired seeing a motor vehicle that forms part of the case was discussed in this court very recently in R. v. Lawrence (2), and there the court took the view that the strict rule that no evidence of any kind may be admitted after the end of the summing-up, still less after the jury have retired, must be enforced. The court in that case found themselves unable to apply the proviso (3). They followed an earlier decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Gearing (4), in the course of which C LORD PARKER, C.J., said:

“It has always been a very strict rule of this court that no evidence whatever must be introduced after the jury have retired”,

D and he referred to an earlier case (5). That principle was emphasised in R. v. Lawrence (2). Counsel for the Crown has called our attention to a somewhat different case, R. v. Sanderson (6). That was different in this sense. A defence witness arrived late but just before the end of the summing-up. The summing-up ended and the defence applied for leave to call the witness. The witness was called, but after that there was a supplemental summing-up by the recorder, and the court took the view that there was nothing wrong with that, though it was exceptional and unusual and perhaps undesirable; but that did not invalidate the conviction.

E In the present case, it has been submitted to us by counsel for the Crown that we should distinguish the facts of this case from those in the earlier authorities, and he has asked us to apply the proviso. As I understand his argument, he would like to contend that there was not a breach of the rule; but, if there was a breach of the rule, he submits that there was no miscarriage of justice. We have F anxiously considered this case, but we have come to the conclusion that that latter contention is correct. The defence here during their final speech asked the jury to look at the car. There was no difficulty over identification of the car in the present case, unlike that of R. v. Lawrence (2), for, as was rightly pointed out by counsel for the Crown, the registration number of this particular Vauxhall motor car appeared in the indictment against Mr. Nixon. It was G alleged that he was driving a Vauxhall Viva motor car having the registered number SN 18. So the jury could not have been mistaken as to that. I think that we were told also by counsel that the registration book was in evidence.

H It was a simple and short issue. All the matters were put to the jury by the learned deputy chairman. When the jury came back with their request, as appears from the passage in the transcript which I have read, the deputy chairman asked counsel for the defence more than once what he wanted done, and I counsel made it abundantly clear that, even at that stage, at that improper stage strictly in law, he wished the jury to see the car. Therefore, this irregularity—for irregularity it was—took place with the express consent and at the express wish of the defence. There again this case is different from R. v. Lawrence (2), since in R. v. Lawrence (2), although the defence did not object to the jury seeing the car after they had retired, counsel for the defence said (7) in effect to the I commissioner “I don’t mind them seeing it, I think it might help me; but if you do let them see it, I am quite certain that the Court of Appeal will quash

(2) [1968] 1 All E.R. 579.

(3) I.e., the proviso to s. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, as amended by the Criminal Appeal Act 1966, s. 4 (1) (c), s. 10 (2) and Sch. 3.

(4) [1968] 1 All E.R. 581, n.

(5) I.e., R. v. Wilson, (1957), 41 Cr. App. Rep. 226.

(6) [1953] 1 All E.R. 485.

(7) [1968] 1 All E.R. at p. 580.

the conviction", which, in fact, it did. This case is entirely different from that. The evidence of the police officers was clear, if the jury accepted it, as they obviously did, that it was Mr. Nixon who was driving the car when they first saw it. In the opinion of this court, there was no miscarriage of justice here at all. Therefore, despite the breach of this rule, which normally is a very strict rule, the court dismisses the appeals. Mrs. Nixon's application for an extension of time in which to appeal against her sentence, has not been pursued by counsel. In those circumstances, both appeals against conviction and Mrs. Nixon's application for an extension of time are dismissed.

Appeals and application dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar of Criminal Appeals (for the appellants); Tree, Hemming & Johnston, Worcester (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

THE ASTLEY INDUSTRIAL TRUST, LTD. v. MILLER (OAKES, Third Party).

[LIVERPOOL ASSIZES (CHAPMAN, J.), May 24, 1967*.]

Agent—Mercantile agent—Possession of goods—Power of mercantile agent to transfer title dependent on possession being given to him as mercantile agent—Motor car—Company operating mainly self-drive hire business but selling second-hand cars as ancillary business—New car released to company by motor distributors, as addition to self-drive hire fleet—Sale of new car to customer—Hire-purchase agreement by company with finance house after sale of car—Whether title to car passed on sale by company to customer—Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 2 (1).

On Nov. 25, 1960, a Vauxhall motor car was consigned by the makers to L., Ltd., a firm of motor distributors, who were recorded as the first owners in the car's registration book, issued on Dec. 2, 1960, the order being given because D., Ltd., who in the main ran a self-drive hire business but who sold second-hand cars as an ancillary, had asked for a car of that particular kind. D., Ltd. wishing to buy the car on hire-purchase, the plaintiffs, a finance company, were approached. On Dec. 2, 1960, the car was released by L., Ltd. to D., Ltd. on the basis of its being an addition to their fleet of self-drive cars. The defendant had some two weeks previously asked D., Ltd. for a car of the same description. Delivery of this car was tendered to him by D., Ltd. on Dec. 2, 1960, but the defendant did not accept and pay for it until Dec. 3, 1960. He received the tax disc and registration book from D., Ltd. on Dec. 6, 1960, effected insurance as from Dec. 7, 1960, and the first change of ownership of the car into his name was registered on Dec. 9, 1960. On Dec. 9, 1960, a hire-purchase agreement was signed on behalf of D., Ltd. and witnessed by L., Ltd. On the same date a delivery receipt was signed by D., Ltd. and a dealers' invoice by L., Ltd. in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs received L., Ltd.'s cheque for the car on Jan. 4, 1961, on which date they founded their title to the car. D., Ltd. defaulted in their hire-purchase payments to the plaintiffs; and, as the car was found in the defendant's possession in 1962, the plaintiffs claimed against him for detainee, alternatively for conversion, of the car. By s. 2 (1)† of the Factors Act, 1889, where a mercantile agent was, with the consent of the owner, in possession of the goods, any sale of the goods made by him when acting in the ordinary course of his business as a mercantile agent, would be as valid

* The hearing was at Manchester Assizes on Apr. 17, 18 and 19, 1967.

† Section 2 (1) is set out at p. 39, letter G, post.

A as if he were expressly authorised by the owner of the goods to make the same.

Held: (i) the statutory power of a mercantile agent to pass title, which was conferred on a mercantile agent by s. 2 (1) of the Factors Act, 1889, applied only where he had possession in his capacity as a mercantile agent and on the true owner having consented to his having possession in that capacity; on the facts, D., Ltd. did not have possession of the car in their capacity as mercantile agents, nor did L., Ltd., the true owners, consent to D., Ltd.'s having possession in that capacity and, therefore, D., Ltd. had no power to pass title to the defendant (see p. 42, letter D, post).

Dicta of CHANNELL, J., in Oppenheimer v. Frazer and Wyatt ([1907] 1 K.B. at p. 527), of MACKINNON, J., in Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd. ([1934] All E.R. Rep. at p. 324); of DENNING, L.J., in Pearson v. Rose & Young, Ltd. (Little, Third Party, Marshall, Fourth Party) ([1950] 2 All E.R. at p. 1033) and of WILLMER, L.J., in Stadium Finance, Ltd. v. Robbins (or Robins) ([1962] 2 All E.R. at p. 638) applied.

Pacific Motor Auctions Pty., Ltd. v. Motor Credits (Hire Finance), Ltd. ([1965] 2 All E.R. 105) explained.

(ii) accordingly, the claim being pleaded primarily in detinue, the defendant must return the car to the plaintiffs, or alternatively pay its present value of £165, plus damages of £75 for detention of vehicle (calculated at the rate of 7½ per cent. for 2½ years and being based on the charges obtainable had a new hire-purchase transaction been effected in 1962 on the car if returned at that time), plus damages of £125 in respect of depreciation over the same period (see p. 45, letters D and G, post).

Per CURIAM: the fact that the log book was not received by the defendant on Dec. 6, 1960, did not take the disposal of the car by D., Ltd. to the defendant outside s. 2 (1) of the Factors Act, 1889, as being a transaction that was not in the ordinary course of business of D., Ltd. as mercantile agents, having regard to the circumstances that this car was a new car and that the log book was with the registration authority in order that the car should be registered and taxed (see p. 44, letters B and D, post).

[As to goods the subject of disposition by mercantile agents in the ordinary course of business, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 214, 215, para. 488; and for cases on the subject, see 1 DIGEST (Repl.) 383-389, 491-524, 392, 393, 539-544.

As to the measure of damages in actions of detinue, see 38 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 791, 792, para. 1317; and for cases on the subject, see 46 DIGEST (Repl.) 515, 605, 524, 672-679.

For the Factors Act, 1889, s. 2, see 1 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 30.]

Cases referred to:

Belsize Motor Supply Co. v. Cox, [1911-13] All E.R. Rep. 1084; [1914] 1 K.B. 244; 83 L.J.K.B. 261; 110 L.T. 151; 26 Digest (Repl.) 660, 16.

Central Newbury Car Auctions, Ltd. v. Unity Finance, Ltd., [1956] 3 All E.R. 905; [1957] 1 Q.B. 371; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 1068; 21 Digest (Repl.) 484, 1713.

Eastern Distributors, Ltd. v. Gobring (Murphy, Third Party), [1957] 2 All E.R. 525; [1957] 2 Q.B. 600; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 237 26 Digest (Repl.) 675, 77.

Edwards (Percy), Ltd. v. Vaughan, (1910), 26 T.L.R. 545; 39 Digest (Repl.) 624, 1358.

General and Finance Facilities, Ltd. v. Cooks Cars (Romford), Ltd., [1963] 2 All E.R. 314; [1963] 1 W.L.R. 644; 46 Digest (Repl.) 524, 678.

Helby v. Matthews, [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 821; [1895] A.C. 471; 64 L.J.Q.B. 465; 72 L.T. 841; 60 J.P. 20; 26 Digest (Repl.) 660, 14.

Oppenheimer v. Frazer and Wyatt, [1907] 1 K.B. 519; 76 L.J.K.B. 276; reversd. C.A., [1904-07] All E.R. Rep. 143; [1907] 2 K.B. 50; 76 L.J.K.B. 806; 97 L.T. 3; 1 Digest (Repl.) 390, 530.

- Pacific Motor Auctions, Pty., Ltd. v. Motor Credits (Hire Finance), Ltd.*, [1965] 2 All E.R. 105; [1965] A.C. 867; [1965] 2 W.L.R. 881; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 634, 1582a. A
- Pearson v. Rose & Young, Ltd. (Little, Third Party, Marshall, Fourth Party)*, [1950] 2 All E.R. 1027; [1951] 1 K.B. 275; 1 Digest (Repl.) 387, 520.
- Rosenthal v. Alderton & Sons, Ltd.*, [1946] 1 All E.R. 583; [1946] 1 K.B. 374; 115 L.J.K.B. 215; 174 L.T. 214; 46 Digest (Repl.) 515, 605. B
- Stadium Finance, Ltd. v. Robbins (or Robins)*, [1962] 2 All E.R. 633; [1962] 2 Q.B. 664; [1962] 3 W.L.R. 453; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 7, 509a.
- Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd.*, [1934] All E.R. Rep. 322; [1934] 2 K.B. 305; 103 L.J.K.B. 613; 151 L.T. 396; 39 Digest (Repl.) 655, 1580.
- Wickham Holdings, Ltd. v. Brooke House Motors, Ltd.*, [1967] 1 All E.R. 117; [1967] 1 W.L.R. 295. C

Action.

This was a claim by the plaintiffs, The Astley Industrial Trust, Ltd., against the defendant, Ernest Miller, for detainee or, alternatively, for conversion of a motor car. The following facts are taken from the judgment. On Nov. 25, 1960, a Vauxhall Victor Super Saloon car, was consigned on sale or return terms to Lomas Bros. (Motors), Ltd. (hereafter called "Lomas") of Glossop, Derbyshire, who were the main distributors of Vauxhall's in that part of Derbyshire. The order was given because a car of that particular kind had been asked for by John Oakes who, with his brother, Stanley Oakes, were the third parties in the proceedings; and they and one Davenport, were directors of Droylsden Self-Drive Service Station, Ltd. (hereinafter called "Droylsden") of Droylsden, which carried on a business that in the main was a self-drive hire business but included selling second-hand cars as an ancillary activity. Mr. John Oakes died before the hearing. On Dec. 2, 1960, the registration book for the car was issued by the Derbyshire County Council to Lomas, that company being recorded as the first owners, which pursuant to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 18, r. 4 (a), operated (so His Lordship CHAPMAN, J., found) to transfer the title in the car from Vauxhall to Lomas. Droylsden wished to buy the car on hire-purchase: accordingly the plaintiffs were approached as the finance house to back the hire-purchase transaction. On Dec. 9, 1960, a hire-purchase agreement was signed by Mr. Davenport and Mr. John Oakes on behalf of Droylsden and witnessed by a Mr. Price for Lomas. On the same date the delivery receipt was signed by Droylsden in favour of the plaintiffs, and the dealers' (viz. Lomas') invoice in favour of the plaintiffs was also signed on that date. The plaintiffs received Lomas' cheque on Jan. 4, 1961, on which date they founded their title to the car. The trial judge found that the car was released by Lomas to Droylsden on Dec. 2, 1960, on the basis of its being an addition to their fleet of self-drive cars which was to be covered in due course by hire-purchase arrangements. D

Some two weeks prior to Dec. 2, 1960, the defendant had a discussion with Mr. Stanley Oakes about buying a new Vauxhall car. On Dec. 2, 1960, delivery of the car in question was tendered to the defendant by Droylsden, but he did not accept and pay for it until Dec. 3, 1960. He received the tax disc and the log book from Droylsden on or about Dec. 6, 1960, effected insurance as from Dec. 7, 1960, and the first change of ownership of the car into the defendant's name was registered on Dec. 9, 1960. F

Droylsden defaulted in their hire-purchase payments to the plaintiffs and in August, 1961, their cheque (for £199 8s. 4d.) was dishonoured on presentation, leaving a balance outstanding on the hire-purchase account of £499 10s. 10d. The car was found to be in the defendant's possession, and a demand for its delivery up to the plaintiffs was made on May 1, 1962. The defendant refused to comply with that demand unless ordered to do so by the court. G

A The cases noted below* were cited during the argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment.

J. M. Lever for the plaintiffs.

J. Jaffe for the defendant.

The third party, Mr. Stanley Oakes, appeared in person.

Cur. adv. vult.

B

May 24. CHAPMAN, J., stated the facts, and continued: It is plain from the facts as I have found them above that the plaintiffs acquired title to the car by the relevant hire-purchase documents executed by Lomas, unless by the date of these documents title had already passed to the defendant. On the other hand, the defendant must base his claim to title on there being title in or conferred by Droylsden. He never had any contractual relationship with Vauxhall's or with Lomas; Droylsden and Droylsden alone, are the source from which he must derive his title. Reliance has to some extent been placed by counsel for the defendant on s. 21 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, which covers the case, in the concluding words, where "the owner of goods is by his conduct precluded from denying the seller's authority to sell". The owners at the material time were Lomas and the sellers Droylsden. Were Lomas precluded by their conduct from denying the authority of Droylsden to sell? There is direct authority for the proposition that, merely by handing a car with a log book to a person, an owner does not preclude himself from denying that that person had authority to sell (Central Newbury Car Auctions, Ltd. v. Unity Finance, Ltd. (1); see also GOODE ON HIRE-PURCHASE LAW, p. 273, GUEST ON LAW OF HIRE-PURCHASE, para. 729), and there is here nothing else on which an estoppel can be founded. There is no sort of representation by words or conduct from Lomas to the defendant at all. Indeed, they were not in contact at all and had not even heard of each other. Nor, again, can any reliance be placed on s. 25 (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, reproducing s. 9 of the Factors Act, 1889, and dealing with a "buyer" who, with the consent of the seller, is in possession of the goods before paying for them, because Droylsden were not "buyers" within the meaning of that provision (see Percy Edwards, Ltd. v. Vaughan (2), Helby v. Matthews (3), and Belsize Motor Supply Co. v. Cox (4)).

C

D

E

F

The main plank on which the defendant has relied is s. 2 (1) of the Factors Act, 1889, which provides that:

G

"Where a mercantile agent is, with the consent of the owner, in possession of goods . . . any sale, pledge, or other disposition of the goods, made by him when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent, shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be as valid as if he were expressly authorised by the owner of the goods to make the same . . ."

subject to a proviso as to the good faith, etc., of the recipient, as to which there is here no question. It is to be noted that this provision is founded on three express primary conditions of a basic character, namely: (a) the goods must be in the possession of someone who is not the true owner; (b) that possession must be with the consent of the true owner; (c) the person who has this possession must be a person who fulfils the requirements of being "a mercantile agent". A mercantile agent is defined by s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1889 as being

H

"a mercantile agent having in the customary course of his business as such agent authority either to sell goods or to consign goods for the purpose of sale, or to buy goods, or to raise money on the security of goods."

I

* Sachs v. Miklos, [1948] 1 All E.R. 67; [1948] 2 K.B. 23; Strand Electric & Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Brisford Entertainments, Ltd., [1952] 1 All E.R. 796; [1952] 2 Q.B. 246.

(1) [1956] 3 All E.R. 905; [1957] 1 Q.B. 371.

(2) [1910], 26 T.L.R. 545.

(3) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 821; [1895] A.C. 471.

(4) [1911-13] All E.R. Rep. 1084; [1914] 1 K.B. 244.

So far as these conditions are concerned, it is plain on the facts as I have found them: (a) that at the material time the car in question was in the possession of Droylsden, who were not then the true owners; (b) that this possession by Droylsden was with the consent of the true owner, Lomas; (c) that Droylsden were persons who were, albeit as a sideline and as a subsidiary to their main business of hire car operators, trading as motor dealers in the sense that they bought and sold cars, at any rate on the second-hand market. A

Counsel for the defendant has contended that, if these three conditions are satisfied, the situation is that a person who is in fact a mercantile agent, and who has in fact possession of someone else's property with the consent of that someone else, is clothed with ostensible or apparent authority to make any sale, pledge or other disposition of it which may appeal to his lust for pecuniary gain or his urge to perpetrate a fraud. Counsel for the plaintiffs, on the other hand, has contended that there is inherent in the statutory language a fourth condition, namely, that the goods must have been entrusted by the true owner or with his permission to the mercantile agent in his capacity as a mercantile agent; unless this is so, there is, he contends, no basis for saying that the true owner has clothed the mercantile agent with authority to act in that capacity. Counsel for the defendant has disputed this interpretation of the statute on the basis that it involves reading into the statute words which are not there. B C D

Of course, one must always construe the words of an Act of Parliament strictly; that is, with precision. This is particularly true when questions of title are concerned and especially when the title is that of a completely honest, respectable and blameless person. The meaning of words, however, does not always end at the minimal dictionary content of each word taken as a separate entity, and this is as true of words in a section of an Act of Parliament as of words in a passage of verse or poetry. Counsel for the defendant's construction would, for example, lead to this result: if I take my car into the local garage to have a puncture repaired, or to be greased, or to have a general check-up before going on holiday, I would be at the risk of the garage not only purporting to sell it, but actually passing good title if, besides carrying out repairs and servicing for customers, they professed the business of buying and selling motor cars (whether second-hand or new). This would seem a startling conclusion. Or to go further to extremes: if my next-door neighbour (being in fact a motor dealer) came to me and said, "My car has to go into dock for a fortnight. You are going on a cruise for your holidays. Would you, as a friend, lend me your car while you are away?" If, as one neighbour to another, I yielded to his importunity, I would, according to counsel's argument, be at risk of losing my car, merely because he happened to be a motor dealer, if he decided to flog it to some fly-by-night. At such a conclusion one's commonsense revolts. E F G

The authorities seem to be all one way on this point, namely, in favour of counsel for the plaintiff's argument and against counsel for the defendant. In Oppenheimer v. Frazer and Wyatt (5) CHANNELL, J., said: H

"It seems to me that the true rule is that where there is a consent of the owner of the goods to the possession of the goods by the mercantile agent as a mercantile agent and that is the important part of the matter that then the section applies, provided the other conditions are fulfilled . . ."

In Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd. (6), MACKINNON, J., adopted that statement by CHANNELL, J., and contended: I

"I observe that SIR MACKENZIE CHALMERS, the learned draftsman of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, in his comment on this section [s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1889], makes the same suggestion and illustrates it by what seems to me to be a very forcible example: 'Suppose a house were let furnished to a man who happened to be an auctioneer. Could he sell the furniture by auction

(5) [1907] 1 K.B. 519 at p. 527.

(6) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 322 at p. 324; [1934] 2 K.B. 305 at p. 313.

A and give a good title to the buyers? Surely not: " (CHALMERS SALE OF GOODS ACT, 1893 (11th Edn.), p. 176). That, of course, is an extreme case, but I think, the same principle applies here. Because one happens to entrust his goods to a man who is in other respects a mercantile agent, but with whom he is dealing, not as a mercantile agent, but in a different capacity. I do not think that it is open to a third party who buys the goods from that man
 B to say that they were in his possession as a mercantile agent and that, therefore, he had power to sell them to a purchaser and so give a good title to them. The claimant must be able to assert not only that the goods were in the man's possession as a mercantile agent, but also that they were entrusted by the owner to him as a mercantile agent. As CHANNELL, J., said, it is the consent of the owner of the goods to the possession of them by C the mercantile agent as a mercantile agent that is the important part of the matter."

In Pearson v. Rose & Young, Ltd. (Little, Third Party, Marshall, Fourth Party) (7), DENNING, L.J., said:

D " (iii) If the true owner consents to the mercantile agent having the goods for repair but not for sale, is that a consent which enables the Factors Act to operate? The answer would seem at first sight to be ' Yes,' because it is undoubtedly a consent to the agent having possession, but this needs testing. Suppose, for instance, that the owner of furniture leaves it with a repairer for repair and that the repairer happens to be a dealer as well.
 Does that mean that the repairer can deprive the true owner of his goods E by selling them to a buyer? Clearly not, if the owner did not know the repairer to be a dealer, and, even if he did, why should that incidental knowledge deprive the true owner of his goods? Such considerations have led the courts to the conclusion that the consent, which is to enable the Factors Act to operate, must be a consent to the possession of the goods by a mercantile agent as a mercantile agent: see per CHANNELL, J., in F Oppenheimer v. Frazer and Wyatt (8), and per MACKINNON, J., in Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd. (9). That means that the owner must consent to the agent having them for a purpose which is in some way or another connected with his business as a mercantile agent. It may not actually be for sale. It may be for display or to get offers, or merely to put in his showroom, but there must be a consent to something of that kind before the owner can be deprived of his goods."

G This statement was accepted by WILLMER, L.J., in Stadium Finance, Ltd. v.
Robbins (or Robins) (10):

H " To come within the section, Palmer's possession of the car must be possession with the consent of the defendant in his capacity as mercantile agent—i.e., as one clothed with apparent authority to sell. In saying this, I adopt the view expressed by DENNING, L.J., in Pearson v. Rose &
Young, Ltd. (11)."

I Counsel for the defendant has contended that this formidable body of authority has all been swept away by Pacific Motor Auctions Pty., Ltd. v. Motor Credits (Hire Finance), Ltd. (12). That case dealt with s. 28 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1923-1953, of New South Wales, which covers cases where a person, having sold goods, continues in possession of the goods. That is the equivalent of
 s. 25 (1) of our Sale of Goods Act, 1893. The Privy Council, in a judgment delivered by LORD PEARCE, held that the continuity of possession required by the section

(7) [1950] 2 All E.R. 1027 at p. 1032; [1951] 1 K.B. 275 at p. 288.

(8) [1907] 1 K.B. at p. 527.

(9) [1934] All E.R. Rep. at p. 324; [1934] 2 K.B. at p. 313.

(10) [1962] 2 All E.R. 633 at p. 638; [1962] 2 Q.B. 664 at p. 674.

(11) [1950] 2 All E.R. at p. 1032; [1951] 1 K.B. at p. 288.

(12) [1965] 2 All E.R. 105; [1965] A.C. 867.

was continuity of a physical possession, and that it did not matter if, by a private transaction, there was a change in the legal nature of the possession, e.g., from possession of a seller, paid or unpaid, to possession of a bailee under a hire-purchase agreement. In so holding, the Privy Council expressly dissented from the view expressed by MACKINNON, J., in Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd. (13) (and followed without discussion by the Court of Appeal in Eastern Distributors, Ltd. v. Goldring (Murphy, Third Party) (14)). But this view of MACKINNON, J., as to the effect of s. 25 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, is entirely separate and distinct from the view expressed by the same judge in the same case on the effect of s. 2 (1) of the Factors Act, 1889. On the Sale of Goods Act point, the learned judge has been overruled, but I find nothing in the Pacific Motor Auctions case (15) to suggest that the learned judge's point of view on the Factors Act point has been in any way eroded. To achieve that, it would have been necessary to say, not merely that MACKINNON, J., was wrong, but also that CHANNELL, J., DENNING, L.J., and WILLMER, L.J. were all wrong—and there is no hint of that at all.

Accordingly, I take it to be well settled and unchallenged law that the statutory power to pass title which is vested in a mercantile agent depends on his having possession in his capacity as a mercantile agent and on the true owner having consented to his having possession in that capacity. In the present case, on the facts as I have found them, Droylsden did not have possession of the Vauxhall in their capacity as mercantile agents, nor did Lomas consent to their having possession in that capacity. Droylsden, therefore, had no power to pass title to anybody.

A further impediment to the defendant's claim to title is suggested by counsel for the plaintiffs. Founding himself on the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Pearson v. Rose & Young, Ltd. (16), and Stadium Finance, Ltd. v. Robbins (or Robins) (17), he argues that the sale of the car by Droylsden to the defendant was not a sale made in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent because, at the time, the car was minus its registration book. Counsel for the defendant urges, first, that these authorities deal only with second-hand cars and are not applicable to a new car in mint condition straight from the manufacturers; secondly, that the absence of the log book at the time a car is delivered does not matter if there is a satisfactory explanation for its absence and the deficiency is in fact later made good. It is to be observed that, in Pearson's case (16), the foundation of the Court of Appeal's decision was that the mercantile agent's possession of the registration book was without the consent of the true owner. There are in fact indications of some confusion between two rather different things, namely, the nature of the possession originally acquired (that is, whether or not it is possession acquired with authority to sell) and the nature of the sale which has been effected (that is, is it such a sale as complies with the ordinary routine of business?). The two do not necessarily correspond. A person's authority (actual, implied, apparent or ostensible) would depend on the circumstances in which he obtained possession; but the ordinary course of business of a vendor does not depend in any sense on the circumstances in which he acquired possession. This confusion appears particularly where SOMERVILLE, L.J., said (18),

"The ostensible authority which enabled Mr. Hunt to effect a sale 'in the ordinary course of business' arose because of his possession of the log book without the consent of the owner."

(13) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 322; [1934] 2 K.B. 305.

(14) [1957] 2 All E.R. 525; [1957] 2 Q.B. 600.

(15) [1965] 2 All E.R. 105; [1965] A.C. 867.

(16) [1950] 2 All E.R. 1027; [1951] 1 K.B. 275.

(17) [1962] 2 All E.R. 633; [1962] 2 Q.B. 664.

(18) [1950] 2 All E.R. at p. 1029; [1951] 1 K.B. at p. 284.

A He had, however, previously stressed (19):

“It is, I think, clear that on the sale of a second-hand car the vendor will ordinarily deliver and the purchaser require the delivery of the registration, or ‘log’, book.”

Again, DENNING, L.J., said this (20):

B “When the significance of the log book is realised, it becomes plain that the consent of the owner, which is necessary for the Factors Act, to operate, is a consent to the possession by the mercantile agent, not only of the car, but also of the log book that goes with it. So long as the owner retains the log book, the mercantile agent cannot dispose of the car in the ordinary course of his business, because it is not in the ordinary course of anyone’s business to dispose of a second-hand car without a log book. The retention by the owner of the log book therefore, effectually prevents the Factors Act from operating. The handing over of the log book with the car enables the Act to operate. The owner then clothes the agent with apparent authority to dispose of the car, and the agent is enabled to dispose of it in the ordinary course of his business, and the Factors Act operates to give a good title to an innocent purchaser. To put it shortly, in the case of a car, ‘goods’ in the Act means the car together with the log book.”

This closing sentence as a synthesis summarising the principle is expressly refuted by ORMEROD and DANCKWERTS, L.J.J., in the Stadium Finance case (21).

Similarly, in the Stadium Finance case (22), ORMEROD, L.J., said: “I do not accept the submission that the registration book was put in Palmer’s possession with the consent of the defendant.” WILLMER, L.J., said (23):

E “On the learned judge’s finding, I do not think that Palmer can be said to have been in possession of the registration book with the consent of the defendant.”

DANCKWERTS, L.J., said (24): “But the mercantile agent, Palmer, did not come into possession of the registration book with the consent of the owner.”

F In the present case, the registration book was with the Derbyshire County Council at Matlock for the purpose of the crucial first registration by Lomas on Friday, Dec. 2, 1960; but the car on that date turned up at the defendant’s premises when Droylsden tendered delivery of it. The defendant did not take delivery of the car until noon on Saturday, Dec. 3, 1960, and the explanation given to him for the absence of the registration book on that date was the true one: that it was with the taxing authority for the purpose of the car being taxed. The defendant received the registration book plus the taxation disc by about Tuesday, Dec. 6, 1960, from Droylsden; this would fit in with those documents having arrived at Lomas’ from the County Council on about Monday, Dec. 5, and having been received by Droylsden from Lomas on that day, or the Tuesday. Is there any reason to suppose that Droylsden got their hands on the registration book without Lomas’ consent? Of course, it is possible that Droylsden took the car by some trick without Lomas knowing anything about it and then subsequently succeeded in stealing the registration book and tax disc, but it is certainly more likely that the car was released prematurely but willingly by Lomas and the registration book was later, when received back from the county council, voluntarily handed over by Lomas to Droylsden so as to join the car to which it belonged.

I If that was the course of events, as I find that it was, so far as the acquisition of the car and the registration book by Droylsden was concerned, both being

(19) [1950] 2 All E.R. at p. 1029; [1951] 1 K.B. at p. 283.

(20) [1950] 2 All E.R. at p. 1033; [1951] 1 K.B. at p. 289.

(21) [1962] 2 All E.R. at pp. 636, 639; [1962] 2 Q.B. at pp. 670, 671, 676.

(22) [1962] 2 All E.R. at p. 636; [1962] 2 Q.B. at p. 671.

(23) [1962] 2 All E.R. at p. 637; [1962] 2 Q.B. at p. 673.

(24) [1962] 2 All E.R. at p. 640; [1962] 2 Q.B. at p. 676.

received albeit on different dates with the consent of the owners, was the disposal of the car and the registration book by Droylsden vitiated as being outside the ordinary course of business by the fact that a few days intervened between the handing over of the car and the handing over of the registration book? In the case of a new car, coupled with the explanation (in fact, a true one) that the registration book was with the county council for the purpose of getting the car registered and taxed, I should not myself be disposed so to hold, and I do not think that the authorities cited compel me so to hold. There is all the difference in the world between a case where an owner of a second-hand car retains the log book while handing over physical possession of the car to a dealer so as to ensure that no-one will suppose that the dealer has authority to sell the car, and the case where a dealer effects a sale of a new car while the registration book is with the registration authority for registration or tax purposes. I find it difficult to see why a sale of the latter type should not be in the ordinary course of business of a motor dealer who holds a car on sale or return terms. It is not, of course, necessary for me to decide this point in view of my decision on the main point in the case, but, in deference to the argument which has been presented to me, I think it is fair to say that, in my view, counsel for the defendant is right about this matter.

In these circumstances, what is the proper order to make? Counsel for the plaintiffs has urged that he is entitled to damages commensurate with the unpaid instalments under the hire-purchase agreement, relying on Wickham Holdings, Ltd. v. Brooke House Motors, Ltd. (25), as authority for the proposition that this is the measure of the interest of a finance house in a hired chattel. I do not doubt that, in a claim in conversion, particularly against the hirer of a vehicle who has wrongfully sold it, the damages recoverable may be so measured: but this case has been pleaded primarily in detinue. DIPLOCK, L.J., has now provided us with an invaluable dissertation on the various forms of order in such cases: see General and Finance Facilities, Ltd. v. Crooks Cars (Romford), Ltd. (26). I can see no reason why, in the present case, the defendant, who is entirely blameless, should not have the opportunity of closing the matter by electing (and it was agreed that the option was his) whether to hand over the car, which he still has, or to pay its present value plus damages for having detained it. That the present value (that is, at the date of judgment) is the proper basis in a case of detinue is laid down in Rosenthal v. Alderton (27). Unfortunately, I have no evidence what the figure should be, and there will have to be an assessment or further evidence unless the parties can agree to my proceeding on the basis of the standard work of reference, "GLASS'S GUIDE", which puts the range (according to condition, mileage, etc.) at £130 to £200. A mean figure would be £165.

In addition, damages must be paid for the detinue of the car. How should these be assessed? The principle, it seems to me, is that I should look at the position in which the plaintiffs would have been if the car had been handed back on demand being made in 1962. Again, I am in the difficulty of having no adequate evidence of value at that date, but reference again to GLASS'S GUIDE suggests that its then value would be of the order of £500. The plaintiffs would then have had to find a new purchaser. Droylsden, plainly, were right out of the picture by then. A new purchaser would be required to pay in cash something of the order of £100 so that the plaintiffs' profit, of which they were deprived by the defendant's detinue of the vehicle, would be their charges for financing a transaction at about £400. At 7½ per cent. (their rate in the Droylsden transaction) this would come to £30 per annum. How many months should be allowed? Plainly, it cannot be the full period for which the plaintiffs went to sleep on their rights and, in any case, a hire-purchase transaction is normally cleared off and the title passed to the hirer in about two years, or three at the

(25) [1967] 1 All E.R. 117.

(26) [1963] 2 All E.R. 314 at p. 317.

(27) [1946] 1 All E.R. 583; [1946] 1 K.B. 374.

A outside. If I allow  $2\frac{1}{2}$  years—that is, £75—that would, I think, be generous.

There must be judgment for the plaintiffs accordingly, but I should indicate that I have put in those figures merely as estimates on the basis that, if precise figures are required by the parties, then we must have some further evidence so that I can deal with the matter. I have put the figures in in this way so as to indicate the basis on which I am proceeding. It may be possible that the parties
B can agree what would be the proper figures or, if necessary, we would have to have further evidence. I should also state this: that I do not know—I have had no means of discovering what, if any, hire-purchase control provisions were operative in 1962. In 1964, of course, the position is that a purchaser would have had to pay a deposit equivalent, I think, to twenty-five per cent. of the cash value of the vehicle and the maximum period for which payments could have
C been extended would have been, I think I am right in saying, twenty-seven months, but what the law was in relation to 1962 I am afraid I do not know.

[After argument.]

CHAPMAN, J.: Counsel for the plaintiffs has asked me to reconsider the latter part of the judgment as to the form of order which should be made in this case. He has told me that the figures which I put forward as tentative
D figures are acceptable both to his clients and to the defendants as figures on which one can proceed; in other words, that the value today can be taken as £165 and the figure of £75 as also representing substantially what would have been obtained by way of charges at the rate of  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. had a new hire-purchase transaction been effected in 1962 on the vehicle if it had been returned at that time. Counsel for the plaintiffs has urged me that, in addition to  $2\frac{1}{2}$  years at
E  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on £400, I should include something in respect of the depreciation of the vehicle. I think, on reconsidering the matter, that counsel is right about that. If the vehicle had been returned in 1962, then on any commercial basis of hiring with a chattel of this kind which is subject to depreciation, any hire charge which was made would take into account the depreciation of the vehicle and I think that counsel is right in saying that something under
F that head should be awarded as damages for the detention of the vehicle. The period should, in my view, be the same period as I have allowed for the period of re-hiring at charges amounting to  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on £400—in other words,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  years—and I think that there should be a figure to cover the depreciation of the vehicle during that period of time which the plaintiffs have been deprived of the opportunity of making hire charges which would have covered
G that depreciation. The rate of depreciation I assess at £50 per annum. I think the major depreciation on a vehicle of this kind would undoubtedly take place in its first year or two; thereafter, the annual rate of depreciation would be substantially lower. It seems to me that a figure of £50 a year would not be out of the way. That means that to my figure for damages for detention of £75 based on the charges which have been lost there must be added the sum of £125
H in respect of depreciation over the same period of time.

With regard to the question of costs which counsel for the plaintiffs has ventilated, I have listened to all that he has had to say about the matter. I still remain of the same opinion. In all the circumstances of this case, I do not think that the defendant ought to be charged with paying the plaintiffs' costs at all. Accordingly, there will be judgment without costs on the lines which I have
I indicated.

Judgment for the plaintiffs for the return of the vehicle or, alternatively, £165, its value, plus damages for its detention assessed in the sum of £200. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Taylor, Hindle & Rhodes, Manchester (for the plaintiffs); Casson & Co., Manchester for the defendant).

[Reported by K. B. EDWARDS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WINDLE v. DUNNING AND SON, LTD.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.), February 26, 1968.]

Road Traffic—Heavy motor car Lorry hired with driver from haulage contractors by quarry owners and loaded with tarmac at quarry owners' works—Quarry owners responsible for correct weight of lorry leaving works—Lorry overloaded and driven on road by haulage contractors' driver—Whether quarry owners were "using" lorry at the time—Whether contravention by them of Road Traffic Act, 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. 2 c. 16), s. 64 (2) as amended by Road Traffic Act, 1962 (10 & 11 Eliz. 2 c. 59), s. 8, Sch. 1, Pt. 2, para. 19—Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1966 (S.I. 1966 No. 1288), reg. 70 (1).

The respondents manufactured tarmac at their quarry. They hired from haulage contractors, W., Ltd., lorries to carry loads in the latter's vehicles. The drivers of the lorries were employed by W., Ltd. and were hired with the lorries. At the quarry the lorries were loaded under supervision of the respondents' servants, and were driven by W., Ltd.'s drivers and weighed at the respondents' weighbridge. The respondents were responsible for the correct weight of the loaded vehicles. About forty miles from the quarry three of the lorries so loaded were stopped. Their loads exceeded the permitted weight. On appeal from dismissal of a charge under the Road Traffic Act, 1960, s. 64 (2)*, against the respondents of "using" the lorries on a road carrying loads exceeding that allowed by reg. 70 (1) of the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1966,

Held: the respondents were not "using" the lorries, as opposed to "causing them to be used" within the meaning of those words in s. 64 (2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1960; accordingly contravention of s. 64 (2) was not established (see p. 48, letters E and F, post).

Dictum of the Lord Justice-General (LORD CLYDE) in MacLeod v. Penman ([1962] S.L.T. at p. 75) applied.

Appeal dismissed.

[As to user of motor vehicles in contravention of regulations, see 33 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 487, 488, para. 832, note (f); and for a case on the subject, see 45 DIGEST (Repl.) 70, 205.]

For Road Traffic Act, 1960, s. 64 (2) as amended, see SUPPLEMENT to 40 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 763, para. [870] Amended Texts.]

Case referred to:

MacLeod v. Penman, Hamilton v. Blair and Meechan, Hawthorn v. Knight, [1962] S.L.T. 69; 1962 S.C. (J.) 31; 45 Digest (Repl.) 135, *1178.

Case Stated.

This was a Case Stated by the justices for the petty sessional division of Malvern in the county of Worcester in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court sitting at Malvern on June 28, 1967.

The appellant, Lawrence Frederick Windle, an inspector of weights and measures for the county of Worcester, preferred against the respondents, Dunning & Son, Ltd., who were quarry owners and tarmac manufacturers, six separate informations. The informations alleged that on Mar. 29, 1967, the respondents used four heavy motor vehicles, not being public service vehicles, on a road at Guarlford in the county of Worcester, none of which complied with reg. 70 (1) of the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1966, made by the Minister of Transport in exercise of her powers under s. 64 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, as amended by s. 51 and Sch. 4 to the Road Traffic Act, 1962. The informations alleged that in respect of all four vehicles the total weight transmitted to the road surface by the two rear wheels exceeded nine tons, and that in respect * Section 64 (2), so far as material, is set out at p. 48, letter C, post.

A of two of the vehicles only, the sum of the weights transmitted to the road surface by all the wheels exceeded fourteen tons.

The six informations by consent were heard together. The respondents pleaded guilty to the first information which involved their own vehicle, but pleaded not guilty to the other five informations which involved vehicles which they did not own.

B The following facts were found. The three vehicles, the subject of the disputed informations, were inspected by the appellant on Mar. 29, 1967, at Guarlford and on being weighed, each of the vehicles exceeded its permitted weight in the manner alleged in the informations; each of the said vehicles had been loaded with tarmac at the respondents' Haughmund quarry where it had been loaded under the supervision of the respondents' servants and had been weighed
C at the quarry by the respondents' servants who then provided the driver of each vehicle with a conveyance note stating the weight; the excessive weight of each of the three vehicles was due to the default of the respondents' servants who exercised control over the loading and weighing of the vehicles; each of the three vehicles was owned by a firm, J. W. Wickson, Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as Wicksons) haulage contractors, and each vehicle was operated by that firm
D under the terms of a B licence, there being no separate hire document; each of the vehicles was driven by a driver supplied and employed by Wicksons; the drivers' pay and National Insurance contributions were paid by Wicksons; the system of operating the vehicles was as follows. When the respondents required a vehicle they contacted Wicksons; Wicksons directed the driver to report to the respondents' quarry; the driver reported to the respondents' weighbridge clerk, by whom he was directed to the mixing point; the driver
E there loaded his vehicle under the supervision of the respondents' servants, by tipping the contents of two-ton pre-mixed hoppers of tarmac into his vehicle. At this stage the driver was able to control the distribution of the tarmac load in the lorry; after loading, the driver drove to the respondents' weighbridge, where the vehicle was weighed by the respondents' servants. The weighbridge
F dial would be visible to the driver and to the respondents' weighbridge clerk and to their quarry foreman: facilities were provided by the respondents at their quarry for the unloading of vehicles which exceeded their permitted weight; on the day in question, each of the vehicles was loaded in the manner above described, and weighed by the respondents' servants; the weighbridge clerk was inexperienced having been in the employment of the respondents for only six weeks; in respect of two of the vehicles, the records of the respondents' quarry
G showed tare weights of less than the true tare weights. The load on each of the vehicles was the property of the respondents whose servants were mainly responsible for the correct weight of each vehicle and whose servants were wholly responsible for directing the respective drivers to their destinations. Wicksons were paid solely on a tonnage and mileage basis according to the type of material carried. Each driver was hired with the lorry by the respondents for between H sixty per cent. and ninety-five per cent. of his time on a 5½ day week.

The respondents contended that they did not "use" the vehicles within the meaning of the regulations, since they were at most only the hirers. The appellant contended that they did "use" since they were controlling, managing and operating the vehicles.

I The justices were of opinion that the respondents were correct in contending that they were not "using" the vehicles; and that the ultimate responsibility for the use of each vehicle rested either with the driver thereof or his employer, and accordingly they dismissed the informations.

The cases noted below* were cited during the argument in addition to the case referred to in the judgment.

* Gifford v. Whittaker, [1942] 1 All E.R. 604; [1942] 1 K.B. 501; James & Son, Ltd. v. Smea, [1954] 3 All E.R. 273; [1955] 1 Q.B. 78; Brown v. Roberts, [1963] 2 All E.R. 263; [1965] 1 Q.B. 1.

Ian McLean for the appellant.

R. Smith for the respondents.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: We are concerned with three heavy motor vehicles found on a road at Guarlford, when the total weight transmitted to the road surface by the wheels of each vehicle was more than nine tons; two exceeded fourteen tons, all contrary to reg. 70 (1) (a) of the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1966 (1). The facts were not in dispute. [His Lordship summarised the facts hereinbefore set out (see p. 47, letters B to I, ante) and continued:] The justices held that the respondents were not using any of those vehicles. The offences were laid under s. 64 (2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1960 (2) which provides:

“Subject to the provisions of this section, it shall not be lawful to use on a road a motor vehicle or trailer which does not comply with any such regulations as aforesaid, applicable to the class or description of vehicles to which the vehicle belongs, . . . and [these are the important words] a person who uses a motor vehicle or trailer in contravention of this subsection, or causes or permits the vehicle to be so used, shall be liable on summary conviction . . .”

and so on. In my judgment, as was said by the Lord Justice-General (LORD CLYDE) in giving judgment in MacLeod v. Penman, Hamilton v. Blair and McEchan, Hawthorn v. Knight (3),

“The presence in the section of the alternatives of causing or permitting the use must limit the scope of what is ‘using’. Normally ‘using’ is applicable to the actual driver.”

I entirely agree with that, and in my judgment, “using” when used in connexion with causing and permitting has a restricted meaning. It certainly covers the driver; it may also cover the driver’s employer if he, the driver, is about his master’s business, but beyond that I find it very difficult to conceive that any other person could be said to be using the vehicle as opposed to causing it to be used. Of one thing I am quite clear, that in relation to the user at Guarlford of these vehicles, it is quite impossible to say on any view that these respondents (4) were using the vehicle. On that short point I am satisfied that these justices came to a correct decision and I would dismiss this appeal.

WINN, L.J.: I agree.

ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for W. R. Scurfield, Worcester (for the appellant); Burrell Davis & Goode, Brownhills, Staffs. (for the respondents).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

(1) S.I. 1966 No. 1288.

(2) As amended by the Road Traffic Act, 1962, s. 8, Sch. 1, Pt. 2, para. 19.

(3) 1962 S.C. (J.) 31 at p. 46; [1962] S.L.T. 69 at p. 75.

(4) The respondents were quarry owners. The vehicle belonged to haulage contractors, whose employees the drivers were.

A

NOTE.

R. v. HARRIS.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.), March 12, 1968.]

B

Drugs—Dangerous drugs —“Supply” —Accused injected another accused with heroin unlawfully in the latter’s possession—Whether administering injection was supplying the drug—Dangerous Drugs (No. 2) Regulations 1964 (S.I. 1964 No. 1811), reg. 8—Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 (c. 15), s. 13 (a).

C

[As to the prohibition of supplying etc. drugs, see 26 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 208, para. 475; and for cases concerning the administration of dangerous drugs etc., see 33 DIGEST 552, 553, 238-243.]

Appeal.

D

The appellant was convicted at South West London Sessions on June 23, 1967, before the deputy chairman (J. M. COPE, Esq.) and a jury, of an offence, viz., supplying a dangerous drug (heroin) to one Fowler on Apr. 18, 1967, contrary to reg. 8 of the Dangerous Drugs (No. 2) Regulations 1964 and s. 13 (a) of the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965. The appellant had been a registered drug addict, but was not a registered addict at the time of the trial; she was under medical treatment. At the trial of the appellant another accused, Fowler, pleaded guilty (before the appellant pleaded not guilty to the charge against her) to being in unlawful possession of the heroin contrary to reg. 9 of the regulations of 1964. The appellant was remanded in custody for a month for a medical report, and was then put on probation for two years, being ordered to attend for out-patient treatment at hospital during the first twelve months. The appellant appealed against conviction by leave of the single judge.

E

The case noted below* was cited during the argument.

F

J. H. Zieger for the appellant.

C. R. Hilliard for the Crown.

G

LORD PARKER, C.J., delivered the judgment of the court: On Apr. 18, 1967, at 7.15 in the evening a man called Jones was passing the waiting room at Kingston Railway Station, and through the window he saw the appellant and the other accused, Fowler, sitting close together. He noticed that Fowler had his right sleeve rolled up and sticking in his arm was a syringe. Mr. Jones then went and fetched a police constable, who also looked through the window and according to his evidence he saw the appellant injecting Fowler’s arm by pushing the top of the syringe. He then entered the waiting room, questioned the two young people, the appellant and Fowler. She, the appellant, said that she was registered as a heroin addict and was using heroin, and Fowler said that he was not a registered addict. Fowler’s right arm showed clear signs that an injection had just taken place. The appellant was found to have on her the paraphernalia which she was entitled to have as a registered drug addict, and at the police station she said: “It isn’t fair. I didn’t give him the jack, it was one of his own. I was only helping him.” She repeated that in evidence at the trial.

H

I

Fowler pleaded guilty to unlawful possession of heroin, and the case for the prosecution, as appears from the transcript, and is acknowledged by counsel for the Crown in this court, was based on this, that if A injects B with B’s heroin, A is supplying heroin contrary to reg. 8 of the Dangerous Drugs (No. 2) Regulations 1964 (1). This court is quite unable to accept that proposition as a matter of law. If B has obtained in some way the possession of the heroin, and all that A is doing is to assist in injecting that heroin into B; then A is not supplying heroin contrary to the regulation.

* R. v. Mills, [1963] 1 All E.R. 202; [1963] 1 Q.B. 522.

(1) S.I. 1964 No. 1811.

Counsel for the Crown has valiantly sought to argue to the contrary; he has referred to a number of the regulations but this court finds it quite unnecessary to deal with the possible arguments that have been raised because it seems to them quite impossible as a matter of ordinary English common sense and law to say that a person administering heroin in those circumstances is supplying the heroin. It may be, though it certainly seems doubtful, that there was evidence in the case which would have entitled the jury to come to the conclusion that the heroin was not the heroin belonging to Fowler despite his plea of guilty, and that it was the heroin belonging to the appellant. If that were so, she would clearly be guilty of supplying. There was, however, no direction to the jury along those lines, namely, that before they could convict the appellant they must be sure that the heroin was hers and not already Fowler's. By contrast the summing-up was on the basis that it was open to the jury to convict, albeit that the heroin was already the heroin of Fowler. It is quite clear that the deputy chairman erred in law and that this appeal must be allowed and the conviction quashed.

Appeal allowed. Conviction quashed.

Solicitors: Registrar of Criminal Appeals (for the appellant); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the Crown).

[Reported by OM. P. MIDHA, Barrister-at-Law.]

NORTHCOTE LAUNDRY, LTD. v. FREDERICK DONNELLY, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Willmer, Russell and Sachs, L.J.J.), February 7, 1968.]

Landlord and Tenant—New tenancy—Business premises—Opposition by landlord—Intention to occupy premises for own business—Landlord's interest, a leasehold interest, created within five years—Date of creation—Whether date of execution of lease or of commencement of term—Sub-tenant's interest arising only on commencement of term, sub-tenant being also freeholder—Whether leasehold landlord debarred from opposition under s. 30 (1) (g)—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2 c. 56), s. 30 (2).

By a lease dated Sept. 23, 1964, freeholders demised premises for use for business purposes for a term of twenty-one years commencing on Sept. 29, 1964. Under an informal arrangement between the parties during the negotiations the freeholders retained a small portion of the premises as a London outlet for their main operations, which they were transferring to Shaftesbury, and, after the leaseholders had entered into possession of the premises on Sept. 29, the freeholders became as from that date yearly sub-tenants of the retained portion from the leaseholders. The leaseholders subsequently gave notice to terminate the sub-tenancy, and the sub-tenants applied for a new tenancy under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, contending that the ground of opposition enacted by para. (g) of s. 30 (1) (viz., that the landlords, the leaseholders, required possession of the portion of the premises for their own occupation, as in fact they did) was not available to the leaseholders by reason of s. 30 (2), as the leaseholders' interest had been created within five years and the holding had at all times since the creation of the leaseholders' interest been comprised in a business tenancy to the sub-tenants.

Held: the leaseholders' interest was created when the lease was executed on Sept. 23, 1964 and, since between that date and Sept. 29, 1964, there had been no business tenancy of the portion of the premises occupied by the sub-tenants, the leaseholders were not debarred by s. 30 (2) from opposing

A under s. 30 (1) (g) the grant of a new tenancy to the sub-tenants (see p. 52, letters F, G and I, post).

Appeal dismissed.

[As to grounds of opposition to a tenant's application for a new tenancy, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 892-895, paras. 1716-1719; and for cases on the subject, see DIGEST (Cont. Vol. A) 1051-1058, 7417o-7417pp and DIGEST

B (Cont. Vol. B) 484, 7417pnc, 7417ppa.

For the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954, s. 30, see 34 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 414.]

Case referred to:

Lawrence (Frederick), Ltd. v. Freeman Hardy & Willis, Ltd., [1959] 3 All E.R. 77; [1959] Ch. 731; [1959] 3 W.L.R. 275; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 1057, 7417po.

C
Appeal.

Sub-tenants, Northcote Laundry, Ltd., appealed by notice dated July 24, 1967, against an order made on June 13, 1967, by His Honour JUDGE LEON sitting in Willesden county court, dismissing their application for the grant of a new tenancy of part of premises at 1-5, Northcote Road, Willesden, London, N.W.10, held by them on an annual sub-tenancy from the leaseholders of the whole premises. The ground of appeal was that the judge had misdirected himself on a point of law in holding that, for the purposes of s. 30 (2) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, the leaseholders' interest was created (the sub-tenants themselves being the freeholders) at the date of the execution of the lease and not at the date on which the leaseholders' interest in the land commenced according to that lease. Under the lease, dated Sept. 23, 1964, to the respondent leaseholders, the first payment of quarterly rent was made payable on the signing of the lease, viz., Sept. 23, 1964, though quarter-day was Sept. 29. The trial judge (JUDGE LEON) relied on this. The note of his judgment ended as follows.

F "Counsel for the [respondent leaseholders] relies on the fact that rent is payable on Sept. 23, although it was rent for the period commencing on Sept. 29. That goes against the [sub-tenants]. I come to the conclusion that the lease creates an interest. It provides that the rent shall be paid prior to [the leaseholders] going into occupation. I hold that the interest was created on Sept. 23, 1964, and that [the leaseholders] are entitled to rely on para. (g) of s. 30 (1)."

G The trial judge accordingly ordered that the sub-tenants' application be refused, a certificate for compensation under s. 37 (4) of the Act of 1954 being awarded them.

K. R. Bagnall for the sub-tenants.

G. Avgherinos for the leaseholders.

H RUSSELL, L.J., delivered the following judgment at the invitation of WILLMER, L.J.: This is a case which raises a short point under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954. The appellants, Northcote Laundry, Ltd., were the freeholders of premises at Nos. 1-5, Northcote Road, Willesden. By a lease dated Sept. 23, 1964, they demised these premises to the respondents, Frederick Donnelly, Ltd., for a term of twenty-one years, the term to begin on Sept. 29, 1964. There had been an informal arrangement at the time of the negotiation of this lease whereby the appellants, who were moving their main operations to, I think, Shaftesbury, should retain a small portion of these premises in order to keep, for the time being at least, a London outlet. I need not go into the matter in detail, but what happened in the end was that on Sept. 29 the respondents went into occupation under their lease, and at the same time, pursuant to the informal arrangements, the appellants remained in occupation of a small part of the premises. As the weeks or months went by, the two parties came to an agreement on how much rent should be paid by the respondents on a sub-tenancy. The effect was that as from Sept. 29, the appellants (hereinafter called "the sub-tenants") became the yearly sub-tenants of the respondents (hereinafter called "the landlords"). A

The landlords, being for the present purpose the landlords under the Act of 1954, and the sub-tenants being the tenants who want an extension of their tenancy of the retained part, the question is simply this: when was the interest of the landlords created for the purpose of s. 30 (2)? That question arises because the landlords require (and have satisfied the judge that they require) the possession of the premises for their own occupation, which is a ground for opposing an application for a new tenancy under s. 30 (1) (g), and the point that the sub-tenants then take is that the landlords are not entitled to rely on ground (g) because of s. 30 (2). B

In the first place it is quite plain that under the first part of that subsection the interest of the landlords, i.e., the interest under the lease of Sept. 23, 1964, was undoubtedly created within the five years period that is mentioned in sub-s. (2). So far, therefore, the sub-tenants rightly say that ground (g) is not open; but sub-s. (2) goes on to say that the landlords can be excluded from relying on ground (g) only if it is also shown that at all times since the purchase or creation of the interest of the landlord the holding has been comprised in a tenancy or successive tenancies of the description specified in s. 23 (1), i.e., a business tenancy. Thus the point is this: was the interest of the landlords created when the lease was executed on Sept. 23, 1964, or was that interest created at the commencement of the term? If the first is the true view, then it is not possible to say (because of the six days difference between Sept. 23 and Sept. 29 when Northcote Laundry, Ltd., became sub-tenants) that at all times since Sept. 23 there has been a business tenancy of this part of the holding, and ground (g) is not excluded. Aliter if Sept. 29 is the date of creation. C E

I find this really not a problem of any difficulty at all. The interest of the landlord in this case is quite clearly the leasehold interest which was created by the lease, and the lease was executed on Sept. 23. I find it quite impossible to construe this subsection in any way other than to hold that the relevant date for the present purposes is Sept. 23. If I may venture to remark, as MEGARRY, J., in his work on the LAW OF REAL PROPERTY has observed (at p. 679): "A lease is a document creating an interest in land." Here the lease, when it was created, was a reversionary lease, but when created it was nevertheless an interest in the land, and it is in respect of that interest that the landlord now claims as such. F

We were referred to Frederick Lawrence, Ltd. v. Freeman, Hardy & Willis (1), and the remarks of ROMER, L.J., but no point that is relevant to the present appeal was raised in that case. That case simply finds that, where the landlord acquires within the five year period a head lease under which the tenant is entitled to his current sub-tenancy, the interest of the landlord is created when the head lease is created, and not when the landlord acquired it: purchase, of course, is another matter. It seems to me that what is involved in the contention of the sub-tenants is that s. 30 (2) is to be construed as if it referred not to the creation of the interest of the landlord, but to the commencement in possession of the interest of the landlord. It simply does not say that; it uses perfectly clear language, and all that we can do is to apply that perfectly clear language. There is no justification in my judgment for moulding it or twisting it, whichever approach you prefer, in the direction which the sub-tenants seek. I would dismiss the appeal. G H

SACHS, L.J.: I fully agree and have nothing to add. I

WILLMER, L.J.: I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: L. O. Glenister & Sons (for the freeholders); Russell & Arnholz (for the leaseholders).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

NOTE.

R. v. HUGHES. R. v. BARCLAY.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Davies, L.J., Roskill and Cusack, JJ.), February 27, 1968.]

B

Criminal Law—Sentence—Youthful offender—Youthful offender absconding after sentence of borstal training—Further offence committed while at large—Sentence of fifteen months' imprisonment—Previous sentence of borstal training not served—Sentence of borstal training substituted—Criminal Justice Act, 1961 (9 & 10 Eliz. 2 c. 39), s. 3 (3).

C

[As to the punishment of youthful offenders, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 514, 515, para. 935; as to borstal training, see ibid., 517, para. 943; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 591, 5872-5878.

For the Criminal Justice Act, 1961, s. 3, see 41 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 132.]

Case referred to:

D

R. v. Leonard, (1964), 108 Sol. Jo. 425.

Applications.

These were applications by Colin Hughes and Frederick Barclay for leave to appeal against their sentences of eighteen months' and fifteen months' imprisonment respectively, imposed by the recorder (JUDGE KILNER BROWN, Q.C.) at Liverpool Crown Court on Oct. 31, 1967, after they had both pleaded guilty to shopbreaking and larceny. They were unrepresented. The applicant Barclay was aged twenty-two at the relevant time and had five findings of guilty and three previous convictions recorded against him. The applicant Hughes was aged eighteen at the relevant time, and had six findings of guilty and two previous convictions recorded against him. On Sept. 23, 1966, he had been sentenced to borstal training, but he absconded on Oct. 31, 1966, since when he had been at large until arrested for the present offence on Aug. 26, 1967.

F

The applicants did not appear and were not represented.

ROSKILL, J., delivered the following judgment of the court, in which, after dismissing the applicant Barclay's application, he continued: The applicant Hughes is only nineteen and, therefore, a sentence of imprisonment cannot be justified unless it can be brought within the special provisions of s. 3 (3) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1961. This was what the learned recorder sought to do. That subsection provides:

G

"In relation to a person who has served a previous sentence of imprisonment for a term of not less than six months, or a previous sentence of borstal training, sub-s. (1) of this section shall have effect as if for the reference to three years there were substituted a reference to eighteen months..."

H

It will be recalled that, under sub-s. (1), in the case of someone aged less than twenty-one, the court must not pass a sentence of imprisonment exceeding six months or less than three years. The attention of the Home Office was drawn by the Governor of the Liverpool Prison to the fact that, in his view, the applicant Hughes ought not to have been sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment on the ground that, although he had previously been in borstal, he had not served a sentence of borstal training within the meaning of the subsection which I quoted. The court has been referred to a decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Leonard (1), where a similar point fell to be considered. LORD PARKER, C.J., in giving the judgment of the court, dealt with the true construction of the phrase in sub-s. (3) in relation to a person who has served a previous borstal sentence, and said:

I

(1) (1964), 108 Sol. Jo. 425.

"The sole question here is whether a man under that subsection has only served his sentence of borstal training if he had in fact been released subject to supervision, or whether it means that the subsection applies if either he has served a previous sentence of borstal training, which is for a maximum of two years, or, having been released earlier and subject to supervision it also applies. The court has come to the conclusion that the meaning here is that this subsection should only apply if a person has been released from borstal training subject to supervision."

In that case, the court held that a prisoner sentenced to borstal training and later transferred from borstal to a mental hospital under s. 72 of the Mental Health Act, 1959, and finally released from that hospital was not a person who had previously served a sentence of borstal training within the meaning of sub-s. (3).

In the present case, in the view of this court, the applicant Hughes had similarly not served the sentence of borstal training previously imposed on him, for he absconded from borstal and thus had not been released under supervision. This is yet again one of the anomalies to which this court has often referred and to which the relevant subsections of s. 3 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1961, all too often give rise. The applicant Hughes was not represented at the Liverpool Crown Court and the attention of the learned recorder was not drawn to this point. For this reason alone, and not because of any merit in this application, the court feels bound to substitute a fresh sentence of borstal training for the sentence of imprisonment passed. This is the only course open to the court. The court will accordingly treat this application as the appeal; but there are no grounds whatever for not sending the applicant back to borstal training.

Sentence varied.

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

R. v. BURGESS.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.), March 7, 1968.]

Criminal Law—Evidence—Confession—Admissibility—Ruling by judge on admissibility—Whether in summing-up to jury subsequently judge should direct them that they must be satisfied that statement was voluntarily made before attaching any weight to it.

[As to the functions of the trial judge in regard to questions of admissibility of confessions, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 470, para. 863; and for cases on confessions made to the police, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 474-477, 4528-4577 and R. v. Ovenell, ([1968] 1 All E.R. 933).]

Case referred to:

Chan Wai-Keung v. Reginum, [1967] 1 All E.R. 948; [1967] 2 A.C. 160; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 552.

Appeal.

On Aug. 10, 1967, at South-East London quarter sessions, before J. A. GRIEVES, Esq., Q.C. and a jury, the appellant, Harry George Burgess, was found guilty on three charges—(i) office breaking and stealing £15 in cash; (ii) possessing house-breaking implements by night, and (iii) sacrilege and stealing £100 from a church vestry. He was sentenced to a total of five years' imprisonment. The office breaking took place on May 18, 1967, in Croydon, a desk being broken open and money taken from a drawer, and an attempt being made to open safes by using explosives; on May 21 Croydon parish church was broken into by forcing the vestry door, and between £100 and £115 was taken from one of two safes there,

A both of which were opened by explosives. On May 24, a number of police officers stationed themselves round the appellant's house. When the appellant drove up at 11.30 p.m. he was told, according to police witnesses, that they were police officers. He ran off and a chase ensued. The appellant was arrested. According to the police evidence he was walked back a quarter of a mile to his house, where his car was searched, and underneath the driving seat, a case opener or jemmy was found. The appellant was taken back by car, handcuffed, to the police station, where he was handcuffed by one hand to a chair. There was a conflict of evidence as to the handcuffing and the time for which it lasted at the police station. The appellant made a written and oral statement. According to the police evidence he finally said, with regard to safe blowing, that another man blew the safe and all that he, the appellant, did was to take money out of the drawer. In answer to a question from a detective inspector, the appellant said that he threw the explosive away by the garden where he was caught, and that it was in a little tin. A police constable then went and searched the area where some plasticine and a tin box were found; the tin box contained some gelignite and four detonators. He took these back to the police station and, according to the police evidence, the appellant then said "that is it". The fragments of detonator found at the scene of two of the offences, were of the same type as the detonators recovered by the police constable, the plasticine so recovered was similar to that found at the scenes of the alleged offences and there was other forensic evidence attending to identify instruments or materials found by the police as previously stated or taken from the appellant's car with the crimes.

D The appellant gave evidence denying that he had anything to do with the matter. He said that the oral and written statements had been extracted from him, in effect, by force; that he had been handcuffed all the time, that he was threatened with force, and that his statement was not voluntary and that what it contained was false. The chairman ruled at the trial that he was satisfied that the statements, both oral and in writing, were voluntary. Thereafter the police witnesses were cross-examined at length before the jury, and the chairman drew attention in his summing-up to the conflict of evidence in regard to the confession. The appellant now appealed by leave of the single judge against his conviction.

G. A. Bathurst Norman for the appellant.

A. C. L. Lewisohn for the Crown.

G LORD PARKER, C.J., in the course of delivering judgment said: Leave to appeal was given in this case in order that this court should consider the manner in which the chairman dealt with this confession in the face of the jury. There was a time until recently when it was thought to be the duty of the judge who had ruled that a confession was admissible as being voluntary, to leave that very same matter again to the jury, in other words it was common form to say to jury: "Now you have heard this alleged confession. Before you attach any weight to it at all you must be satisfied by the prosecution so that you feel sure that it was a voluntary statement. If you are not so satisfied, then disregard it entirely." That has not always been the law of this country, but it is undoubtedly true that for many years until recently that has been the position.

I However, the matter has been the subject of more recent decisions, both in the High Court of Australia (1) and in the Privy Council in this country, the most recent decision, that in the Privy Council, being Chan Wai-Keung v. Reginam (2). The position now is that the admissibility is a matter for the judge; that it is thereafter unnecessary to leave the same matter to the jury; but that the jury should be told that what weight they attach to the confession depends on all the circumstances in which it was taken, and that it is their right to give such weight to it as they think fit.

(1) Basto v. Reginam, (1954), 91 C.L.R. 628.

(2) [1967] 1 All E.R. 948; [1967] 2 A.C. 160.

That was exactly what this chariman did, and in the opinion of this court, if he did not leave the matter to the jury in the way that previously judges have done, that is a matter on which he was fully justified having regard to the recent decision.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sotheby & Co. (for the appellant); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the Crown).

[Reported by OM. P. MIDHA, Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. HOOD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Davies, L.J., Roskill and Cusack, J.J.), March 8, 1968.]

Criminal Law—Trial—Juror—Disqualification—Juror recognising accused's wife when she appeared as witness and knowing from hearsay that accused had criminal record—Juror's knowledge not disclosed at trial to any other juror—Affidavit of juror read, as dealing only with extrinsic matters—Whether jury should be discharged.

The appellant was indicted for housebreaking and larceny. The appellant's wife gave evidence on his behalf and recognised a juror who lived in the same road as her mother and who, she thought, knew that the appellant had a criminal record. The appellant did not know the juror. At the trial the appellant's counsel moved to discharge the jury on the ground that the juror would have recognised the appellant's wife, and might then realise who the appellant was and inform the other jurors. This submission was overruled by the trial judge without the appellant's wife being recalled to testify concerning her recognition of the juror. On appeal against conviction an affidavit of the juror disclosed that he had recognised the appellant's wife when she entered the witness box; the juror deposed on affidavit that he had not spoken to anyone before or during the time of the trial of his personal knowledge of the appellant, his previous record, or about his wife.

Held: although the prudent course at the trial would have been to discharge the jury and to resume the trial with a new jury, the appeal would be dismissed, because, having regard to the evidence as a whole, there had been no miscarriage of justice (see p. 58, letters G and I, post).

Per CURIAM: the court is able to look at the juror's affidavit only because it is dealing entirely with extrinsic matters, not with what took place in the jury room (see p. 57, letter I, to p. 58, letter A, post).

Appeal dismissed.

[Editorial Note. This decision should be considered with R. v. Box ([1963] 3 All E.R. 240).

As to misconduct on the part of a juror in a criminal case, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 538, 539, para. 988; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 628, 6344, 6345.]

Appeal.

This was an appeal by William Patrick Hood against his conviction on June 14, 1967, at Glamorgan Assizes, before ASHWORTH, J., and a jury of housebreaking and larceny. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment. The main ground of his application for leave to appeal was that his trial was prejudiced by the fact that one of the members of the jury, who was a relative of his wife and lived opposite his wife's parents, knew him and his criminal record. The submission had been overruled during his trial by ASHWORTH, J. (see p. 57,

A letter G, post). The application was adjourned by the court (SALMON, L.J., PHILLIMORE AND BLAIN, JJ.) on Feb. 9, 1968, for an affidavit to be tendered from the juror concerned, the relevant portions of which are set out at p. 58, letter C, post. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court.

The cases noted below* were cited during the argument.

E. J. Prosser for the appellant.

B T. E. R. Rhys-Roberts for the Crown.

CUSACK, J., delivered the following judgment of the court: On June 14, 1967, at the Glamorgan Assizes the appellant was convicted of housebreaking and larceny and was sentenced to a term of three years' imprisonment.

C During the course of the trial, counsel who then appeared for him intervened to impart certain information to the learned trial judge which counsel had shortly before received. He told the learned trial judge that his instructions were that Mrs. Hood, the appellant's wife, who had already given evidence on his behalf, had recognised a particular jurymen as a person who had lived in the same street as her mother and that she, the appellant's wife, believed that the jurymen knew that her husband, the appellant, had a record and had criminal convictions. Counsel also informed the judge that the appellant himself did not know the particular jurymen and for that reason had not challenged him at the time the jury were empanelled. What was put before the learned judge was that the jurymen would certainly recognise the wife, would then realise who the appellant was, and that not only might he know the record of the prisoner but that he might impart the information to his fellow jurors.

E The learned judge heard submissions from both sides with regard to this difficulty. The court has every sympathy with the trial judge faced with a sudden difficulty of that kind in the middle of a serious case. Having heard the arguments on both sides, the learned judge took the decision not to discharge the particular jurymen and not to discharge the jury as a whole. The trial, therefore, continued with the jury as originally constituted and it was that jury F which convicted. The transcript of what took place indicates the reason the learned judge took the course he did. He said this:

"Where I think this application fails is that the basis on which it is made is not supported by any concrete evidence that the jurymen himself recognised the witness; much less recognised the [appellant]. There is no solid reason to suppose that the jurymen in question knows of the witness's G previous conviction, much less of the accused's..."

It is the fact, we are told, although it was not disclosed at the trial, that the wife of the appellant herself also had convictions.

H Difficulties of the kind which occurred at the trial have arisen in the past but never on precisely similar facts. From the decided authorities it emerges as a principle that even if there is knowledge by a juror of a prisoner's previous convictions or character, that does not automatically disqualify that juror from sitting; but in all the earlier cases the fact or suggestion that the juror had some previous knowledge of a character adverse to the prisoner has not emerged until after the trial. Here it is a matter which was certainly mentioned during the course of the trial and really the basis of this appeal is that the judge exercised his discretion wrongly. From the decided cases there also emerges a second I principle; that the court will not ordinarily inquire into what passes between jurors; either in the jury box or in the jury room, and will certainly not inquire as to the means by which they arrive at their verdict (1). That is a principle which is established and which ought to be maintained. In this particular case this court has seen an affidavit by the jurymen in question, but it should be made clear that he is not dealing with what took place in the jury room or dealing with the manner in which the jury arrived at the conclusion they did. He is dealing entirely with extrinsic matters. It is for that reason and that reason alone that the court has felt able to look at his affidavit. From his affidavit it appears that, through no fault of his own, the learned judge was not, at the time when he exercised his discretion, fully apprised of the situation because in his affidavit this juror says that some years ago he was informed by a Mr. and Mrs. James, whom he knew, that their daughter, Janice, had married a man named Hood. He did not know this man, but he subsequently came to know him by sight. They never had any conversation. Then he says,

* R. v. Thompson, [1962] 1 All E.R. 65; R. v. Box, [1963] 3 All E.R. 240; [1964] 1 Q.B. 430; R. v. Rouds, [1967] 2 All E.R. 84; [1967] 2 Q.B. 108.

(1) See R. v. Thompson, [1962] 1 All E.R. 65 and cases cited therein.

"A few years ago I heard that Mr. Hood had gone to prison but I do not know for what offence. On June 13, 1967, I served as a juror at the Glamorgan Assize at Cardiff in a case involving William Hood [the appellant] who I thought might be the husband of the said Janice Hood but I was not certain. My uncertainty was dispelled when Janice Hood entered the witness box for I recognised her immediately. I had not previously seen Janice Hood that day either in court or in the precincts thereof. I did not point out the said Janice Hood to anyone. I most definitely did not speak to anyone before or during the time of the trial of my personal knowledge of [the appellant], his previous record, or about his wife, Janice Hood."

This court takes the view that the judge was correct if it was in his mind that he could not in the circumstances put questions to that particular juror, at any rate whilst he remained a member of the jury, because, without going now into elaborate details, that course would present very grave problems and might lead to inquiries which would be unjustifiable as well as out of place.

It is also urged that the learned judge, if he took the view that questions could not be put to the particular juror, could at least have had Mrs. Hood recalled and had evidence from her in support of the matters which counsel had quite rightly put before him. In fairness to the learned judge it should be said that the suggestion was not made at the trial that this might have been a course open to him. He reached the decision which he did, as this court finds, in ignorance of the true facts, the true facts now being disclosed in the affidavit to which I have referred. Therefore, he was exercising his discretion on information which was inaccurate. This court thinks, sympathetic though it is having regard to the problem which arose, that Mrs. Hood might have been recalled, but that in any event the wiser course would have been to discharge the jury as a whole and to resume the trial with a new jury. That course was not adopted, but the court holds the view that that would have been the prudent course, although it is easy with hindsight to put forward these matters when a fuller story is revealed than was in fact put before the judge himself.

Then the further question arises whether this conviction can stand. It is unnecessary to go into the full facts of the matter, but there was a formidable body of evidence against the appellant; evidence of a kind which would have carried, it may be thought, the greatest weight with any jury. Although this matter, which can perhaps be called an irregularity and at any rate is something which it is desirable should not have occurred, took place, the court holds, having regard to the evidence as a whole, that there was no miscarriage of justice in the conviction of the appellant. For that reason, this appeal will be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: C. Stuart Hallinan & Blackburn Gittings, Cardiff (for the appellant); D. A. Roberts Thomas, Cardiff (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A RADSTOCK CO-OPERATIVE & INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, LTD.
v. NORTON-RADSTOCK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Hartman, Russell and Sachs, L.J.J.),
November 30, December 1, 4, 5, 1967, February 5, 1968.]

B Nuisance—Sewer—Obstruction to flow of river caused by pipe of sewer constructed by local authority beneath river bed but becoming exposed as river bed washed away—Damage to plaintiffs' property from eddies caused—Sewer not out of repair—Whether any breach of duty to plaintiffs by statute or common law established—Covenant, in lease demising sewerage rights, that local authority would not interfere with flow of water in river—Benefit of covenant not assigned to plaintiffs subsequently becoming riparian owners—Statutory powers of sewage disposal overriding lease.

C In 1907 the defendants' predecessors in title, Radstock Urban District Council, obtained by agreement under s. 14* of the Public Health Act, 1875, a lease for ninety-nine years enabling them to build and maintain a sewer across the River Somer. By cl. 14 of the lease the council covenanted with the lessor (which term was defined to include assigns) that the council would not "in the exercise of the powers aforesaid" interfere with the flow of water in the river. The sewer was built and the relevant part of it was laid across and in the bed of the River Somer. The sewer vested by statute in the council and had since remained vested in them or their successors, the defendants, as local authority, the relevant statutory provisions* overriding pro tanto the lease. Subsequently the plaintiffs acquired from the freeholder first (in 1915) a lease of two pieces of land contiguous to the sewer, one on each side of the river, together with the bed of the stream between them and later (in 1953) the freehold of this land. There was no assignment of the benefit of cl. 14 of the lease of 1907, or of the rentcharge reserved by the lease, to the plaintiffs. Without any fault on the part of the council or the defendants the bed of the river became washed away, and the pipe of the sewer became exposed. The exposed pipe caused eddies in the flow of water which damaged the plaintiffs' property. In August, 1965, the plaintiffs sued the defendants for an injunction and damages. It was not alleged that the sewer was improperly laid originally or that its presence contributed to the lowering of the bed of the river. The plaintiffs' claim was put on three grounds, (a) nuisance at common law by interference with the flow of water in the river to the plaintiffs' riparian property, (b) breach of cl. 14 of the lease of 1907 and (c) that the water was injuriously affected within s. 331† of the Public Health Act, 1936, by being diverted by the defendants' pipe with consequential damage to the plaintiffs. On appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision on a preliminary point of law that on the facts pleaded they were not entitled in law to the relief claimed,

H Held: (i) (SACHS, L.J., dissenting) the statement of claim disclosed no valid cause of action and the action accordingly was rightly dismissed, for the following reasons—

(i) in regard to nuisance, (a) (per HARMAN, L.J., SACHS, L.J., concurring in this) the burden of proof lay on the defendants on the pleadings to justify

I * Section 14 of the Act of 1875 provided: "Any local authority may . . . acquire from any person . . . any right of making or of user or other right in or respecting a sewer . . ." Section 13 of the Act of 1875 provided that "All . . . sewers within the district of a local authority . . . shall vest in and be under the control of such local authority".

† Section 331 provides, so far as relevant, that: "Nothing in this Act shall authorise a local authority injuriously to affect any . . . river . . . or the supply, quality or fall of water contained in . . . any . . . river . . . without the consent of any person who would, if this Act had not been passed, have been entitled by law to prevent, or be relieved against, the injurious affection of, or the supply, quality or fall of water contained in, that . . . river."

the presence of the obstruction (the sewer) in the river (see p. 65, letter I, and p. 71, letter F, post), but (SACHS, L.J., not concurring) something which had begun by not being a nuisance (and obstruction of the river originally by the sewer should not be presumed) could not grow into a nuisance by mere lapse of time; moreover, the plaintiffs in the circumstances took the river bed as it was when they acquired their land and the defendants had not altered the sewer which was then there (see p. 66, letter F, and p. 66, letter I, to p. 67, letter A, post; cf., p. 73, letter E, post).

(b) (per RUSSELL, L.J.) the right of the plaintiffs as riparian owners was to have the waters flow in their natural course through the plaintiffs' property, not a right to have their property undamaged by the natural flow; the defendants had been entitled to maintain their sewer where it was laid, and the natural change in the bed of the stream over the years did not alter their entitlement (see p. 69, letter E, post).

R. v. Bell ((1822), 1 L.J.O.S.K.B. 42) applied.

Slater v. Worthington's Cash Stores (1930), Ltd. ([1941] 3 All E.R. 28) distinguished.

(ii) in regard to the alleged breach of cl. 14 of the lease of 1907 (SACHS, L.J., reserving decision on this, see p. 76, letter C, post)—

(a) there was neither privity of contract nor privity of estate between the plaintiffs and the defendants in respect of the covenant (cl. 14) and it was not enforceable by the plaintiffs as a restrictive covenant (per HARMAN, L.J.) there being no breach of the covenant on its true construction and (per HARMAN and RUSSELL, L.J.J.) there being no annexation of the benefit of the covenant to the plaintiffs' land nor assignment of the benefit of the covenant to the plaintiffs (see p. 67, letter F, and p. 70, letter B, post).

(b) nor was the covenant (cl. 14) a condition on fulfilling which alone the defendants could assert a right to maintain the sewer (see p. 67, letter I, and p. 70, letter C, post).

Westhoughton Urban District Council v. Wigan Coal and Iron Co., Ltd. ([1919] 1 Ch. 159) distinguished.

(iii) (SACHS, L.J., concurring as to the effect of s. 331) s. 331 of the Public Health Act, 1936, merely saved common law rights and, accordingly, did not provide the plaintiffs in the present case with a cause of action additional to nuisance at common law, which was not maintainable for the reasons given at (i) above (see p. 67, letter I, p. 69, letter I, p. 71, letter A, and p. 75, letter C, post).

Per HARMAN and SACHS, L.J.J.: where a point of law dealt with the whole subject of the action, the appropriate procedure was by motion to strike out the statement of claim, not by way of preliminary point of law; but proceedings to strike out the statement of claim would have been unsuitable in the present case as it was not a plain case (see p. 65, letter F, and p. 70, letters D and H, post).

Decision of UNGOED-THOMAS, J. ([1967] 2 All E.R. 812) affirmed.

[As to duties arising in relation to the diversion or obstruction of water in streams, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 162, para. 231, text and note (l); 39 ibid., 523, para. 693; and for cases on the subject, see 47 DIGEST (Repl.) 656-666, 162-252.

As to freedom from liability for acts done in the exercise of statutory powers without negligence, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 690, 691, p. 694, para. 1335 (express proviso preserving liability for nuisance); and for cases on the subject, see 38 DIGEST (Repl.) 13-18, 49-77. As to the need to establish negligence in an action in respect of statutory sewage disposal, see 31 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 223, para. 325.

As to the vesting and maintenance of public sewers, see 31 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) p. 200, para. 294, p. 209, para. 304; and as to the construction of sewers crossing water courses, see ibid., p. 206, para. 299.]

A Cases referred to:

Fisher v. Ruwslip-Northwood Urban District Council and Middlesex County Council, [1945] 2 All E.R. 458; [1945] K.B. 584; 115 L.J.K.B. 9; 173 L.T. 261; 110 J.P. 1; 26 Digest (Repl.) 459, 1529.

Fowler v. Sanders, (1617), Cro. Jac. 446; 79 E.R. 382; 26 Digest (Repl.) 510, 1875.

B

Great Central Ry. Co. v. Hewlett, [1916-17] All E.R. Rep. 1027; [1916] 2 A.C. 511; 85 L.J.K.B. 1705; 115 L.T. 349; 38 Digest (Repl.) 6, 14.

Hayward's Case, (1589), Cro. Eliz. 148; 78 E.R. 405; 36 Digest (Repl.) 345, 857.

Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 462; 55 L.J.Q.B. 304; 55 L.T. 309; 50 J.P. 1756; 38 Digest (Repl.) 41, 213.

C

Pride of Derby and Derbyshire Angling Association v. British Celanese, Ltd., [1953] 1 All E.R. 179; [1953] Ch. 149; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 58; 117 J.P. 52; 47 Digest (Repl.) 677, 312.

R. v. Bell, (1822), 1 L.J.O.S.K.B. 42; 47 Digest (Repl.) 754, 920.

Rogers v. Hosegood, [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 915; [1900] 2 Ch. 388; 69 L.J.Ch. 652; 85 L.T. 186; 40 Digest (Repl.) 340, 2769.

D

Rylands v. Fletcher, [1861-73] All E.R. Rep. 1; (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70; 36 Digest (Repl.) 282, 334.

Slater v. Worthington's Cash Stores, (1930), Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 28; [1941] 1 K.B. 488; 111 L.J.K.B. 91; 26 Digest (Repl.) 503, 1850.

Stretton's Derby Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Derby Corpn., [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 731; [1894] 1 Ch. 431; 63 L.J.Ch. 135; 69 L.T. 791; 38 Digest (Repl.) 16, 67.

E

Taylor v. Oldham Corpn., (1876), 4 Ch.D. 395; 46 L.J.Ch. 105; 35 L.T. 696; 26 Digest (Repl.) 536, 2110.

Westthoughton Urban District Council v. Wigan Coal and Iron Co., Ltd., [1919] 1 Ch. 159; 88 L.J.Ch. 60; 120 L.T. 242; 33 Digest (Repl.) 825, 876.

Westminster Corpn. v. Johnson, Westminster Corpn. v. Fuller, [1904] 2 K.B. 737; 73 L.J.K.B. 774; 91 L.T. 334; 68 J.P. 549; 26 Digest (Repl.) 583, 2439.

Williams v. Wilcox, [1835-42] All E.R. Rep. 25; (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 314; 7 L.J.Q.B. 229; 112 E.R. 857; 36 Digest (Repl.) 322, 670.

Ystradyfodwg and Pontypridd Main Sewerage Board v. Bensted (Surveyor of Taxes), [1906] 1 K.B. 294; affd. C.A., [1907] 1 K.B. 490; affd., H.L., [1907] A.C. 264; 76 L.J.K.B. 876; 97 L.T. 141; 71 J.P. 425; 28 Digest (Repl.) 5, 3.

G

Zetland (Marquess of) v. Driver, [1938] 2 All E.R. 158; [1939] Ch. 1; 107 L.J.Ch. 316; 158 L.T. 456; 40 Digest (Repl.) 341, 2772.

Appeal.

This action was begun by writ issued on Aug. 6, 1965, by the plaintiffs,

H

Radstock Co-operative and Industrial Society, Ltd., against the defendants, Norton-Radstock Urban District Council, who were the local authority for that urban district for the purposes of the Public Health Act, 1936. By their amended statement of claim, re-served on Feb. 21, 1967, the plaintiffs pleaded, among other matters, that they were owners of premises at Radstock which consisted of a bakery shop and other buildings and included a bridge carrying a private carriageway over the River Somer for the use of the plaintiffs. They pleaded that the defendants had laid a sewer in 1904 by virtue of powers conferred by the Public Health Act, 1875, through the land of the plaintiffs, under an agreement dated Aug. 26, 1904, between Earl Waldegrave, the plaintiffs' predecessor in title, and the defendants, and under a lease dated Mar. 15, 1907, between the same parties, and that the sewer was vested in the defendants under the Public Health Act, 1936; that the sewer was laid across land of the plaintiffs and across the river, and was laid in the bed of the river; that it was a term of the lease by cl. 14, that "the council will not interfere with the flow of or pollute the water in the River Somer". The plaintiffs pleaded the demise to them of the premises by lease dated June 1, 1915, by Earl Waldegrave, and that in 1915 the plaintiffs constructed a bridge in the same line as the sewer in such manner as to make the bridge independent of the sewer and to avoid interference therewith. The plaintiffs pleaded their purchase of the reversion on Apr. 10, 1953, to their premises, including the bed and banks of the river within their boundaries. They pleaded that the sewer was now above the level of the bed of the river and by reason thereof the water flowing along the course of the river was obstructed and eddies and forces of water in the river created by or resulting from the obstruction had eroded the banks of the river and undermined and damaged the bridge of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claimed (a) £3,500 damages in respect of injury to the bridge and other adjacent property; and (b) an injunction restraining the defendants from continuing the sewer above the bed of the river. By an order made on July 15, 1966, by GOFF, J., the following question was set down for hearing before trial, pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 33, r. 3, viz., whether on the footing that all the allegations of facts contained in the statement of claim could be proved the plaintiffs could as a matter of law be entitled to damages or an injunction. UNGOED-THOMAS, J., in a reserved judgment dated Mar. 9, 1967 and reported [1967] 2 All E.R. 812, answered this question in the negative and accordingly dismissed the action. By notice dated June 5, 1967, the plaintiffs appealed from this judgment, stating the grounds of the appeal to be that the judge was wrong in law (i) in holding that the defendants in taking the lease of land for the laying of a public sewer could not therefore bind themselves by covenant to permit re-entry and removal of the sewer pipes for breach of a covenant not to interfere with the flow of water in the river Somer across which the sewer was laid; (ii) in holding that the vesting of the sewer in the defendants under the Public Health Act, 1875, and the Public Health Act, 1936, was a vesting which was independent of the lease of the land for the sewer and overrode the terms of the lease; (iii) in holding that the vesting of the sewer in the defendants under the Public Health Act vested in them as a hereditament for an estate in fee simple subject to defeasance on the hereditament ceasing to be a sewer; (iv) in holding that the continuance of the sewer pipe by the defendants in its existing position causing an interference with the flow of the river was not a nuisance; (v) in holding that the defendants were not liable under s. 331 of the Public Health Act, 1936, for the interference with the fall of the water of the river by their sewer pipe; (vi) in holding that the defendants were entitled to take advantage of the lease of land for the laying of their sewer without complying with the clause in the lease restricting them from interfering with the flow of the river; and (vii) in holding that even if the clause in the lease was a condition of the exercise of the power of the defendants to lay and maintain their sewer, the vesting in them of the fee simple of their sewer under the Public Health Acts overrode the terms of the lease and the defendants would not be restricted by that condition.

I

Douglas Frank, Q.C., and H. Parrish for the plaintiffs.

Raymond Walton, Q.C., and W. H. Goodhart for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 5. The following judgments were read.

HARMAN, L.J.: In the years 1904 to 1907 the defendants' predecessors, the urban district council of the district of Radstock in the county of Somerset, were engaged, as their obligation was under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 15, in providing their district, and particularly the town of Radstock, with a system of sewerage. The local landowner was the then Earl Waldegrave and the council appears to have entered into some agreement with him on Aug. 26, 1904, in connexion with a sewer laid or proposed to be laid under his land. This document is not before us, but we do have a lease made on Mar. 15, 1907, between the Earl and the council under which the Earl in exercise of his Settled Land Act

A powers demised to the council a piece of land extending to some four acres for the purpose of a sewage works. Secondly there was demised an approach road then recently made by the council; thirdly a right to use a bridge over the River Somer, and fourthly

B "full and free power and liberty to convey sewage and waste water from the town and district of Radstock aforesaid . . . under the hereditaments shown on the plan hereto annexed and thereon coloured blue, (a) by means of . . ."

sewer pipes of a specified size along lines coloured red on the plan, and so forth,

C "... and for the purpose aforesaid to lay down and make under the said hereditaments pipes of the description hereinbefore mentioned . . . as may from time to time be necessary or expedient and shall be approved by the lessor."

There was also demised power to repair, replace and maintain the sewer pipes and for that purpose to enter on certain pieces of land coloured blue on the plan. The mines and minerals and power to work them by underground working were reserved. The habendum was in these terms:

D "To hold the said pieces of land powers liberties and premises unto the council and their successors except and reserving as aforesaid for the term of ninety-nine years from June 24, 1904, for the purposes of the disposal of the sewerages of the town and district subject to the existing tenancies "

E at rents there set out. The term and the rent were to begin at Michaelmas, 1904, when presumably the sewer was laid.

By this lease the council for themselves their successors and assigns covenanted with the lessor among other things:

F "(5) To complete the sewage tanks and other works shown on the plan in accordance with specifications to be approved on behalf of the lessor and at all times during the term to keep and maintain the pipes and other works in a proper condition and state of repair.

G "(14) The council in the exercise of the powers aforesaid will do as little damage as may be to the hereditaments coloured blue on the said plan or the timber or other trees underwood crops or vegetation gardens roads buildings gates and fences thereon and will as soon as may be make good any damage which may be done and the council will not interfere with the flow of or pollute the water in the River Somer."

Clause 18 provided for compensation to the landlord for any loss or damage sustained by reason of any work or operation of the council, including compensation such as would have been payable under the Public Health Act on compulsory acquisition. The term "lessor" is expressed to include

H "his heirs assigns and successors in title or other the person or persons for the time being entitled to receive the rent thereby reserved . . ."

I A large plan annexed to the lease shows a number of sewers, some not comprised in the lease, and shows also the sewer passing across the bed of the River Somer between points marked "M" and "N" on the plan, the nearest manholes being numbers 35 and 36 shown on the plan. According to the statement of claim the sewer was at this point laid in the bed of the river and though it is stated in the defence that it was not in fact sunk in the bed but laid on it, we must accept for the present purposes the allegation in the statement of claim. The sewer pipe was a twelve-inch pipe and it must be taken that, as the lease provides, it was laid with the approval of the lessor who owned the bed and soil of the river as riparian owner of the land on each side.

Why this transaction was carried out by lease is not apparent, and it would seem to be an odd way of putting the council into possession, for, so far as I can see, directly the sewers were laid they vested in the council for a freehold estate which overrode the term created by the demise. See per COZENS-HARDY, L.J., in Ystradgynodwg and Pontypridd Main Sewerage Board v. Bensted (Surveyor of Taxes) (1), where he said this: A

"I think it has now been settled by a long series of authorities binding upon all courts that a sewer vests in the authority, not merely in the sense of their having an easement, but in the sense that they are owners of the space embraced by the sewer, and that they have a right to that space as owners, as long as it is required for the purposes of the sewer. Perhaps the last authority on that point is the case of Westminster Corpn. v. Johnson (2), in which [SIR RICHARD HENN COLLINS, M.R.] said 'The person acquiring the interest are a corporation, and acquire it in fee'. They acquire it in fee, subject to a defeasance analogous to that in the case of an estate durante viduitate. We are not really concerned here as to when or under what circumstances it may come to an end. I think there is no doubt the authority are the owners of this sewer, and they have the property vested in them." B C

See also the last part of the headnote to Taylor v. Oldham Corpn. (3), where I find this:

"The usual clause in local Acts vesting sewers in the sewer authority confers an absolute property in that part of the subsoil occupied by any sewer, and not merely an easement or right of sewerage." D

That statement is justified by the judgments there delivered. This would leave the lessee's covenants operative as covenants as between lessor and lessee and possibly their successors in title but they would no longer be lessee's covenants attached to the demise. E

The sewage works were apparently built to the satisfaction of the landlord and nothing more is heard of this piece of land until the year 1915, when Earl Waldegrave let to the plaintiffs two pieces of it, contiguous to the sewer, one on each side of the river and shown pink on the plan, together with so much of the bed of the stream as lay between them. There was reserved among other things the free passage of water running in the stream, and the plan on this lease shows the sewer passing across the stream from the pink land on one side to the pink land on the other. Oddly enough, the existence of the sewer is not mentioned in this lease, but of course the lessee must have taken with knowledge of its existence and subject to the rights of the council in respect to it. At some time, about 1915, the plaintiffs, presumably with the consent of their lessor, built a private bridge over the stream to connect the two pieces of land or the buildings on them. This bridge in fact is immediately above the line of the sewer, but was built so as to be independent of it. In the year 1953 the successors in title of Earl Waldegrave, the Waldegrave Estates Company, sold the reversion on this last-mentioned lease to the plaintiffs, so that there has been, I suppose, a merger of the term and the freehold, mines and minerals being always excepted. F G

At some date unknown to the court but presumably in recent years something has occurred, for which neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants are responsible, to deepen the bed of the river, scouring out the bed to such an extent that the sewer formerly lying on or in the bed, is now in times of normal water above the water level but in times of flood the water rises and covers the sewer and its presence in the water creates turbulence, so it is said, and eddies, which have eroded the banks of the river forming part of the plaintiffs' property, and has undermined the piers on which the bridge rests. This is stated in para. 10 of the amended statement of claim in the following terms: H I

"The said sewer is now above the level of the bed of the river and by reason thereof the water flowing along the course of the said river is

(1) [1907] 1 K.B. 490 at p. 499.

(2) [1904] 2 K.B. 737 at p. 745.

(3) (1876), 4 Ch.D. 395 at p. 396.

A obstructed and eddies and forces of water in the said river created by or resulting from the obstruction have eroded the banks of the said river and undermined and damaged the said bridge of the plaintiffs referred to in para. 1 and para. 8 hereof."

By agreement during the hearing below the plaintiffs' case was set out in para. 9 of an amended statement of claim in the following terms:

B "The plaintiffs contend that the defendants are liable to the plaintiffs as follows:—(i) In nuisance at common law. (ii) In negligence for failure to exercise their statutory powers to avoid the creation of a nuisance or an injury to the plaintiffs. (iii) For breach of the aforementioned covenant [viz., cl. 14 of the 1907 lease]. (iv) For breach of the provisions of s. 331 of the Public Health Act, 1936."

C The defendants demur to this claim, and an order was made on July 15, 1966, stated to have been pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 33, r. 3, directing the setting down of the following issue to be disposed of before the trial, namely:

D "Whether on the footing that all the allegations of fact contained in the statement of claim in this action (so far as not admitted in the defence) can be proved the plaintiffs can as a matter of law be entitled to damages or an injunction as claimed in their statement of claim."

UNGOED-THOMAS, J., heard argument on this issue and came to the conclusion (4) that the defendants were right, or in other words that the statement of claim showed no cause of action, and he dismissed the action under R.S.C., Ord. 33, r. 7. The plaintiffs appeal.

E At this juncture I should like to protest against this method of procedure. This is not a preliminary point at all. It deals with the whole subject-matter of the action, and without any evidence, and the court is left in a most unsatisfactory position and has to guess at many things which on a hearing would be properly proved in evidence. The procedure proper to this kind of situation is by way of motion to strike out the statement of claim as showing no cause of action. That is a well-known method of putting an end to actions without substance, but it is also well known that the court will only strike out a statement of claim in plain cases where it is clear that the action cannot possibly succeed. That procedure would be entirely unsuitable to a case like the present, in which more than a score of authorities have been cited and argument has lasted over five days. Still, we are now confronted with a position in which both parties have acquiesced. The plaintiffs at any rate have only themselves to thank if they think the result unsatisfactory. The matter having gone so far, this court must, I think, accept the situation and deal with it as it finds it. I therefore approach the plaintiffs' case as stated in the amended statement of claim. This is based as stated at letter B, above.

H First, nuisance. The plaintiffs' case here is that the sewer in its present position is admittedly, at least in times of flood, an obstruction to the course of the water, that this obstruction is maintained by the defendants to the damage of the plaintiffs' property and is therefore on the face of it a nuisance, the plaintiffs being entitled as a natural right to the unobstructed flow of the water in the river. It seems to me that there is enough in this to throw on the defendants the burden of justifying the presence of the obstruction. This they do on several grounds:—(a) that the sewer was placed where it is with the approval of the plaintiffs' predecessor in title to the bed and banks of the river and has been properly maintained and never moved nor altered in any way since it was first laid; (b) that the scouring out of the bed of the river and the increased flow of water in it has nothing to do with the defendants, but is the result either of some natural cause or the operations of a riparian owner further up the stream, indeed, the defendants name the body said to have been the cause;

(c) it is admitted that the sewer as laid was not and continued not to be for many years afterwards a nuisance, and the defendants argue that it could not have become so through mere lapse of time without any action on their part. In support of this the defendants rely on the old case of R. v. Bell (5), where the headnote (so far as relevant) reads as follows:

"That, which is not a nuisance at the time it is done, cannot become so by length of time. It was proved that two batts or heaps of stones, made use of in throwing and landing nets, had been in the Tweed a time before the memory of man; and although they were admitted to be nuisances now, yet the court would not presume that they were so at the time of their erection, but on the contrary, intimated an opinion that the presumption ought to be, that at first they were not nuisances."

That was a decision of the Court of King's Bench sitting in banc and concerned two heaps of stones, known as batts, which in course of time had become an obstruction to navigation in the River Tweed. In the judgment, which was the judgment of the court, I find this (6):

"If the batts were not nuisances at the time of their erection, we cannot now adjudge them to be so, no more than we should be justified in calling a gate across a road a nuisance, because it now impeded the way, although, when it was first placed, it was, perhaps, of service to the public. Although, according to the cases of Fowler v. Sanders (7), and Hayward's Case (8), you cannot prescribe for a nuisance, yet that which was not a nuisance at its commencement, cannot become so merely by process of time. Under no such circumstances as those now presented to us, can we presume that originally they obstructed the course of the river."

This case is mentioned in 39 HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND (3rd Edn.) 537, note (v) in support of the statement that something which begins by not being a nuisance cannot grow to be one by mere lapse of time and appears to bear out that statement, which seems to me, apart from authority, to be right.

The plaintiffs much relied on Slater v. Worthington's Cash Stores (1930). Ltd. (9), where the defendants were the owners of a roof on which a mass of snow had collected. This slid off the roof and injured a passer-by and the defendants were held liable for a public nuisance; but there the nuisance consisted in the fall of the snow, not its presence on the roof. I should have held that the defendants were liable on the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher (10) in that they allowed the 'dangerous thing to collect on their property and thence to escape. They knew of it but made no attempt to remove it. That seems to me to be no authority applicable to the present case.

Ground (d) is that the sewer as vested in the council under the Public Health Act is a freehold hereditament existing in the land and that when the plaintiffs bought from Earl Waldegrave this situation already existed and the plaintiffs who are subsequent purchasers, must take subject to the rights of persons already owning adjoining or contiguous hereditaments. In other words, say the defendants, the plaintiffs took the river bed as it was with such inconveniences if any as were inherent in it and must take the situation as they find it. The bed of the river is the property of the plaintiffs and so is the space between the two banks except so much of it as is occupied by the sewer itself, which is freehold property of the defendants, and if a remedy be required the plaintiffs are entitled to make up the river bed to its former height and thus to put an end to the so-called nuisance.

In my opinion these submissions of the defendants are sound in law and the plaintiffs have no right to complain of a state of things which has existed before

(5) (1822), 1 L.J.O.S.K.B. 42.

(6) (1822), 1 L.J.O.S.K.B. at p. 44.

(7) (1617), Cro. Jac. 446.

(8) (1589), Cro. Eliz. 148.

(9) [1941] 3 All E.R. 28; [1941] 1 K.B. 488.

(10) [1861-73] All E.R. Rep. 1; (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330.

A and ever since they came into possession in 1915 and has never been altered by the defendants or anyone for whom they are responsible. I would therefore hold that the plea of nuisance is bad.

The judge relied on Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (11), where a water authority had placed a fire plug in a public highway which subsequently subsided leaving the plug sticking up. They were absolved because they were not responsible for the highway which was the liability of the highway authority. That body was not liable for nonfeasance, the state of the road not rendering them liable to be indicted, but that did not throw liability on the water company. This case seems to me to be distinguishable on its facts.

The second ground relied on by the plaintiffs is negligence. It was explained to us at the hearing that this plea was only intended to allege negligence in so far as it is a necessary element in claims of nuisance against a local authority. The negligence alleged is failure to exercise their statutory powers to avoid the creation of a nuisance. In other words, say the plaintiffs, the defendants, knowing of the state of things, have taken no steps to amend it. This is agreed, but unless the state of things itself would in a private person amount to a nuisance the failure to amend it cannot be a breach of the defendants' duty and this plea cannot succeed.

The third plea is breach of covenant in the lease. This is a covenant between the lessor, defined as I have mentioned, and the lessee, the words being "the council will not interfere with the flow of or pollute the water in the River Somer". In my judgment, in the first place this agreement not to interfere is limited to the "exercise of the powers aforesaid", that is to say so far as relevant the laying and maintenance of the sewer. It is common ground that when the sewer was laid it did not interfere with the flow nor has any default been made by the council in repairing or maintaining the sewer itself. I am therefore of opinion that this covenant does not help the plaintiffs. Apart from that it is in my opinion not a covenant the benefit of which passes to the plaintiffs, for they were merely subsequent lessees of hereditaments adjoining the sewer and not successors in title of the lessor in the sense referred to in the lease, not being persons entitled to the rent reserved who alone can enforce the lessees' covenant with the lessor. Moreover there was no attempt expressly to assign the benefit of the covenant to the plaintiffs. Furthermore the covenant cannot be enforced, in my opinion, as a restrictive covenant not being annexed to any particular land of the lessor either expressly or by implication. It was argued that it was annexed to any land of the lessor capable of being benefited by it; and Marquess of Zeland v. Driver (12) was cited in support. In my opinion this is not in point. The covenant there was expressed to be for the benefit of, among other things, the land then settled land in the hands of the vendor remaining unsold or persons to whom he should have expressly assigned the benefit of the covenant. The nuisance was such as should be in the opinion of the vendor a nuisance, and that was held to entitle him to affirm the opinion that the land to be benefited was so limited. There is nothing of that sort here. Apart from that I never heard that the doctrine of Rogers v. Hosegood (13) applied to covenants in a lease.

It is further suggested that this covenant might operate as a condition and that as such the council cannot take advantage of the right conferred by the lease to lay and maintain the sewer without complying with the condition; and Westhoughton Urban District Council v. Wigan Coal and Iron Co., Ltd. (14) was cited in support of this. In my judgment the short answer is that this covenant is not and cannot be construed as a condition and the principle does not apply.

Lastly, the statement of claim seeks to rely on s. 331 of the Public Health Act, 1936. This section, however, merely preserves the common law rights of persons injuriously affected and does not arise in the absence of nuisance.

For all these reasons, while deploring the method by which the action has been

(11) (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 462.

(12) [1938] 2 All E.R. 158; [1939] Ch.1.

(13) [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 915; [1900] 2 Ch. 388.

(14) [1919] 1 Ch. 159.

conducted I cannot but come to the conclusion that the statement of claim A discloses no valid cause of action and the case was therefore rightly dismissed by the judge as he had power to do under R.S.C., Ord. 33, r. 7.

RUSSELL, L.J.: We are asked to decide whether, on the assumed basis B that the relevant facts are truly stated in the statement of claim, the plaintiffs are entitled in law to fix responsibility for the damage to their property there alleged.

Those facts may be thus conveniently set out:—(i) the defendants' predecessors C in title laid a sewer across the River Somer in its bed by virtue of their powers under the Public Health Act, 1875, and under a ninety-nine year lease between Earl Waldegrave and the defendants' predecessors, to which reference may be made and in particular to covenant 14 by the defendants' predecessors. (ii) The D defendants are the local authority for the relevant district for the purposes of Part 2 of the Public Health Act, 1936. The sewer is vested in the defendants under s. 20 of the Act of 1936. (iii) In 1915 Earl Waldegrave demised to the plaintiffs premises including the bed and banks of the river surrounding and adjacent to the sewer. In 1915 the plaintiffs built a bridge on the demised premises over the river in the line of the sewer but so as not to interfere with E the sewer. (iv) In 1953 the freehold reversion expectant on the 1915 lease in the property then leased was conveyed to the plaintiffs by the successors in title to Earl Waldegrave to that reversion. (v) The sewer (without having moved) is now above the level of the bed of the river, and by reason thereof the water flowing in the river is obstructed and eddied, and forces of water in the river created by or resulting from the obstruction have eroded the plaintiffs' banks and undermined and damaged their bridge. (vi) The defendants have not exer- F cised any statutory powers to avoid the injury to the plaintiffs' property. (vii) Covenant 14 in the 1907 lease was with the lessor (which expression was defined as including where the context admitted his heirs assigns and successors in title or other the person or persons for the time being entitled to receive the rent thereby reserved) and was in the terms already read.

The question is whether on those facts, together with any other facts emerging F from the three documents mentioned, no claim can in law be sustained by the plaintiffs against the defendants in respect of the damage to their property, either under the heading of nuisance, or of breach of covenant 14, or by virtue of s. 331 of the Public Health Act, 1936.

I will take first the heading of nuisance, an unwarrantable and damaging G interference with the riparian rights of the plaintiffs; and in this connexion it is to be observed that it is not alleged that there was any impropriety in the original laying of the sewer in its present line and level, nor that the presence of the sewer has contributed to the lowering of the bed that has left the sewer so to speak in mid-water.

Suppose a case in which a riparian owner A builds for his own proper purpose H a structure on his own land near the river bank, perhaps with deep pile foundations. Years go by, and for some unknown reason (perhaps an increase in surface-water drainage into the river upstream, but anyway through no act or fault of A, the river starts to scour and erode the bank until ultimately the pile foundations nearest the river are exposed to the water and finally obstruct the flow, causing turbulence and eddying which reacts damagingly on the property I of a lower riparian owner B. Surely in such a case B could not complain in law that A, was guilty of nuisance in interfering with the natural right of B to the accustomed flow of water, nor be entitled to require A either to pull down the structure or undertake other works to end the turbulence and eddying. Nor can I see that the position would be otherwise in law if the structure was a drainage pipe laid originally and harmlessly in the bed of the river, and the scouring by the waters years later was of the bed rather than the banks. R. v. Bell (15)

A concerned an alleged public nuisance of obstruction to navigation in the River Tweed by maintaining in the river artificial heaps of stones (known as batts) used in throwing and landing fishing nets. The procedural details do not matter, but the court was clearly of the view that if when originally constructed the batts were not an obstruction to navigation, either because they were constructed on dry land, or because they were constructed in shallow places not susceptible to navigation, they could not become such nuisance merely because of an alteration in the course or channel of the river. I am not confident that it is necessarily safe to draw conclusions as to private nuisance from cases about public nuisances: but it would certainly seem likely that the court in that case would agree with the views that I have expressed above.

B The nuisance alleged is a damaging interference with the riparian rights of the plaintiffs. The right of a riparian owner is not a right to have his property undamaged by the waters of the stream, but a right (so far as now material) to have the waters flow in their natural course to and through his property in their accustomed manner. If the waters change their course naturally, either laterally or horizontally, and the new course makes them impinge with consequent turbulence on an existing artificial construction, that construction cannot be said to interfere with the accustomed manner of the flow in that course, because in that course the manner of flow has never been otherwise.

D What then of the present case? It differs only from the second example given above in that the drain-pipe (the sewer) is not upstream from B but is actually in B's property, and indeed was there for many years before B bought. I cannot see that those facts or either of them serve to improve B's position in law. As against B, the owner of the pipe, quite apart from any particular privilege as a sewer authority, was perfectly entitled to maintain the pipe in the line and level where he laid it, and a natural change in the bed of the stream over the years does not alter that entitlement.

E We were much pressed with Slater v. Worthington's Cash Stores (1930), Ltd. (16), (in the Court of Appeal) as pointing to liability in this case. Try as I can, I cannot see its relevance. In that case to the knowledge of the defendants there had been for several days a massive collection of snow and ice on the sloping roof of their shop, and it was or should have been obvious that a sudden thaw would precipitate it on to the pavement to the danger of a passer-by; and by just such an avalanche the plaintiff was injured while window-shopping. The defendants knew of the risk of such injury and they could have avoided it by clearing their own roof, and should have done so. It is suggested that the water in the stream in the present case, bouncing or falling off the sewer and causing damage, is the equivalent of snow coming on to the roof and then falling off; but I have no doubt that if in the Slater case (16) it had appeared that the danger could only have been avoided by moving the defendants' premises no nuisance would have been found. The right of the injured person was not to complain of the existence of the roof because it had snow on it but to complain of the failure to remove the snow when it was obviously dangerous and could have been removed.

H In my judgment these considerations dispose briefly of the assertion of nuisance, and it is not necessary to consider other aspects of this part of the case—in particular the question of some degree of negligence in failing to exercise statutory powers being an essential part of an allegation of nuisance against this statutory authority by reason of judicial interpretation of s. 31 of the Public Health Act, 1936, and whether s. 331 of the Act of 1936 in this case removes the requirement.

I Equally those considerations dispose of the suggestion that a claim may be founded on s. 331 of the Public Health Act, 1936: for that section is a mere saving of common law rights.

That leaves the question of covenant 14 in the 1907 lease. The lease purported to grant an easement in respect of this length of sewer for a period of ninety-nine years; but I have no doubt on authority that under the Public Health Acts the sewer vested in the authority (as is asserted in the statement of claim) and moreover vested in it for a determinable fee. When the relevant bed and banks were leased to the plaintiffs in 1915 and conveyed to the plaintiffs in 1953, no title to or reversion to the sewer was leased or conveyed to the plaintiffs. There was neither privity of contract nor privity of estate between the plaintiffs and defendants in respect of this covenant. Nor can this covenant be enforced by the plaintiffs apart from such privity as a restrictive covenant. There has never been an annexation of the benefit of the covenant to any land now of the plaintiffs either in the 1907 lease or subsequently.

It was further argued that the covenant might be treated as a condition on which alone the defendants could assert a right to keep the sewer in the line and level laid, and that by analogy with Westhoughton Urban District Council v. Wigan Coal and Iron Co., Ltd. (17) the plaintiffs could insist on the condition. I am far from satisfied that the covenant in fact relates to maintaining the sewer in its position as distinct from the laying of it; but in any event it cannot be construed as a condition.

I would dismiss the appeal.

SACHS, L.J.: In the category of cases which come before the courts in an unsatisfactory form, the one now under consideration ranks high. Any preliminary issue that falls to be tried in the course of an action should always be one in which great care is taken to ensure that the issue presented for decision is well-defined and that the facts on which it has to be considered are clearly ascertainable. In the present case there is not simply a single point for consideration but a whole series, and no such care was taken as regards any of them: moreover when the pleadings came to be amended in the middle of the trial before the judge of first instance the result was to make the matters less rather than more clear.

The mischief has arisen from an order which the plaintiffs opposed but from which they failed to appeal. This seeks in effect to reintroduce proceedings in the nature of a demurrer, when the foundations for such proceedings have very rightly long been swept away. The order, the precise effect of which will be further analysed later in this judgment, was that a preliminary issue of law be tried on the basis that the facts set out in the statement of claim were true. That might have worked in the first part of the last century, but since then pleadings have been encouraged to become somewhat imprecise as regards facts, with liberal latitude given for amendments, and law need not be pleaded at all. The essence of demurrer proceedings was precision both on facts and law.

Nowadays the defendant who considers that the statement of claim discloses no cause of action should, save in most exceptional cases of which this is not one, seek to strike out the statement of claim on that ground. Had such an application been made in the present case it could not possibly have succeeded. If, however, there is some compact point of law which can be raised by way of a preliminary issue this should be, as above stated, clearly defined. In these circumstances any judgment which I can give must be delivered without any confidence that it will meet the justice of the case on either side.

The nature of the action is a claim by the plaintiffs as riparian owners of certain premises and lands for damage being caused to them by the flow of the River Somer. The causes of action as laid are in nuisance and in breach of covenant—and at this early stage it is convenient to mention that although para. 9 of the statement of claim refers to negligence, that has been specifically stated at the Bar not to refer to any independent cause of action but merely to certain supplementary facts which have to be proved in order to get a claim for nuisance on its feet against a public authority. There is also an allegation that

A relief is claimed under s. 331 of the Public Health Act, 1936—but that is not a section which of itself could provide any plaintiff with a cause of action.

It seems to me convenient to consider first the claim in nuisance—only referring to the position between the parties created by the leases of 1907 and 1915 and the conveyance of 1953 in so far as it may provide a defence to such a claim. The damage alleged in the statement of claim to have been suffered by the plaintiffs arose, according to the allegations in the statement of claim, from there lying across the River Somer and “above the level of the bed of the river” a sewer (i.e., an artificially constructed object) which is vested in the defendants. The plaintiffs’ case is that that sewer causes eddies which have eroded the bank structure of their land on either side of the river and have also adversely affected a private bridge of theirs which joins their premises on the two sides. Those allegations must for the purposes of this judgment be assumed to be true.

It is as well at the outset to note that at any rate in cases of the class now under consideration an action in nuisance differs from one in negligence in that (save in certain exceptional cases) once facts are established which show that there emanates from the defendant’s property something which in law prima facie constitutes a nuisance causing damage, then in nuisance it is for the defendant to exculpate himself, whilst in negligence it is for the plaintiff to prove that the damage was caused by the fault of the defendant. Once it is shown that an artificial object belonging to a defendant is so placed in the bed or stream of a river that it diverts the fall of the water in such a way as to cause damage to a riparian owner, then that state of affairs prima facie constitutes a nuisance for which the person to whom the damage is caused has an action. In cases, however, where the defendant is a public authority whose works are in the relevant position by virtue of statutory powers, there is engrafted on this principle a brake in the shape of the need for the plaintiff to establish that the state of affairs complained of is in some degree due to the fault, usually referred to as negligence, of the defendant authority.

In the present case the court has to commence its examination of the position from the footing that the sewer is the property of the defendants, that by reason of its position at the date of action brought it is interfering with the flow of the river, and that this interference is causing damage to the plaintiffs. Such interference being prima facie a nuisance I accordingly agree with Harman, L.J., that the onus lies on the defendants to justify that state of affairs. What then are the matters raised by the defendants so as to exculpate themselves? These appear to be as follows. First, that there is no allegation in the statement of claim that the sewer was a nuisance when first it was laid and/or that the defendants have taken since it was laid any active step turning it into a nuisance; secondly, that the terms of the Public Health Acts provide a defence; thirdly, that the plaintiffs do not on the pleadings show a prima facie case of that negligence which must be established before a public authority can be liable in nuisance; and fourthly, that the terms of the leases and the conveyance and their effect provide a defence.

Before examining these defences in more detail it seems at this stage proper to analyse the pleading position. The only allegations in the statement of claim which were needed to raise a prima facie case in nuisance were those set out in para. 1 (which sets out what are the premises of which the plaintiffs are owners); para. 2, which sets out that the defendants are the local authority and laid the sewer under their powers as such authority; that the defendants are the owners of the sewer; the facts set out in para. 10 of the amended statement of claim (18) as to the position of the sewer and the present effects of its being in the river; and lastly an allegation (to be found in para. 9 of the amended statement of claim (19)) that the defendants were negligent in failing to exercise their statutory powers to avoid the creation or existence of a nuisance or injury to the (18) Paragraph 10 is printed at p. 64, letter I, to p. 65, letter A, ante.

(19) Paragraph 9 is printed at p. 65, letter B, ante.

plaintiff. Any further allegations in the statement of claim, though needed to raise a claim under the covenant in the 1907 lease, are redundant from the point of view of raising a prima facie case in nuisance; but once thus set out they can, of course, be relied on by the defendants as raising defences to the prima facie case—and indeed it is only by so relying on them that the defendants seek to succeed on a demurrer. For this purpose, however, these allegations must in practice be scrutinised in the same way as if they had been transferred to a defence and there examined to see whether such allegations without supplementation by any other facts must necessarily entitle the defendants to succeed. Much thus turns on the onus of proof. A B

The adoption of this method of looking at the matter assists in the ascertainment whether facts have been omitted from the pleadings which the defendants must establish before they can succeed and also whether the facts are sufficiently clearly stated as to present any single picture which might lead the court to say that in no circumstances can the plaintiffs obtain a judgment. C

As soon as this is done it becomes evident that no facts are alleged which make it clear how far, when the defendants' predecessors laid the sewer in 1904, they were doing so by virtue of their statutory powers, or how far this was done by virtue of some and if so what agreement—for the agreement of Aug. 26, 1904, has never been placed before the court. Similarly the court is left unaware what precisely is meant by the words "in the bed of" the river (see para. 4 of the statement of claim) or whether it was so laid as to be "under the hereditaments" in accordance with the terms of the 1907 lease. It is to be noted in this behalf that varying suggestions were made during the course of the argument before this court whether the top of the sewer casing was, when originally laid, below the surface of the river bed or projected above it, and that neither of the phrases "in the bed" or "on top of or above the bed" as used in the respective pleadings proved to be free of ambiguities on this point. Again there is nothing in the pleadings to show whether at the time the sewer was originally laid the bed of the river was showing any, and if so what, scouring tendency and whether, thus, those who laid the sewer could reasonably have foreseen that scouring action would gradually lower the bed of the river. (That the bed of the river did at some stage sink is alleged in the defence to be due in part at any rate to "the natural action of the water in the said river"—a point to which I will return.) Another matter of fact which does not appear in the statement of claim, and to which in my view there was no need to refer, is the date at which the scouring began adversely to affect the banks of the river or the bridge respectively: and on demurrer the date most favourable to the plaintiffs should be assumed. The relevance of these facts to the question whether the defendants succeed in justifying the damage being caused by their artificially created property in the stream will be dealt with later: for the present the mere recital of a catalogue of some of the facts not alleged in the assumed defence and unknown to the court makes plain how difficult it may be to attempt to try on a pleading and without evidence what appears to be regarded as an important case having regard to the continuing damage. Had this matter been brought before the court on a Case Stated it would to my mind inevitably have been sent back for further facts to be ascertained—some of which will be referred to later in this judgment. D E F G H

Turning to the first and main justification alleged by the defendants to exculpate them from causing what is prima facie a nuisance, the issue seems to be raised in the form that the sewer was laid in 1904 and that there is no allegation in the statement of claim that the defendants have since in any way tampered with it or with the bed of the river. (There is, be it noted, no plea of prescription, nor has it been raised in argument by the defendants; the statutes of limitation cannot, of course, be regarded in demurrer proceedings.) I

Whether the fact that an artificial object causing a damaging interference with the flow of water in a river can be justified by the mere length of time of its

A existence in the water is one of those points on which there is a curious absence of authority. The nearest case is one which was brought to the notice of counsel in this court from note (v) in 39 HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND (3rd Edn.) p. 537, viz., R. v. Bell (20) which concerned an indictment relating to batts placed in a navigable river at some time beyond the memory of man. The issues arose on the case being removed by a writ of certiorari into the Court of King's Bench

B after verdict. From the judgment of the court it appears that they were of the opinion that (21)

"If the batts were not nuisances at the time of their erection, we cannot now adjudge them to be so... you cannot prescribe for a nuisance, yet that which was not a nuisance at its commencement cannot become so merely by process of time."

C Judgment was, however, suspended so that the prosecutors might have an opportunity of preferring another indictment at the trial of which it could be left to the jury to say whether these batts, immemorially erected, were a nuisance, when first erected. How far that case is a satisfactory authority in relation to the issues now before the court is much open to question. It concerned a criminal

D trial; it related to a navigable river and thus the public right of navigation; it seems in part at variance with the later case of Williams v. Wilcox (22); and it does not appear to have been cited in that later case or in any other authorities or text-books found by counsel in their researches. Moreover it does not purport to consider the issue whether when the batts were erected there was a reasonable possibility or likelihood of their becoming later a nuisance which could have been then foreseen.

E The authorities on the question of foreseeability (some of which are referred to in 39 HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND (3rd Edn.) p. 523) were not fully canvassed before this court, but as at present advised to my mind the owner of an erection which prima facie constitutes a nuisance cannot exculpate himself by the mere plea that it was not a nuisance when first erected.

F The mere unsupplemented fact that it was not a nuisance when erected is no more in principle a cast-iron defence on demurrer whether the erection is stated to have taken place sixty days, sixty weeks, sixty months or sixty years before the date of action brought: and that would be so whether or not causation of damage is an essential ingredient in a cause of action in nuisance by interference with the flow of water. In an action for nuisance where it is for the defendant

G to exculpate himself it is not for the plaintiff to allege in the statement of claim that the erection might well later cause damage; it is for the defendant to allege and prove that this could not be foreseen. The onus is on the defendant. There is no fact set out in this statement of claim of which the defendants can avail themselves on this point and that, to my mind, is of itself sufficient to disable them from seeking an order as on a demurrer.

H It is convenient next to turn to the second of the legs on which the defendants sought to rest their first justification. They contended—indeed strongly reiterated—the point that since 1904 they had done nothing to create the nuisance: it was, so the argument ran, the action of the waters themselves that created the nuisance.

I Nuisance is, as has often been observed, a tort of which the components vary so much that it is not susceptible of any comprehensive definition; but one thing is clear. The action of time or weather or other natural forces not under the defendant's control can in certain events result in there being a nuisance emanating from the defendant's property through no original active fault of his which he must remedy because it may be his duty to stop the effects of what has happened through no such fault.

(20) (1822), 1 L.J.O.S.K.B. 42.

(21) (1822), 1 L.J.O.S.K.B. at p. 44.

(22) [1835-42] All E.R. Rep. 25; (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 314.

Instances can be found such as the nuisance caused by snow that has fallen on a properly erected building (Slater v. Worthington's Cash Stores (1930), Ltd. (23) or the spreading, perhaps after scores of years, of the roots of a self-seeded tree. The air-raid shelter case (Fisher v. Ruislip-Northwood Urban District Council and Middlesex County Council (24)) may be an example of the effect of changing circumstances, but seems in a different category. In Slater v. Worthington's (23) the plaintiffs founded their case on the defendant having "suffered" a state of affairs to continue after it came to his knowledge: OLIVER, J., held (25) and SCOTT and GODDARD, L.J.J., (23) specifically affirmed, that it was a clear case in nuisance to which there was no answer. Taking no action to remedy a state of affairs of which one has or ought to have knowledge is the essence of certain types of nuisance (see the cases discussed by OLIVER, J.), of which this to my mind is one—at any rate if the action of the natural flow of waters was foreseeable. It follows that in the present case this second leg of the defendant's justification also does not provide them with a defence for demurrer purposes.

So far I have considered the position without reference to the fact that the defendants laid the sewer under their powers as a public authority; but that fact puts an additional difficulty in their way on demurrer. This emerges from passages in the judgments of SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R., and ROMER, L.J., in Pride of Derby and Derbyshire Angling Association, Ltd. v. British Celanese, Ltd. (26)—even after taking into account the fact that that case was concerned with pollution of water and not with turbulence of water. In that case the sewer works had been carried out by a local authority in a manner entirely proper at the time when they were executed. There is mentioned the submission of counsel for the second defendants which was parallel to that made by counsel for the defendants in this case. It ran (27):

"Once it is shown that the works were authorised by the local Act and carried out satisfactorily by the local authority, there can be no liability if later, through circumstances outside the control of the local authority, damage results."

That argument was rejected by SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R., (28) and also by ROMER, L.J. (29). In both judgments reference is made to the local authority having no answer to an action in nuisance unless it can show that the nuisance complained of is the inevitable consequence of that which the Act both authorised and contemplated.

On that footing if the sewer in the present case was laid by virtue of the provisions of the Public Health Acts, it appears that the onus on these defendants is even higher than that which I have indicated. It seems that they can only exculpate themselves if they can show that it was inevitable that a sewer laid on the relevant line under the River Somer would become a nuisance. Thus they might have to show that irrespective of the depth which they could lay under the bed and irrespective of any measures which they might take by way of foundations or ramping, the sewer would inevitably have later emerged into mid-stream and cause the damaging turbulence. Here again it is to my mind not for the plaintiffs to allege that the turbulence was "not inevitable"; it would be for the defendants to allege and prove that it was inevitable. If so, that is a further reason for deciding against the defendants on a demurrer.

The artificiality of the situation which faces this court is underlined by counsel for the defendants having frankly conceded that if the statement of claim had contained an allegation of foreseeability he would not have been there arguing

(23) [1941] 3 All E.R. 28; [1941] 1 K.B. 488.

(24) [1945] 2 All E.R. 458; [1945] K.B. 584.

(25) [1941] 1 K.B. at p. 490.

(26) [1953] 1 All E.R. 179; [1953] Ch. 149.

(27) [1953] Ch. at p. 157; see [1953] 1 All E.R. at p. 186, letter B.

(28) [1953] 1 All E.R. at p. 194, et seq.; [1953] Ch. at p. 175, et seq.

(29) [1953] 1 All E.R. at p. 205; [1953] Ch. at p. 193.

A for a demurrer decision: and that seems equally applicable to any inevitability issue. The artificiality is patently increased when there is to be found in the defence allegations that the sewer was laid on or above the bed of the river and that "the natural action of the water" was one cause of the bed of the river becoming lower: those two allegations point towards rather than against foreseeability of what has now happened.

B The next issue is whether the Public Health Acts provide the defendants with a defence if they would, but for those Acts, be liable at common law. Subject to the point whether the plaintiffs' allegations in the statement of claim, if accepted as accurate, show a prima facie case of negligence (the next question to be discussed) the answer to my mind is clearly in the negative.

C Section 331 of the Act of 1936 (which replaces s. 332 of the Act of 1875) manifestly preserves the relevant rights of riparian owners as regards nuisance. Moreover s. 31 of the Act of 1936, which reads

"A local authority shall so discharge their functions under the foregoing provisions of this Part of this Act as not to create a nuisance", goes even further. Indeed, as indicated by ROMER, J., in Stretton's Derby Brewery Co. v. Derby Corpn. (30), when he refers to the parallel s. 19 in the Act of 1875 "casting a liability" on the public authority, it seems to me to provide a cause of action: and if failure to remedy a state of affairs may be said to create a nuisance (as appears from the authorities already mentioned) then it may in the present case be of affirmative use to the plaintiffs, if pleaded and relied on in lieu of s. 331.

E As regards the cases discussed by the trial judge, I will refer to two. The first is Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (31): there no reference was made to any provisions in the statutes then under consideration which were parallel to s. 31 and s. 331 in the Public Health Act, 1936. The second is Great Central Ry. Co. v. Hewlett (32). That turned on statutory authority relating to specific posts in position; and I respectfully agree with and adopt the view expressed by LORD GREENE in Fisher v. Ruiship-Northwood Urban District Council (33) that the Great Central Railway case (32) should be regarded as of authority only in relation to a somewhat narrow set of facts. I doubt if either of these authorities is strictly in point in the present case.

F Next I turn to the issue of that negligence which must be established where s. 31 applies (Stretton's Derby Brewery Co. v. Derby Corpn. (30) and which is intended to be raised in para. 9 of the amended statement of claim in the following words:

"In negligence for failure to exercise their statutory powers to avoid the creation of a nuisance or an injury to the plaintiffs."

A more unsatisfactory and imprecise way of alleging negligence is hard to conceive: there are no particulars as to what ought to have been done and no specific reference to provisions of any acts under which this could be done. I am not prepared in demurrer type proceedings, however, to assume in the absence of evidence that at all relevant times after they were aware of the likelihood of damage to the plaintiffs' property from the disturbance of the flow of the river the defendants were unable to remedy the situation. A concrete ramp up to the top of the sewer is one possible remedy and there are others. Nor am I prepared to say on demurrer that the defendants had no power to provide a remedy. It would be absurd if they could not: and apart from any specific powers they have inherent powers to do such work. So the defendants can in the proceedings before this court derive no comfort or protection from the fact that they are a public authority.

That leaves for consideration the final question whether there is anything to

(30) [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 731; [1894] 1 Ch. 431.

(31) (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 462.

(32) [1916-17] All E.R. Rep. 1027; [1916] 2 A.C. 511.

(33) [1945] 2 All E.R. at p. 464; [1945] K.B. at p. 598.

be collected from the terms of the leases of 1907 and 1915 or the conveyance of 1953 which necessarily results in the defendants having a complete defence to the plaintiffs' claim. Here again it is a pity that the preliminary issues of fact and law were not crystallised for submission to the court. In so far as it was suggested on behalf of the defendants that a defence arises because the parties both derive their title from a common source, I am unable to see how that of itself provides a defence. For the rest the the defendants' case seemed to be the equivalent of a defence of leave or licence, or perhaps an estoppel. The moment, however, one looks at the lease of 1907 (without, incidentally, having had a sight of the 1904 agreement) it seems more than difficult to assert leave and licence to create a nuisance when that lease contains in cl. 14 an express covenant that "the council will not interfere with the flow of . . . the water in the River Somer". The provision in the same clause that the council is not to pollute the water shows, incidentally, that it was intended that the obligations set out in the covenant were to continue throughout the ninety-nine years duration of the lease. Even if the plaintiffs cannot found an action on the covenant in cl. 14 (a matter on which I refer to reserve my opinion—for the order requires no more than a decision on the statement of claim as a whole), it seems to me that the defendants in the face of that covenant cannot rely on the lease as a grant of leave or licence to create a nuisance. Nothing that has happened since gives them such leave or licence.

As regards the effect of any concurrence by the lessor in any plans used when the sewer was erected, there is no material from which this court can gather what if anything the plans showed as to the depth at which the sewer was to be laid, what if any concurrence of the lessors was obtained, and whether any concurrence was before or after the date of the lease. If the defendants wish to rely on such matters they must allege them and prove them by evidence. It does not seem to me that such issues can or should be decided in demurrer type proceedings—remembering that the defendants seek to shut the plaintiffs out from having their case tried in the normal way.

On a final analysis it appears that the matters on which I have the misfortune to differ from my brethren in regard to the cause of action in nuisance are in essence points of pleading. Must certain allegations be set out in the statement of claim or if so set out would they in law merely seek to anticipate a potential defence of which the burden lies on the defendants? The difference may be even narrower if it stems from variations of approach to pleadings as between divisions of the High Court. In any event it has been, as already mentioned, underlined by factors to which I have already referred.

In those circumstances, even if wrong in the views which I have expressed on these demurrer type issues, I would not myself have exercised the discretion given by R.S.C., Ord. 33, r. 7 in such a way as may finally debar the plaintiffs from pursuing their claim or create estoppels against them.

I would have preferred only to determine by means of a declaration the precise point put before the court for decision—whether the particular set of allegations in the statement of claim discloses a cause of action—leaving it to the plaintiffs then to decide what their course should be. The courts should to my mind lean against shutting out the plaintiff from pursuing a claim which, despite any lacuna in their present pleading, may well yet prove to be properly founded.

For these reasons I would have set aside the order under appeal—but that is a view to which effect will not be given by the court.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted.

Solicitors: Taylor Willcocks & Co., agents for Kent, Rathmell & Young, Radstock (for the plaintiffs); Knapp-Fishers, agents for Faulkner, Creswick & Gould, Bath (for the defendants).

[Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A R. v. GREEN. R. v. DALE. R. v. REYNOLDS. R. v. LAIRD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Salmon, L.J., Phillimore and Blain, J.J.), February 22, 1968.]

B Legal Aid—Criminal cases—Grant—Practice—Offer of legal aid to be made by court where heavy sentence likely, even though accused pleads guilty—Sentence of thirty months' marginal—Duty of court to ensure representation where circumstances clearly require careful inquiry.

C It has previously been intimated by the court* that where it is likely that a prisoner who pleads guilty will receive a sentence of the order of five years' imprisonment, he should be offered legal aid before he is sentenced. It is not, however, desirable that a particular term of sentence should be treated as requiring legal representation to be offered. Regard should be had to all the circumstances, and, though a sentence of only thirty months' imprisonment may be marginal for this purpose, yet where there are circumstances that clearly require careful inquiry, as where a social inquiry report recommends probation, it is the duty of the court to try to ensure representation before passing a severe prison sentence (see p. 80, letters E and F, post).

E Sentences of thirty months' imprisonment on each of four accused who pleaded guilty were reviewed on applications for leave to appeal, the sentences having been imposed without legal representation having been offered to the accused; the Court of Appeal, having granted legal aid, reduced two of the four sentences, one accused being put on probation (see p. 79, letters A and E, post).

[As to legal aid in criminal cases, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 371-373, paras. 675, 676.]

Cases referred to:

F R. v. Mahoney, R. v. Stevens, (June 23, 1967), unreported.

R. v. O'Brien, (Nov. 14, 1967), unreported.

R. v. Serghiou, [1966] 3 All E.R. 637, n.; [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1611; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 509, 556a.

Applications for leave to appeal.

G The applicants had pleaded guilty to various offences of housebreaking, larceny or false pretences, and, without being offered legal aid, had been sentenced at Inner London Quarter Sessions each to thirty months' imprisonment. They applied for leave to appeal against sentence. The charges and sentences were as follows. The applicants Charles Guy Green and Anthony Michael Dale had each pleaded guilty on Aug. 22, 1967, to three counts of housebreaking and larceny, and they were each sentenced to thirty months' imprisonment. The applicant John Reynolds, pleaded guilty on Aug. 9, 1967, at Old Street magistrates' court to charges of obtaining by false pretences and larceny. He was committed to quarter sessions for sentence on Aug. 22, 1967, and was sentenced to thirty months' imprisonment for obtaining by false pretences and six months' concurrent on the larceny charge. The applicant John Richard Laird, pleaded guilty on Aug. 2, 1967, at South Western magistrate's court to a charge of larceny. He was committed to quarter sessions for sentence on Aug. 22, 1967, and he was sentenced to thirty months' imprisonment. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court.

I G. A. Bathurst Norman for the applicants Green and Reynolds.

R. S. J. Brock for the applicants Dale and Laird.

PHILLIMORE, J., delivered the following judgment of the court: The court has heard these four applications together, since they have certain features in common. Each applicant received a sentence of thirty months' imprisonment from the same deputy chairman, at Inner London quarter sessions, O.S. MACLEAY, Esq. All were sentenced on the same day. In each case the applicant was not represented, and for this reason the single judge has referred each application to this court expressing the view that the decisions of this court required that before passing such a sentence the court should endeavour to ensure that the accused is legally represented. This court has itself granted legal aid and has had every assistance from counsel. The court proposes, to deal with each application on its merits, and to reserve any general observations to the end of this judgment. A B

* See, e.g., R. v. Serghiou, [1966] 3 All E.R. 637, n.

First then are the applications of Green and Dale. The applicant Green is twenty-four and the applicant Dale is twenty-one and on Aug. 22, each pleaded guilty to three counts of housebreaking and larceny at Inner London Quarter Sessions and are sentenced to thirty months' imprisonment. The circumstances were that the applicant Green lived in the house of a Mr. Marshall, the house having been divided into flats, and on July 18, the applicants Green and Dale took the keys of Mr. Marshall's flat from a cupboard outside Mr. Marshall's room, and then having entered the room stole £8. On July 19, they returned to his room and stole clothing and other property. Finally, having taken from Mr. Marshall's room keys to other rooms in the house, they entered the room of a Mr. Ellu and stole clothing, a tape recorder and other property. Some of the stolen property was recovered from the applicant Dale's home but property worth about £140 was said to be missing. C D

Counsel on behalf of the applicant Green has pointed out that the statement that he made to the police really was only an admission on the first count, and in effect alleged that the second and third counts to which he had pleaded guilty, were the work of the applicant Dale and two other men. It is also pointed out that in his case he was some years ago committed to a mental hospital and was there for three years. The court does not think that there is any ground for supposing that these two applicants did not commit these three offences to which they pleaded guilty, and it does not propose to differentiate between them on any grounds of the sort put forward in the applicant Green's statement. Each of them had sufficient experience of courts to decide on these pleas. E F

So far as the applicant Green is concerned, he has a very bad record. He has had nine previous convictions of which no less than five were for housebreaking, and on the last two offences, i.e., in July 1964 and April, 1966, he received sentences of nine months and twelve months' imprisonment respectively, and in between he had a sentence of a month's imprisonment for receiving. The court thinks that in his case a sentence of thirty months was proper and did not err in severity. Accordingly his application is dismissed. G

In the case of the applicant Dale, however, there was a probation officer's report. The applicant Dale, when asked whether he wanted to say anything, referred to the fact that there was a report and the deputy chairman said "I have seen the report" and then turned to the applicant Green and asked him what he wanted to say. Now, in fact that report contained a strong recommendation, in spite of the applicant Dale's record, for probation. The basis on which it was put was this, that the applicant Dale, who is immature and ill-educated, had been living with his mother and she then had left their home taking the furniture and fittings, leaving him with no food or money and it was in those circumstances that he had embarked on the commission of these offences. He had, however, more recently found a home with a Mr. McEwan whom he looks on as his father. The probation officer expressed the view that the applicant Dale would settle down in an institution and would be no trouble to anybody there; but if he is ever to live a life in society, what he needs is help to manage his life and affairs in a socially acceptable way. The court, in such circumstances, could very well have been assisted by hearing the probation officer, and if it had done that, it would have been reasonable to give him legal aid so that his counsel could consider the matter and urge such matters as he thought fit on behalf of the H I

A applicant. This was not done, and accordingly this sentence was passed. This court thinks that this is a case for probation. [His LORDSHIP then asked the applicant Dale whether he was prepared to be put on probation, and, having explained the effect of being put on probation, directed him to be put on probation for three years, making it a condition of the probation order that he should reside where the probation officer decided.]

B I turn now to the case of the applicant Reynolds. He is twenty-five, and he pleaded guilty on Aug. 9 at a magistrate's court to a count of obtaining by false pretences and to a count of larceny, and was committed for sentence at Inner London Quarter Sessions, where on Aug. 22 he was sentenced to thirty months' imprisonment on the first count and six months' concurrent on the second count. What he had done was that on Aug. 8 he had gone to the Ministry of Social Security offices and stated that he had acquired lodgings, which was untrue, and attempted to obtain £6 10s. national assistance. When he was seen by the police, he admitted the offence, and when he was searched, a driving licence and a certificate of insurance, stolen from a Mr. Coppin, were found on him. He stated that he found them, and there was nothing to show that this was other than stealing by finding. He had a bad record, although some of his offences have been comparatively trivial. However, on the last occasion when he was before the court, he was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for attempted false pretences and office breaking with intent, on which he had previously been conditionally discharged and four other matters were taken into consideration.

This was a case where clearly a prison sentence was inevitable, but he had no representation and the matters that were to be put forward on his behalf were not mentioned. The statement that he had made to the police was never read, and this court feels that in all the circumstances this sentence was too severe. Each member of this court independently took the view that the proper sentence would have been eighteen months, twelve months for false pretences and six months consecutive for the larceny. Accordingly this court is prepared to treat this application as the hearing of the appeal, and to substitute the sentence I have indicated. Of course, in these circumstances he is free to return to this court to seek some further reduction, but we certainly give him no encouragement to take that course.

Finally, the applicant Laird's application for leave to appeal against sentence. He is thirty-eight, and on Aug. 2, at a magistrates' court he pleaded guilty to larceny and was committed for sentence to Inner London Quarter Sessions, where on Aug. 22 he was sentenced to thirty months' imprisonment. The circumstances were that he was employed by a firm to sell goods on credit and also to collect money for goods that he had previously sold, and he was supplied with a van by his employers. He arranged with two men, whom he met in a public house, that he would leave his van in a particular place, so that they could hijack it. In return he was to receive a third of the proceeds from the sale of the goods in the van. In pursuance of this plan he left his van on July 29, at the pre-arranged place and left in it clothing and other goods worth over £1,000. The van had disappeared when he returned and he reported this loss to the police, and it was subsequently found but the goods had disappeared. He was a man who had a good character until 1965, and then he was convicted of a number of charges of falsification of accounts and charges of fraudulent conversion and sentenced to nine months' imprisonment. This court can find no ground for reducing the sentence in his case. Thirty months was by no means too long, and accordingly his application is dismissed.

Before parting with these applications, this court desires to add a few words as to the grounds on which the single judge referred them. In R. v. Mahoney, R. v. Stevens (1), DIPLOCK, L.J., said about the application by Stevens for leave to appeal from a sentence of five years passed at Inner London Quarter Sessions

(1) (June 23, 1967), unreported.

"The circumstances in which he failed to be legally represented are not known to this court but we think it right to say that where it is likely that a prisoner on pleading guilty will receive a sentence of the order of five years' imprisonment, it is proper and desirable that legal aid be offered to him."

Very much the same was said in R. v. Serghiou (2), where judgment was given by EDMUND DAVIES, L.J., that being also a case involving a sentence of five years. In R. v. Stevens (3), the sentence was reduced to four years' imprisonment. On an application in R. v. O'Brien (4) for leave to appeal from a sentence of thirty months' imprisonment, passed at Surrey quarter sessions, WINN, L.J., said on Nov. 14, 1967:

"... this court does attach very great importance indeed to the provision of legal aid in any case where it may seem likely that quite a serious sentence will be imposed, and where there may well be need for the court to be fully informed, so that justice may be done, of all relevant circumstances, (which does not seem to have been satisfactorily achieved in this case) -the sentence is reduced to eighteen months."

This court fully adheres to what was said in R. v. Stevens (3) and in R. v. Serghiou (2). Obviously an accused ought to be offered representation before he is sentenced to five years' imprisonment. This court also agrees with what was said in R. v. O'Brien (4) in the special circumstances of that case. It is not desirable to specify a particular term which should be treated as requiring the offer of representation. The problem must be viewed in all the circumstances, and thirty months might perhaps be regarded as marginal. Thus in the case of the applicant Laird, where the nature of the offence amply justified a sentence of thirty months' imprisonment, irrespective of the record of the accused, we do not consider that the deputy chairman is to be criticised for failing to ensure representation. Nor would such a sentence, in the absence of representation, appear in any way unreasonable in the case of a man who had recently committed a similar offence for which he was sentenced to two years. Where, however, there are circumstances which clearly require careful inquiry, as for example where a social inquiry report recommends probation, it is the clear duty of any court to try to ensure representation before passing a severe prison sentence.

This court is well aware of the pressure on the judges at the Inner London and other quarter sessions due to the volume of the work with which they have to deal. Representation is apt to result in a case taking longer to dispose of and it may be that in many cases it will not affect the sentence to be imposed. Nevertheless, this court has had to reduce drastically two out of four of the sentences of thirty months' imprisonment which we have just dealt with, sentences which would not have been imposed if the recipients had been legally represented at sessions. Pressure of work must not be allowed to result in injustice, which could have been avoided.

First and fourth application refused, second and third allowed and sentences substituted.

Solicitor: Registrar of Criminal Appeals.

[Reported by BRIAN POCOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

(2) [1966] 3 All E.R. 637, n.

(3) (June 23, 1967), unreported.

(4) (Nov. 14, 1967), unreported.

A

HUNTER v. SMITH'S DOCK CO., LTD.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.), February 22, 23, 1968.]

B

Employment—Redundancy—Period of continuous employment—Rivetter in service of ship-repairers for forty years with occasional breaks—Work of spasmodic nature, temporary dismissals and re-engagements—Last break in claimant's service for thirty-one days—Whether a temporary cessation of work which counted as a period of employment by reason of Contracts of Employment Act 1963 (c. 49) Sch. 1, para. 5 (1) (b)—Redundancy Payments Act 1965 (c. 62) s. 1 (1), Sch. 1, para. 1 (1).

C

The appellant was a rivetter employed by the respondents who were ship-repairers, a business which involved fluctuations in the number of employees employed for that purpose. Such employment was casual in the sense that ship-repairing work was spasmodic and inevitably resulted in temporary dismissals and subsequent engagement of those formerly employed or new employees. On breaks of service employees were dismissed, and no promise or express undertaking was given by the respondents to re-employ such employees, who neither asked for nor expected any promise or undertaking for re-employment, nor sought employment elsewhere, in the expectation that within a reasonably short period they would be re-employed. The appellant had been in the employ of respondents for a period of forty years with occasional breaks of about a week to forty days. He was last employed on Jan. 6, 1965, and dismissed on May 18, 1967, for which period entitlement to redundancy payment was admitted. There was a break in his employment for thirty-one days in December, 1964, which was taken as an instance for determining whether his absence during that month was on account of a temporary cessation of work for the purposes of para. 5 (1) (b) of Sch. 1* to the Contracts of Employment Act 1963, on which the question whether his redundancy payment should be calculated on the basis of his whole forty years service depended.

D

E

F

Held: viewing the matter with hindsight, viz., after the employee's re-engagement, and not approaching the matter by seeking to ascertain the intention of the parties at the time of dismissal (but, per WINN, L.J., looking at the circumstances at the time of dismissal) the cessation of work for thirty-one days in or about December 1964 was a temporary cessation within para. 5 (1) (b) of Sch. 1 to the Contracts of Employment Act 1963; accordingly the thirty-one days were to be taken for the purposes of calculating redundancy payment as a period of employment (see p. 84, letter H, p. 85, letters D and E, p. 86, letter D, p. 87, letter B, and p. 88, letters C and E, post).

G

H

Monarch Electric, Ltd. v. McIntyre (Jan. 18, 1968, Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland) (unreported) considered.

Appeal allowed.

[As to dismissal of employees by reason of redundancy, see SUPPLEMENT to 38 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) para. 808e.

For the Contracts of Employment Act 1963, Sch. 1, see 43 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 284.

I

For the Redundancy Payments Act 1965, Sch. 1, see 45 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 338.]

Cases referred to:

Monarch Electric, Ltd. v. McIntyre, (1968), unreported.

Minards v. Courtaulds, Ltd., 1967 I.T.R. 219.

Mullen, Richardson and Patterson, Re, (Aug. 29, 1967), unreported.

* Schedule 1, para. 5 (1) is set out at p. 83, letter G, post.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the appellant, James Hunter, by notice dated Sept. 12, 1967, from the decision of the Industrial Tribunal, dated Aug. 29, 1967, whereby it was decided that the appellant was entitled only to a redundancy payment already paid to him (viz., computed in respect of the period from Jan. 6, 1965 to May 18, 1967) by the respondents, Smith's Dock Co., Ltd. The appellant sought an order that the tribunal's decision might be reversed and that it might be ordered that the respondents should pay to him a redundancy payment calculated by reference to his total length of service with them. The grounds of the appeal were (A) that the tribunal's decision was wrong in law in that the appellant's breaks of service with the respondents were temporary cessation of work as defined in para. 5 (1) (b) of Sch. 1 to the Contracts of Employment Act 1963, and other grounds not material to be set out in this report. The appellant was dismissed on May 18, 1967, and a redundancy payment of £54 4s. 6d., which he accepted, was paid for the period from Jan. 6, 1965 until the date of his dismissal.

P. J. M. Kennedy for the appellant.

P. A. Gatehouse for the respondents.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: This is an appeal by a workman, Mr. James Hunter, from a decision of the Industrial Tribunal given on Aug. 29, 1967 concerning the period of employment which was to be taken for the purposes of the calculation of a redundancy payment. That he was entitled to a redundancy payment was admitted, but since he had begun his last period of employment on Jan. 6, 1965, his employers, the respondents, contended that he was only entitled to a redundancy payment based on his service from that date. The appellant on the other hand says: I became first employed by these respondents in 1926 or 1927. Save for a few short breaks I have been with them for forty years, and indeed they presented me with a gold watch in recognition of forty years' service. I claim that the whole period from the beginning of that forty years' service ought to be taken into calculation for the purpose of redundancy payment. That was the issue.

This division of the industrial tribunal had at the same time to deal with similar applications concerning a number of workmen, and their main decision on this matter was in Re Mullen, Richardson and Patterson (1). The tribunal, when dealing with the appellant's application, adopted the reasoning and findings that they had made in Re Mullen (1), and accordingly I will refer to the decision in that case.

The appellant was a rivetter, and the respondents are ship repairers. When they get slack, and ships do not come in for repair, they stand men off for a period, and in general re-engage them as soon as there is more work. In Re Mullen (1) the tribunal found this:

"The respondents are ship-repairers, and, apart from the general present recession, this is a business which involves fluctuations in the number of employees required to perform these functions. Employment is casual in the sense that ship-repairing work is spasmodic and inevitably results in temporary dismissals and subsequent engagement of employees, either those formerly employed or new employees. We further find that on each break in service the applicants were dismissed and that no promise or express undertaking was given by the respondents that they would re-employ the applicants at a later date when business warranted an enlargement of employees. We accept that the applicants neither asked for nor expected any promise or undertaking for re-employment and on this aspect of the case we reject the evidence of the applicant [Richardson] we accept that during their breaks in service none of the applicants sought employment elsewhere in the expectation, and with their knowledge of the industry, that within a reasonably

(1) (Aug. 29, 1967), unreported; ref. RP/4122/67, RP/4123/67 and RP/4124/67.

A short period of time the opportunity for re-employment with the respondents was likely to arise."

Then they go on to refer to what, I think, is really irrelevant in this case, the fact that those that were stood off in this way were, as it were, automatically put on the employment exchange and listed as temporarily suspended. The employees did not ask for that, and did not seek other work. Finally the

B tribunal found:

"In general, subject to satisfactory past performance, those ex-employees on the 'Temporary Suspended' list would be re-engaged, but that would not exclude the employment of persons who had never been in the service of the respondents before."

C That was the nature of the business and the nature of the employment.

When one comes to the statute, it is sufficient, I think, so far as the Redundancy Payments Act 1965 itself is concerned, to say that one is referred to Sch. 1 to the Contracts of Employment Act 1963 in regard to the computation of the period of employment, and para. 2 of that schedule provides:

D "Except so far as otherwise provided by the following provisions of this schedule, any week which does not count under paras. 3 to 6 of this schedule breaks the continuity of the period of employment."

Accordingly one has to look at paras. 3 to 6. Paragraph 3 provides: "Any week in which the employee is employed for twenty-one hours or more shall count in computing a period of employment." Paragraph 4 is dealing with employments governed by contract, to which I need not refer, and para. 6 is dealing with industrial disputes and provides:

E "If in any week beginning before this schedule comes into force the employee was, for the whole or any part of the week, absent from work—(a) because he was taking part in a strike, or (b) because of a lock-out by the employer, the week shall count as a period of employment."

F Then I come back to para. 5, on which this case and, we are told many other cases, depends, and that is headed "it is worth observing, 'Periods in which there is no contract of employment'". In other words this is dealing with the case of an employee who has been given notice and given his cards; he is stood off. Paragraph (1) provides:

G "If in any week the employee is, for the whole or part of the week—(a) incapable of work in consequence of sickness or injury, or (b) absent from work on account of a temporary cessation of work, or (c) absent from work in circumstances such as that, by arrangement or custom, he is regarded as continuing in the employment of his employer for all or any purposes, that week shall, notwithstanding that it does not fall under para. 3 or para. 4 of this schedule, count as a period of employment."

H Though not directly relevant, I think that I should read sub-paras. (2) and (3).

"(2) Not more than twenty-six weeks shall count under para. (a) of the foregoing sub-paragraph between any two periods falling under paras. 3 and 4..."

I that is, not more than twenty-six weeks shall count of the period in which the employee is absent from work in consequence of sickness or injury. Sub-paragraph (3) provides:

"Paragraph (b) [viz., absence from work on account of a temporary cessation of work] shall not apply to a temporary cessation of work on account of a strike in which the employee takes part."

The sole question in this case was whether the break, which took place in December, 1964, of thirty-one days was a break when the appellant was absent from work on account of a temporary cessation of work. I should have said that in his forty years' service, there had been earlier breaks, a week in some cases, and the maximum was forty days. Apart from occasional breaks, he has been throughout employed by the respondents. A

In my judgment certain things are clear; one is that the presence or absence of a custom or arrangement in the trade does not, as it seems to me, determine an issue falling to be dealt with under sub-para. (b) of para. 5 (1) of Sch. 1 to the Act of 1963. It is otherwise under sub-para. (c), which is dealing with an employee being absent from work, having been given notice, viz., absent from work in circumstances such that by arrangement or custom, he is regarded as continuing in the employment of his employer for all or any purposes. I said above, "having been given notice" because the heading to para. 5 to Sch. 1 to the Act of 1963 shows that para. 5 is dealing with periods in which there is no contract of employment. For my part I am too new to the Act of 1963 to fully understand what case para. (c) covers; it is not relied on in the present case, and it may cover the sort of case where an employee is stood off but retained, given a retainer or seconded for other duty or matters of that sort. B

When one comes to sub-para. (b) of para. 5 (1) of Sch. 1 to the Act of 1963 it seems to me also plain that cessation of work there does not mean the closing down of the business, complete cessation of work; it would clearly extend to the cessation of a particular department or, to come nearer to this case, to the cessation of work wholly for rivetters. In my judgment, however, it goes further and is dealing with the cessation of the job of the employee who is dismissed. In dealing with his absence from his job on account of the cessation of that job. C

The only question, then, and I think the more difficult question, is what the word "temporary" means in the connexion of "temporary cessation". The court has been told that many divisions of the industrial tribunal have dealt with these cases on the basis that whether a cessation of work is temporary or not is to be determined by reference to the position when the period began, and that the proper approach is to ask oneself what both employer and employee intended at the time when the man was stood off. In that connexion, the court has been referred to a decision of the Industrial Tribunal in Minards v. Courtaulds, Ltd. (2), where it was held that: D

"A temporary cessation of work means a cessation of work for a period which at the time it began was regarded by both employer and employee as intended to come to an end within a foreseeable time."

For my part I see very great difficulties in construing the word "temporary" in that way. One observes in the first instance that no such words in regard to intention appear in the Contracts of Employment Act 1963 at all. To give it that interpretation is, I think, to add something which is not there. It seems to me that the proper approach is to look at the matter after the event, looking backwards, and say to oneself: when the employee is re-engaged, if he is, has the cessation been a temporary cessation? If there is evidence of an intention when it began that it should be temporary, that will be very relevant, but the absence of such an intention does not conclude the matter. It can, of course, be asked: what are the limits of "temporary"? If an employee is re-engaged after three years or after three weeks, or whatever it may be, what guide is there: what is the test as to what is temporary? For my part, I do not propose to lay down any test. It is a question of fact for the tribunal in all the circumstances of the case, bearing in mind that we are dealing here with working weeks, and that, at any rate in the case of sickness and injury, an absence of twenty-six weeks is permissible. That is, however, not the test, but at any rate it is some guide. I would only add that, if one had to look solely to intent, there are great practical difficulties. Is the matter to depend on the exact words that a foreman said when cards were handed to an employee? No doubt if one had to go into E

A that, there would be difference in words used, there would be conflicts of evidence as to the exact words used, and matters of that sort. Those difficulties are not decisive on interpretation, but I should certainly come with reluctance to a decision that one had to look solely at the intention or arrangements specifically made at the time an employee was handed his cards.

B So far as this case is concerned, the tribunal were divided. It was a majority decision, based on Re Mullen (3), where they said this:

C “However in the view of the majority of the members of the tribunal the fact that employment in the ship repairing yard is of a casual character and that during breaks the applicants did not seek employment elsewhere, but on each occasion after comparatively short breaks in service returned to the respondents does not in the light of the facts we have found establish an arrangement or understanding to re-engage the dismissed employees and we accordingly find that the applicants are only entitled to redundancy payments on the basis accepted by the respondents, that is from the date of their last engagements.”

D As I have said, whether there has been absence from work on account of a temporary cessation of work is a question of fact, but as it seems to me the tribunal here have misdirected themselves in treating as conclusive the absence of any arrangement or understanding. This is not a para. 5 (1) (c) case which depends on the presence or absence of an arrangement, and I think that what the tribunal are really referring to here by the words “arrangement or understanding” is the intention of the parties, conveyed to each other at the time of dismissal.

E In my judgment, for the reasons which I have endeavoured to state, that is a wrong approach to the matter, and approaching it at the end and looking backwards, it seems to me that the only conclusion to which the tribunal could have come was that these breaks were absences from work on account of a temporary cessation of work. Accordingly, I would allow this appeal, and send the case back to the tribunal to determine, in the absence of agreement, the amount of F the redundancy payment.

Before leaving this case, I should say that the court has been referred to certain transcripts of a case heard in the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland called Monarch Electric, Ltd. v. McIntyre (4). I do not myself know whether it has been reported or whether the transcripts in these cases have been corrected by the judges; but I think it is only right to make a short reference to the case. G The question was whether a very considerable period during which no work was going on at a particular works was a temporary cessation. It is to be observed that if not a complete cessation of the works as opposed to work, it was almost complete because eight hundred, almost the whole of the employees, had been stood off. It is said that the approach to cessation there was an approach which involved considering cessation from the employers' side, and there are passages H which would suggest that if an employee's particular job came to an end, that would not be sufficient. I am by no means certain that in coming to the conclusion that I have reached as to the meaning of “cessation”, I am really differing from LORD MACDERMOTT, C.J., in that case, but it is to be observed that in any event all that he was dealing with was a clear case of a complete or almost complete cessation, and it was unnecessary for him to consider the sort I of facts which have arisen in this case. So far as the word “temporary” is concerned, I am happy to find myself in complete agreement with LORD MACDERMOTT, C.J., and CURRAN and McVEIGH, L.J.J., in the case. LORD MACDERMOTT, C.J., said:

“I do not think a temporary cessation has to be proved as a matter of mutual intention or even expectation... Temporary cessations of work

---

(3) (Aug. 29, 1967), unreported.

(4) (Jan. 18, 1968), unreported.

may be so infinitely varied that no inflexible rule as to proof can be formulated, except perhaps to say that if the temporary nature of the cessation cannot be inferred from the relevant events and circumstances of the case, it will usually be necessary to show on the part of the employer a reasonable expectation that the work that has ceased will be resumed."

McVEIGH, L.J., said that it was a matter for the tribunal, and added this:

"I should add that in coming to a conclusion whether a cessation is temporary or not it is open to the tribunal to consider all the surrounding circumstances including what was or was not said at the time of pay-off. One is also, in my view, entitled to look back at the period in issue in the light of the facts then known."

Though the facts were very different in the Monarch Electric case (5), I am in general agreement with the court's approach, certainly, the approach as to the meaning of the word "temporary". So far as this case is concerned, it is enough to say that no reasonable tribunal properly directing their minds to the facts of this case would come to any conclusion other than that these breaks in the appellant's service should count towards the period of his employment for the purposes of the calculation of redundancy payment. I would allow this appeal.

WINN, L.J.: I agree. I desire for my own part to stress my complete agreement with what LORD PARKER, C.J., has said about the separation of sub-para. (b) and sub-para. (c) in para. 5 (1) of Sch. 1 to the Contracts of Employment Act 1963. I venture to think that in any case such as the present, where the issue to be decided is whether or not an applicant brings himself within the terms of para. 5 (1) (b), on the path to that goal no helpful guidance would be obtained from any glance at the will o' the wisp constituted by para. 5 (1) (c). Paragraph 5 (1) (c) is an entirely separate matter which may or may not in any given case involve utterly disparate considerations. Otherwise I would say for myself only this, that when one looks at the Redundancy Payments Act 1965, and at the Contracts of Employment Act 1963 which, not very helpfully, has been used, so far as its schedule is concerned, for the purposes of the Act of 1965, one finds constant reference to periods of a week. More particularly when one glances at Sch. 1 to the Act of 1965 to find what is the entitlement to redundancy payment so far as amount is concerned, one finds in para. 1 (1) (c) references to "any week which began before the employee attained the age of eighteen years", then another reference under para. 1 (1) (b) to a week which does not count, and then in para. 2 quantification by weeks' pay; and in s. 17, which deals with a specific and quite unrelated matter, where employment abroad has to be considered, it is quite clear that again the criterion is related to any period of a week.

I think that the scale of time with which Sch. 1 to the Contracts of Employment Act 1963 should be prima facie related is that of a week or period of weeks. It will not, I trust, be unduly otiose to draw attention to para. 2 of Sch. 1 as well as to para. 6 and para. 7 (1) and (2) as affording examples of that constant reference to the period of a week. In my own view that is something which should be kept in mind, not as a controlling element, but as a mere scale indication, when the word "temporary" found in para. 5 (1) (b) has to be applied to any particular set of circumstances.

I for myself entirely and respectfully agree with LORD PARKER, C.J., and therefore necessarily do not find myself completely in agreement with the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland (6). I do not think myself that the issue is to be determined by reference to the completeness, the comprehensiveness of the cessation of the work which it was the business of the employer to carry

(5) (Jan. 18, 1968), unreported.

(6) In Monarch Electric, Ltd. v. McIntyre, (1968), unreported.

A out. I do not think that it is related to complete, or even partial closure of his factory or other premises so as to produce something which, by reason of its comprehensive character, is to be assessed as long-lasting in the temporal sense, so as to go beyond what is temporary. I myself think that the test that should be applied is whether, judging in the light of the proven circumstances at the time when the relevant dismissal occurred, taking into account so far as B anyone sees fit to tender the evidence, any oral expression of intention of the employer or indeed of the employee, looking at all those circumstances, is the true view that the appellant's employment had been permanently terminated by the notice which terminated the contract of employment? Was he out or merely off? Was he stood off or had they finished with him?

I think, and it is mere coincidence to which I attach not the slightest evidentiary weight, that the local employment exchange rightly treated the appellant in this case as "suspended"; they happened by sheer chance to adopt a very suitable term for the appellant and the other employees if, as is my view, they were absent from work on account of a cessation of work which was merely temporary. I would venture to suggest for the consideration of tribunals who face this problem in the future, that they say to themselves in the course of D their deliberations: what does this really amount to? Was the employee suspended, not, of course, in the technical sense of being still entitled to draw his pay, still bound to pay his contributions under the various Acts, National Health and so on, not in the position of an official who is suspended for defalcation or a policeman against whom disciplinary charges have been made, but, leaving all that technicality aside, was the employee suspended until his E job was ready and available for him again, or was he put out—put out in the sense of out permanently? If the truth is that one should envisage the employee or any employees during the period when they were absent from work as occasionally going to the gates of the employers' premises and saying "Any use today", and being told "No, your job is not yet available again", then I think that is suspension and absence on account of a temporary cessation of F work. It is the employee's own job which must be found to have suffered a cessation, that is to say to have ceased for a period of time which, judged by the time schedule which is appropriate here, was properly to be called temporary, with perhaps some fairly generous interpretation of that word in this context.

It follows that with all respect I do not myself take the view which, according to the transcripts before the court now, was expressed by LORD MACDERMOTT, G C.J., in the Court of Appeal of Northern Ireland (7) where he is recorded as having said:

"The words 'cessation of work' mean, as I think, a cessation of all or any part of the work at the place in which an employee is employed."

He went on to say that it was rather a confusing dichotomy to draw any line H between cessation of the work at the place at which the employee is employed and cessation of an employee's particular job, because the former would or would be likely to produce as a consequence the latter. I respectfully agree with that observation, but for my own part I do not think that this test under para. 5 (1) (b) of Sch. 1 to the Contracts of Employment Act 1963, is only satisfied where it can be shown that there has been a cessation of all work, or all work of any one department, formerly carried out at a place where the employee was employed. I add I only one further remark, and that is that looking at the transcript and the observations which are there set out, I cannot help, for myself, wondering whether after LORD MACDERMOTT's statement, with which I respectfully agree "An employee can lose his job without any cessation", the next sentence may not belong to that sentence rather than to those which follow it as typed in the transcript.

I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

ASHWORTH, J.: I also agree, but I desire to add a word or two on one point. For my part I share the view expressed by my lord that the intention of the parties at the date of dismissal is neither here nor there, as a decisive factor at any rate, when the time comes to decide whether this was a temporary cessation of work. In the cases that come before tribunals, there must be, so to speak, a beginning and an end. There will be the time of dismissal, and for this problem to arise there then will have been a date of re-engagement. The problem for the tribunal will be: is the interval a temporary cessation of work, and was the man absent from work on that account? As LORD PARKER, C.J., said, in trying to solve that problem, the tribunal will have a great many factors to take into account: the nature of the trade, the nature of the work, possibly, though not decisively, observations or remarks made at the time of the dismissal. With all those factors in mind, they will then come back to the question: was this a temporary cessation of work? A B C

Counsel for the respondents says, in his forceful argument, that applying this principle, the tribunal may for example say: the employee who had been dismissed on Jan. 1 in one year and then was re-engaged three years later could complain that this was a temporary cessation of work. It may be that he could. Speaking for myself, I doubt whether any tribunal would willingly come to that view as a matter of fact. Although the legal problems, as this appeal has shown, may be difficult, I could well imagine that in many cases, when all the facts have been ascertained and the tribunal addresses its mind to the question, was this cessation of work properly called "temporary"? the answer will be, yes. I agree that this appeal should be allowed. D

Appeal allowed. Case remitted to determine, in the absence of agreement, the amount of redundancy payment. E

Solicitors: Berrymans, agents for Crute & Sons, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (for the appellants); Allen & Overy (for the respondents).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] F

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (DIVORCE). G

Divorce—Petition—Form of petition—Omission of information—Ex parte application before service—Matrimonial Causes Rules 1968 (S.I. 1968 No. 219), r. 9 (2), App. 2, Form 2.

Where it is desired to omit from a petition any information required to be contained therein by Form 2 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules 1968, the petition should be filed without such information, but before service is effected an ex parte application must be made to a registrar for leave for the petition to stand. If leave is refused, the registrar will make an order requiring the petition to be amended. H

The registrar's direction dated June 30, 1966 (1) has been cancelled with effect from Apr. 11, 1968. I Issued with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor.

Apr. 11, 1968.

COMPTON MILLER,
Senior Registrar.

A

R. v. BOW ROAD DOMESTIC PROCEEDINGS COURT,
Ex parte ADEDIGBA.

B

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning, M.R., Salmon and Edmund Davies, L.J.J.), February 28, 29, 1968.]

C

Affiliation—Jurisdiction—Child born abroad when mother domiciled abroad—Child, mother and father in England—English court, where mother resides, has jurisdiction to make affiliation order for maintenance of child—Affiliation Proceedings Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2 c. 55), s. 1, s. 4.

D

Statute—Construction—Replacing enactment—Scope of enactment determined by court in 1849—Enactment subsequently repealed and replaced in similar terms by successive statutes—Changed social conditions—Whether intention of Parliament that determination of 1849 should still apply—Affiliation proceedings brought by mother of child born abroad when mother domiciled abroad—Doctrine of stare decisis inapplicable.

E

Two boys were born in Nigeria to a mother who was domiciled there. She was unmarried. The father came to England in 1960, and the mother joined him there in 1961 with the children. She left the father in 1966, and lived on national assistance. She applied to a domestic proceedings court for an affiliation order. On appeal from dismissal of an application for mandamus to the court to hear her application, the question was whether there would be jurisdiction to determine her application as the children were born abroad to a mother domiciled abroad.

F

Held: if a mother and father of an illegitimate child, and the child, were in England, the court had jurisdiction under s. 1 and s. 4 of the Affiliation Proceedings Act, 1957, to make an affiliation order against the child's father for maintenance, notwithstanding that the mother was domiciled abroad at the date of the child's birth and that the child was born abroad; accordingly an order of mandamus would be granted (see p. 92, letters G, H and I, p. 93, letter G, p. 95, letter A, and p. 96, letters B and G, post).

G

R. v. Blane ([1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397); Tetlau v. O'Dea ([1950] 2 All E.R. 695), and R. v. Wilson ([1952] 2 All E.R. 706) overruled.

Principle stated by LORD DENNING, M.R. in Royal Crown Derby Porcelain Co., Ltd. v. Russell ([1949] 1 All E.R. at p. 755) applied.

H

Per SALMON, L.J.: the principle of construction that the court may presume that, when there has been a decision on the meaning of a statute and the statute is re-enacted in much the same terms, it was the intention of Parliament to endorse the decision, is merely a rule of construction for the guidance of the courts; it is not a presumption which the courts are bound to make, and it is always possible that Parliament, however vigilant, may overlook a decision (see p. 95, letter H, post).

Appeal allowed.

I

[Editorial Note. A complaint under s. 1 of the Affiliation Proceedings Act, 1957, must be made to a justice acting for the petty sessions area in which the mother of the child resides (s. 3 (1) (a)).]

As to jurisdiction in affiliation proceedings, see 3 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 110, para. 171; and for cases on the subject see 3 DIGEST (Repl.) 441, 442, 333-341.

As to the construction of statutes replacing earlier enactments, see 36 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 403, 404, para. 609.

As to the principle of stare decisis in relation to decisions of the Court of Appeal and Divisional Court, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 799-800, para. 1687; and as to long-standing decisions, see ibid., pp. 802, 803, para. 1690.

For the Affiliation Proceedings Act, 1957, s. 1, s. 3 (1) and s. 4, see A 37 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 37, 39, 40.]

Cases referred to:

Buckridge v. Hall, [1963] 1 All E.R. 509; [1963] 1 Q.B. 614; [1963] 2 W.L.R. 354; 127 J.P. 218; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 54, 336a.

Clyde Navigation Trustees v. Laird & Sons, (1883), 8 App. Cas. 658; 42 Digest (Repl.) 1124, 9387. B

Conway v. Rimmer, [1968] 1 All E.R. 874.

Heron II, The, Koufos v. Czarnikow, Ltd., [1967] 3 All E.R. 686; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 1491; affg., [1966] 2 All E.R. 593; [1966] 2 Q.B. 695; [1966] 2 W.L.R. 1397.

Parana, The, (1877), 2 P.D. 118; 36 L.T. 388; 8 Digest (Repl.) 154, 970.

Public Trustee v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1960] 1 All E.R. 1; [1960] A.C. 398; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 203; 21 Digest (Repl.) 17, 58. C

R. v. Blane, [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769; 18 L.J.M.C. 216; 13 L.T.O.S. 257; 13 J.P. 825; 116 E.R. 1458; 3 Digest (Repl.) 442, 337.

R. v. Humphreys, Ex p. Ward., [1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 189; [1914] 3 K.B. 1237; 84 L.J.K.B. 187; sub nom. R. v. Humphrys, Ex p. Ward, 111 L.T. 1110; 79 J.P. 67; 3 Digest (Repl.) 442, 339. D

R. v. Wilson, Ex p. Pereira, [1952] 2 All E.R. 706; [1953] 1 Q.B. 59; 116 J.P. 549; 3 Digest (Repl.) 442, 340.

Robinson Brothers (Brewers), Ltd. v. Houghton and Chester-le-Street Assessment Committee, [1938] 2 All E.R. 79; 107 L.J.K.B. 369; sub nom. Robinson Brothers (Brewers), Ltd. v. Durham County Assessment Committee (Area No. 7), [1938] A.C. 321; 158 L.T. 498; 102 J.P. 313; 38 Digest (Repl.) 674, 1244. E

Royal Crown Derby Porcelain Co., Ltd. v. Russell, [1949] 1 All E.R. 749; [1949] 2 K.B. 417; 30 Digest (Repl.) 217, 598.

Tetaru v. O'Dea, [1950] 2 All E.R. 695; 114 J.P. 499; sub nom. O'Dea v. Tetaru, [1951] 1 K.B. 184; 3 Digest (Repl.) 442, 338.

Tiverton and North Devon Ry. Co. v. Loosemore, (1884), 9 App. Cas. 480; 53 L.J.Ch. 812; 50 L.T. 637; 48 J.P. 372; 11 Digest (Repl.) 231, 954. F

Appeal.

This was an appeal by Katherine Aduke Adedigba from an order of the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division dated June 27, 1967, dismissing the appellant's motion for an order of mandamus. By her notice of appeal the appellant sought an order that the Bow Road Domestic Proceedings Court, in Greater London, should hear and determine affiliation proceedings between the appellant and the respondent, Adelake Adedigba. The ground of the appeal was that the Divisional Court was wrong in law in holding that the domestic proceedings court had no jurisdiction to hear and to determine the affiliation proceedings, because the appellant, who was the mother of the two children who were the subject of the proceedings, was domiciled abroad and the children were born abroad. Before instituting affiliation proceedings the appellant had applied for maintenance under the Matrimonial Proceedings (Magistrates' Courts) Act, 1960, for herself and the two children, but the summons was dismissed on the ground that, under English law, she was not married to the respondent. G

Zwi Vardi for the mother.

A. T. Glass for the father. H

LORD DENNING, M.R.: This is an affiliation summons. The mother and the father are both Nigerians. They were born in Nigeria and lived there. In 1958 the mother went to live with the father in his native village in Nigeria. They were regarded as a married couple; but they were not in fact lawfully married. They had two children, both boys: one born on Mar. 15, 1959, and the I

A other on Oct. 9, 1960. Soon after the second child was born, the father came to England by himself, leaving the mother to come later. On Sept. 18, 1961, she joined him here in England with the two children. They lived together until January, 1966, when the mother left the father. She took the two children with her and lived on national assistance. The father had regular work as a postman at Mount Pleasant, but he has not paid a penny to her or to anyone for the upkeep of the two boys. She applied to the Domestic Proceedings Court at Bow Road for maintenance for the children. The court held that it had no jurisdiction to hear the summons. The reason was because the children were born abroad and the mother was domiciled abroad at the time when they were born. An application was made to the Divisional Court for a mandamus directed to the justices to command them to hear the summons. The Divisional Court held that they were bound by previous authorities to hold that there was no jurisdiction. Now there is an appeal to this court.

The old law as to bastardy was founded on a statute of 1576 (18 Eliz. 1 c. 3) under which jurisdiction was given to the justices of the peace for the parish in which the child was born. The parish (who were bound to maintain the child) could proceed against the father. Several statutes were passed afterwards on the same lines: but the modern law dates from the year 1844. By a statute (1) of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2, the old statutes were repealed and the mother was given a direct right against the father for maintenance of the child. The Act of 1844 provided that

E “any single woman who may be with child, or may be delivered of a bastard child . . . may either before the birth, or at any time within twelve months from the birth of such child ” apply for an order for maintenance on the father.

Five years after the Act of 1844 came R. v. Blane (2). A French girl came to this country and lived here in London for thirteen years working as a milliner. She then became pregnant. When she was near her confinement, she went back to France to have the baby. A month later she returned to London with the baby. She applied for an order against the father for maintenance for the child. The magistrates made the order; but the Court of Queen's Bench reversed it. They held that the magistrates had no jurisdiction to order maintenance. LORD DENMAN, C.J., said (3): “. . . children born out of this country are not the subject of our bastardy laws.” ERLE, J., said the same. COLERIDGE, J., said that the previous statutes dealt only with bastards born in this country, and this statute should be construed likewise. He said (4):

“If the word ‘bastard’ is . . . to comprehend any bastard born in any part of the world, an immense field of inquiry must be traversed respecting the status of children according to the different laws of different countries.”

H I am not impressed by the reasons given for that decision; but the case has stood as authority ever since. Statutes have been passed in virtually the same words as the Act of 1844, but nothing has been done to overrule R. v. Blane (2).

I In 1872 there was passed the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, in precisely the same words as the Act of 1844. In 1914 came R. v. Humphreys, Ex p. Ward (5). An English girl was engaged to a man here and became pregnant by him. Soon afterwards she went to Australia and had the baby there. A year later she returned to England and applied for an order against the father for maintenance for the child. The majority of the Divisional Court held that

(1) The Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844.

(2) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769.

(3) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. at p. 398; (1849), 13 Q.B. at p. 772.

(4) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. at p. 398; (1849), 13 Q.B. at p. 773.

(5) [1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 189; [1914] 3 K.B. 1237.

she could get maintenance. They distinguished R. v. Blane (6) on the ground that in that case the mother was a French girl, whereas in the case before them the mother was an English girl. AVORY, J., dissented. He thought that it was not a valid distinction; but even the majority accepted R. v. Blane (6) as binding in the case of a child born abroad of a mother who was not English. A

Then in 1950 came Tetui v. O'Dea (7). A German girl living in Germany had a child there in Hamburg. The father was English. When the baby was three months old, the mother brought the baby to England and lived here. She applied for maintenance. The Divisional Court held that there was no jurisdiction to make an order. The case was covered by R. v. Blane (6). LORD GODDARD, C.J., said (8): B

"The matter which impresses me is that the legislature, which must be presumed to have had knowledge of the decision in R. v. Blane (6), passed the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, but did not in any way purport to overrule the decision in R. v. Blane (6) or to make any provision that would have the effect of enabling the court to distinguish R. v. Blane (6)." C

So R. v. Blane (6) still held the field. It was applied in R. v. Wilson, Ex p. Pereira (9), when a Gibraltar woman had a baby in Gibraltar of an English father. She came to live in England and it was held that there was no jurisdiction to award her maintenance for the child. D

There followed the present statute, the Affiliation Proceedings Act, 1957. Parliament, in s. 1, again used virtually the same words:

"A single woman who is with child, or who has been delivered of an illegitimate child, may apply by complaint to a justice of the peace for a summons to be served on the man alleged by her to be the father of the child." E

Again Parliament did nothing to say that R. v. Blane (6) was wrong. In 1963 there came Buckeridge v. Hall (10). A Jamaican woman came to England and she had a child born in England of an English father. The mother could not afford to keep the child in England and sent the child back to Jamaica. She applied for a maintenance order against the father. The Divisional Court held that R. v. Blane (6) only applied to children born abroad and not to children born in this country; but SALMON, J., said (11): F

"It may one day be necessary for the courts to consider whether R. v. Blane (6) was rightly decided . . ."

None of those cases is binding on this court: and I think that the time has come when we should say that R. v. Blane (6) in 1849 was wrongly decided and also the two cases which followed it—Tetui v. O'Dea (7) in 1951 and R. v. Wilson, Ex p. Pereira (9) in 1952. G

It seems plain to me that if the mother and father are both here and the child is here, the words of the statute are satisfied. I can see no possible reason for denying the court's jurisdiction to order maintenance; and every reason for giving them jurisdiction. The father ought to be made to pay for the child. The difficulty felt by COLERIDGE, J., is not well founded. Every day these courts consider the status of persons born abroad and the foreign law on the subject. I hold, therefore, that the affiliation statutes cover children born abroad as well as those born in England: and cover mothers domiciled abroad at the time of the birth as well as mothers domiciled in England. H

I know that since R. v. Blane (6) the statutory provisions have been re-enacted in virtually the same words; but that does not trouble me. I venture I

(6) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769.

(7) [1950] 2 All E.R. 695; [1951] 1 K.B. 184.

(8) [1950] 2 All E.R. at p. 698; [1951] 1 K.B. at p. 188.

(9) [1952] 2 All E.R. 706; [1953] 1 Q.B. 59.

(10) [1963] 1 All E.R. 509; [1963] 1 Q.B. 614.

(11) [1963] 1 All E.R. at p. 512; [1963] 1 Q.B. at p. 621.

A to quote some words that I used in Royal Crown Derby Porcelain Co., Ltd. v. Russell (12):

B "I do not believe that whenever Parliament re-enacts a provision of a statute it thereby gives statutory authority to every erroneous interpretation which has been put on it. The true view is that the court will be slow to overrule a previous decision on the interpretation of a statute when it has long been acted on, and it will be more than usually slow to do so when Parliament has, since the decision, re-enacted the statute in the same terms, but if a decision is, in fact, shown to be erroneous, there is no rule of law which prevents it being overruled."

C Nor am I troubled by the fact that R. v. Blane (13) has stood for 118 years. It is not a property or commercial case. It has not formed the basis of titles or commercial dealings. It is the sort of precedent which we can and should overrule when it is seen to be wrong. Only yesterday in Conway v. Rimmer (14) LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST used words appropriate to the situation:

D "Though precedent is an indispensable foundation on which to decide what is the law, there may be times when a departure from precedent is in the interests of justice and the proper development of the law."

E If we were to affirm today R. v. Blane (13) as being the law of this land, the only consequence would be a reference to the Law Commission; then a report by them; and eventually a Bill before Parliament. It would be quite a long time before the law could be set right. Even then the law would only be set right for future cases. Nothing could be done to set right this present case. F The mother here would not get maintenance for the child which she needs now. So I would overrule R. v. Blane (13) now. In the days of 1849 the question may not have been of any particular social significance; but now there are many illegitimate children here in England who were born abroad. It is only right and just that the mothers of those children should be able to take out proceedings against the fathers, and that the fathers should be ordered to pay reasonable maintenance for their own children. Otherwise what is the position? The children will be left to the care of the State. The national assistance fund will have to pay—the father will get out of his just responsibilities. That would be a most undesirable state of affairs.

G In my judgment, therefore, there should be, and is, jurisdiction in the domestic proceedings court to order the father to pay maintenance to the mother for the children. The order of mandamus must go so as to enable the magistrates to determine the matter.

H SALMON, L.J.: The Divisional Court considered rightly that it was bound by the decision in R. v. Blane (13) and that accordingly it was obliged to decide this case in favour of the respondent. In all the modern cases in which R. v. Blane (13) was considered and followed (see e.g., Tetou v. O'Dea (15) and Buckeridge v. Hull (16), the court was bound by the decision. LORD GODDARD, C.J., in the first two of those cases referred to the fact that a great deal of legislation had been passed since 1849 dealing with the maintenance of illegitimate children and that the legislature had not taken the opportunity of altering the decision in R. v. Blane (13). LORD GODDARD, C.J., was not, however, considering whether or not R. v. Blane (13) should be reversed because he was sitting in the Divisional Court which had no power to do so. I regard those observations of LORD GODDARD, C.J., as being merely a passing reference to what clearly would have been an important factor in considering whether R. v. Blane (13) ought to be reversed.

I In Buckeridge v. Hull (16) it was foreseen that the time might arrive when the

(12) [1949] 1 All E.R. 749 at p. 755; [1949] 2 K.B. 417 at p. 429.

(13) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769.

(14) [1968] 1 All E.R. at p. 892, letter D.

(15) [1950] 2 All E.R. 695; [1951] 1 K.B. 184.

(16) [1963] 1 All E.R. 509; [1963] 1 Q.B. 614.

Court of Appeal would have to consider whether R. v. Blane (17) was correctly A decided. That time has now come. I have no doubt at all but that R. v. Blane (17) was wrongly decided. It was contrary alike to justice, humanity and common sense and had no foundation of any kind in law. The court was considering the construction of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844. This was an Act for the further amendment of the laws relating to the poor in England. It was the first statutory provision that gave the mother of an illegitimate child the right to B apply to the courts for an order of maintenance for the child against the putative father. There is not one word in that statute to support the view that Parliament intended to legislate only for bastards born in this country and was intent on ignoring bastards born abroad who lived in this country. Quite clearly the purpose of the Act of 1844 was to give the mother the right to apply to the courts for a contribution from the putative father towards the maintenance of C the child. Parliament no doubt gave the mother this right because it realised that humanity and justice required that she should have it, and, moreover, that if she were given this right, it was less likely that the maintenance of the child would be thrown on public funds. The place of the child's birth seems to me to be wholly irrelevant for this purpose. A bastard born abroad living with his mother in this country is just as likely as a bastard born here to be thrown on public funds if it is not supported. Any woman resident in this country is D entitled to the protection of our law. Whether her child was born here or abroad can make no difference to her need for help towards its maintenance. I find it difficult to understand how it is possible to construe the Act of 1844 as excluding from its ambit women whose illegitimate children were born abroad. Nor did the distinguished court which decided R. v. Blane (17) pretend that there was E any language in the Act of 1844 which would justify such a conclusion. As I understand the judgments, which are very economical of any reasons for the decision which they reach, they state that although there may be nothing expressed in the Act of 1844 to justify their decision, the earlier Acts make it plain that Parliament intended only to legislate for bastards born in this country.
I entirely disagree. Many said the Act of 1844 was an Act to amend the law, and, F as I have already indicated, it was the first Act that gave the mother any right to issue proceedings against the putative father.

Even if one goes back to the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (18), which was the preceding Act, it contains no more justification than did the Act of 1844 for the decision that Parliament intended the laws relating to the maintenance of bastards to apply only to bastards born in this country: that Act provided G that when any child, by reason of the inability of the mother to provide for its maintenance, became chargeable to any parish, then the overseers or guardians of that parish might apply for an order against the putative father. I daresay that there were fewer illegitimate children in this country who had been born abroad in 1834 than there are today. In my view, however, it would have surprised Parliament to learn that its intention had been interpreted so as to make H it impossible for the guardians of the parish, who had to maintain a bastard born abroad, to proceed against its father in this country for contributions towards its maintenance. There is no reason why the fact that the unfortunate child had been born abroad should confer immunity on the putative father and prejudice the parish which had been obliged to support it.

It is only if one goes back to the Statute of Elizabeth (19) in 1576 that there I is any warrant for the view that Parliament was legislating only for illegitimate children born in this country. The aphorism that time marches on and the law marches with it was just as valid in 1849 when R. v. Blane (17) was decided as it is today, but its validity was then perhaps not so generally recognised. In 1849 time had indeed marched on since the reign of Elizabeth, and today it has

(17) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769.

(18) 4 & 5 Will. 4 c. 76, repealed by S.L.R. Act 1966 s. 1.

(19) 18 Eliz. 1 c. 3.

A marched on still further. There is no reason to suppose that Parliament intended then or now that the law should be the same as it was in 1576. I can see no justification at all for the decision in R. v. Blane (20): indeed, the only sentence in any of the judgments with which I agree is the sentence in the judgment of LORD DENMAN, C.J., in which he said (21): "I will only add that the principles of humanity are not concerned in this decision." As LORD DENNING, M.R., has said, the additional reason for the decision put forward by COLERIDGE, J., to the effect that, if the Act of 1844 was construed as applying to illegitimate children born abroad, it might involve an inquiry into whether they were legitimate or illegitimate according to the law of the country in which they were born, is a reason which fails completely to carry any conviction. The courts of this country are everyday making such inquiries.

C It is said that however wrong the decision in R. v. Blane (20) may have been, it was made 118 years ago. Moreover, it has been followed ever since, as it had to be followed, by the courts on which it was binding; and accordingly the principle of stare decisis should apply. Certainly we do not readily interfere with the decisions which have stood for 118 years, or, indeed, for any lengthy period of time. This is particularly true of decisions in fields in which it might be said that the community has arranged its affairs in accordance with what has been regarded as the law for many years past. It is, for example, very true of decisions relating to the law of contract; but even in that field, the courts reverse a very old decision when they are completely satisfied that it was wrong. For example, recently this court (22) overruled The Parana (23), which had stood for nearly ninety years and had been generally accepted as stating the law relating to the measure of damage for breach of contract for the carriage of goods by sea; and the House of Lords (24) upheld the decision of this court.

E In the present case none of these considerations underlying the principle of stare decisis apply. I do not suppose that the incidence of illegitimate children being conceived and born abroad has been affected in the slightest by the decision in R. v. Blane (20). I think it unlikely that any woman in Nigeria, or indeed anywhere else, would forbear to conceive and give birth to an illegitimate child abroad because she might contemplate that if she and the child came to this country with the putative father, she would not, according to the law as laid down in R. v. Blane (20), ever have a chance of recovering any sum from him by way of maintenance for the child. Nor do I think that putative fathers have arranged their affairs on the basis that R. v. Blane (20) was correctly decided; and if they had, I should have no qualms about upsetting it.

G The only matter which has given me any pause is that there has been a great deal of legislation concerning this subject in the last 118 years, and Parliament has never taken the opportunity of correcting R. v. Blane (20). The father has contended that since Parliament has not corrected R. v. Blane (20), it must be taken to have approved and endorsed the decision. It is quite true that it is a principle of construction that the courts may presume that when there has been a decision on the meaning of a statute, and the statute is re-enacted in much the same terms, it was the intention of Parliament to endorse the decision; but this is merely a rule of construction for the guidance of the courts. It is not a presumption which the courts are bound to make (see Royal Crown Derby Porcelain Co., Ltd. v. Russell (25)). It is always possible that Parliament, however vigilant, may overlook a decision. I think that R. v. Blane (20) has been overlooked by the legislature. I am certainly not satisfied that it was the intention of Parliament to endorse it. Indeed, if that decision had been considered by Parliament at

(20) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769.

(21) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. at p. 398; (1849), 13 Q.B. at p. 772.

(22) See The Heron II, [1966] 2 All E.R. 593; [1966] 2 Q.B. 695.

(23) (1877), 2 P.D. 118.

(24) [1967] 3 All E.R. 686.

(25) [1949] 1 All E.R. 749; [1949] 2 K.B. 417.

any time when the intervening legislation was passed, I have little doubt but that it would have been corrected for it manifestly works gross injustice. It seems to me that the words of LORD BLACKBURN in Tiverton and North Devon Ry. Co. v. Loosenore (26), can appropriately be applied to the intervening Acts. He said:

"... in construing an Act of Parliament, we ought not to put a construction on it that would work injustice, or even hardship, or inconvenience, unless it is clear that such was the intention of the legislature."

I think it is clear in the present case that such was not the intention of the legislature. I accordingly agree that this appeal should be allowed.

EDMUND DAVIES, L.J.: Two questions are involved in this appeal.

(i) Was R. v. Blane (27) rightly decided 120 years ago? If it was, it follows that this appeal must be dismissed, for the basic facts are identical in the two cases. (ii) If it was not, ought it nevertheless to be followed by reason of its antiquity? With profound respect, R. v. Blane (27) is not one of those cases which command admiration and adherence by virtue of the cogent reasoning enshrined in their judgments. Two members of the court contented themselves with the bald assertion that our bastardy laws do not apply to illegitimate children born in a foreign country, while the third member (COLERIDGE, J.), in seeking to rationalise that conclusion, struck a note which sounds very strange and discordant to modern ears. Nor have those judgments been uniformly followed, for in R. v. Humphreys, Ex p. Ward (28), it was held that our courts do possess jurisdiction even in relation to an illegitimate child born in New South Wales. There the mother was domiciled in England and the majority of the Divisional Court held this to be an important difference which served to distinguish the case from R. v. Blane (27) and enabled the English courts to exercise jurisdiction. For my part, however, I prefer the dissenting view of AVORY, J., who expressed himself (29) as being "... unable, therefore, to say that the actual point before the court in this case was not the real ground of the decision in R. v. Blane (27) ...". It was, however, unqualifiedly followed in Tetau v. O'Dea (30), and R. v. Wilson, Ex p. Pereira (31), and although doubt was cast on it in Buckeridge v. Hall (32), the critical comments in that case were obiter inasmuch as there the mother of Jamaican domicile gave birth to her child in this country.

The question, however, still remains was R. v. Blane (27) rightly decided? I concur with my lords, and for the reasons they have given, in concluding that it was not. Then, despite the conviction of this court that it was erroneous, ought it nevertheless to govern the present case simply by reason of its antiquity, even though it may lead to consequences clearly contrary to the public good? In my judgment, that question demands a negative answer. However attractive the patina of old age, it ought not to be allowed to conceal clear mistakes, ancient though they be (see the observations of VISCOUNT SIMONDS in Public Trustee v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (33)). In Robinson Brothers (Brewers), Ltd. v. Houghton and Chester-le-Street Assessment Committee (34), the House of Lords overruled a decision which had stood for forty years and which had regulated rating practice throughout that period because it found it erroneous in law and that its operation was unfair in placing an unjustifiable burden on the occupiers of other hereditaments. LORD MACMILLAN there pointed out (35) that previously

(26) (1884), 9 App. Cas. 480 at p. 497.

(27) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769.

(28) [1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 189; [1914] 3 K.B. 1237.

(29) [1914-15] All E.R. Rep. at p. 192; [1914] 3 K.B. at p. 1242.

(30) [1950] 2 All E.R. 695; [1951] 1 K.B. 184.

(31) [1952] 2 All E.R. 706; [1953] 1 Q.B. 59.

(32) [1963] 1 All E.R. 509; [1963] 1 Q.B. 614.

(33) [1960] 1 All E.R. 1 at pp. 8, 9; [1960] A.C. 398 at p. 415.

(34) [1938] 2 All E.R. 79; [1938] A.C. 321.

(35) [1938] 2 All E.R. at p. 87; [1938] A.C. at p. 370.

A cases even more venerable had been overruled. Moreover, only yesterday the House of Lords in Conway v. Rimmer (36) refused to follow one of its own decisions which was given a quarter of a century ago and which has undoubtedly controlled the course of countless cases decided in the courts during that period.

We are now being asked, however, to overrule a decision which has stood for 120 years and has governed and limited the exercise of jurisdiction in an important respect in this country. It is manifest that the courts should be slow to upset long-established decisions where rights to property or under contracts have been founded on them, or where (proceeding on the basis that they were not only old but also right) the parties have irremediably and materially altered their position. But no such considerations can properly limit the approach of the court in the present case to the question of whether it should follow a decision simply because it was given in 1849. It is, as SALMON, L.J., has just said, hardly to be supposed that when the two illegitimate children of the parties were conceived in Nigeria some years ago the father had in contemplation the limitations on the jurisdiction of the English courts in affiliation proceedings laid down in R. v. Blane (37) in the early years of Queen Victoria's reign. Nor, in my judgment, is R. v. Blane (37) one of those cases in which the particular interpretation of a statute, on which certain supposed rights are founded, has been acted on for a long period. In such cases it is well-established that the court should be cautious in holding that the supposed rights do not exist (see, for example, Clyde Navigation Trustees v. Laird & Sons (38)). R. v. Blane (37), however, interpreted no statute; its effect was simply to place a limit on the operation of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844, even though no such limit was imposed by the Act itself.

In my judgment the application of that decision to social conditions in the mid-twentieth century can lead to irrational and indeed unjust results, as the present case serves to show. Furthermore, the changing pattern of our society is such that it is plainly on the cards that many similar cases are likely to arise in the future. Indeed, we were told that the present case is a test case and that there are many others awaiting its outcome. Should the courts be obliged to continue to arrive at decisions which are both unjust to the private citizen and inimical to the public weal simply because of something decided decades ago? Paying, as I hope, full respect to the weight which in the ordinary way accrues increasingly to decisions the older they become, I nevertheless consider that in relation to R. v. Blane (37) that question should be answered in the negative. I would accordingly concur with my lords in allowing this appeal.

Appeal allowed. Mandamus issued.

Solicitors: Ronald Fletcher Baker & Co. (for the mother); Clifford Watts Compton & Co. (for the father).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

(36) [1968] 1 All E.R. 874.

(37) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 397; (1849), 13 Q.B. 769.

(38) (1883), 8 App. Cas. 658 at p. 670.

PRACTICE NOTE.

ROCKWELL MACHINE TOOL CO., LTD. v. E. P. BARRUS
(CONCESSIONAIRES), LTD. AND OTHERS [AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS].

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Megarry, J.), March 20, 1968.]

Discovery—Duty of solicitor—Ensuring that clients appreciate their duty in regard to disclosure on discovery—Wide scope of discovery—Preservation of relevant documents that might otherwise be subject to destruction in accordance with business routine.

[As to the duty of a solicitor in relation to discovery, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 30, para. 42; and for a case on the subject see 43 DIGEST (Repl.) 375, 3981.]

Case referred to:

Compagnie Financière et Commerciale du Pacifique v. Peruvian Guano Co., (1882), 11 Q.B.D. 55; 52 L.J.Q.B. 181; 48 L.T. 22; 18 Digest (Repl.) 42, 334.

Actions.

These were three associated actions in which the cause of action was alleged passing off. The plaintiffs, Rockwell Machine Tool Co., Ltd., a company incorporated in 1945, carried on business as distributors of and merchants in machine tools. In the principal action the second defendant, a company carrying on business in Pennsylvania, U.S.A., and named Rockwell Manufacturing Company, were manufacturers of, among other products, power tools. The first defendants in the principal action were distributors of tools and other engineering equipment carrying on business in London. The word "Rockwell" was thus common to the names of the plaintiffs and of the second defendants in the principal action. By writ issued on Oct. 24, 1963, in the principal action the plaintiffs sued the defendants claiming relief based, as pleaded in their amended statement of claim, on alleged passing-off of machine tools that were not of the plaintiffs' merchandise as and for the plaintiffs' machine tools in the United Kingdom under the trademark "Rockwell" or by reference to the name "Rockwell". This was denied by the defendants in their defence, who further pleaded that the second defendants had since 1945 carried on business from the U.S.A. in the sale of power tools under and in relation to their corporate name and a device consisting of the word "Rockwell" in a circle associated with the letter "r" and that such tools had been sold in the United Kingdom since 1950; and further that, since 1955, the second defendants had used a device in association with the words "Delta Rockwell" in connexion with the articles sold by them, and that such sales had been world-wide. After hearings lasting for several days the actions were settled, the defendant companies giving an undertaking to the court to the effect that they would not pass off, as the plaintiffs', machine tools not of the plaintiffs' merchandise. At the conclusion of the case His Lordship (MEGARRY, J.) made the observations reported below in regard to discovery.

MEGARRY, J.: I do not think that it would be right for me to part from this case without saying a word about a matter which has troubled me from time to time during the case, namely, the process of discovery. Prima facie, discovery by certain defendants in this case has fallen far short of the standard which it ought to have attained. I wish to make it plain that I am not criticising anyone, or attributing or allocating blame. It would be quite wrong for me to do so, because the case has not proceeded to its conclusion, and what might have been said during the remainder of the case might have thrown a new light on what has occurred hitherto. My concern is not so much for the past in this case as for the future in other cases.

A Two matters which in particular disturbed me were these. First, there was a witness for a defendant who, in response to a question in cross-examination, readily undertook one day to make a transatlantic telephone call and the next day announced that documents of prima facie relevance were being despatched by airmail. This at least suggests that the process of discovery had not been complete. No doubt last-minute disclosure is better than none at all; but the

B plaintiffs were entitled to see the documents and consider their effect in advance of the hearing, and not be reduced to prising information out of the witnesses under cross-examination and then considering what was disclosed after the plaintiffs had closed their case and some ten days of the hearing had elapsed. Secondly, it appeared from evidence for the defendants that between the issue of one of the writs in 1963 and the hearing, one of the defendants had been carrying on with its routine process of destroying documents seven years old, even though

C these probably included documents which ought to have been disclosed on discovery.

I have made it plain enough that I am not attributing or allocating blame, but looking only to the future. What I desire to say is this. In preparing for trial solicitors bear a great responsibility and a heavy burden. Not the least

D of these burdens is that of discovery. This is of especial weight in a complex case of passing off such as this was (1). Many litigants (and not least corporate litigants) have little appreciation of the scope of discovery, and the duty of making full disclosure. So often they neither know nor appreciate the requirement that they must search for and disclose to their adversary any document which, in the classic phrase of BRETT, L.J., in the Peruvian Guano case (2), "may fairly E lead him to a train of inquiry" which may either advance his own case or damage his opponent's.

Accordingly, it seems to me necessary for solicitors to take positive steps to ensure that their clients appreciate at an early stage of the litigation, promptly after writ issued, not only the duty of discovery and its width but also the importance of not destroying documents which might by possibility have to be

F disclosed. This burden extends, in my judgment, to taking steps to ensure that in any corporate organisation knowledge of this burden is passed on to any who may be affected by it.

I may add that I have no reason whatever to think that solicitors will not continue fully and loyally to discharge the heavy burden that lies on them, and that cases where the process of discovery is seriously imperfect will be very

G much the exception rather than the rule. But the events of this case have made it seem necessary to voice this matter by way of reminder that there are difficult cases, and especial difficulties in the case of large corporations.

[Reported by R. W. FARRIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

H

I

---

(1) The defendants included, in addition to the English company and the American company hereinbefore referred to, a Swiss company.

(2) Compagnie Financière et Commerciale du Pacifique v. Peruvian Guano Co., (1882), 11 Q.B.D. 55 at p. 63.

GATLAND AND ANOTHER v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMMISSIONER.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Milmo, JJ.),
March 18, 1968.]

Highway—Danger or annoyance to users—Deposit of builders' hopper—Hopper six feet wide deposited on highway adjacent to kerb to collect builders' rubble—Consent of highway authority not obtained—Commercial convenience not lawful excuse—Road straight and well lit at night—Red lamps lit by hopper—Highway forty-three feet wide—Lorry ran into hopper at night—Lorry driver not, in the circumstances, endangered by hopper—Highways Act, 1959 (7 & 8 Eliz. 2 c. 25), s. 140 (1).

On Jan. 23, 1967, a company, S., Ltd., by their driver, G., left a builders' hopper adjacent to the kerb in the highway in front of the premises where builders were working. He supplied the builders with two red hurricane lamps and paraffin; the lamps were lit on the relevant evening. No permission was obtained from the highway authority under s. 146 of the Highways Act, 1959 to deposit the hopper. At 12.45 a.m. on Jan. 26, 1967, a lorry driver driving a lorry on the highway collided with the hopper when travelling at ten to fifteen miles per hour. The lorry's headlights were on but were dipped; the road was straight, was forty-three feet wide and was lit by sodium lamps one of which was only thirty feet from the hopper. The hopper was six feet wide. On appeal by the prosecutor from a decision of quarter sessions allowing an appeal by G. and S., Ltd. from convictions of G. of an offence against s. 140 (1)* of the Highways Act, 1959, and of S., Ltd. for aiding and abetting G.,

Held: although commercial convenience was not a lawful excuse for the purposes of s. 140 (1) of the Highways Act, 1959, and although, under s. 81† of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, the burden was on the accused to prove lawful excuse, yet it was for the prosecution to prove that it was in consequence of the hopper having been deposited on the highway that the lorry driver was endangered; and in the present case the finding of quarter sessions that, in effect, depositing the hopper did not endanger the lorry driver, but that his own negligence was the cause of the accident and should stand (see p. 103, letter I, and p. 104, letter A, post).

Appeal dismissed.

[As to causing danger to users of the highway, see SUPPLEMENT to 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.), para. 456A, 3.

For the Highways Act, 1959, s. 140, s. 146, see 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 562, 568.]

Case Stated.

This was a Case Stated by the South East London Quarter Sessions (chairman, J. A. GRIEVES, Esq., Q.C.) sitting at Croydon on Aug. 22, 1967.

On May 5, 1967, informations were laid by P.C. 277 'Z' Ricketts, a constable of the Metropolitan Police, charging that: (a) the respondent, Harold Gatland, had, on or about, Jan. 23, 1967, at Mitcham Road, Croydon, without lawful authority or excuse, deposited a thing, namely a metal hopper, on a highway called Mitcham Road, Croydon, in consequence whereof a user of the said highway was endangered, contrary to s. 140 of the Highways Act, 1959; and (b) the respondent company, Geo. Sands & Co., Ltd., had aided and abetted the respondent, Gatland in committing the said offence, contrary to s. 140 of the Highways Act, 1959, and s. 35 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952. On June * Section 140 (1) is set out at p. 103, letter C, post.

† Section 81, so far as material, is set out at p. 103, letter D, post.

A 5 and 8, 1967, a magistrates' court, sitting at Croydon, heard the said informations, found them proved, ordered the respondent Gatland to be conditionally discharged and fined the respondent company 40s. with £8 4s. costs. On June 20, 1967, the present respondents gave notice of appeal against their said convictions.

The following facts were found. The respondent company in carrying on business let hoppers for hire to builders for the purpose of containing and disposing of waste materials from sites where building operations were being carried out. They had about sixty hoppers, and were concerned in between four hundred and five hundred such hirings per month. The hoppers, which were six feet wide, were delivered, and, when full, removed by a vehicle, belonging to the respondent company. The vehicle which was known as a road lugger, was eight feet wide. The weight of the vehicle and a full hopper was between eleven and twelve tons.

C The respondent company warned customers of the need to attach red lights to hoppers at night, and supplied without charge two red hurricane lamps ready filled with paraffin with each hopper for that purpose. On Jan. 23, 1967, the respondent Gatland, a driver employed by the respondent company delivered an empty hopper in connexion with the conversion of premises at 688, Mitcham Road, West Croydon. After consultation with an employee of the builder, the respondent Gatland left the hopper in the roadway, adjacent to the kerb, in front of No. 688 Mitcham Road; the driveway adjacent to the premises belonged to the premises next door. The owner thereof did not permit user by vehicles and he had refused the hirer's request for permission for such user. The entrance was too narrow between the gateposts to permit the entry of the road lugger. It was impracticable to set the hopper down in the front garden of the premises

E because owing to the construction of the lugger and the method of lowering the bin, the front garden wall would have had to be demolished before the bin was set down; the respondent Gatland also delivered two red hurricane lamps and paraffin to the builders' servant; the road at the point where the hopper was left was forty-three feet wide. The hopper was the standard six feet wide and approximately ten feet long and three feet high. It was painted orange; no permission was applied for to, or granted by, the relevant highway authority, the London Borough of Croydon, for the hopper to be or remain in Mitcham Road. At about 12.45 a.m. on Jan. 26, 1967, Mr. Ritchie, a lorry driver, left a depot at Mitcham Road, Croydon, driving a five ton articulated lorry. His destination was Corby, in the county of Northampton. At the material time, it was raining, and the windscreen wiper of the lorry was in operation. The lorry was showing side lights and dipped headlights. After travelling eighty-eight yards from the exit to the depot, the lorry collided with the hopper, which was on his nearside of Mitcham Road. The lorry was then travelling at between ten and fifteen miles per hour, and was changing from second into third gear. Mr. Ritchie did not see the hopper before the collision: the lorry sustained extensive damage to its front nearside. Neither Mr. Ritchie nor anyone else

H suffered personal injury. Two damaged red lamps, of a pattern similar to those supplied by the respondent company, were found near the scene of the collision. Lighted red hurricane lamps had been placed at the corners of the hopper on the previous evening by the builder or his employees; Mitcham Road was illuminated at the material time, by sodium lamps (one of which was about thirty feet from the hopper) which gave a very good light; Mitcham Road at the material point runs straight for half a mile in one direction and in the other direction for a further 160 yards leading into a slow curve.

I It was contended before quarter sessions on behalf of the respondents in the High Court (a) that s. 140 (1) of the Highways Act, 1959, created an offence of depositing a thing on a highway, and did not deal with its continued presence there. Therefore, as the depositing in the present case occurred on Jan. 23, the respondents could not be guilty of an offence on Jan. 26; (b) that the words "without lawful authority" in s. 140 (1) referred to the power of the highway authority to consent to the temporary deposit of building materials, rubbish or other things in the street under s. 146 (1) of the Act of 1959; (c) that the word "excuse" in s. 140 (1) embraced the impracticability of depositing the thing elsewhere than on the highway; (d) that the word "injured" in s. 140 (1) referred to personal injury; (e) that the word "endangered" in s. 140 (1) meant "put in peril of personal injury"; (f) that the respondent company could only be guilty of aiding and abetting the respondent Gatland if they knew the circumstances at the time of the collision.

It was contended before quarter sessions on behalf of the appellant prosecutor: (i) that the words "lawful authority" in s. 140 (1) of the Highways Act, 1959, referred to the consent of the highway authority; (ii) that the word "excuse" in s. 140 (1) was restricted to something beyond the control of the person who deposited a thing on a highway, e.g., a breakdown, and did not extend to the impracticability of depositing the thing elsewhere than on the highway; (iii) that the word "deposits" in s. 140 (1) did not restrict the operation of the subsection to an event which occurred directly after the thing was deposited in the highway. The subsection related to events which occurred during the continued presence of the thing on the highway; (iv) that the words "in consequence whereof" meant that the deposit of the thing in the highway must have been a substantial cause of the injury or danger to a user of the highway; (v) that the word "injured" in s. 140 (1) referred to personal injury; (vi) that the word "endangered" meant something which was likely to put a user of the highway in peril.

Quarter sessions were of the opinion: (a) that the words "lawful authority" in s. 140 (1) of the Highways Act, 1959, included the consent of the highway authority under s. 146 (1) of the Act; (b) that the lawful excuse mentioned in s. 140 (1) was generally restricted to matters outside the control of the person who deposited a thing on the highway, e.g., a breakdown, and that it did not include the commercial impracticability of depositing the thing elsewhere than on the highway because in such event the depositor could obtain consent under s. 146 (1); (c) that the word "deposits" in the section did not restrict the operation of the section to an event which occurred directly after the deposit. The section extended to events occurring subsequently during the continued presence of the thing on the highway provided that the deposit caused injury or danger to a user of the highway; (d) that, as regards proof of lawful authority or excuse, the burden was on the respondents (on the appeal to the High Court) to adduce or point to evidence thereof and (if such evidence appeared) on the appellant to establish absence of authority or consent; (e) that the words "in consequence thereof" meant that the danger must be on account of, that is to say, substantially caused by, the deposit; (f) that the word "injured" referred to personal injury; (g) that the word "endangered" meant put in peril of personal injury; (h) that, if quarter sessions had found that the respondent Gatland had committed an offence under s. 140 (1), the respondent company would be guilty of aiding and abetting him if it was established that the respondent company authorised the respondent Gatland to deposit the hopper in any place which the respondent Gatland thought fit; (i) that on this broad, straight, well-lighted highway Mr. Ritchie was not endangered in consequence of the deposit on by the respondent Gatland of a hopper which projected six feet only into a carriageway forty-three feet wide and was marked by red lamps placed and lit as instructed by the respondent Gatland.

Quarter Sessions accordingly allowed the appeal. The prosecutor now appealed.

The authority and case noted below* were cited during the argument.

S. H. Noakes and J. W. McDonald for the appellant, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

J. S. R. Abdela, Q.C., and W. S. Aylen for the respondents.

* PRATT AND MACKENZIE LAW OF HIGHWAYS (20th Edn. pp. 718-720, 725-727; John Henshall (Quarries), Ltd. v. Harvey, [1965] 1 All E.R. 725; [1965] 2 Q.B. 233.

A LORD PARKER, C.J., stated the nature of the appeal and continued: This is a case brought by the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis with a view, it is said, to getting some guidance as to the method of control of what has now become a well known feature of the London streets, namely the leaving of large metal skips for the receipt of builders' rubble. The skips or hoppers are well known: they are six feet wide, some ten feet long and some three feet high, B and they are brought to the position where they are to be deposited by a road lugger, and from time to time they are filled and are hoisted on to the lugger and taken away.

[His LORDSHIP summarised the facts and continued:] On appeal, quarter sessions quashed the conviction, holding that on that broad, straight, well lighted highway the lorry driver was not endangered in consequence of the deposit C on it by Mr. Gatland of a hopper which projected six feet only into the carriage-way, forty-three feet wide, marked by red lamps placed and lit as instructed by Mr. Gatland. The section, s. 140 (1), of the Highways Act, 1959, provides that:

"If a person, without lawful authority or excuse, deposits any thing whatsoever on a highway in consequence whereof a user of the highway is D injured or endangered, that person shall be guilty of an offence."

It is for the accused to raise and prove lawful authority or excuse. Section 81 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, specifically provides that:

"Where the defendant to an information or complaint relies for his defence E on any exception, exemption, proviso, excuse or qualification . . . the burden of proving the . . . excuse or qualification shall be on him . . ."

It was admitted that there was no authority under s. 146 (1) from the highway authority (1), and the only excuse that was raised was that it was not convenient to deposit the hopper in question at any other place than the place where it was deposited. Quarter sessions held, and I think quite rightly, that commercial, convenience or commercial practicability is not an excuse within the subsection F It is, however, in every case for the prosecution to prove, not only that the article in question has been deposited on a highway, but also that in consequence thereof a user of the highway is injured or endangered. There is no question here of anybody being injured, and accordingly it was for the prosecution to prove that the hopper having been deposited, it was as a consequence thereof that the lorry driver was endangered.

G There is a finding of fact in the present case, which is clearly binding on this court. It is that on this broad straight well lighted highway the lorry driver was not endangered in consequence of the deposit of the hopper. Counsel for the appellant has sought to say that is wrong by submitting that if anyone leaves a hopper in a roadway, and, someone is in fact endangered, then it must be in consequence of its being there. It sounds at first sight an attractive argument, but quite clearly the endangering may be due to some completely different cause. H It may have been the result of a gross act of dangerous driving; it may be carelessness; it may be negligence. The question in each case must be whether in all the circumstances, considering the exact position of the hopper in the road, whether it is a straight road, whether it is near a corner, whether it is lit, and matters of that sort, the article deposited was a cause of a user of the highway being endangered. I Provided, however, it does not, in the ordinary sense, endanger a user any more than if a car had been parked there, and the position of the hopper merely forms part of the background, or it may be said the scenery, then the negligence or fault of the user, in this case the lorry driver, can properly be said to be the cause of the endangering.

That, as I understand it, is what quarter sessions have found as a fact, and I see no ground whatever for interfering with that finding, and accordingly I would dismiss this appeal.

ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

MILMO, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the appellant); Rawlence & Son, Croydon (for the respondents).

[Reported by N.P. METCALFE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] B

WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. BEVERLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL AND ANOTHER.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Donaldson, J.), February 20, 29, 1968.] C

Statute—Construction—Confiscatory construction—Private rights of property not taken away without compensation, unless intention clearly expressed—General control of development under town planning legislation—Special control available in regard to road widening under highways legislation—Liability under special control to pay compensation, but not under general control—General control not intended to be exercised in regard to matters within special control—Highways Act, 1959 (7 & 8 Eliz. 2 c. 25), s. 72—Town and Country Planning Act, 1962 (10 & 11 Eliz. 2 c. 38), s. 12, s. 23. D

Town and Country Planning—Development—Permission for development—Refusal of permission—Alternative to exercising statutory power under Highways Act, 1959, s. 72, to prescribe improvement line with a view to road widening—Exercise of power under s. 72 would carry right to compensation, but refusal of development permission would not—Dismissal by Minister of appeal from refusal of permission—Whether Minister's decision valid—Highways Act, 1959 (7 & 8 Eliz. 2 c. 25), s. 72—Town and Country Planning Act, 1962 (10 & 11 Eliz. 2 c. 38), s. 23. E

Town and Country Planning—Development—Permission for development—Notification of decision—Reasons—Factors taken into account should be identified—Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1965 (S.I. 1965 No. 473), r. 13 (1). F

Application by a bank for planning permission for an extension at the rear of branch premises was refused by the borough council, as local planning authority, and, after a local inquiry (which was subsequently re-opened), the bank's appeal to the Minister was dismissed. The reason for the dismissal of the appeal, as also for the refusal of planning permission, was that as a result of the local planning authority's proposals for the town centre generally, the street behind the bank would become a main internal traffic road and would require to be widened; and that, though no date for the widening could be given, it was officially approved by the county council as highway and planning authority and the proposal to widen was a firm proposal. At the re-opened inquiry the borough council had stated that in recent years any proposals for development within the "improvement line" had been resisted. No improvement line, strictly so-called, had been prescribed under the relevant statutory power for road widening, viz., s. 72 of the Highways Act, 1959. Under that enactment a person whose land was injuriously affected by the prescribing of an improvement line would become entitled to compensation. Under the course adopted, viz., the refusal of planning permission, a right to compensation would not arise. On application by the bank for certiorari to quash the Minister's decision, the court found that the actual prejudice to the proposed widening of the street lay in the question of compensation; in short, that to proceed by refusal of planning permission was administratively the cheaper route.

Held: the decision to withhold planning permission under the Town and

A Country Planning Act, 1962, for proposed development so as, in effect, to achieve the same result as would be achieved by prescribing an improvement line under s. 72 of the Highways Act, 1959, and at the same time to exclude the right to compensation which s. 72 would confer, was invalid and the decision of the Minister would accordingly be quashed, for the following reasons—

B (i) since the town and country planning legislation provided a general control of development, and s. 72 of the Highways Act, 1959, (and the enactments preceding it) provided a special control relating to highway problems, it was not the intention of the legislature that the general control should be operated within the limited sphere of the special control so as to exclude rights conferred under the special control, in particular, the right to compensation (see p. 114, letter A, post).

C Minister of Housing and Local Government v. Hartnell ([1965] 1 All E.R. 490) applied.

(ii) where, owing to a multiplicity of legislative controls limiting the freedom of the individual to deal with his property, the controlling authority had two alternative controls, one of which carried a right of the individual to compensation and the other of which did not, the control carrying the right to compensation was the one that, for the maintenance of a reasonable balance between the interests of the community and the interests of the individual, should be exercised (see p. 114, letter C, post).

D Per CURIAM: the obligation imposed on the Minister under r. 13 (1)* of the Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules, 1965, viz., to notify his reasons for his decision, is by necessary implication an obligation to notify them fully and sufficiently, and to identify expressly or by reference the factors of which he has taken account in exercising his discretion (see p. 111, letter A, post, and p. 114, letter E, post).

E [Editorial Note. Though the maxim generalalia specialibus non derogant (cf., 36 HALSBURY'S LAWS, 3rd Edn., 467, para. 711) is generally cited in regard to questions of repeal of enactments, yet the maxim may have analogy to the ground of decision stated at (i) above.

F As to the presumption against interference by statute with private rights, see 36 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 413, para. 627; for cases on the subject, see 44 DIGEST (Repl.) 294-298, 1236-1283.

G As to the Minister's duty to give the reasons for his decision, see 37 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 198, para. 311, note (s) and SUPPLEMENT thereto, para. 311A, 3; and for cases concerning the giving of reasons, see 45 DIGEST (Repl.) 341, 56 and DIGEST (Cont. Vol. B) 691, 556.

For the Highways Act, 1959, s. 72, s. 73, see 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 491, 494.

H For the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962, s. 176 (3), s. 179, see 42 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1142, 1145.]

Cases referred to:

Associated Provincial Picture Houses, Ltd. v. Wednesbury Corpn., [1947] 2 All E.R. 680; [1948] 1 K.B. 223; [1948] L.J.R. 190; 177 L.T. 641; 112 J.P. 55; 45 Digest (Repl.) 215, 189.

I Colonial Sugar Refining Co., Ltd. v. Melbourne Harbour Trust Comrs., [1927] A.C. 343; 96 L.J.P.C. 74; 136 L.T. 709; 44 Digest (Repl.) 297, 1276.

Minister of Housing and Local Government v. Hartnell, [1965] 1 All E.R. 490; [1965] A.C. 1134; [1965] 2 W.L.R. 474; 129 J.P. 234; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 694, 124.

---

* S.I. 1965 No. 473. Rule 13 (1) provides as follows: "The Minister shall notify his decisions, and his reasons therefor, in writing to the applicant . . . ; and, where a copy of the appointed person's report is not sent with the notification of the decision, the notification shall be accompanied by a summary of the appointed person's conclusions and recommendations."

Motion.

This was a motion, by notice dated Mar. 9, 1967, by the applicant, Westminster Bank, Ltd., pursuant to s. 179 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962, for an order quashing the decision of the second respondent, the Minister of Housing and Local Government, notified by letter of decision dated Jan. 31, 1967, whereby he dismissed an appeal by the bank against the refusal of the first respondents, the Beverley Borough Council (acting as the local planning authority under delegated powers) to grant planning permission for alterations and extensions at the bank's premises at 60, Saturday Market, Beverley, in the East Riding of Yorkshire. The grounds of the application were:—1. That the action of the Minister was not within the powers of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962, in that—(a) he failed to have regard in his decision to material considerations, viz. (i) the failure of the borough council to prescribe an improvement line or a building line in respect of Lairgate (the street which would be affected by the bank's proposed alterations at the rear of its premises) under the provisions of s. 72 and s. 73 of the Highways Act, 1959; and (ii) the fact that the refusal of planning permission involved the payment of compensation under s. 123 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962; (b) the dismissal of the bank's appeal to the Minister had the effect of prescribing an improvement line or building line while depriving the applicants of the compensation provided for by the said s. 72 and s. 73 of the Highways Act, 1959. 2. That the interests of the bank had been substantially prejudiced by—(a) the Minister's failure to have regard to the material considerations set out at 1. (a) above contrary to s. 17 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962, (b)* the failure of the second appointed inspector to give a good reason for not making any recommendation contrary to r. 10 of the Town and Country Planning Appeals (Inquiries Procedure) Rules, 1962†; and (c) the Minister's failure to give good and sufficient reasons for his decision, contrary to r. 11 of the Town and Country Planning Appeals (Inquiries Procedure) Rules, 1962. The relevant facts are set out in the judgment.

The cases noted below‡ were cited during the argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment.

D. P. Kerrigan, Q.C., and A. B. Dawson for the applicants, the bank.

Nigel Bridge for the Minister.

The first respondents, Beverley Borough Council, did not appear and were not represented.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 29. DONALDSON, J., read the following judgment: Westminster Bank, Ltd., to which I will refer as "the bank", has a branch which backs on to the street known as "Lairgate" in Beverley in the East Riding of Yorkshire. In April, 1962, the bank was minded to alter and extend the back of its premises by constructing a new office for the manager, a waiting-room and a strong-room and by altering the lavatory accommodation. This development could not lawfully be effected without planning permission, and application for such permission was duly made to and refused by the Beverley Borough Council, which was the local planning authority under delegated powers. The reason for the refusal was that, and I quote:

* The contentions of the bank set out at 1 (a) (ii) and 2 (b) were abandoned during the hearing; see p. 109, letter F, post.

† S.I. 1962 No. 1425. The Rules of 1962 were revoked and replaced by the Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1965, S.I. 1965 No. 473, which came into operation on Apr. 1, 1965. Rule 13 (1) of the latter rules, reproducing in substantially identical terms r. 11 (1) of the earlier rules, is set out at p. 105, footnote *.

‡ Re Poyser and Mills' Arbitration, Re, [1963] 1 All E.R. 612; [1964] 2 Q.B. 467; Hall & Co., Ltd. v. Shoreham-by-Sea U.D.C., [1964] 1 All E.R. 1; Givaudan & Co., Ltd. v. Minister of Housing and Local Government, [1966] 3 All E.R. 696; Padfield v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, [1968] 1 All E.R. 694.

A "The proposed development might prejudice the possible future widening of Lairgate which it is intended should have an ultimate overall width of forty feet."

The bank did not appeal from this refusal, but contented itself with exploring the possibility of an underground strong-room which would not affect any road widening scheme. Eventually in April, 1964, it decided to renew its application for planning permission. Predictably this application was refused and equally predictably the bank appealed to the Minister of Housing and Local Government, who directed a local inquiry, which was conducted in March, 1965, by a Mr. Deans. In the course of that inquiry, the issues between the bank and the planning authority were clarified and may be summarised as follows:

C 1. Whether there was more than a speculative intention to widen Lairgate, in the light of the fact that such a widening had been mooted for many years but no action had been taken and, in particular, the local authority as the highway authority had failed to prescribe an improvement line or a building line under s. 72 or s. 73 of the Highways Act, 1959, or previous similar statutory provisions (1).

D 2. Whether planning powers could properly be used to produce the same effect as the prescription of an improvement or building line under the Highways Act, 1959, without the necessity for paying compensation for injurious affection which would follow from the exercise of the powers conferred by that Act.

E Mr. Deans made a report dated Apr. 22, 1965, in which he made findings of fact, reached conclusions and made a recommendation. The findings of fact included the following:—

(vi) For about twenty years the council have, through planning control, projected a scheme for the widening of Lairgate along its eastern side;

F (x) To provide a new strong-room within that part of the site not to be affected by the proposed widening scheme would involve the appellants in a considerably increased expenditure;

(xi) The increase in usable floor space that would result from the present proposal would be within ten per cent. of the area now occupied by the appellants.

G Mr. Deans made no finding of fact whether the increase in the cubic capacity of the bank's premises would exceed ten per cent. of its existing cubic capacity. Mr. Deans' conclusions may be summarised as that (a) it was uncertain whether or when Lairgate would be widened, and (b) should this course ever be adopted, the cost of demolishing the proposed strong-room would have comparatively little financial impact on the overall costs of the scheme. He accordingly recommended that the appeal be allowed.

H This report was not communicated to the bank, and silence reigned for nearly a year until a decision letter emerged from the Ministry of Housing and Local Government on Mar. 10, 1966. This letter quoted Mr. Deans' conclusions and recommendations, and added that the Minister had been advised by the Minister of Transport that

I "The future widening of Lairgate is a firm proposal which is part of a long-term road improvement scheme essential for the relief of traffic congestion in Beverley. The appeal site will definitely be required for the widening of Lairgate and whilst there are no plans for the immediate implementation of this proposal it is essential that it should not be prejudiced by the development of land which will be needed for the road widening.”

(1) For s. 72 and s. 73 of the Highways Act, 1959, see 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 491-494. An improvement line (under s. 72) is designed to prevent the erection of buildings on land which will ultimately be required for street widening. It is distinct from a building line (under s. 73), which is a frontage line beyond which buildings in a street may not project irrespective of any question of street widening and which may be prescribed under s. 73.

The letter concluded by informing the bank that the Minister proposed to dismiss the appeal unless the bank wished the inquiry to be re-opened for the limited purpose of examining the new evidence adduced by the Minister of Transport and any rebutting evidence adduced by the bank.

The bank asked that the inquiry be re-opened and this was done on Nov. 1, 1966, the inspector on this occasion being a Mr. Jackson. At the hearing the representative of the Ministry of Transport supported his Minister's view to which I have already referred and in addition suggested that if planning permission were granted to the bank similar permissions would have to be granted to the owners of other premises along Lairgate, as a result of which the cost of widening the road would be increased by an exorbitant amount. The Beverley Borough Council supported the Minister of Transport and added that “in recent years any proposals for development within the improvement line have been resisted; consequently several building proposals have not been carried out and others have been amended so as to stand behind the improvement line.”

This “improvement line” is not one prescribed under the Highways Act, 1959 (2), but is one which was variously referred to in the local authority's observations at the first inquiry as an “intended improvement line” and an “improvement line” and was marked on the plans used in the appeal. Whether it ever received wider publicity prior to the publication of the Beverley Town Centre map (redevelopment and road proposals) at some time between the two inquiries, I know not. The bank reiterated its previous contention.

Mr. Jackson's report, dated Nov. 23, 1966, contained the following conclusions:

“33. The road proposals shown on the town centre map are of the utmost importance to the realisation of the town centre scheme as a whole. The proposal to use Lairgate as part of the perimeter road around the town centre seems to be sound. Although no date can be given for the carrying out of the widening of Lairgate, it is obvious that due to its very restricted width it would have to be widened in order to function effectively as part of this perimeter route.

“34. It seems possible that, following the realisation of other road proposals in the central area, the increased use of Lairgate would then make it essential for the widening to be carried out within the foreseeable future.

“35. The construction of the new strong-room in the position proposed by the [bank] would involve substantial works in advance of the proposed road improvement line; this could prejudice the carrying out of the widening and would therefore be against the public interest.”

He ended his report by saying

“Because the re-opened inquiry and my report on it relate only to one aspect of the matters considered at the previous inquiry, I do not feel able to make a firm recommendation as to the determination of this appeal.”

The decision letter of the Minister of Housing and Local Government, dated Jan. 31, 1967, so far as is material, was in the following terms:

“The Minister has considered the reports of the inspectors, Mr. R. W. Deans, G.M., A.R.I.B.A., who held a local inquiry on Mar. 30, 1965, and Mr. J. P. Jackson, A.R.I.B.A., Dip.Arch., A.M.T.P.I., Dip.T.I., who re-opened the inquiry on Nov. 1, 1966. Copies of both reports are enclosed.

“The local planning authority's reason for refusing planning permission, as given in the notice of their decision, was that ‘the proposed development might prejudice the possible future widening of Lairgate’; and the question

(2) I.e., under s. 72 of the Act of 1959. See note (1) at p. 107, ante.

A of whether this is a proper or sufficient reason for refusing the planning permission sought is the only matter in dispute in the appeal."

The letter then set out Mr. Deans' conclusions, the history of the appeal between the two inquiries and a summary of Mr. Jackson's conclusions. The letter ended as follows:

B "It is considered that the evidence given at the re-opened inquiry by the representatives of the Ministry of Transport and the local planning authority made it clear that, as a result of proposals for the town centre generally, Lairgate would become a main internal traffic road and would require to be widened. On the information at present available, it appears to the Minister that the authority's policy for the town centre is a reasonable one. Though
C no date can be given for the road-widening, it is accepted that it is a proposal which the county council have officially approved, as both the highway and planning authority, and that the proposal is a firm one. There seems to be no doubt that the appeal site will eventually be required for road widening, and it is considered that it would not be right to prejudice the local planning authority's scheme by permitting further development in front of their improvement line. The Minister is therefore unable to accept Mr. Deans' recommendation that the appeal should be allowed.

"Accordingly, he hereby dismisses the appeal."

The bank now moves the court to quash the Minister's decision under the powers conferred by s. 179 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962. Subsection
E (4) (b) of that section entitles the court to quash the "action" of the Minister, which includes his decision on an appeal to him (3) under s. 23 (see s. 176 (3) (b)), if either of two conditions is satisfied, namely, that the court is satisfied that (i) the decision is not within the powers conferred on the Minister by the Act of 1962, or (ii) the interests of the [bank] have been substantially prejudiced by a failure to comply with any of the relevant requirements in relation thereto. The expression "relevant requirements" is defined in s. 179 (7) as any require-
F ment of the Act of 1962 or of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958, or of any order, regulations or rules made under the Acts of 1962 or 1958 which are applicable to the decision. Counsel for the bank abandoned the contentions set out in sub-para. 1 (a) (ii) and sub-para. 2 (b) of the notice of motion (4) but relied on the remaining grounds as entitling the bank to relief under both heads. Essentially the bank puts forward two contentions, namely, that

G (a) if the local planning authority or the Minister refuses permission for development for no other reason than that of thereby creating an improvement or building line for highway purposes, the refusal is ultra vires.

(b) The Minister, being under an admitted obligation to give sufficient reasons for his decision, failed to give such reasons and the bank's interests have been substantially prejudiced thereby.

H The first of these two contentions raises an issue of the highest importance, since it appears that for nearly fourteen years, under differing national and local administrations, successive Ministers and local planning authorities throughout the country have been refusing permission to develop for just this reason. Further-
I more, since the alternative method of achieving the same result involves the payment of compensation to the landowners affected, considerable sums of money are involved.

The starting point of the bank's argument is the principle of law formulated by LORD WARRINGTON OF CLYFFE in Colonial Sugar Refining Co., Ltd. v. Melbourne Harbour Trust Comrs. (5) that "... a statute should not be held to take away private rights of property

(3) For s. 23 of the Act of 1962, see 42 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.), p. 991.

(4) The two sub-paragraphs referred to are set out at p. 106, letters C and E, ante.

(5) [1927] A.C. 343 at p. 359.

without compensation unless the intention to do so is expressed in clear and unambiguous terms.”

That this principle forms part of English as well as of Australian law appears from the decision of the House of Lords in Minister of Housing and Local Government v. Hartnell (6). An alternative approach lies in the application of the principle stated at the end of the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., in Associated Provincial Picture Houses, Ltd. v. Wednesbury Corpn. (7). In the application of this principle the courts acknowledge that it is no part of their duty to substitute their discretion for that of the Minister. On the other hand they have both the right and the duty to intervene if the Minister in exercising his undoubted discretion has omitted to take account of relevant matters or has taken into account irrelevant matters; if, in other words, he has misdirected himself. Since those who are entrusted by Parliament with discretionary powers are to be assumed to be reasonable men and women, it follows that a wholly unreasonable exercise of discretion gives rise to an inference that he who took the decision misdirected himself. If so, the decision is ultra vires.

If a public street is narrow or inconvenient or it is necessary or desirable that such a street should be widened, the highway authority acting under s. 72 of the Highways Act, 1959 (8), may prescribe an improvement line and thereupon it becomes unlawful to erect any building on the street side of that line without the consent of the highway authority. Owners of land have a right of appeal to a court of quarter sessions if they are aggrieved by the decision to prescribe the line or by a refusal of consent to build in front of the line. Furthermore by sub-s. (8):

“Any person whose property is injuriously affected by the prescribing of an improvement line under this section shall . . . be entitled to recover from the authority which prescribed the line compensation for the injury sustained.”

Similar provisions in s. 73 of the Act of 1959 enable a highway authority to prescribe a building line (8), and make provision for the payment of compensation.

Counsel for the bank submits that the action of the Minister in refusing permission to develop the land solely on the ground that it is necessary or desirable that a street be widened, thereby rendering it unnecessary for the highway authority to prescribe an improvement line and pay compensation under the Highways Act, 1959, amounts to taking away private rights of property without compensation and that the intention to empower him so to act is not expressed in the Town and Country Planning Acts in clear or unambiguous terms or at all. Alternatively, it is said that the action is a wholly unreasonable use of planning powers to achieve the prescribing of an improvement line for highway purposes without paying compensation when Parliament has expressly provided a special procedure for attaining this object which gives aggrieved persons a right to compensation and, incidentally, to have the decision reviewed on its merits by a court of law. I confess that I find the second approach more attractive, but both are open to the bank.

The second ground relied on by the bank is that the Minister

“failed to give good and sufficient reasons for his decision contrary to r. 11 (1) of the Town and Country Planning Appeals (Inquiries Procedure) Rules, 1962 (9),” to quote the notice of motion. I think that the relevant rule is now r. 13 (1) of the Rules of 1965 (10), but, it being admitted that there was a statutory obligation to give reasons, it was unnecessary to explore the matter in argument.

(6) [1965] 1 All E.R. 490; [1965] A.C. 1134.

(7) [1947] 2 All E.R. 680 at p. 685; [1948] 1 K.B. 223 at p. 231.

(8) See footnote (1) at p. 107, ante.

(9) S.I. 1962 No. 1425. See footnote † at p. 106, ante.

(10) Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules, 1965 (S.I. 1965 No. 473). The material terms of r. 13 (1) are set out in footnote * at p. 105, ante.

- A I refer to the source of the obligation only because I think that the obligation is to notify the reasons for a decision and, by necessary implication, to notify them fully and sufficiently. It is not an obligation to give sufficient reasons, which is a totally different conception going directly to the merits of the decision. This obligation is of the greatest importance as compliance enables an applicant to place before a court the materials which will or may enable it to determine
- B whether the Minister has acted within his powers. If therefore reasons are not stated or are stated inadequately, it will follow almost as of course that the applicant has been substantially prejudiced. This is not to say that the reasons need be set out with the complexity which so often flows from a determined search for the ultimate in precision, but rather that so far as possible they shall be couched in language which is really intelligible to those who have been
- C spared a lawyer's training. The Minister, as I have said, propounds the issue in these terms:

"The local planning authority's reason for refusing planning permission, as given in the notice of their decision, was that 'the proposed development might prejudice the possible future widening of Lairgate'; and the question of whether this is a proper or sufficient reason for refusing the planning permission sought is the only matter in dispute in the appeal."

- D He answers this question by saying that:

"There seems to be no doubt that the appeal site will eventually be required for road widening, and it is considered that it would not be right to prejudice the local planning authority's scheme by permitting further E development in front of their improvement line."

The court must accept the conclusion that the appeal site will eventually be required for road widening and, in the context of Mr. Jackson's conclusions which the Minister quoted in the preceding paragraph of this letter, it seems that "eventually" means "within the foreseeable future" (11). What, however, is meant by prejudicing the scheme? In the light of the Minister's earlier reference

F to the reports of Mr. Deans and Mr. Jackson and his quotation of Mr. Jackson's conclusions (12), I have little doubt that the Minister was considering the financial implications.

What were the financial implications? They fall under three heads:

- (a) The cost of removing the new buildings in front of the improvement line when Lairgate came to be widened.

- G This would equally be avoided if the local authority, acting as a highway authority, prescribed an improvement line under s. 72 of the Highways Act, 1959.

(b) The cost of acquiring the land when Lairgate came to be widened.

- H It does not appear that the sum payable on a negotiated or a compulsory purchase would differ according to whether further development were prevented by the prescribing of an improvement line under the Act of 1959 or by the refusal of planning permission under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962.

(c) The cost of compensating the bank for the injurious affection suffered by its property.

- I If the Minister dismissed the appeal no such compensation would be payable. If he allowed the appeal, the local authority would be obliged (i) to exercise its powers under the Highways Act, 1959, and pay such compensation, or (ii) to do nothing and face eventual increased costs of acquiring and clearing the site, or (iii) to abandon the scheme.

It is clear that the prejudice lies in the compensation element. If this were not clear from a perusal of the decision letter and the reports therein referred to, it is made clear beyond a peradventure by a Circular, No. 696 dated Aug. 27, (11) See para. 34 of the inspector's report, at p. 108, letter G, ante.

(12) See in particular para. 35 of Mr. Jackson's report, at p. 108, letter G, ante.

1954, issued by the Ministry of Transport and Civil Aviation, which has never been superseded or withdrawn. Paragraph 8 provides as follows:—

“Prescription of Building and Improvement Lines

“In view of the powers now available to local authorities as planning authorities for the control of development it is no longer necessary for councils to safeguard future road improvement schemes by using their powers under s. 5 of the Road Improvement Act 1925, or s. 33 of the Public Health Act, 1925, to prescribe building and improvement lines. Accordingly the Minister will no longer entertain applications for grants in respect of expenditure incurred by councils in meeting claims for compensation payable in consequence of the prescription of building and improvement lines.”

The powers referred to in the two Acts of 1925 are now to be found in s. 73 and s. 72 of the Highways Act, 1959 (13). The message is clear: the planning route is cheaper.

Counsel for the Minister does not suggest that I have misunderstood the position or have failed to appreciate the Minister's reasons. What he submits—and he does it with characteristic persuasiveness—is that one must approach the matter from an historical point of view, and that so approached the Minister's action is wholly justified. The argument, as I understand it, and if I do not, it is certainly my fault rather than his, runs as follows:—(a) Before the days of planning legislation the fortunate freeholder could do what he liked with his own, subject only to the law of nuisance. (b) Between 1925 and 1947 if any owner was deprived of his common law freedom, he was entitled to compensation. (c) Under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, every owner was deprived of his common law right to develop his land (14) and became entitled to compensation for his loss, if any. Thereafter any owner who obtained permission to develop had to pay a development charge designed to equate his position with that of those who could not develop. (d) Under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1954, the scheme was revised (15), development charges were abolished and so was the universal right to immediate compensation. Instead it was provided that compensation was payable to those landowners who would have qualified for compensation under the Act of 1947 and whose applications for permission to develop were refused. (e) Under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1959, the scheme was further revised (16). No provision was made for additional compensation, save in cases of minor development. Such development was exempted from control by Sch. 3 to the Act of 1947 and accordingly at that time no question of compensation arose. It was brought under control by the Act of 1962 which by s. 123 provided that compensation should be payable (17) if permission to develop was refused in such cases. The bank at one time sought to contend that its proposed development was in this category, but the contention was not pursued before me. In any event I have no evidence or finding that the proposed development would have added not more than ten per cent. to the cubic capacity of the bank's building (see Pt. II of Sch. 2 to the Act of 1962).

Against this background, counsel for the Minister submits that at all times between 1947 and 1953, there existed two parallel codes each capable of producing the same result, namely the prescription of an improvement line. In that period, he submits, it would have been impossible to challenge the power to refuse planning permission on the ground that there had been no resort to the (13) See footnote (1) at p. 107, ante.

(14) For the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, see 25 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 489.

(15) For the Town and Country Planning Act, 1954, see 34 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 911.

(16) For the Act of 1959, see 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 39.

(17) For s. 123 of the Act of 1962, see 42 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1092.

A procedure under s. 33 of the Public Health Act, 1925 (18), since both codes provided for compensation. The Town and Country Planning Acts of 1954, 1959 and 1962 have not, he submits, changed the position.

I am by no means satisfied that this is right. The Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, was general in its terms and application and it provided compensation for the general control which it imposed. In passing this Act, the legislature did not repeal s. 33 of the Public Health Act, 1925 (18), which was concerned with control in particular circumstances and for a particular purpose. Furthermore, the measure of compensation under the Public Health Act, 1925, was different from that under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947. The prescribing of an improvement line under the Public Health Act, 1925, in the period 1947 to 1953 would have enabled the aggrieved owner to obtain greater compensation, although the amount would no doubt have taken account of his entitlement to compensation under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, if no development took place and of his liability to development charge if it did. It is, perhaps, significant that the prescribing of improvement lines did not in fact cease in 1947, and that the central government continued to make grants towards the compensation payable by local highway authorities (see Circular No. 696 of 1954 (19)).

Whatever may have been the position in the period 1947 to 1953, I have to consider the position in 1968 in the light of the re-enactment of s. 33 of the Public Health Act, 1925, in s. 72 of the Highways Act, 1959 (20). In the course of argument, I asked counsel for the Minister what, in his submission, the legislature intended when enacting s. 72 of the Act of 1959, since, if his argument for the Minister was right, ample power to prescribe improvement lines was available under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947. Counsel replied that there were two cases in which the section served a useful purpose. First, if consent had already been given to development of an area which lay both in front of and behind the improvement line, action under the Highways Act, 1959, obviated the necessity for revoking the whole consent and granting a fresh and more limited consent with considerable complications as to the compensation payable to the aggrieved landowner. In the light of the provisions of s. 21 and s. 22 of the Act of 1947, and s. 118 of the Act of 1962, which enable planning permissions to be revoked or modified and specify the conditions on which compensation is payable (21), I am not persuaded that this consideration could explain the enactment of s. 72 of the Highways Act in 1959 or its retention when the Act of 1962 was passed. Secondly, if the planning authority took the view that no improvement line was required, but the highway authority disagreed, the Highways Act, 1959, enabled the views of the latter to prevail, subject to the result of an appeal to quarter sessions. Of course, the landowner suffers precisely the same loss if he is unable to develop his land, whether the embargo is created by a decision of the planning authority or that of the highway authority. It follows that, in the submission of counsel for the Minister, Parliament intended a landowner to be compensated if, but only if, (a) the local authority qua planning authority could not agree with the local authority qua highway authority and (b) the planners did not want to restrict development and those concerned with highways did. Compensation would not, however, be payable if the disagreement took the form of the local authority as highway authority not wishing to restrict development and the local authority as planning authority, or the Minister on appeal, taking the view that development should be restricted for highway purposes. This must surely be nonsense.

The Town and Country Planning Act, 1962, and the legislation which preceded (18) For s. 33 of the Public Health Act, 1925, see 19 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 255.

(19) Paragraph 8 of this Circular is set out at p. 112, letter B, ante.

(20) See p. 110, letters D to F, ante.

(21) For s. 21 and s. 22 of the Act of 1947, see 25 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 521, 522; and for s. 118 of the Act of 1962, see 42 ibid., p. 1087.

it provided a completely general control of development. If, as is the case, Parliament has seen fit not only to retain but to re-enact special provisions for control in relation to particular problems with associated special rights of appeal and to compensation, it cannot, in my judgment, have intended the general legislation to operate in these limited spheres, so as to exclude those rights. Accordingly I accept the bank's contention in so far as it is based on construction of the Act of 1962. A

The bank is also, in my view, entitled to succeed on the alternative ground based on unreasonableness. The complexity of modern society necessitates a multiplicity of controls whereby the interests of the individual are subordinated to those of the community. We remain, however, members of a free society. In such a society a reasonable man faced with the need to restrict the freedom of the individual for the benefit of the community and faced with two possible courses of action, only one of which involves compensating the individual, must surely adopt that course. The Minister, or more accurately the lady who was his alter ego for the purposes of this appeal, has adopted the other course. I do not infer from this that he or she is in any way unreasonable, but I do infer that there has been a misdirection and that due account was not taken of the material matters to which I have referred. B

In these circumstances I can deal succinctly with the bank's further contention that the Minister failed to comply with r. 13 (1) of the Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1965. It is not suggested that the Minister has insufficiently stated the factual basis of the reasoning which led him to dismiss the appeal, and I do not consider that the rules require the Minister to state that he has considered whether or not he has jurisdiction and has concluded that he has. This is probably implicit in the decision itself. They do, however, require him to identify expressly or by reference the factors of which he has taken account in exercising his discretion, since this must be of the essence of his reasons. Counsel for the Minister submits that the availability of the alternative course of action was clearly canvassed in the first and main inquiry and that the Minister has referred to the report of that inquiry which recorded the bank's submission on the point and clearly had the point in mind. I am inclined to accept this submission. If I am wrong, however, and there is no reference to this point having been considered, I should not conclude that the Minister had failed to give his reasons, but that those reasons did not include a consideration of this point, thus making good the bank's submission that the Minister misdirected himself. C

For the reasons which I have given, I shall make an order quashing the Minister's decision. It may well be that the Minister will consider that the novelty of my decision, which disapproves of the planning practice of years, and its potentially far reaching financial consequences render it desirable that he should bring the matter before the Court of Appeal. This is entirely a matter for him. I think that I should, however, point out that uncertainty in this matter can produce grave administrative difficulties. Local planning authorities will not know whether they are entitled to use their powers for purely highway purposes in accordance with the existing practice. Local highway authorities will not know whether they ought to prescribe improvement lines, but will be loath to do so as a purely precautionary measure because of the irreversible financial consequences. I hope, therefore, that the Minister will feel able to reach a prompt decision on whether or not to appeal. If he decides to appeal, I consider that it would be reasonable to make application to the Court of Appeal with a view to securing an early date for the hearing. D

Minister's decision quashed. E

Solicitors: Baylis, Pearce, McMillan & Mott (for the applicants); Solicitor, Ministry of Housing and Local Government. F

[Reported by K. DIANA PHILLIPS, Barrister-at-Law.] G

A

R. v. SMITH (JOAN).

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Davies, L.J., Roskill and Cusack, J.J.), March 5, 1968.]

B

Criminal Law—Practice—Evidence—Witnesses—Accused, if called, should give evidence before any other witness for the defence—Witnesses as to fact should remain outside the court until required to give evidence.

C

At a trial of a criminal charge the accused, if he gives evidence, should be called before any of his witnesses, and thus should give his evidence before he has heard the testimony of his witnesses; it is also the general rule and practice in criminal cases that witnesses as to fact on each side should remain out of court until they are required to give their evidence (see p. 115, letter H, and p. 116, letter C, post).

D

[As to calling the prosecution's witnesses, and witnesses being ordered out of court, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 416, 417, paras. 762, 763; and as to calling of the accused as a witness, see ibid., p. 421, para. 773; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 295, 2726-2741; 319, 3072.]

Cases referred to:

Briscoe v. Briscoe, [1966] 1 All E.R. 465; [1966] 2 W.L.R. 205; 130 J.P. 124; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 50, 421a.

R. v. Morrison, (1911), 6 Cr. App. Rep. 159; 75 J.P. 272; 14 Digest (Repl.) 319, 3072.

E

R. v. Olsen, (1898), 62 J.P. 777.

Application.

This was an application by Joan Smith for leave to appeal against her conviction on Sept. 28, 1967, at Inner London Quarter Sessions before the deputy chairman (O. S. MACLEAY, Esq.) and a jury, of driving a motor vehicle when unfit to drive through drink or drugs. She also applied for leave to appeal against her sentence to a fine of £75 and disqualification for holding a driving licence for three years. The main ground of appeal was that the deputy chairman erred in law in insisting that she gave evidence first, before calling any of her defence witnesses (three witnesses being in fact called on her behalf).

F

The authority noted below* was cited during the argument in addition to the cases referred to in the judgment of the court.

G

J. J. Smyth for the applicant.

The Crown was not represented.

H

CUSACK, J., delivered the following judgment of the court: Only one ground for applying for leave to appeal against conviction is relied on by counsel who appears for the applicant in this court. That ground, as set out in the notice of application, is that

"The learned deputy chairman erred in law in refusing to allow defending counsel to call what witnesses he chose in what sequence he chose; the deputy chairman insisted that the accused should be called first."

I

The general rule and practice in criminal cases is that witnesses as to fact on each side should remain out of court until they are required to give their evidence. The reason for this is obvious. It is that if they are permitted to hear the evidence of other witnesses they may be tempted to trim their own evidence. It is certainly the general practice in the experience of all the members of this court that where an accused person is to give evidence he gives evidence before other witnesses who may be called on his behalf. There are, of course, rare exceptions, such as when a formal witness, or a witness about whom there is no controversy, is interposed before the accused person with the consent of the court in the special circumstances then prevailing. In the view of this court the general practice to which I have referred is the correct practice which ought to be observed.

*ARCHBOLD'S CRIMINAL PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE (36th Edn.), para. 1329.

The matter was dealt with succinctly as long ago as 1911 when, during the course of the argument in R. v. Morrison, LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., interposed to enquire (1)—“How was it that you called these witnesses before you called the prisoner?” To that counsel replied with engaging frankness—“... Before calling the appellant I wished to know myself what these witnesses had to say.” In response LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., then said (2):

“In all cases I consider it most important for the prisoner to be called before any of his witnesses. He ought to give his evidence before he has heard the evidence and cross-examination of any witness he is going to call.”

That observation was interposed in the course of argument and was obiter, but it is an authoritative statement which this court reiterates and endorses as correctly stating the law.

We have been referred in the course of argument to two cases. One was R. v. Olsen (3), in which the facts were different. It is to be noted also that the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, had then only recently come in force. The other was a much more recent case, Briscoe v. Briscoe (4), which dealt with matters arising from matrimonial proceedings in the magistrates’ court. It is to be observed that in the course of his judgment there KARMINSKI, J., expressly stated (5) that he was not dealing with the practice in criminal cases.

For the reasons that I have indicated the application for leave to appeal against conviction is dismissed.

As this is a question which is still raised from time to time in the course of criminal proceedings, with which alone the court is dealing, it is hoped that the statement which I have read from LORD ALVERSTONE, which is now endorsed by this court, will settle the matter and be accepted as setting out the correct procedure which ought to be followed in future cases. [HIS LORDSHIP then considered the application for leave to appeal against sentence and intimated that the fine and disqualification were appropriate, and that the application for leave to appeal against sentence was dismissed.]

Applications refused.

Solicitors: Wallace, Marsh & Co. (for the applicant).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, Esq, Barrister-at-Law.]

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (DIVORCE)

Husband and Wife Property—Summary proceedings Application—Procedure by originating summons—Married Women’s Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 17.

On and after Apr. 11, 1968, all proceedings under s. 17 of the Married Women’s Property Act, 1882, in the divorce registry will be commenced by an originating summons (fee £4) and will be proceedings in the High Court.

Apr. 11, 1968.

COMPTON MILLER,
Senior Registrar.

(1) (1911), 6 Cr. App. Rep. 159 at p. 165.

(2) (1911), 6 Cr. App. Rep. at p. 165.

(3) (1898), 62 J.P. 777.

(4) [1966] 1 All E.R. 465.

(5) [1966] 1 All E.R. at p. 466.

A OAK CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING SOCIETY v. BLACKBURN AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (HARMAN, RUSSELL AND SACHS, L.JJ.), December 20, 1967, February 14, 1968.]

B Land Charge—Estate contract—Registration Name of estate owner—Registration of estate contract in name of "Frank David Blackburn" when true name of estate owner was "Francis David Blackburn"—Registration not a nullity, but effective against purchaser who did not search or searched in wrong name—Search by subsequent intending mortgagee in name that was not estate owner's full correct name—Whether mortgagee deemed to have notice of estate contract—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5 c. 20), s. 198 (1) —Land Charges Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5 c. 22), s. 10 (2).

C Land Charge—Search—Official certificate of search—Conclusiveness—Search in name that was a version of estate owner's name but not his full correct name—Search in name "Francis Davis Blackburn", when true name was "Francis David Blackburn"—Estate contract registered in name "Frank David Blackburn" not revealed by search—Effect of certificate of search—Land Charges Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5 c. 22), s. 17 (3).

D If a land charge is registered in a version of the full name of the estate owner, albeit not a version which is bound to be discovered on search in his correct full names, the registration is not a nullity as against someone who does not search at all or who searches in a name that is not the estate owner's correct full name (see p. 122, letter H, post.)

E Dunn v. Chapman ([1920] 2 Ch. 474) considered.

F In 1957 an estate agent, whose true name was "Francis David Blackburn" but who was generally known as "Frank", bought a house, 34 Union Street, Southport. In 1958 he agreed to sell the house to a purchaser; she paid a deposit, entered into possession and thereafter paid agreed instalments on account of the purchase price. She had no copy of the contract. In August, 1959, he executed a second mortgage of the property. At about the end of 1959 an estate contract was registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (2)* on her behalf against the name of "Frank David Blackburn", which was intended to refer to her vendor, the estate agent. He applied subsequently to the plaintiff mortgagee for a mortgage. The mortgagee obtained an official certificate of search in the land charges register, applying for search against the name "Francis Davis Blackburn" and giving the proper description of the house. The official certificate bore a note—"No subsisting entries clearly affecting but the following entries which may or may not relate thereto appear". Then it mentioned the name and address "Blackburn, Francis David, 26 Crescent Road, Southport" and gave details of the second mortgage; and a note was added saying "Please note name is as given in the registration". The mortgagee made the advance on mortgage of the house. On appeal from an order for possession made in favour of the mortgagee as against both the vendor and the purchaser,

H Held: since the mortgagee had not searched in the correct full names of the vendor (the estate owner) the registration of the land charge (viz., the estate contract) by the purchaser was not a nullity as against the mortgagee; accordingly the mortgagee was deemed to have had actual notice of the estate contract by virtue of s. 198 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and was not entitled to possession (see p. 122, letters F and H, post).

I Per CURIAM: if a search had been requested by a purchaser in the correct full names of the estate owner the purchaser would have got a clean certificate and a clean title by virtue of s. 17 (3)* of the Land Charges Act, 1925; and a person registering a land charge who was not in a position to satisfy himself what were the correct full names of the estate owner ran that risk (see p. 122, letter G, post).

* Section 10 (2), so far as material, is set out at p. 120, letter H, post.

Decision of UNGOED-THOMAS, J. ([1967] 2 All E.R. 340) reversed.

[Editorial Note. A personal search in an estate owner's correct full names will not lead necessarily to discovery of a land charge registered in an incorrect version of those names, and the searcher in such a case will not have the protection afforded by s. 17 (3) of the Land Charges Act, 1925; a moral of the present decision is, therefore, that personal search of the register of land charges, though lawful, is unwise, for it does not give as complete protection as an official search (see p. 122, letter I, to p. 123, letter A, post).

As to registration of land charges being effected in the name of the estate owner, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 57, para. 106; and as to registration constituting notice, see ibid., pp. 60, 61, para. 113; and as to the conclusiveness of an official certificate of search, see ibid., p. 98, para. 205; and for cases on that subject, see 35 DIGEST (Repl.) 312, 285, and ante, p. 25.

For the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 198, see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 821.

For the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (2), s. 17 (3), see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1077, 1094.]

Case referred to:

Dunn v. Chapman, [1920] 2 Ch. 474; 89 L.J.Ch. 385; 123 L.T. 415; 40 Digest (Repl.) 180, 1431.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the third defendant, Mrs. Phyllis Cairnwen Caines, from an order of UNGOED-THOMAS, J., dated Jan. 19, 1967, for possession of 34 Union Street, Southport, suspended for six weeks as mentioned at [1967] 2 All E.R. p. 344, letter H. The order was made in an action (reported [1967] 2 All E.R. 340) begun by originating summons issued by the plaintiff mortgagee, Oak Co-operative Building Society, against (i) Francis David Blackburn, the mortgagor of the property, (ii) Southport Mortgage Co., Ltd., the second defendant and a second mortgagee of the property, and (iii) the third defendant, the purchaser. In that action the mortgagee claimed, among other relief, delivery of possession of the property, 34 Union Street, Southport, being premises comprised in a mortgage by way of legal charge made on Dec. 4, 1962, between the first defendant of the one part and the plaintiff mortgagee of the other part.

Neither the first defendant, who was bankrupt, nor the second defendant, who as second mortgagee was not concerned with the proceedings, appeared or were represented.

B. C. Maddocks for the third defendant, the appellant purchaser.

D. M. Burton for the plaintiff mortgagee.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 14. RUSSELL, L.J., read the following judgment of the court: The mortgagor, an estate agent, lived in Southport. His full names were Francis David Blackburn. In the conveyance and mortgage later mentioned he was so described. He carried on business in Southport as Frank D. Blackburn or Frank David Blackburn or Frank Blackburn and he was generally known as "Frank" and not as "Francis". He owned a freehold house, No. 34 Union Street, Southport, Lanes., which was conveyed to him on sale in December, 1957, by a Mrs. Allinson, and which he simultaneously mortgaged to a building society. On Jan. 10, 1958, he agreed in writing to sell the house to Mrs. Caines (the appellant purchaser) for £2,000 payable by instalments consisting of capital * Section 17 (3), so far as material, is set out at p. 121, letter A, post.

- A and interest payable over a period of fifteen years with a deposit of £100. No solicitor acted; and the purchaser received no copy of the agreement. The purchaser moved into occupation and has lived there ever since, paying the instalments up to April, 1965. She has paid in all £700 and has saved the instalments due since then. No copy of the contract is available. It is not known in what version of his name the mortgagor figured in the contract.
- B It was not then registered as a land charge. In August, 1959, the mortgagor executed a puisne second mortgage of the property. In December, 1959, the purchaser for some reason visited a solicitor. The solicitor applied to register the contract as an estate contract, a land charge of Class C (iv), against the property 34 Union Street. In this application the name of the estate owner was given as "Surname—Blackburn: Christian names—Frank David". In that name the
- C land charge was registered: nothing was said to the mortgagor, who was not asked for a copy of the contract.

In December, 1962, the mortgagor mortgaged the property to the Oak Co-operative Building Society (the respondent mortgagee), paying off the existing first and second mortgages. He paid only two instalments in February and May, 1963, and in June, 1965, the mortgagee roused itself from torpor and started

D proceedings claiming payment, possession, foreclosure and sale, including a claim for possession against the purchaser. Possession was ordered against her (1) and she appeals.

The question is whether her estate contract is valid against the subsequent legal charge to the mortgagee as being effectively registered as an estate contract, or whether the use of the name "Frank" rather than "Francis" invalidates it.

- E As a matter of law it has been held that the respondent mortgagee's attempt to search the register before completing the mortgage was ineffective, and there is no respondent's notice on this point, so that the situation is as if there had been no attempt to search. The facts of the attempt are not however without interest. The application for an official search certificate was against the name "Francis Davis Blackburn". The application and the official certificate
- F were in the following form so far as material. The application is Form L.C.11:

"We hereby apply for an official search to be made in the alphabetical index to the registers kept under the above Acts for any subsisting entries therein under the undermentioned names, addresses and descriptions affecting land in the county of Lanes. . . . place or district of Southport, known as 34 Union Street, Southport [then, in the appropriate spaces]

G Surname (in block letters) BLACKBURN. Christian names (in block letters) FRANCIS DAVIS. All addresses, title, trade or profession to be set out below: 34 UNION STREET, SOUTHPORT, LANCs."

34 Union Street, Southport, was not, of course, Blackburn's address. That was signed by the mortgagee's solicitor, Marcus Davis, on Dec. 1, 1962. The

H official certificate was in the following form:

"It is hereby certified that the official search applied for has been made up to the closing of the office on the date given on the official stamp below [which was Dec. 3, 1962]. The result is as follows [then a rubber stamp] No subsisting entries clearly affecting but the following entries which may or may not relate thereto appear":

- I and there appears in the form "Name and address, Blackburn, Francis David, 26 Crescent Road, Southport, Lanes." There follow then details of the second puisne mortgage to which we have already referred, and a note saying "Please note name is as given in the registration"—that being a reference to the difference between "David" and "Davis".

The whole system of registration of this class of land charge is initially dependent on an index of names arranged in alphabetical order. The inspecting official might have given a nil certificate having regard to the name submitted: but clearly he noticed this other name in going through the relevant index and thought it appropriate to turn up the register and to refer to the other entry in the manner indicated. It was, of course, as we have said, the puisne second mortgage already referred to of which the mortgagee, we are told, was already aware. The official did not read further in the index: had he moved on a bit from "Blackburn, Francis David"—how far we know not—he would have reached "Blackburn, Frank David" and might have turned up the register and noticed that the property in question was subject to a land charge and would have referred to it also in the certificate. That would have blown the proposed transaction sky-high. It is we think clear that the official did not read further and that if the solicitor applying for search had not written "Davis" instead of "David" (his own name, incidentally, was Davis) the official certificate would not have noticed the purchaser's estate contract, and the purchaser would be out of court by virtue of s. 17 (3) of the Land Charges Act, 1925. We say that the transaction would have been blown sky-high because even the respondent mortgagee would not have ignored the patent defect in the mortgagor's title; and we say even the respondent mortgagee, because it was made manifest that the mortgagor's application form was a pack of lies. It stated that he was proposing to buy 34 Union Street with vacant possession (intending to occupy the property) from Mrs. Allinson of that address, for £2,000 of which he was finding £500 from his own resources. But it was from Mrs. Allinson that he took the conveyance five years before: and that fact is stated in the mortgage on which the mortgagee relies: moreover the puisne mortgage by the mortgagor was dated three years before, as appeared from the official search certificate. These discrepancies however the mortgagee and its then solicitor (also we are told the mortgagor's solicitor) took in their stride.

---

(1) See [1967] 2 All E.R. 340; [1967] Ch. 1169.

The question therefore is whether there was a valid registration of the estate contract. If it was such, then under s. 198 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, the mortgagee had deemed actual notice of the estate contract and of its registration, whether or not it had on the facts actual or constructive notice of the purchaser's rights. If it was not such, then under s. 199 (1) (i) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, it is provided that the mortgagee should not be prejudicially affected by notice of the estate contract (even if it had it) and under s. 13 (2) of the Land Charges Act, 1925, the estate contract was void as against the mortgagee.

Section 10 (1) of the Land Charges Act, 1925, provides that the following classes of charges on or obligations affecting land may be registered as land charges in the register, and Class C (iv) is that now relevant. Section 1 (1) requires the registrar to keep a register of land charges, and s. 1 (2) requires that an alphabetical index in the prescribed form shall be kept of all entries in the register: this, as indicated, is an alphabetical index of the names of estate owners, and (see later) contains against the name inter alia a reference to the appropriate place in the register where particulars of land charges are noted. Section 10 (2) requires that "A land charge shall be registered in the name of the estate owner whose estate is intended to be affected . . ."

and this really is the crux of the present case. Section 13 (2) we have already mentioned. Section 16 enables anyone to search in any register or index for himself. Section 17 provides for an official search. A proposing purchaser (for example) may lodge a requisition for such search and thereupon, by s. 17 (2) the registrar shall "make the search required, and shall issue a certificate setting forth the result thereof."

Subsection (3) provides that in favour of the intending purchaser as against the person interested under the instrument (here the estate contract)—

- A "the certificate, according to the tenor thereof, shall be conclusive, affirmatively or negatively, as the case may be."

Subsection (4) provides that every such requisition shall be in writing

- B "specifying the name against which he desires search to be made, or in relation to which he requires a certificate of result of search, and other sufficient particulars."

Section 19 (1) authorises the Lord Chancellor to make general rules for carrying the Act of 1925 into effect, and in particular

- C "(a) as to forms and contents of applications for registration . . . requisitions for and certificates of official searches, and regulating the practice of the registry in connexion therewith . . ."

The rules require applications for registration and searches to be made on, and to furnish the particulars set forth in, such forms as the registrar may determine. They also require (2) the register of land charges to contain "the name, address, and description of the estate owner whose estate is intended to be affected". As has been noticed, the form of application for registration requires the "Surname and Christian names" of the estate owner to be stated; and the form of requisition for a search requires the same particulars.

- E It might be convenient to set out the result of enquiry made by us as to the mechanics of the land charges register. The alphabetical index is contained in about ten thousand loose-leaf binders covering the whole country, arranged in alphabetical order. Special provision is made in the case of very common names such as Smith, in that this section is broken down by counties: and indeed there is even further such breakdown among for example John Smiths. Each binder contains about 250 names. Each entry in a binder besides the name (and we think address) indicates the class of charge, a reference number to the register, the date of registration, the county and parish where the land is situate, and a short description of the land. On turning up the reference number in the register itself the full details of the land charge are revealed. If a person wishes to search individually—without an official search—he attends, fills in the name against which he wishes to search, and a messenger brings him the appropriate binder or binders. We assume in the case of a common name such as is mentioned above he would also have to state the county in question. If a person searches personally, and misses a charge properly registered against the land in question, he does not of course have the benefit that is conferred by a nil official search certificate under s. 17 (3).

The real problem is, what is meant by the name or the names of the estate owner in this legislation?

- H As a matter of theoretical approach it is obvious that it is intended or hoped by the legislation that every registered land charge will be safeguarded by registration because due diligence in search will reveal it: and correspondingly that every duly diligent search will reveal every registered land charge affecting the land to be purchased. It is realised that if an official search certificate is issued there may be a blunder for which some innocent person must suffer, and s. 17 (3) provides, for example, that if a nil certificate is given the owner of the land charge suffers, however valid his registration. It would be supposed, I however, that it would be intended to reduce error to a minimum. What then is meant by the requirement that the name—surname and Christian names—of the estate owner be given when requisitioning a search? People use different names at different times and for different purposes; but the matter now under consideration relates to two things: first, the investigation into the soundness of the paper title of a proposed vendor by a proposed purchaser: second, the attempt to prevent by registration the disposal by the owner of that paper title of the legal estate in a manner which will override the interest of the owner of the land charge. A

In the case of a request for an official search, which of course takes place before completion after title examined, we can only think that the name or names referred to in the request should be that or those appearing on the title. A nil certificate here as to Francis Davis Blackburn would not have served to override the purchaser's land charge had it been registered in the name Francis David Blackburn, though it could have been issued. B

In most cases of contracts to purchase land nowadays many of the formalities precede exchange of contracts, and indeed those acting for the vendor would have used in the contract the name of the proposed vendor as appearing on the title. There are other cases, however, such as the present, where the contract is much less formally arrived at, and the purchaser has no ready means of ascertaining the "title" names of the vendor. It would seem to be a great hardship on a purchaser registering in the name by which the vendor ordinarily passed that his registration should be entirely without operation, which is of course the submission of the mortgagee in this case. We have said earlier that if in this case the search had been against "Francis David Blackburn" and the certificate had referred to the fact that an estate contract was registered against "Frank David Blackburn" in respect of this property, the proposed mortgage transaction would have been blown sky-high. If, however, the mortgagee's contention is correct the registration would be no registration at all, and by force of s. 199, of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and s. 13 (2) of the Land Charges Act, 1925, the mortgagee could have carried through the mortgage ignoring the estate contract though in fact aware of its existence. Indeed, if the mortgagee had contracted to grant a mortgage loan subject to getting good title, he would have been in breach of his contract by refusing to grant it. C

We have come to the conclusion that the registration on this occasion ought not to be regarded as a nullity simply because the formal name of Blackburn was Francis and not Frank, and notwithstanding that Frank as a name is not merely an abbreviation or version of Francis, but also a name in its own right, as are also for example Harry and Willie. We are not led to this conclusion by the fact that initials would seem to suffice for registration of a lis pendens (see Dunn v. Chapman (3)), at least under the then legislation and rules: for presumably a request for search under a full name having the same initials should throw up all entries under those initials. We take a broader view that so far as possible the system should be made to work in favour of those who seek to make use of it in a sensible and practical way. If a proposing purchaser here had requested a search in the correct full names he would have got a clean certificate and a clear title under s. 17 (3) of the Land Charges Act, 1925, and would have suffered no harm from the fact that the registration was not in such names: and a person registering who is not in a position to satisfy himself what are the correct full names runs that risk. If, however, there be registration in what may be fairly described as a version of the full names of the vendor, albeit not a version which is bound to be discovered on a search in the correct full names, we would not hold it a nullity against someone who does not search at all, or who (as here) searches in the wrong name. D

There is one objection to this approach, and that is that provision is made for personal as distinct from official search: a personal searcher in the full correct name in the present case would, it seems, not have encountered the registration in the present case: he would not have had the benefit of an official certificate under s. 17 (3) and on the contrary would have been affected by a deemed actual notice of the estate contract under s. 198 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. We think, however, that anyone who nowadays is foolish enough to search personally deserves what he gets: and if the aim of the statute is to E

A arrive at a sensible working system that aim is better furthered by upholding a registration such as this than by protecting a personal searcher from his folly.

We do not feel we need shed any tears for the respondent mortgagee, which could easily have protected itself by a proper official search but which owing to the error of its solicitor it never made. It could indeed have taken the precaution of investigating the discrepancy between the proposed mortgage and the application which the mortgagor filled in for it, to which we have already drawn attention; or it could without great trouble have caused somebody to visit the property in question, when they would have found the purchaser living there.

We allow the appeal.

C Appeal allowed. Declaration and order for possession discharged; in lieu thereof, declaration that registration effective. Leave to appeal to House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: Jaques & Co., agents for Brighouses, Southport (for the purchaser); Brown, Turner, Compton, Carr & Co. (for the mortgagee).

[Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

D

E

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (DIVORCE).

F Divorce—Practice—Trial—County court list—Date for hearing—Notice of setting down—Subsequent change of date needing good cause and consent of all parties.

A date for the hearing of a case set down in the county court list for hearing at the Royal Courts of Justice will be fixed by the clerk of the rules on presentation of the notice of setting down either personally or by post to Room 772, Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, Royal Courts of Justice, Strand London, W.C.2.

G If within fourteen days of the appearance of the cause in the printed list a date for hearing has not been fixed, the cause will be listed as soon as time is available unless the clerk of the rules is informed of a valid reason why a date for hearing should not be fixed.

H As notice of the date of hearing must be given to all parties no subsequent change of date can be made except upon good cause being shown and with the consent of all parties.

I Cases listed for hearing before Oct. 2, 1967, in the undefended list and not yet heard have been transferred to the reserve list and may be restored to the appropriate current list on filing a notice to restore.

COMPTON MILLER,
Senior Registrar.

Apr. 10, 1968.

JACOBS v. CHAUDHURI.

A

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Harman, Davies and Winn, L.J.J.), January 12, 15, 16, February 2, 1968.]

Landlord and Tenant—New tenancy—Business premises—Application—Joint tenants—One joint tenant only applying—Applicant in sole occupation, carrying on former partnership business—Whether applicant “the tenant” and so entitled to apply for grant of new tenancy—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2 c. 56), s. 24 (1), s. 41.

B

Premises were let to two tenants, J. and W., jointly for the purposes of the business which they began to carry on there in partnership. The partnership was dissolved; J. continued to carry on the business and a sum was paid by J. to W. in satisfaction of all W.'s rights in the business. The landlord served notice terminating the tenancy under s. 25 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954. J., alone, applied under s. 24 (1)* of the Act of 1954 for a new tenancy. On appeal from dismissal of the application,

C

Held (DAVIES, L.J., dissenting): there was no jurisdiction to entertain an application by one only of two joint tenants, because the words “the tenant under such tenancy” in s. 24 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, referred to the persons to whom the tenancy was granted or their successors in title, viz., the joint tenants; accordingly J.'s application had been rightly dismissed (see p. 128, letter I, and p. 135, letter C, post).

D

Howson v. Buxton ([1928] All E.R. Rep. 434) distinguished.

Per HARMAN, L.J.: even if s. 41 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, applied on the footing that J. and W. were trustees of the tenancy for J., it did not enable J. alone to apply for a new tenancy, but only the trustees could so apply (see p. 129, letter C, post).

E

Appeal dismissed.

[As to right to apply for a new tenancy of business premises, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 891, para. 1714; and for cases on the subject, see DIGEST (Cont. Vol. A) 7417jb, et seq.]

F

For the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 24 (1), s. 41, see 34 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 409, 424.]

Cases referred to:

Brandling v. Barrington, (1827), 6 B. & C. 467; 5 L.J.O.S.K.B. 181; 108 E.R. 523; 44 Digest (Repl.) 272, 992.

G

Fairclough (T. M.) & Sons, Ltd. v. Berliner, [1930] All E.R. Rep. 170; [1931] 1 Ch. 60; 100 L.J.Ch. 29; 144 L.T. 175; 31 Digest (Repl.) 545, 6666.

Heydon's Case, (1584), 3 Co. Rep. 7a; 76 E.R. 637; 44 Digest (Repl.) 203, 149.

Howson v. Buxton, [1928] All E.R. Rep. 434; 97 L.J.K.B. 749; 139 L.T. 504; 2 Digest (Repl.) 80, 452.

River Wear Comrs. v. Adamson, [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 1; (1877), 2 App. Cas. 743; 47 L.J.Q.B. 193; 37 L.T. 543; 42 J.P. 244; 42 Digest (Repl.) 1135, 9450.

H

Woodward v. Earl of Dudley, [1954] 1 All E.R. 559; [1954] Ch. 283; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 476; 2 Digest (Repl.) 15, 66.

Appeal.

Harry Jacobs, one of two joint tenants of the Theatre Royal, Margate, Kent, appealed against the decision of Her Honour DEPUTY JUDGE DEBORAH ROWLAND, at Margate county court on Apr. 28, 1967, refusing his application under s. 24 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, for a new lease of the premises. The other joint tenant, a Mr. Wootton, did not join in the application, which was opposed by the landlord, Dhurjati Prasad Chaudhuri, who in his notice to terminate the tenancy had stated that he would not oppose the grant of a new * Section 24 (1), so far as material, is printed at p. 126, letter A, post.

I

A tenancy, but contended that the court could not grant a new tenancy to only one of the joint tenants.

M. O'Connell Stranders, Q.C., and B. T. Buckle for the applicant.
J. S. Colyer for the landlord.

Cur. adv. vult.

B Feb. 2. The following judgments were read.

HARMAN, L.J.: This is an appeal from the decision of the deputy county court judge at Margate county court under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, whereby Her Honour DEPUTY JUDGE DEBORAH ROWLAND refused an application by the applicant Harry Jacobs for a new tenancy of an extremely dilapidated building at Margate which he had been conducting as a bingo hall. The deputy judge delivered a most careful and lucid judgment for which this court is much obliged to her, and the case has been very well argued here and raises a point of some difficulty on which I confess my mind has wavered from time to time.

The applicant, a man with apparently some experience of running clubs, became friendly in 1964 with a Mr. Wootton and the two decided to embark on a joint adventure in running a bingo hall in this theatre, and for that purpose they entered into a lease dated Nov. 8, 1965, the respondent being the landlord, whereby he demised to Messrs. Jacobs and Wootton (there defined as the tenants, which expression should include their successors in title) the Theatre Royal, Margate, for a term of one year from Michaelmas, 1965, at a rent of £1,500 a year plus an insurance covenant. The lease contained joint and several covenants by the tenants to keep the demised premises in repair (which of course would include the obligation to put them in repair) and other covenants usual in a repairing lease: further to use the property as a bingo hall only and not to assign, underlet, charge or part with possession, this last being an absolute prohibition. The lease also contained the usual power of re-entry, a special right to terminate the lease if the roof of the building proved to be beyond repair, and an option to "the tenants" to take a further lease at the expiration of the current term for a period of two years at the same rent and on the same terms except for the option.

The tenants apparently entered into possession at the beginning of October, 1965, or thereabouts and carried on the bingo hall with some success, but towards the end of November they fell out and Mr. Wootton left and handed over the property and the conduct of the business to the applicant, who has carried it on ever since and has apparently performed all the tenants' obligations under the lease.

There have been comparatively lengthy negotiations for the winding-up of the partnership, but that was completed in January, 1967, when the accounts were agreed on the footing that the partnership was dissolved as from Nov. 26, 1965, and in February, 1967, a sum of over £1,300 was paid to Mr. Wootton in satisfaction of all his rights in the business, whether to share the capital or profits. From that time on, anyhow, Mr. Wootton had no beneficial interest in the business but would be entitled to indemnity from the applicant against liability under the lease, for that is still subsisting, although only granted for a year from Michaelmas, 1965, having regard to Part 2 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954. The long title of the Act of 1954 reads (so far as relevant):

I "An Act . . . to enable tenants occupying property for business, professional or certain other purposes to obtain new tenancies in certain cases . . ."

This is brought about by Part 2, which begins, in s. 23 (1),

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, this Part of this Act applies to any tenancy where the property comprised in the tenancy is or includes premises which are occupied by the tenant and are so occupied for the purposes of a business carried on by him or for those and other purposes."

Section 24 provides:

“(1) A tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies shall not come to an end unless terminated in accordance with the provisions of this Part of this Act; and, subject to the provisions of s. 29 of this Act, the tenant under such a tenancy may apply to the court for a new tenancy—(a) if the landlord has given notice under the next following section to terminate the tenancy, ...”

Section 25 allows the landlord to terminate the tenancy. It provides:

“(1) The landlord may terminate a tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies by a notice given to the tenant in the prescribed form specifying the date at which the tenancy is to come to an end (hereinafter referred to as ‘the date of termination’): Provided that this subsection has effect subject to the provisions of Part 4 of this Act as to the interim continuation of tenancies pending the disposal of applications to the court.”

It is under that Part of the Act that this tenancy is at present going on. Section 29 provides:

“(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, on an application under sub-s. (1) of s. 24 of this Act for a new tenancy the court shall make an order for the grant of a tenancy comprising such property, at such rent and on such other terms, as are hereinafter provided.”

Section 41 provides:

“(1) Where a tenancy is held on trust, occupation by all or any of the beneficiaries under the trust and the carrying on of a business by all or any of the beneficiaries, shall be treated for the purposes of s. 23 of this Act as equivalent to occupation or the carrying on of a business by the tenant; ...”

Now the landlord here did serve a notice to terminate under s. 25 which is to be taken as good notice, the date of termination being Feb. 27, 1967. This notice stated that the landlord would not oppose an application for a new tenancy. It was served on both tenants, but they had by this time fallen out and Mr. Wootton was not willing, as afterwards appeared, to join in an application for a new tenancy. This was not unnatural as he had no interest in the business, subject to his share of the assets being paid out to him. The applicant however was desirous of obtaining a new lease, and on Oct. 18, 1966, he served on the landlord what purported to be a counter-notice under s. 29 and followed this with an application to the court applying for a new tenancy for himself for a term of two years from February, 1967, the date on which the landlord's notice expired. The applicant's notice was accompanied by a letter in these terms:

“Oct. 18, 1966. The Theatre Royal, Margate. As solicitors for one of your tenants [the applicant] we enclose herewith notice under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, in answer to your notice dated Aug. 23, 1966. This notice is sent by registered post . . .”

and so forth. It is to be observed that the solicitors describe the applicant as “one of your tenants”. The question is whether the applicant as one of the two joint tenants to whom the lease was granted in 1965 is a person entitled within the Act of 1954 to apply for and obtain a new tenancy.

The landlord objects to the grant of a new tenancy to the applicant, according to his answer, on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction to entertain the application because it is not made by the tenants under the lease but by only one of them. It appeared however in the course of the hearing that this was not the landlord's real reason, but that he is desirous of granting a tenancy to Mr. Wootton for a longer term and at a higher rent than would be exigible under the Act of 1954, and the applicant's grievance is that he who has built up the business and created the goodwill and has been ever since November, 1965, the sole occupier is in fact being edged out by his former partner, who

A admittedly has no rights at all under the statute, so that the applicant who has borne the burden and heat of the day as well as paying the rent and complying with covenants of the lease is being defrauded of his just reward. It is, says the applicant, the object of the Act of 1954, as its long title shows, to grant security of tenure to those who have built up businesses on leasehold property and this object is being frustrated by the machinations of the landlord and
B Mr. Wootton. I cannot help sympathising with this view, but the question remains whether the statute entitles the applicant to a new lease or no: it is not a question of discretion of the court, having regard to the form of s. 29 (1).

The applicant bases his case on the fact that he, and he alone, is the beneficial owner of what was formerly the partnership property and that Mr. Wootton has no beneficial interest at all and is merely a bare trustee of the lease which
C would have been assigned to the applicant but for the prohibition against assignment contained in it. Under these circumstances, says the applicant, he does or should be held to come within s. 23 (1) as being "the tenant" occupying the premises for the purposes of a business carried on by him. He also says that he satisfies s. 24 (1) as being "the tenant under such a tenancy", that is to say a tenancy within Part 2 of the Act of 1954. He calls in aid the decision of D SCRUTTON, L.J., in Howson v. Buxton (1). That was a case under s. 12 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, under which "tenants" may have compensation for disturbance in respect of the removal of goods and chattels or agricultural machinery. The tenancy there was in favour of two people, B. and W., as joint tenants, but W. had no interest in the goods and chattels or the agricultural machinery which was the subject of compensation, having merely been joined
E at the request of the landlord as a surety for the rent. B., who alone was entitled to the subject-matter of compensation, gave notice to the landlord as the Act of 1923 required that he was about to make a claim, and this was rejected by the landlord as W. had not joined in the notice. It was held by SCRUTTON, L.J., that to avoid the injustice of depriving B. of his compensation a notice by one tenant was good, it being the object of the Act of 1923 to provide a remedy for F the person suffering the loss and in that case B. alone was the sufferer. SCRUTTON, L.J., said this (2):

"What is now said is that when the Act uses the word 'tenant', and says that the tenant must give notice, if the tenancy is a joint tenancy, the notice must be given by all the tenants, and that notice by one of two
G joint tenants will not do. I have looked through the Act carefully, and I think there is a good deal to be said for the view that the legislature had not definitely present to its mind the fact that there might be joint tenants, and that it has continually used the phrase 'tenant' without any nice consideration of what would happen if there were more than one tenant. It did apparently, on one occasion, realise in s. 18 that there might be more than
H one landlord, i.e., when there had been one letting of a whole piece of land and the holding had become divided into different parcels by different people, but it does not show any particular appreciation of the fact that there might be two joint tenants. I can quite see that on future occasions on other sections of the Act, difficult questions might arise. For instance, s. 12 does not apply where the tenant who gave the notice is a person who has become
I bankrupt. I am not at all clear as to what is to happen in the case of two joint tenants, one of whom becomes bankrupt: see s. 12 (1) (d). There is another clause about the death of the tenant [he discusses that] . . . But the provisions in sub-s. (6) of s. 12, and sub-s. (2) of s. 13, do show that Parliament had present to its mind that the compensation to be given was to a person who had household goods or implements which he had to remove owing to the termination of the tenancy, and by the removal or sale of which he suffered damage. It is clear that one mischief which it was intended to avoid was the loss caused to people who had to remove their household goods or sell their agricultural implements at the termination of the tenancy, and it would be an extremely common thing that one tenant might own the household goods and the agricultural implements and might suffer loss by having to remove them, and that a joint tenant might suffer no loss at all. That is the mischief which Parliament intended to deal with and to provide a remedy for, and I think I am justified in adopting the construction that where a tenant suffers damage by having to move his household furniture and his agricultural implements, that tenant, though one of two or more joint tenants, can recover by giving a notice for arbitration and proving damage caused to him . . . The argument of counsel for the landlord would, I think, logically be that when the Act talks about the tenant and his household goods, that, in the case of a joint tenancy, must mean the goods of the joint tenants, and that the goods of one joint tenant would not be sufficient to support a claim. That argument seems to me so contrary to the mischief which the Act intends to remedy that I am justified in considering, as I do, that the Act avoids it."

(1) [1928] All E.R. Rep. 434; 139 L.T. 504.

(2) 139 L.T. at p. 506; [1928] All E.R. Rep. at p. 437.

In effect he decided that, in order to prevent the injustice which would otherwise ensue, notice by one tenant was sufficient. GREER, L.J., expressed grave doubts about this view and decided the case on another ground, namely that B. was the agent of himself and his co-tenant. SANKEY, L.J., decided the case on the ground that W. was a mere surety and was not in a position, therefore, to make a claim having no interest in the goods. He did, however, say that he agreed with the reasons SCRUTTON, L.J., gave. I am far from saying that this decision is wrong, but it is clearly distinguishable from the present case because there the subject-matter of the compensation was the property of one of the tenants only and he had a several right to it, whereas here the tenancy which had the right to a new lease was jointly owned by the two. I do not feel constrained by the decision in that case to decide in favour of the applicant.

The landlord on the other hand argued that the tenant must be the person or persons to whom the lease was granted or their successors in title. The landlord admits that the applicant is beneficially the sole owner of the business and all its assets, including the lease, but he says that this is irrelevant as Part 2 of the Act of 1954 is dealing with the legal estate and not the equities behind it. The Act of 1954 made an inroad, so to speak, on the common law rights of landlords to resume possession of their property when a lease expired and this ought not to be stretched. The landlord knew, when he made the demise, that the persons to whom it was made might acquire statutory rights of renewal but not that one of them severally might have such a right. The landlord points out that the wide definition of the word "tenant" contained by reference in s. 50 of the Act of 1954 does not apply to Part 2 but only to Part 3, and argues from this that only a person who can legally be described as tenant and not "any person entitled in possession to the holding under any contract of tenancy" under the extended definition applying to Part 3 can be entitled. In my view it is significant that this wide definition is not imported into Part 2 of the Act of 1954. The landlord also relies on MAUGHAM, J.'s decision in T. M. Fairclough & Sons, Ltd. v. Berliner (3) which certainly does support his submission by way of illustration.

On the whole I conclude that the landlord's argument must prevail. It is to my mind supported when one considers the option clause. It is admitted that one of the two joint tenants could not alone exercise that option, and if the word "tenants" there means both the joint tenants in connexion with the granting of a new lease it is illogical that one of them should be entitled to exercise a statutory right likewise given to "the tenant", which word, of course, includes the plural. I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

A I ought perhaps to add that there was a deal of discussion in the county court on a point taken by the applicant on s. 41 of the Act of 1954. This was rejected by the judge, rightly in my opinion, and in fact no such point was taken before us, nor was it suggested here, as it was below, that the fact that the applicant alone had paid the rent and the landlord had accepted it created a new tenancy in the applicant.

B There is a possible alternative view, namely, that s. 41 does apply to this case on the footing that the applicant and Mr. Wootton hold the lease as trustees for the applicant. In such a case that section provides that the carrying on of the business by the beneficiary (the applicant) under the trust is equivalent to a carrying on by the tenant (the trustees) who may therefore exercise the statutory right. If so, this does not enable the beneficiary to apply for a new tenancy: only the trustees can do this. This view therefore will not enable the applicant alone to succeed.

DAVIES, L.J.: In this case I have the misfortune to differ from the conclusion reached by my lords, and by the deputy county court judge in her full and careful judgment.

D The purpose of Part 2 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, is, as its long title states,

“...to enable tenants occupying property for business... purposes to obtain new tenancies in certain cases...”

It applies (by s. 23 (1))

E “...to any tenancy where the property comprised in the tenancy is or includes premises which are occupied by the tenant and are so occupied for the purpose of a business carried on by him...”

It is only if the tenancy is such a one that the provisions of the Act of 1954 come into effect: continuation of the tenancy and application for a new tenancy (s. 24 (1)); notice of termination by the landlord (s. 25); counter-notice by the tenant (s. 29 (2)); grant of a new tenancy (s. 29 (1)).

F I would venture respectfully to point out in the first place that the determination of this appeal in favour of the landlord would on the facts appear to amount to a decision not merely that the applicant had no locus standi to serve a counter-notice or to apply for a new tenancy but that the Act of 1954 had no application at all to the tenancy as from Nov. 26, 1965. For from that date Mr. Wootton, though a tenant, was not a tenant in occupation for the purposes of a business carried on by him or at all; and on the construction of the Act of 1954 which has found favour with my lords it seems to me inescapable that s. 23 (1) applies only where the premises are occupied by the tenants for the purposes of a business carried on by them. This would mean in the present case that even if Mr. Wootton had been prepared to join with the applicant in applying for a new tenancy the court would have had no jurisdiction since only one of the tenants was in business occupation. This result is so surprising as, in my view, to raise doubts as to its correctness.

H The facts of the present case are very special. The applicant was one of two joint tenants but as a result of the dissolution of the partnership he was the only person beneficially interested in the tenancy and was, in effect, one of two trustees for himself. He was the only occupant; and his occupation was for the purposes of a business carried on by himself.

I The Act of 1954, like the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, with which Howson v. Buxton (4) was concerned, does not deal expressly with joint tenants. In that case SCRUTTON, L.J., pointed out that fact in the first passage read by HARMAN, L.J., in his judgment, which I will forbear to read again. The facts in Howson v. Buxton (4) were of course entirely different from those in the present case, and the judgment of GREER, L.J., was based on a much narrower ground than were the judgments of SCRUTTON and SANKEY, L.J.J., but, as I think, the majority judgments are directly in point here as to the principles to be applied in construing the words "the tenant" in their application to a joint tenancy. A

In considering the observations in that case, one should, I think, look first at the argument of counsel for the unsuccessful landlord (5):

"The word 'tenant' must mean the two tenants, so that if a claim for compensation is made, both tenants must be party to it... [The Act] only speaks of 'the tenant', and Parliament appears to have failed to make provision for the case of joint tenants. The scheme of the Act is self-contained and depends for its enforcement on a literal and strict obedience to its provisions. The expression 'tenant' can in a case of a joint tenancy only be satisfied by comprising all the joint tenants." B

So there we see that precisely the same point was argued as that with which we are here concerned. SCRUTTON, L.J., said this (6): C

"That turns on the construction of the Agricultural Holdings Act. I take it that in construing an Act of Parliament, besides looking at the words used, one is entitled to know the mischief which the Act was intended to remedy and to construe the words used, if possible, in such a way as shall suppress the mischief and advance the remedy. There is no doubt that one of the objects of the Agricultural Holdings Act was to give to tenants who were turned out of the tenancy of their farm, except for certain specific reasons, compensation for disturbance, and to award as damages compensation to the person who had actually suffered. That principle of suppressing the mischief and advancing the remedy has been carried to a very considerable extent by the courts, whether rightly or wrongly." D

In a passage (7) which HARMAN, L.J., has already read but which I think, as I am basing my judgment on this decision, I should read again, he says: [His LORDSHIP then read the passage which is printed at p. 128, letters A and B, ante.] Then there is the other passage (7) that HARMAN, L.J., read from SCRUTTON, L.J.: [His LORDSHIP then read the passage which is printed at p. 128, letter C, ante.] SANKEY, L.J., who agreed with SCRUTTON, L.J., said (8): E

"In a court of law or equity, what the legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legitimately ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact, either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication." F

That passage which I have just read is a quotation by SANKEY, L.J., from LORD WATSON (9). Then SANKEY, L.J., went on (8): G

"I do not think it is possible in this case to say that there is anything in the legislation which in express words deals with the provision of joint tenants and, therefore, I confine myself to the consideration of whether it is possible to give effect to the argument advanced on behalf of Mr. Buxton by reasonable and necessary implication to be derived from the Act of Parliament itself. In my view, the object of this part of the Act of Parliament was to give to a tenant who had suffered loss from being disturbed by his landlord, compensation for such disturbance. That appears clearly in the section which is under discussion. As I have already pointed out, Mr. Buxton had clearly suffered loss from the disturbance of his tenancy by the landlord. On the other hand, Mr. Walker [the other joint tenant] had not suffered H

(5) (1928), 97 L.J.K.B. 749 at p. 751.

(6) [1928] All E.R. Rep. at p. 436; 139 L.T. at p. 505.

(7) [1926] All E.R. Rep. at p. 437; 139 L.T. at p. 506.

(8) [1928] All E.R. Rep. at p. 440; 139 L.T. at p. 508.

(9) In Salomon v. Salomon & Co., Ltd., [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 33 at p. 41; [1897] A.C. 22 at p. 38. I

A any such loss, because, as already pointed out also, he had not any household goods, implements of husbandry, fixtures, farm produce or farm stock, to use the words of s. 12 (6), and he could not make a claim. The words are 'his household goods and implements of husbandry', and it would be a strange result of the Act of Parliament that, because Mr. Walker could not make a claim and would not have been justified in making a claim, therefore a just claim for disturbance by Mr. Buxton should be defeated, when the object of the Act is that the tenant who has suffered loss from disturbance should be compensated."

To apply those principles to the present case. The object of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, was to preserve to business tenants in occupation, to the extent given and by the procedure laid down by the Act of 1954, the benefit of the goodwill created by their efforts. It would entirely defeat that object if one were to say in the present case that because Mr. Wootton, being out of occupation and not carrying on business on the premises, has no right to apply for a new tenancy and in any event is unwilling so to do, therefore the applicant is deprived of the rights which he would otherwise have enjoyed under the Act of 1954. The more one considers Howson v. Buxton (10), the more close in principle does it appear to the present case; and, therefore, one is entitled on the special facts of this case to interpret the words "the tenant" as including the applicant. I do not consider that T. M. Fairclough & Sons, Ltd. v. Berliner (11) on different words in a different Act is an obstacle to this interpretation.

It would be idle, of course, to pretend that there are not powerful arguments to the contrary, as is apparent from the judgment which has been delivered by HARMAN, L.J., and that which is about to be delivered by WINN, L.J. Little purpose would, I think, be served if I were to attempt to deal with them all. I can see the force of the point that in s. 41 the legislature has dealt with the case of a trustee tenant and a beneficiary occupant, and in s. 42 with groups of companies, and could have, had it been so minded, dealt expressly with joint tenants; but it might, I suppose, be said in reply that they were aware of the decision in Howson v. Buxton (10).

Again there is the point that, if the applicant be right, the landlord will be forced to accept the liability of one tenant instead of two and to have a tenant different from the tenant to whom he originally let. With regard to the first matter I should myself be disposed to think that the court could safeguard the landlord under s. 35 by insisting on a suitable guarantor for the performance of the tenant's covenants. As to the second matter, counsel for the applicant points out that as a result of s. 40 and s. 44 a landlord may find himself saddled with a sub-tenant as an immediate tenant in the place of the original tenant.

For my part, therefore, I would allow the appeal.

WINN, L.J.: The question raised by this appeal is one of construction of Part 2 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954. It may, I think, be stated in the form: can the relevant statutory provisions be so construed as to afford jurisdiction to grant to the applicant, against the will of the landlord, the further tenancy which he desires?

In the course of the argument I have made it abundantly clear that I would willingly answer that question affirmatively in the present case, to avoid the injustice which I recognise that the particular circumstances of the instant case may produce for the applicant, were I not oppressed by (a) apprehension that in other quite different hypothetical cases the construction contended for by the applicant might produce different injustices, and (b) the conviction that it is the duty of this court to leave the function of legislation to the legislature.

I recognise that when a statute is construed by the court it may thereafter have an effect different from that which it has formerly been recognised as having: such a change will not have been legitimately brought about unless the new effect is one comprised in, as distinct from being consistent with, the enacting intention of Parliament, properly ascertained. The court must be able to found its construction on the proposition: this is what Parliament has shown that it intended. It is not sufficient for it to be able to say: it would be consistent with the general revealed intention of Parliament to add to or vary its express enactment in such and such a way.

(10) [1928] All E.R. Rep. 434; 139 L.T. 504.

(11) [1930] All E.R. Rep. 170; [1931] 1 Ch. 60.

Accepting fully what was said to be a proper approach to such a construction problem by SCRUTTON, L.J., in Houson v. Burton (12), I have directed myself to consider the statute relevant in the instant case in the light of those observations:

"I take it that in construing an Act of Parliament, besides looking at the words used, one is entitled to know the mischief which the Act was intended to remedy and to construe the words used, if possible, in such a way as shall suppress the mischief and advance the remedy."

The same approach to the construction of statutes is to be found in the fourth heading of the statement of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in Heydon's case (13):

"The true reason of the remedy [which Parliament hath resolved]; and then the office of all the judges is always to make such constructions as shall suppress the mischief, and advance the remedy, and to suppress subtle inventions and evasions for continuance of the mischief, and pro privato commodo, and to add force and life to the cure and remedy, according to the true intent of the makers of the Act, pro bono publico."

COKE himself expressed it in the following language in his INSTITUTES ((1) Inst. 24 (b)):

"Equity is a construction made by the judges, that cases out of the letter of a statute, yet being within the same mischief or cause of the making of the same, shall be within the same remedy that the statute provideth; and the reason hereof is, for that the lawmakers could not possibly set down all cases in express terms."

However, by the nineteenth century a more guarded approach had been adopted by the courts and in 1827 LORD TENTERDEN, C.J., observed in Brandling v. Barrington (14) that "... there is always danger in giving effect to what is called the equity of the statute, and that it is much better and safer to rely on and abide by the plain words, although the legislature might possibly have provided for other cases had their attention been directed to them."

LORD BLACKBURN'S test as stated in River Wear Comrs. v. Adamson (15) was:

"... we are to take the whole statute together, and construe it all together, giving the words their ordinary signification, unless when so applied they produce an inconsistency, or an absurdity or inconvenience so great as to convince the court that the intention could not have been to use them in their ordinary signification, and to justify the court in putting on them some other signification, which, though less proper, is one which the court thinks the words will bear."

The Act of 1954 to which this appeal relates is described in its long title as inter alia:

"An Act... to enable tenants occupying property for business, professional or certain other purposes to obtain new tenancies in certain cases..."

(12) [1928] All E.R. Rep. at p. 436; 139 L.T. at p. 505.

(13) (1584), 3 Co. Rep. 7a at p. 7b.

(14) (1827), 6 B. & C. 467 at p. 475.

(15) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 1 at p. 12; (1877), 2 App. Cas. 743 at p. 764.

A Part 2 of the Act of 1954 is headed "Security of tenure for Business, Professional and other Tenants": s. 23 is headed "Tenancies to which Part 2 applies": s. 24 is in the section headed "Continuation and renewal of tenancies": s. 29, which comes most directly in question, is in the sections headed "Application to court for new tenancies". The sections contained in Part 2 of the Act of 1954 which require to be construed are:

B "23 (1) . . . this Part of this Act applies to any tenancy where the property comprised in the tenancy is or includes premises which are occupied by the tenant and are so occupied for the purposes of a business carried on by him or for those and other purposes.

C "(3) . . . the expression 'the holding' . . . means the property comprised in the tenancy, there being excluded any part thereof which is occupied neither by the tenant nor . . .

"(4) Where the tenant is carrying on a business . . .

D "24 (1) A tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies shall not come to an end unless terminated in accordance with the provisions of this Part of this Act; and . . . the tenant under such a tenancy may apply to the court for a new tenancy—(a) . . . or (b) if the tenant has made a request for a new tenancy in accordance with s. 26 of this Act.

"25 (5) A notice under this section shall not have effect unless it requires the tenant . . . to notify the landlord . . . whether or not . . . the tenant will be willing to give up possession . . .

E "26 (1) A tenant's request for a new tenancy may be made where the tenancy under which he holds for the time being . . . is a tenancy granted for . . .

"(3) A tenant's request for a new tenancy shall not have effect unless . . .

"(4) A tenant's request for a new tenancy shall not be made if . . .

"(5) Where the tenant makes a request for a new tenancy . . .

F "27 (1) Where the tenant under a tenancy . . . gives to the immediate landlord . . . a notice . . .

"29 (1) . . . on an application under sub-s. (1) of s. 24 of this Act for a new tenancy the court shall make an order for the grant . . .

G "41 (1) Where a tenancy is held on trust, occupation by all or any of the beneficiaries under the trust, and the carrying on of a business by all or any of the beneficiaries, shall be treated . . . as equivalent to occupation or the carrying on of a business by the tenant . . . (c) . . . a change in the persons of the trustees shall not be treated as a change in the person of the tenant.

H "42 (2) Where a tenancy is held by a member of a group [of companies] occupation by another member of the group, and the carrying on of a business by another member of the group, shall be treated . . . as equivalent to occupation or the carrying on of a business by the members of the group holding the tenancy . . . (c) . . . an assignment of the tenancy from one member of the group to another shall not be treated as a change in the person of the tenant.

I "44 (1) . . . the expression 'the landlord', in relation to a tenancy (in this section referred to as 'the relevant tenancy'), means the person (whether or not he is the immediate landlord) who is the owner of that interest in the property comprised in the relevant tenancy which for the time being fulfils the following conditions . . ."

It is said by counsel for the applicant, rightly, I think, that the object of Parliament in enacting Part 2 of the Act of 1954 is revealed by the whole tenor of Part 2 to have been to afford occupiers of business premises, using them for business purposes, a right to new tenancies of such premises in derogation of the common law right of their landlord to enjoy his reversion without such a fetter; put alternatively, the mischief at which Parliament aimed, openly, was the vulnerability of such occupiers to disturbance and loss of goodwill against which the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, had been found to afford no sufficient protection. The question remains whether Parliament has revealed an intention or should on a proper construction be regarded as having intended, to grant such a right to all such occupiers—a proposition wider than counsel for the applicant needed in the instant case and for this reason or other reasons not contended for by him—or only for such occupiers as are also tenants within the meaning of the word as used in this Part of the Act of 1954. Conceding, for the purposes of the present case, that the latter, narrower proposition is all that he could sustain, counsel for the applicant has contended that it is satisfied where such an occupier is a tenant within a wide sense of the word, there being no relevant narrower definition of it in Part 2 of the Act of 1954. More pertinently, for present purposes, he maintains that one of two joint tenants is a tenant, and that where the statute gives any right to a new tenancy to the joint tenants it is to be understood to have given that right to him.

It is clear, and is common ground in the appeal, that on a literal reading these provisions do not give to one of two or more joint tenants, albeit he is the only one occupying and using the premises for business purposes, any right to require, subject to the exclusions set out in s. 30, that the court shall grant him a further tenancy. This statement is none the less true even where in a given case, and the instant case is such a case, the sole beneficial interest in the former or “current” tenancy belongs in equity to the would-be applicant. He is not “the tenant” (which may, of course, be read as including the plural “tenants”) referred to in the relevant sections: he is, as his own statutory notice accurately stated “one of the tenants”.

In substance the argument for the applicant is that the beneficial effect intended to be produced by the Act of 1954 is wide enough to comprise and assist all occupiers of business premises under the tenancy: the argument for the landlord is that there is no indication in the statute of an intention on the part of Parliament to restrict the landlord’s freedom of contract to any greater extent or in favour of any wider category of persons than those to whom express reference is made in the sections to which I have referred. These sections expressly comprise certain persons who are not tenants stricto sensu. The landlord’s contention receives some rather indirect support from the decision of MAUGHAM, J., in T. M. Fairclough & Sons, Ltd. v. Berliner (16). The decision of DANCEWERTS, J., in Woodward v. Earl of Dudley (17) does not assist a solution of the present case since the phrase which there required to be construed was much more precise, videlicet “the tenant with whom the contract of tenancy was made”. It is, however, to be observed as relevant that in his judgment the judge referred to Howson v. Buxton (18), which I have already mentioned, and said of it

“A liberal construction was given in the circumstances of the case by SCRUTTON, L.J., but the other members of the court decided the case on somewhat different grounds.”

In my judgment Howson v. Buxton (18) is to be distinguished from the present case on several grounds, of which the most important are the following:

First, the statute which was construed, the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, imposed a general obligation on landlords of agricultural holdings to pay compensation of the kind to which it referred, and the provision that compensation should not be payable “unless the tenant has . . . given notice” represents an exception from this general provision and therefore requires to be strictly construed.

(16) [1930] All E.R. Rep. 170; [1931] 1 Ch. 60.

(17) [1954] 1 All E.R. 559; [1954] Ch. 283.

(18) [1928] All E.R. Rep. 434; 139 L.T. 504.

A Second, the subject-matter of the right granted to the "tenant" was his personal belongings in the form of household goods, farm produce, etc., and not the tenancy; it follows that he was entitled to compensation qua owner of those goods, not qua owner of the tenancy.

Third, no continuing or bilateral set of obligations were involved; only a single unilateral obligation to pay money.

B Fourth, as SCRUTTON, L.J., recognised, one of several tenants could effectively claim only in respect of his own separate property and any notice given by any tenant would refer only to his property. To my mind this is not inconsistent with the provision that "compensation shall be payable to the tenant", which, by force of the Interpretation Act, 1889 is equivalent to: "payable to the tenants"; and, I would add: or to any of them who has sustained loss.

C For the reasons which I have endeavoured to indicate, whilst I recognise that the problem raised by this appeal is of great general importance, and express my appreciation of the cogency of the submissions made on behalf of the applicant, I feel constrained to say that in my judgment this appeal fails because on its proper construction the statute does not grant the right asserted by the applicant. I only desire to add that in all relevant respects I adopt the most carefully argued

D and lucid judgment of the learned deputy county court judge.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to House of Lords granted on condition that appeal prosecuted diligently.

Solicitors: Boxall & Boxall, agents for Boys & Maughan, Margate, Kent, (for the applicant); Robinson & Allfree, Broadstairs, Kent (for the landlord).

E [Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

F

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (DIVORCE).

G Husband and Wife—Property—Matrimonial home—Protection against eviction —Procedure—Application may be heard by registrar—R.S.C., Ord. 32, r. 11
—R.S.C., Ord. 89, r. 1, r. 3—Matrimonial Homes Act 1967 (c. 75), s. 1.

Any application to the court under s. 1 of the Matrimonial Homes Act 1967 can be heard by a registrar in accordance with R.S.C., Ord. 32, r. 11.

H By R.S.C., Ord. 89, r. 3, the procedure laid down in R.S.C., Ord. 89, r. 1 for proceedings under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is applied (1) so far as is necessary to applications under s. 1 of the Matrimonial Homes Act 1967. It is unnecessary to invoke R.S.C., Ord. 89, r. 1 (2), which is required in relation to proceedings under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, only, because that section expressly provides that applications under it should be made to a judge.

I By direction of the President.

Apr. 2, 1968.

COMPTON MILLER,
Senior Registrar.

---

(1) Rule 3 of R.S.C., Ord. 89 was added by R.S.C. (Amendment No. 2) 1967 r. 6.

LOPES v. VALLIAPPA CHETTIAR.

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Viscount Dilhorne, Lord Hodson, Lord Upjohn, Lord Pearson and Sir Frederick Sellers), January 24, March 20, 1968.]

Privy Council—Malaysia—Appeal—Right to appeal to Judicial Committee—Where appeal lies as of right and where it is discretionary—Courts of Judicature Act 1964 s. 74.

An appeal from the Federal Court of Malaysia to the Judicial Committee lies as of right in cases coming within s. 74 (1) (a) (i)* and (ii) of the Courts of Judicature Act 1964, and the court's discretion to refuse leave to appeal is confined to cases that are within s. 74 (1) (a) (iii) and (b) (see p. 138, letter G, post).

Ratnam v. Cumarasamy ([1964] 3 All E.R. 933) approved.

The granting of special leave by the Judicial Committee is a matter of discretion and not of right; and in the present case special leave to appeal would be refused, although the case fell within s. 74 (1) (a) (i) and (ii) of the Act of 1964 and the appeal was wrongly treated by the Federal Court as one in which that court had a discretion (see p. 138, letters E and I, post).

[As to leave to appeal from courts of Far East territories, and as to special leave to appeal to the Privy Council, see 5 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 687-690, paras. 1469, 1474; and for a case on the subject, see 8 DIGEST (Repl.) 829, 814.]

Cases referred to:

Chikwkwata v. Bosman, [1965] S.A.L.R. 57.

Davis (Lady) v. Lord Shaughnessy, [1932] A.C. 106; 101 L.J.P.C. 37; 146 L.T. 289; 8 Digest (Repl.) 834, 853.

Ratnam v. Cumarasamy, (1962), 28 M.L.J. 330; on appeal, P.C., [1964] 3 All E.R. 933; sub nom. Thambro Ratnam v. Thambro Cumarasamy, [1965] 1 W.L.R. 8; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 211, 673a.

Petition.

This was a petition by Rudolph Santiago Lopes for leave (or alternatively special leave) to appeal against the decision of the Federal Court of Malaysia (SYED SHEH BARAKBAH Lord President, AZMI, C.J., and ONG HOCK THYE, F.J.), dated Apr. 12, 1967, dismissing his appeal from the judgment of GILL, J., in the High Court at Kuala Lumpur, dated Sept. 20, 1966, whereby the High Court dismissed the petitioner's claim for specific performance of an oral agreement for the sale of land. The Federal Court by an order dated June 28, 1967, had refused an application of the petitioner by motion for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the decision of Apr. 12, 1967. The facts are set out in the opinion of VISCOUNT DILHORNE.

Sir Dingle Foot, Q.C., and L. J. Blom-Cooper for the petitioner.

E. F. N. Gratiaen, Q.C., and John A. Baker for the respondent.

VISCOUNT DILHORNE: The petitioner sought special leave to appeal from the decision of the Federal Court of Malaysia dismissing his appeal from a judgment in the High Court at Kuala Lumpur dismissing his claim for specific performance of an oral agreement for the sale of land. The petitioner's application to the Federal Court for conditional leave to appeal was unanimously dismissed by that court. On Dec. 9, 1967, ONG HOCK THYE, F.J., gave his reasons for doing so. He clearly thought that the Federal Court had discretion to refuse leave to appeal and that the appeal did not lie as of right. He said that it would not be right to put the respondent to further heavy expense and inconvenience by giving leave as the appeal appeared likely to receive short shrift in the Privy Council.

Counsel for the petitioner argued that the Federal Court were wrong in holding that it had a discretion in the matter, that the appeal lay as of right and that the * Section 74 (1) (a) is set out at p. 138, letter C, post.

A Federal Court by their decision had deprived the appellant of a right that he had under statute. He urged that the Judicial Committee by giving special leave should restore to the petitioner the right of which he had been deprived.

The Courts of Judicature Act 1964 was the Act under which application was made to the Federal Court, but before referring to the terms of that Act it will be convenient to refer to, and to consider, the terms of two Ordinances which preceded it. The Appeals to His Majesty in Council Ordinance, 1949 (F.M. No. 50 of 1949) provided inter alia as follows:

“Section 3 (1). Subject to such rules as may, from time to time, be made by His Majesty in Council regarding appeals from the courts of the Federation, an appeal shall lie from the court to His Majesty in Council—

(a) from any final judgment or order, provided that—

- (i) the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council amounts to or is of the value of 4,500 dollars or upwards; or
- (ii) the appeal to His Majesty in Council involves, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property or some civil right of like amount or value; or
- (iii) the case is from its nature a fit one for appeal, and

(b) from any interlocutory judgment or order which the court considers a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.”

From this provision it is clear that under this Ordinance an appeal lay as of right from any final judgment or order in cases coming within s. 3 (1) (a) (i) and (ii) and that the court had discretion to grant or refuse leave in cases coming within s. 3 (1) (a) (iii) and (b). Section 3 (2) of the Ordinance provided that:

“Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council shall be made to the court within six weeks from the date on which the decision appealed against was given, or within such further time as may be allowed by the court:

“ . . . ”

and s. 3 (3) was as follows:

“Where the judgment appealed from requires the appellant to pay money or perform a duty, the court shall have power, when granting leave to appeal, either to direct that such judgment shall be carried into execution or that the execution thereof shall be suspended pending the appeal, as to the court shall seem just; and in case the court shall direct such judgment to be carried into execution, the person in whose favour it was given shall, before the execution thereof, enter into good and sufficient security, to the satisfaction of the court, for the due performance of such order as His Majesty in Council shall see fit to make thereon.”

The application for leave to appeal, it thus appears, is for the purpose of enabling the court to exercise its powers under s. 3 (3). An application to the court for leave is also necessary to enable the court to fix security for the appeal.

This Ordinance of 1949 was repealed and replaced by the Appeals from the Supreme Court Ordinance 1958 (No. 16 of 1958). Section 3 (1) of this Ordinance provided that an appeal should lie from the Supreme Court to the Yang di-Pertuan Agong “with the leave of the court granted in accordance with the provisions of s. 4” inter alia in the cases covered by s. 3 (1) (a) and (b) of the Ordinance of 1949. Section 4 was similar in all material respects to s. 3 (2) and (3) of the Ordinance of 1949. The omission to refer to leave to appeal in s. 3 (1) of the Ordinance of 1949 when s. 3 (2) began with referring to an application for leave to appeal may have appeared to the draftsman as somewhat untidy, and may have led to the insertion of the words “with the leave of the court granted in accordance with the provisions of s. 4” in s. 3 (1) of the Ordinance of 1958. Whatever the reason for this change may have been, it would not have been sufficient to justify the conclusion that it converted an appeal as of right into an appeal only with the leave of the court granted in the exercise of its discretion.

In Ratnam v. Cumarasamy (1), a decision on the Ordinance of 1958, it was held by the Court of Appeal that an order made by that court which barred the appellant from appealing to that court was a final order and consequently an appeal lay as of right to the Judicial Committee in a case coming within s. 3 (1) (a) (i) of that Ordinance. It was not suggested in that case that the reference to leave to appeal in s. 3 (1) meant that the court had a discretion to refuse leave to appeal against a final order coming within s. 3 (1) (a) (i).

The Ordinance of 1958 was replaced by the Courts of Judicature Act 1964. Section 74 and s. 75 of that Act were similar in all respects material to this case to the Ordinance of 1958. Section 74 (1) provided that an appeal should lie from the Federal Court to the Yang di-Pertuan Agong with the leave of the court granted in accordance with the provisions of s. 75:

“(a) from any final judgment or order in any civil matter where—

- (i) the matter in dispute in the appeal amounts to or is of the value of five thousand dollars upwards; or
- (ii) the appeal involves, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property or some civil right of like amount or value; or
- (iii) the case is from its nature a fit one for appeal; and

“(b) from any interlocutory judgment or order which the Federal Court considers a fit one for appeal; and . . .”

Section 75 corresponded in all material respects to s. 4 of the Ordinance of 1958 and s. 3 (2) and (3) of the Ordinance of 1949.

The judgment of the Federal Court dismissing the appellant's appeal was a final judgment where the matter in dispute was of a value in excess of $5,000 and the appeal involved property worth more than that amount. The petitioner's claim therefore came within s. 74 (1) (a) (i) and (ii). It does not appear from the grounds stated by ONG HOCK THYE, F.J., for refusing leave to appeal that the attention of the Federal Court was drawn to Ratnam v. Cumarasamy (1). That decision was on the basis that an appeal lay as of right from a final order coming within s. 74 (1) (a) (i). If so, the same must apply in relation to a final judgment or order coming within s. 74 (1) (a) (ii).

As the question raised on this application for leave may arise on other applications before the Federal Court, their lordships think that it is desirable that they should express their views on it. In their opinion Ratnam v. Cumarasamy (1) was decided on the right basis and an appeal lies as of right in cases which come within s. 74 (1) (a) (i) and (ii), provided of course that the appellant complies with any order that the court may make under s. 75 or in relation to security. It appears to the Board that the Federal Court only has discretion to refuse leave to appeal in cases which come within s. 74 (1) (a) (iii) and (b).

Although as BEADLE, C.J., pointed out in Chikwakuata v. Bosman (2), the word “leave” normally implies a discretion to give or withhold permission, the reference to leave in s. 74 is a reference to s. 75 and does not in the context imply such a discretion.

The granting of special leave to appeal by the Judicial Committee is a matter of discretion and not a right (Lady Davis v. Lord Shaughnessy (3), per VISCOUNT DUNEDIN). Their lordships agree with the Federal Court in their conclusion that this case is not a fit one for appeal to the Judicial Committee and they do not consider that they should exercise their discretion by granting leave solely on account of the fact that the appeal was wrongly treated by the Federal Court as one in which that court had a discretion. Whether or not it is desirable that the Federal Court should be given a discretion to refuse leave to appeal in cases which come within s. 74 (1) (a) (i) and (ii) in order to protect respondents

(1) (1962), 28 M.L.J. 330; on appeal, [1964] 3 All E.R. 933.

(2) [1965] S.A.L.R. 57 at p. 60.

(3) [1932] A.C. 106 at p. 112.

A from having to incur heavy expense and suffer inconvenience when in the words of ONG HOCK THYE, F.J., "the appeal appears likely to receive short shrift in the Privy Council" is not a matter for their lordships but for the legislature.

For the reasons stated their lordships have reported to the Head of Malaysia their opinion that the application for special leave be refused.

Petition dismissed.

B Solicitors: Graham Page & Co. (for the petitioner); T. L. Wilson & Co. (for the respondent).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C KEATING v. ELVAN REINFORCED CONCRETE CO., LTD. AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Pearson, Danekwerts and Widgery, L.JJ.), February 19, 20, 1968.]

D Highway—Street—Street works—Safety requirements—Statutory duty to fence and guard street that is broken up—Trench dug for sewer, but not fenced guarded nor lighted during hour of darkness—Injury to pedestrian—No negligence by undertakers—Whether civil action for breach of statutory duty lay—Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6 c. 39), s. 8 (1) (a).

E A pedestrian fell into a trench excavated in a street by contractors as agents of the local authority. Neither the contractors nor the local authority had been negligent, and the fall was due to the removal, by a wrongdoer, of the protective barrier erected by the contractors. In an action by the pedestrian he claimed damages against the local authority for breach of statutory duty, under s. 8 (1)* of the Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950, to "secure ... (a) that, so long as the street ... is broken up ... it is adequately fenced and guarded".

F Held: on the true construction of the Act of 1950, s. 8 (1) did not confer on the pedestrian a right of action for breach of the duty that it imposed, because s. 1 and sub-ss. (3) and (4) of s. 8, among other provisions, showed that s. 8 was not enacted for the protection of individuals who might suffer injury owing to the defective state of the street or defective precautions regarding holes or excavations in the street (see p. 142, letters F and I, and p. 143, letters B, C, E and I, post).

G Principle stated by LORD NORMAND in Cutler v. Wandsworth Stadium, Ltd. ([1949] 1 All E.R. at p. 550) applied.

Decision of WALLER, J. ([1967] 3 All E.R. 611) affirmed.

H [As to matters to be considered in determining whether a common law action lies in respect of breach of a statutory duty, see 36 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 451, 452, para. 487.

As to the precautions to be observed by undertakers of code-regulated street works, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 342, 343, para. 548; and for cases on subject, see 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 530-532, 2062-2080.

I As to negligence in the execution of statutory works in highways, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 313, 314, para. 498, as to safety precautions by undertakers of such works see ibid., 342, para. 548, and for cases on negligence in relation to statutory works, see 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 533, 534, 2081-2091.

For the Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950, s. 8, see 29 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 330.]

Cases referred to:

Clark and wife v. Brims, [1947] 1 All E.R. 242; [1947] K.B. 497; [1947] L.J.R. 853; 45 Digest (Repl.) 28, 89.

* Section 8 (1) so far as material, is printed at p. 141, letter A, post.

- Outler v. Wandsworth Stadium, Ltd. (in Liquidation)*, [1947] 2 All E.R. 815; A [1948] 1 K.B. 291; affd. H.L., [1949] 1 All E.R. 544; [1949] A.C. 398; [1949] L.J.R. 824; 25 Digest (Repl.) 504, 582.
- Haley v. London Electricity Board*, [1964] 3 All E.R. 185; [1965] A.C. 778; [1964] 3 W.L.R. 479; 129 J.P. 14; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 241, 77a.
- Phillips v. Britania Hygienic Laundry Co., Ltd.*, [1923] All E.R. Rep. 127; [1923]
 2 K.B. 832; 93 L.J.K.B. 5; 129 L.T. 777; 45 Digest (Repl.) 144, 553. B

Appeal.

This was an appeal by Thomas Patrick Keating from the decision of WALLER, J., given on July 5, 1967, and reported [1967] 3 All E.R. 611, dismissing the appellant's action for damages for negligence and breach of statutory duty against the first defendants, Elvan Reinforced Concrete Co., Ltd. ("the contractors") and the second defendants, London Borough of Richmond upon Thames ("the local authority"). The contractors had dug, as agents for the local authority, a trench in a street in the course of the execution of street works to connect a sewer with the drains of premises on which building work was being done. The appellant fell into the trench at about 5 p.m. on Jan. 7, 1965, while walking along a street. According to the evidence there were proper barriers on either side of the trench at about 4.45 p.m. on that day. Work finished at about 4.55 p.m. The barrier consisted of three large empty drums with scaffold boards laid over them and lighted lamps placed on them and between them. There was no direct evidence what happened next, but it was inferred that very shortly afterwards a person or persons unknown demolished the barriers and pushed over the drums and threw the planks and some of the lamps into the trench, most of the lamps being put out. At about 5.15 p.m. the contractors' foreman and two other men found that the barriers had been demolished and, according to their evidence, re-erected them in the same positions as before. The trial judge (WALLER, J.) accepted the evidence of the contractors' witnesses that the barrier had been properly erected. The appeal is reported only on the question whether the appellant had a right of action for breach of statutory duty under s. 8 (1) of the Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950. C D E F

C. Lawson, Q.C., and P. V. Crocker for the plaintiff.

A. de Piro, Q.C., and W. H. E. James for the defendants, the contractors and the local authority.

LORD PEARSON: The plaintiff, who is the appellant, was on his way home at about 5 p.m. on Jan. 7, 1965. He walked along Kew Road, which was brightly lit, and round the bend into Broomfield Road, which was not so well lit, and he fell into a trench. The trench had been dug by Elvan Reinforced Concrete Co., Ltd., the first defendants, who are contractors, as agents for the second defendants, the London Borough of Richmond upon Thames ("the local authority"). The contractors had been doing building work in the corner premises at the junction of Kew Road and Broomfield Road, and the trench was required for taking drains from the premises to connect with the local authority's sewers in the centre of Broomfield Road. The trench was dug across the pavement and across half the roadway. The plaintiff sued both defendants for damages for negligence and breach of statutory duty. The judge found that there was no negligence or breach of statutory duty. G H

The plaintiff has appealed on two grounds. First he asked for a new trial on the issue of negligence on the ground that the learned judge's findings are inconsistent. [His LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence, considered the plaintiff's contentions and concluded:] In my view it has not been shown that there was any inconsistency or error in the findings of the judge, and the first ground of appeal fails. I

The second ground of appeal is that the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages from the local authority for breach of their statutory duty under s. 8 (1) of

A the Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950. That provision, so far as it is material for the present case, is as follows:

B “Undertakers who are executing or have executed any code-regulated works shall secure at their expense that the following requirements are observed during and in connection with the execution of the works and of reinstatement and making good thereafter under the provisions of this Act in that behalf, that is to say—(a) that, so long as the street or controlled land is open or broken up (except in a place to which the public have no right of access and are not permitted to have access), it is adequately fenced and guarded, and lighted in such manner as to give proper warning to the public during the hours of darkness for the purpose of s. 1 of the Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927 (1) . . .”

C Counsel has contended on behalf of the plaintiff, first, that this provision imposes an absolute obligation independently of negligence. The obligation is not merely to take proper steps but to achieve certain results and if these results are not achieved there is a breach of the obligation. He says: be it assumed that there was no negligence on the part of the defendants because they erected a proper barrier and the accident happened because a person or persons unknown wrong-
D fully demolished the barrier before the plaintiff arrived, nevertheless the street where the trench had been dug was not adequately fenced or guarded or lighted at the time of the accident, and thus there was a breach of the obligation and it caused the accident to the plaintiff. So far, I think, counsel for the plaintiff has a strong argument; but it is not necessary to decide the point, because
E he has to show not only that there is an absolute duty but also that the plaintiff has a right of action for damages for the breach of it.

For these purposes it is necessary to consider what intention is manifested by the Act of 1950. There are numerous authorities but I will only read two very short passages from the two cases that were cited to us as showing what principles are applicable. In Cutler v. Wandsworth Stadium, Ltd. (in Liquidation),
F (2), LORD NORMAND said

“In particular, I respectfully agree with [Lord GREENE, M.R. (3)] that the proper approach to the case is to consider whether, on a true construction of the statute as a whole, a right of action by an individual aggrieved by the breach of one of the statutory duties ought to be implied.”

G There was also cited to us Clarke and wife v. Brims (4), where MORRIS, J., cited a passage from the judgment of ATKIN, L.J., in Phillips v. Britania Hygienic Laundry Co., Ltd. (5). This is the passage:

H “. . . when a statute imposes a duty of commission or omission upon an individual, the question whether a person aggrieved by a breach of the duty has a right of action depends on the intention of the statute. Was it intended that a duty should be owed to the individual aggrieved as well as to the State, or is it a public duty only? That depends upon the construction of the statute as a whole, and the circumstances in which it was made, and to which it relates. One of the matters to be taken into consideration is this: Does the statute on the face of it contain a reference to a remedy for the breach of it? If so, it would, prima facie, be the only remedy, but that is not conclusive. One must still look to the intention of the legisla-
I ture to be derived from the words used, and one may come to the conclusion that, although the statute creates a duty and imposes a penalty for the breach of that duty, it may still intend that the duty should be owed to individuals.”

(1) See now the Road Transport Lighting Act, 1957, s. 17.

(2) [1949] 1 All E.R. 544 at pp. 550, 551; [1949] A.C. 398 at p. 412.

(3) [1947] 1 All E.R. 815; [1948] 1 K.B. 291.

(4) [1947] 1 All E.R. 242 at p. 245; [1947] K.B. 497 at p. 507.

(5) [1923] All E.R. Rep. 127 at p. 132; [1923] 2 K.B. 832 at pp. 840, 841.

I should mention, for the sake of completeness, that reference was also made to the comparatively recent case of Haley v. London Electricity Board, (6). Reference was made in the argument to the question which we are considering. The argument was mainly directed to saying that that section established the standard for the duty of care to be observed in fencing and guarding holes in streets. That is how I read the report of the argument (7). On the other hand (8), counsel for the respondents was arguing against any suggestion that this section imposes a statutory duty for breach of which an individual would have a cause of action. Then LORD REID referred to this point. He said (9):

"... the respondents argue that there is no civil liability under that Act for breach of a statutory duty. I need not consider that question because I am of opinion that the appellant is entitled to succeed at common law."

I think that in the other speeches there was no expression of opinion on that question. At any rate, certainly there was no decision on that question in that case, and so it has to be considered now.

It is important to observe s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1950. It shows that s. 8 is a section included in what is called the street works code. The street works code consists of s. 3 to s. 14 of the Act of 1950 and, Schs. 1, 2, and 3 to the Act of 1950. This street works code is to have effect in relation to statutory powers to execute undertakers' works in a street "... with a view to (a) providing a uniform set of provisions for the protection of authorities, bodies and persons concerned in the mode of exercise of such powers as having the control or management of streets, or of sewers, drains or tunnels, transport undertakings or bridges ...".

Thus those sections, including s. 8, are enacted for the purpose of providing protection for certain authorities, especially highway authorities, sewer authorities, and so on, concerned with streets. There is no suggestion there that the Act of 1950 is enacted, or that any part of it is enacted, for the protection of individuals who may suffer injury owing to the defective state of the streets or defective precautions taken with regard to holes or excavations in the streets.

One has to note, also, certain other provisions. There are in addition to sub-s. (1) two further provisions of s. 8 which are of importance. Subsections (3) and (4) provide

"(3) If undertakers fail to satisfy an obligation to which they are subject by virtue of sub-s. (1) of this section they shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £10 in respect of each day of such failure.

"(4) If undertakers fail to satisfy an obligation to which they are subject by virtue of sub-s. (1) of this section as regards any requirement mentioned in para. (a), (b) or (c) thereof, the street authority or managers may do anything needed for securing observance of that requirement and the undertakers shall pay to the authorities or managers an amount equal to any cost reasonably incurred by them of so doing."

I think that sub-s. (4) is important when taken in conjunction with sub-s. (3), because here you have in the section itself two remedies being provided for breach of it, a criminal remedy and a civil remedy, and the civil remedy is one which would apply as between different authorities, or as between the undertakers and the street authority, or some other authority, and there is no mention or suggestion that any private individual would have any remedy or any right of action under this section.

The point is also of interest in relation to s. 30, of which sub-s. (1) provides:

"Any provision of this Act creating a liability to a fine for breach of any obligation shall be without prejudice to any liability in civil proceedings for that breach."

(6) [1964] 3 All E.R. 185; [1965] A.C. 778.

(7) [1965] A.C. at pp. 780, 781.

(8) [1965] A.C. at p. 784. (9) [1964] 3 All E.R. at pp. 186, 187; [1965] A.C. at p. 789.

A Counsel for the defendants called our attention to a number of provisions in the Act of 1950 which create civil liabilities. They are quite numerous. There are several in s. 7, and there are some in s. 8. Then he went on to show in the following sections up to s. 14 quite a considerable number of express provisions for civil liability of undertakers to public authorities, but there is no suggestion anywhere of any right of action being conferred on a private individual. Having regard to those considerations, it seems to me clear that the Act of 1950, or at any rate s. 8 of it, is not to be construed as providing a right of action for any individual who suffers particular damage from breach of any of the statutory requirements. The object of the Act of 1950 is to regulate the relations between undertakers who exercise statutory powers to break up streets and the highway authorities and other authorities who are, by virtue of their functions, concerned with the way in which those operations are carried out by the undertakers.

C In my view the plaintiff has no right of action for the alleged breach, which may be a breach of the alleged absolute statutory obligation under s. 8. In my view the plaintiff has no cause of action, and therefore the appeal fails on the second ground also.

D DANCKWERTS, L.J.: I agree with the judgment of LORD PEARSON and I would add only a few words. In the first place I think that the judge reached the right conclusion on the facts of the case, and that there really was no evidence of negligence by the contractors. They took all reasonable precautions, indeed, those that were laid down in the Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950, and it was not their fault that some ill-disposed person or persons threw down the barriers and removed most of the lamps.

E In the second place I agree with the construction which LORD PEARSON has put on the Act of 1950.

Much as I sympathise with the unfortunate plaintiff, it would be an injustice if the defendants were held liable for the acts of a third person for which they were in no way responsible.

F I also would dismiss the appeal.

G WIDGERY, L.J.: I agree with my lords and find nothing inconsistent, or even vaguely unsatisfactory, in the judge's finding of fact. [HIS LORDSHIP gave his reasons for upholding this finding and continued:] In regard to construction of the Public Utilities Street Works Act, 1950, it is in my judgment, as LORD PEARSON has said, abundantly clear that the purpose of s. 3 to s. 14 of the Act of 1950 is to provide provision for protection for authorities having control or management of streets. When one looks at some of the earlier provisions in that group of sections it is manifest that they are designed to protect the authorities concerned, and one could cite as an example s. 4 which provides for the preparation of plans, and s. 6 which provides for the giving of notice before work is done. When one comes to s. 8, the obligation is somewhat different, because on its face the section does seem to create an obligation which will benefit the public, but it would be quite false to suppose that it did not also benefit the street authority. The street authority is intensely interested in the presence of a dangerous hole in the street and it is of the greatest importance to it that it should have the protection of s. 8 whereby the undertaker has to fence, guard and light at his own expense. It would be, I think, a remarkable thing if such a provision, by a side wind, permitted a pedestrian to sue for damages in a case where no claim in negligence existed.

I accordingly agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Calvert Smith & Sutcliffe (for the plaintiff); Wilkinson, Kimbers & Staddon (for the defendants, the contractors and the local authority).

[Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Blain JJ.), April 1, 1968.]

Criminal Law—Trial—Plea—Plea of guilty—Statement of facts in open court by prosecution where no committal proceedings or committal proceedings which could not be fully reported—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80) s. 1.

LORD PARKER, C.J., at the sitting of the court read the following practice direction: In the opinion of this court it would be regrettable if, as a result of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 (1), the press and the public were deprived of the right inherent in our system of the administration of criminal justice, to know the circumstances of the crime for which an accused is convicted and sentenced.

This can only occur in cases in which under that Act, either there have been no committal proceedings or committal proceedings which cannot be fully reported, and in which in either event the accused pleads guilty at the trial. However, even in such cases the prosecution state the facts in open court at the trial and this they should continue to do though in somewhat more detail than heretofore.

The only exception is the comparatively rare case when an accused pleads guilty at the trial to murder, in which case there is only one sentence, life imprisonment, which can be imposed (2). There is then, so far as the judge is concerned, no need for any reference to the circumstances of the crime, since whatever the circumstances the sentence must be the same. The judge will have read the depositions; the accused will inevitably be advised and represented by counsel, and often by leading counsel, and the accused will have chosen to plead guilty. Moreover, so far as the public was concerned until the changes effected by the Criminal Justice Act 1967 (3) the committal proceedings were held in public.

This court however recognises that if this should be the practice for the future there may be rare cases in which the circumstances of the murder are never publicly revealed (4). That is clearly wrong. Accordingly, this court directs that the prosecution, following a plea of guilty to murder, should, as in cases of pleas of guilty to other offences, state the facts in open court before sentence is imposed.

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

(1) See Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80) s. 1, s. 3.

(2) See Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act 1965 s. 1 (1): 45 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 238.

(3) Cf. Criminal Justice Act 1967 s. 6.

(4) This Practice Direction is a sequel to the lack of publicity exemplified in R. v. Sokol, "The Times" Mar. 29, 1968.

A

Re A. (an infant).

HANIF v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS.

Re S. (N.) (an infant).

B

SINGH v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Cross, J.), February 21, 22, 23, 1968.]

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning, M.R., Russell, L.J., and Cumming-Bruce, J.), March 11, 12, 1968.]

C

Commonwealth Immigrant—Admission to United Kingdom—Refusal of admission—Application to make an infant seeking admission a ward of court—Wardship jurisdiction not exercisable so as to interfere with statutory control of immigration—Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962 (10 & 11 Eliz. 2 c. 21), s. 2 (1).

D

A boy, who was aged about eleven and was a citizen of Pakistan but not of the United Kingdom, arrived at London airport from Pakistan. If the boy was under sixteen years of age and was, as the plaintiff Hanif claimed, his son, the boy was entitled to admission to England, as Hanif was resident there. The immigration officer was not satisfied, after questioning the boy and the plaintiff, that the boy was the plaintiff's son; and the boy was refused admission under s. 2 (1) of the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962, and arrangements were made for him to be returned to Pakistan.

E

N.S., who was an Indian and seventeen years of age, arrived at London airport. He came with a lady and a girl, said to be his mother and sister. H.S. who was resident in England alleged that N.S. was his son. The immigration officer, after inquiry, was not satisfied that N.S. was the son of H.S., but was satisfied that the lady and girl were the wife and daughter of H.S. In the case of N.S. there was discretion over his admission if he was the son of H.S. N.S. was refused admission and arrangements were made for his return to India.

F

The plaintiffs, Hanif and H.S., each issued an originating summons, to which the Home Secretary was made defendant, seeking to make the boy and N.S. respectively a ward of court pursuant to s. 9 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949. On motions to strike out the originating summonses,

G

Held: the provisions of the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962*, were a comprehensive code governing the entry or removal of Commonwealth immigrants and entrusted the administration of it to immigration officers, with which, so long as the statutory control was honestly and fairly exercised, the court would not interfere; accordingly the court would not exercise wardship jurisdiction so as to interfere with the statutory immigration

H

* The Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962, provides—"S. 1 (1) The provisions of this Part of this Act shall have effect for controlling the immigration into the United Kingdom of Commonwealth citizens to whom this section applies.

I

"Section 2 (1) Subject to the following provisions of this section, an immigration officer may, on the examination under this Part of this Act of any Commonwealth citizen to whom s. 1 of this Act applies who enters or who seeks to enter the United Kingdom—(a) refuse him admission into the United Kingdom; . . . (2) The power to refuse admission . . . under this section shall not be exercised, except as provided by sub-s. (5), in the case of any person who satisfies an immigration officer that he or she—(a) . . . or (b) is the wife, or child under sixteen years of age, of a Commonwealth citizen who is resident in the United Kingdom . . ."

Schedule 1, para. 3, so far as material, provides—" (1) Where an immigrant is refused admission into the United Kingdom an immigration officer may, . . . give directions—(a) to the . . . commander of the aircraft in which the immigrant arrived in the United Kingdom requiring him to remove the immigrant from the United Kingdom in that . . . aircraft; or (b) to the owners or agents of the . . . aircraft, requiring them to remove the immigrant from the United Kingdom in any . . . aircraft specified in the direction . . ."

control in the present case, and the originating summonses would be struck out (see p. 148, letter F, p. 149, letters A, B and C, p. 151, letter H, p. 152, letters A and E, p. 153, letter E, and p. 154, letter A, post).

Re K. (H.) (an infant) ([1967] 1 All E.R. 226) considered.

[As to the control of immigration of Commonwealth citizens and examination of immigrants, see SUPPLEMENT to 5 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) paras. 1513, 1514; and as to the powers of immigration officers, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 513, 514, para. 992.]

As to the court's jurisdiction over wards of court, see 21 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 217, para. 479.

For the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 8, see 28 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 777, and for the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962, s. 2 and Sch. 1, see 42 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 5, 21.]

Cases referred to:

K. (H.) (an infant), Re, [1967] 1 All E.R. 226; [1967] 2 Q.B. 617; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 962.

M. (an infant), Re, [1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 350; 125 J.P. 278; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 936, 2326d.

S. (an infant), Re, [1965] 1 All E.R. 865; [1965] 1 W.L.R. 483; 129 J.P. 228; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 443, 2326c.

HANIF v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS

Motion.

By originating summons dated Feb. 8, 1968, under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 9, the plaintiff, Mohamed Hanif, who was born on Aug. 20, 1942, and claimed to be the father of a boy* born on Mar. 2, 1956, applied to the court for an order (i) that the boy be made a ward of court; (ii) that the care and control of the boy be vested in the plaintiff; (iii) that directions be given as to the place of residence of the boy, and (iv) that a declaration be made as to the legitimacy and the paternity of the boy. The Secretary of State for Home Affairs was made the defendant to the summons. By notice of motion dated Feb. 15, 1968, the defendant moved for an order, under R.S.C., Ord. 18, r. 19, and under the inherent jurisdiction of the court, and, alternatively, under s. 9 (3) of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, that the originating summons be struck out on the ground that (a) it was frivolous and/or vexatious, (b) it was an abuse of the process of the court, and that the proceedings be dismissed accordingly; alternatively, for an order that the boy cease to be a ward of court. The hearing of the motion in the case of the plaintiff Hanif was begun in camera; later, at the direction of the judge (Cross, J.), argument was heard and judgment was given in open court.

The cases noted below† were cited during the argument before Cross, J., in addition to those referred to in the judgment.

P. A. W. Merriton and M. A. A. Bashiri for the plaintiff.

J. P. Warner for the Crown.

* The boy's passport, exhibited to an affidavit, was issued by order of the President of Pakistan. It stated that the boy was born at Jadda on Mar. 2, 1956, and that he was a native of the former state of Jammu and Kashmir. Jadda was in the part of Kashmir occupied by Pakistan, and the authorities in England regard people in the position of the boy as being citizens of Pakistan for the purposes of the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962.

On account of representations the boy was not sent back to Karachi on Jan. 27, in accordance with arrangements and instructions made and given by the immigration authorities, but an order was made for his detention in a remand home under para. 4 (1) of Pt. 1 of Sch. 1 to the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962. The trial judge, Cross, J., was informed that the boy was being well cared for there.

† Re A. B. (an infant), [1954] 2 All E.R. 287; [1954] 2 Q.B. 385; Re M. (an infant), [1961] 1 All E.R. 201; [1961] Ch. 81; Re Baker (infants), [1961] 2 All E.R. 250; [1961] Ch. 303; on appeal, [1961] 3 All E.R. 276; [1962] Ch. 201; Re R. (K.) (an infant), [1963] 3 All E.R. 337; [1964] Ch. 455; Re G. (infants), [1963] 3 All E.R. 370; Re P. (G. E.) (an infant), [1964] 3 All E.R. 977; [1965] Ch. 568.

- A Feb. 23. CROSS, J., having stated the nature of the proceedings, having referred to the relevant statutory provisions (s. 1, s. 2, s. 3, s. 4, s. 13 and s. 16 of, and Sch. 1, paras. 1-4 to the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962), and having reviewed the facts and the discrepancies revealed on investigation by the immigration officer continued:] The position of immigration officers carrying out their duties under the Act of 1962 was recently considered by the Divisional Court in
- B Re K. (H.) (an infant) (1). Counsel for the Crown submitted that that case establishes the following propositions: (i) That s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1962 gives the immigration officer an unfettered discretion to grant or refuse admission unless he is satisfied that the conditions in s. 2 (2) are fulfilled. (ii) That the burden is on the would-be immigrant to satisfy the officer that the conditions of s. 2 (2) are fulfilled. (iii) That the officer must act in good faith and conduct his enquiry
- C in a manner which is fair to the would-be immigrant, though in considering whether or not he has acted fairly one must bear in mind the general framework of the Act of 1962, and, in particular, the time limits imposed. (iv) That if the officer has not acted in good faith or fairly, his decision may be quashed by certiorari, but that there is no other way in which it can be called in question. (v) That, if fresh evidence is received before the decision to send him back has been implemented, the officer must consider it and can be forced to do so by
- D mandamus.

That appears to me to be a substantially accurate summary, and counsel for the plaintiff did not dissent from it. He did not suggest that Mr. Cooper (2) had acted in bad faith and he did not suggest that the conclusion at which he had arrived, namely, that he was not satisfied that the plaintiff was the father of the

E infant, was one which, on the evidence as he understood it, he could not reasonably reach; but he said that the plaintiff hoped to show, by further evidence and, in particular, by the employment of an interpreter who was conversant with the dialect spoken by the boy, that the boy was his son and that he intended to bring the appropriate proceedings in this country to establish the boy's status. His argument on this motion, however, did not involve any

F attack on the decision of the immigration officer, but was directed to establishing that in the case of an infant who was a ward of court any decision of the authorities, whether to send him out of the jurisdiction or to detain him here in any particular place, was necessarily subject to and conditional on the approval of this court.

This argument, as I see it, raises two questions:—(a) Did the issue of the G summons make the boy a ward of court? (b) Assuming that it did, ought the court to allow the wardship to continue?

As I have reached a conclusion adverse to the plaintiff on the second question, I do not propose to express any concluded view on the first, which has indeed not been fully argued before me. It will be sufficient if I indicate the general nature of the problem as I see it.

H The wardship jurisdiction is founded on the conception that the infant in question owes allegiance to the Sovereign and that the Sovereign owes to the infant a corresponding duty to take it under her wing if required so to do. In this case the boy is not a citizen of the United Kingdom but a citizen of Pakistan. He had never been in this country before his arrival here on Jan. 26, and though he was physically present in this country when the wardship summons was

I issued on Feb. 8 by the plaintiff, the Sovereign, acting through the immigration officer appointed by the Home Secretary, had already decided that he should be sent back to Pakistan. In such circumstances, it appears to me to be at least arguable that the child did not owe such a degree of "local allegiance" to the Sovereign as would entitle anyone to force the Sovereign to accept him as her ward.

---

(1) [1967] 1 All E.R. 226; [1967] 2 Q.B. 617.

(2) Mr. Cooper was the immigration officer concerned with the investigation as to admission of the boy.

I am, however, prepared to assume, for present purposes, that the boy became a ward on the issue of this summons and is a ward today. Counsel for the Crown conceded that in considering whether to continue the wardship I must proceed on the footing that it is, or at all events may be, in the interests of the boy that he should stay in this country and not be sent back to Pakistan. In that connexion, I would emphasize that the question whether the welfare of the boy will be best served by his staying here or returning to Pakistan is quite different from the question whether the plaintiff is the boy's father. Even if the plaintiff is not the boy's father, it may well be that it would be best for him to stay here and if the argument submitted by counsel for the plaintiff is right it must, as I see it, apply equally to a Pakistani boy who does not claim to be the son of anyone resident in this country but is made a ward on arrival by his grandparents or some friend of the family.

In support of his contention that, assuming the boy to be a ward, the wardship should be ended at once, even though it was not in the boy's best interests that he be sent out of the jurisdiction, counsel for the defendant submitted that the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962, was a comprehensive code dealing with would-be immigrants both adults and infants, and entrusting the decision whether or not they were to be admitted to immigration officers. He said that to read the provisions of the Act of 1962 conferring powers on the relevant authorities as being subject in the case of any infants who were made wards before they were sent back, to the consent of this court would be to drive a coach and horses through the Act of 1962 and produce an intolerable conflict between the authorities and the court, since the immigration officers, in deciding whether or not to allow the child to remain here, are not concerned—or at all events, not primarily concerned—with the welfare of the individual child, but with considerations of general policy with regard to immigrants from the Commonwealth countries, whereas the court would be concerned exclusively with the welfare of the individual child. For my part, I can see no answer to this argument and I think that it is supported by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Re M. (an infant) (3). Counsel for the plaintiff sought to distinguish that case on the ground that under the Children Act, 1948, the local authorities were entrusted with the duty of caring for the children in question, whereas under the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962, the immigration authorities were admittedly not concerned—or at least not primarily concerned—with the welfare of would-be immigrants, whether adults or infants. The Court of Appeal, however, in Re M. (an infant) (3), did not base its decision on the fact that the powers given to the local authorities by the Act of 1948 were powers to be exercised for the welfare of the children in question but on the fact that they were powers the proper exercise of which was inconsistent with control by the court.

Counsel for the plaintiff also placed great reliance on a sentence in the judgment of LORD DENNING, M.R., in Re S. (an infant), (4) where he said,

“After all, the Court of Chancery exercises the power of a Crown as parens patriae and its jurisdiction is not to be taken away without express words: and there are none in the statute.”

There is, of course, no doubt that an infant in the care of a local authority can be made a ward, and there may be cases especially where a parent in whom the local authority has not complete confidence is seeking to have the child handed over to him in which it may be desirable that the child should be a ward. It is equally clear, however, that the scope for the exercise of the wardship jurisdiction was drastically curtailed by the Children Act, 1948, although there was no mention of it in the Act. I am sure that LORD DENNING was not intending to deny that; indeed, to do so would be contrary to Re M. (an infant) (3). There

(3) [1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328.

(4) [1965] 1 All E.R. 865 at p. 868.

A is no express mention of the wardship jurisdiction in the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962; but the Act of 1962, as it seems to me, has not simply drastically limited, but has in effect extinguished the scope for the exercise of the wardship jurisdiction in the case of infants to whom the Act of 1962 applies. It is a necessary incident of a wardship that the ward cannot be sent out of the jurisdiction without the consent of the court. On the other hand, the Act of 1962 provides that an infant to whom the Act of 1962 applies can be sent back if the immigration authorities in the proper exercise of their statutory powers so decide. It seems to me that the continuance of the wardship of any such infant is, therefore, of necessity an unjustifiable interference with the exercise by the authorities of their powers under the Act of 1962. For these reasons the motion succeeds.

C As I have indicated, I have some doubt whether the boy ever became a ward. I propose, therefore, not to order that the wardship shall come to an end, but to strike out the summons. I would, however, say, in justice to the plaintiff, that his application was not frivolous or vexatious or an abuse of the process of the court in any unpleasant sense of the word. It was simply, in my judgment, misconceived. The Home Secretary has said that he does not seek any order for costs. The plaintiff is legally aided, so there will be legal aid taxation.

Order accordingly.

[Reported by JACQUELINE METCALFE, Barrister-at-Law.]

E HANIF v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS
SINGH v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR HOME AFFAIRS

Appeals.

These were an appeal by the plaintiff Hanif from the decision of Cross, J., reported previously, and an appeal by a plaintiff, Hazura Singh, from a decision of Cross, J., given on Mar. 1, 1968, striking out his originating summons as being also an abuse of the process of the court.

F The grounds of appeal stated by the plaintiff Hanif, were: (i) that the judge wrongly exercised his inherent jurisdiction (if he did exercise it); (ii) that he wrongly applied R.S.C., Ord. 18, r. 19 to the case; (iii) that the defendant's motion to strike out the originating summons in the case of the boy was premature, the plaintiff having had no opportunity of taking an appointment or filing evidence; G (iv) that the originating summons was properly issued, and (v) that the boy had been and was a ward of court, and that the plaintiff, or the boy, was entitled to be heard by the court to ascertain his personal status. The defendant served a respondent's notice that the orders of Cross, J., should be affirmed on the further ground that no infant who, being a Commonwealth citizen to whom s. 1 of the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962, applies, had been refused admission into the United Kingdom under s. 2 of the Act of 1962, could be made a ward of court; but this ground was not decided by the Court of Appeal. H The facts are summarised in the judgment of LORD DENNING, M.R.

I By originating summons dated Feb. 20, 1968, Mr. Hazura Singh had made an application similar to that made by Hanif, but in relation to N.S., an Indian who was seventeen years of age and who, so Mr. Hazura Singh alleged, was his son. The Secretary of State for Home Affairs moved for an order striking out the summons. On Mar. 1, 1968, Cross, J., made an order that this originating summons be struck out as an abuse of the process of the court.

The judgment of Cross, J., in the case of Singh is not reported, but the appeal from Cross, J., in that case is reported together with the appeal of the plaintiff, Hanif, in the judgments that follow at p. 150, letter A, post.

P. A. W. Merriton and M. A. A. Bashiri for the plaintiff, Hanif.

A. P. Lester for the plaintiff, H.S.

J. P. Warner for the Crown.

LORD DENNING, M.R.: The boy, A., is from Pakistan. He claims that his father is in the United Kingdom and that he is entitled to enter this country as of right by virtue of s. 2 (2) (b) of the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962. That section provides that a child is not to be refused entry if he satisfies the immigration officer that he is “... a child under sixteen years of age, of a Commonwealth citizen who is resident in the United Kingdom...”

The boy arrived at London Airport on Jan. 26, 1968, on a Pakistan International Airlines flight. He produced a Pakistani passport which showed him to have been born on Mar. 2, 1956, at Jadda, Pakistan. There was at London Airport that day a Mr. Hanif who was said to be the father of the boy. The immigration officer saw the boy and Mr. Hanif separately. He asked questions of them so as to check the claim. Mr. Hanif produced a passport showing that his date of birth was Aug. 20, 1942: whereas the boy's birthday was Mar. 2, 1956. If those dates were correct, it would mean that the man begot the child when he was twelve years of age. That was so unlikely that the immigration officer was not ready to accept the paternity without further inquiry. He asked each of them about their relatives. The boy said he had only one brother who was aged nine. Mr. Hanif said he had two sons aged twelve and one. The officer asked about the boy's uncles, aunts, grandmothers and suchlike. Each of them gave entirely different accounts. In the result the immigration officer was not satisfied that the boy was the child of Mr. Hanif. He referred the matter to the chief immigration officer. He decided that the boy could not be allowed to enter. The immigration officer handed the boy the form of refusal. It required him to return back to Karachi on the next day. Shortly afterwards a barrister made representations on behalf of the boy. In consequence he was not removed from the country at that time. An application was made to the court on Feb. 8, 1968, to make him a ward of court, with care and control to be given to the father, and directions to be given as to his residence, and that a declaration be made as to the legitimacy and the paternity of the child.

The young man, N.S., is from India. He was seventeen years of age. As he was over sixteen he was not entitled to come in as of right; but there is a discretionary power in the immigration officer to admit him. An instruction has been issued which says that children aged sixteen and under eighteen should be freely admitted if they are coming to join both parents or the only surviving parent in the United Kingdom. The young man sought to enter under that discretionary power. He arrived on Feb. 16, 1968, at London Airport on an Air India flight from India. He produced a passport showing that he was born on Feb. 27, 1960, in India. He came with a lady who was said to be his mother and a girl said to be his sister. They produced their passports. The lady claimed that she was the wife of Mr. Hazura Singh, who had come to this country in July 1967, about seven months before. He was at the airport to meet them. He was sponsoring them—his wife and two children—and bringing them into the United Kingdom. The immigration officer enquired into their relationship. He saw them each separately and he also saw Mr. Hazura Singh. He found several discrepancies. For instance, the young man said that the family home was built of mud, had only one storey and consisted of two small rooms: whereas the father, the mother and the daughter said it was built partly of bricks and the father and the daughter said that it had two storeys. The young man said that since leaving school three or four years ago he had worked as a labourer in a factory and as an electrician in a shop; whereas the mother and the daughter said that he had done no work since leaving school two years ago, apart from occasionally feeding their animals. In the result the immigration officer was satisfied that the mother and the daughter were the wife and daughter of the father, but he was not satisfied that the young man was the son of Mr. Hazura Singh. So he consulted the chief immigration officer. He refused the young man admission and gave him notice of the refusal.

A Arrangements were made for him to return to Delhi on the next day. In his case, too, representations were made. Application was made to the Court of Chancery on Feb. 20, 1968, by Mr. Hazura Singh asking that the young man be made a ward of court and for similar directions as in the case of the Pakistani boy.

B In each case the summons was served on the Secretary of State for Home Affairs. He thereupon applied to the court asking that the proceedings should be struck out on the ground that they were an abuse of the process of the court. Cross, J., struck out both summonses. The matter now comes to this court.

C The basic question is this: to what extent can the courts of law review the decisions of the immigration officers? In this case the courts are asked to do it by making the child a ward of court. A year ago the courts were asked to do it by means of habeas corpus and certiorari. It was in the case of Re K. (H.), an infant (5). An immigration officer was not satisfied that a Pakistani boy was under sixteen and directed that he be returned to Pakistan. An application for habeas corpus was issued to secure the boy's release. LORD PARKER, C.J., was clearly of opinion that the immigration officers were not acting in a judicial capacity or quasi-judicial capacity, but in an administrative capacity. Nevertheless he held that they must act honestly and fairly, and if they did not do so, the court could interfere. If they had acted dishonestly or unfairly, their decision could be questioned by certiorari. If they had not properly inquired into the matter, they could be compelled to do so by mandamus. None of that was shown, so the application failed.

D Now we have another attempt to gain entry for a child into England or, at least, to prevent his removal from England. The attempt is by means of the machinery for making a child a ward of court. Under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 and R.S.C., Ord. 91, r. 1 and r. 2, as soon as application is made to make a child a ward of court, he becomes a ward of court on the making of the application. The child does not cease to be a ward of court unless the applicant fails within three weeks to apply for an appointment; but the court may at any time order that the child shall cease to be a ward of court. So the argument runs in this fashion. Each of the children became a ward of court as soon as the application was made to make him a ward of court, and he remains a ward of court unless and until an order is made that he shall cease to be a ward of court. Meanwhile, it is said, he cannot be removed from the jurisdiction without the leave of the court because no ward can be removed from the jurisdiction without leave.

G In answer to this argument, two points are taken. First, it is said that once a child has been ordered to be removed, there is no jurisdiction to make him a ward of court. I do not think it necessary to determine that point. I can well see that there may be exceptional cases where such a jurisdiction may be desirable. Second, it is said that at any rate, even if there is jurisdiction, it ought not to be exercised in cases like the present one. I think that this second submission is correct. It seems to me that in the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962, Parliament laid down a full and complete code to govern the entry or removal of immigrants from the Commonwealth and has entrusted the administration of it to the immigration officers. So much so that the courts ought not to interfere with their decisions save in the most exceptional circumstances. Take the case of the Pakistani boy. In order to gain a right of admission, he must satisfy an immigration officer "that he is a child under sixteen years of age of a Commonwealth citizen" (see s. 2 (2) (b) of the Act of 1962). It is the immigration officer who has to be satisfied, not the court. Then under Sch. 1 to the Act of 1962 it is an immigration officer who is to "examine" him as to the genuineness of his claim to enter. It is the immigration officer who can give the notice of refusal and who can afterwards cancel it, and so forth. The policy of the statute is to place immigration control in the hands of the immigration officers, trusting that they will exercise their powers fairly and, as I believe they do, humanely also. So long as they exercise it honestly and fairly, the courts cannot and should not interfere. They will not issue a writ of habeas corpus or certiorari so as to review the decisions of the immigration officers. Nor will they allow the wardship jurisdiction to be used for a like purpose. A

There is no suggestion in these cases that the immigration officers have acted unfairly. Quite the contrary. It is clear on the evidence that they acted honestly and fairly and investigated the claims as thoroughly as the circumstances permitted. All that is said is that the plaintiffs desire a further opportunity of proving the relationship of son to father. That indeed is the whole object of the proceedings—to enable the boy and the young man to remain in England pending further investigation. In the case of the Pakistani boy, counsel agreed that the immigration officers were the people entrusted with the jurisdiction to remove the child, but he desired an opportunity of proving to the court that this boy was the son of the man who is said to be his father. He asked that the removal order should not take effect whilst he tried to prove it. In the case of the Indian youth, counsel went further. He said that the statute did not oust the jurisdiction of the court. He submitted that the court could exercise a paramount or, at any rate, a concurrent jurisdiction so as to see that the young man was the son of his father. B C D

To these contentions I think that there is the short answer. The court will not exercise its jurisdiction so as to interfere with the statutory machinery set up by Parliament. The wardship process is not to be used so as to put a clog on the decisions of the immigration officers or as a means of reviewing them. These applications are misconceived. The courts should refuse to entertain them. They should be struck out under the inherent jurisdiction of the court. I would dismiss the appeals accordingly. E

RUSSELL, L.J.: When an infant becomes a ward of court, control over the person of the infant is vested in the judges of the Chancery Division of the High Court. It is for the judge to say by order from time to time where the ward is to reside and with whom, and disobedience to such an order is contempt of court by anyone who knowingly breaches or is party to a breach of that order. Moreover, even without any judge's order forbidding it, it is a contempt to remove a ward outside the jurisdiction of the High Court. F

It is, however, quite obvious that there are circumstances in which control over the person of a ward is not committed or referred to the judge but is by the law of England committed or referred to another agency or person. As a simple illustration, it could not be contended that the judge would have any jurisdiction to order that a criminal ward be transferred from place of detention A. to place of detention B., however much the medical evidence before the judge suggested that the ward would be in better health at place of detention B. The reason is that the jurisdiction of the judge over the person of the ward is necessarily restricted by the fact that the law has given that aspect of control over the ward's person exclusively to another agency. Similarly, the judge would have no right to complain of or countermand a lawful posting overseas of a ward who was in the armed forces. The law refers the military control of the ward to the military authorities. Similarly, any lawful deportation order affecting a ward must be outside the normal position which I have mentioned already, that a ward must not leave the jurisdiction without permission of the judge; indeed, it would override any existing express order of the judge in the wardship proceedings that the infant was not to depart from the jurisdiction. Those are examples of the proposition that the control of the High Court over the person of a ward is not by any means absolute. G H I

The first question in these two cases is whether the Commonwealth Immigrants

A Act, 1962, is another sphere in which such control is taken from the guardian judge and committed to another agency. I have no doubt whatever that it is. I think that the contrary is virtually unarguable, though in one of these appeals it was attempted. The wardship of the infants, in my judgment, has not, and could not in law have, any effect on the powers and duties of the immigration authorities so as to hamper them in any way in removing the infants from the jurisdiction under the Act of 1962. Those immigration authorities have in fact, whether through uncertainty about the legal position, or from courtesy towards the judiciary and judicial processes, not yet carried out the removal of either of those infants. They have postponed that removal and have detained the infants in the meanwhile. This was, I have no doubt, the very purpose of the wardship proceedings and of making the Home Secretary a party to those proceedings. It was intended thereby to deter the authorities from implementing their at present unassailable decision to remove the immigrant infants for long enough to give the alleged fathers time to procure decisions from some courts in England that they are indeed the fathers. I cannot for a moment accept that these wardship proceedings (as distinct from proceedings in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division to establish legitimate paternity) have any other purpose than to deter the immigration authorities from the present execution of their duty under the Act of 1962, the officer not being satisfied on the point of paternity.

I in no way impugn the genuine wish of the alleged fathers to establish by some means to the satisfaction of the relevant officials their paternity; but to take the step of wardship proceedings to that end, with the Home Secretary as E party, can in my judgment only be described as an abuse of the wardship process. It is in point of law a bluff which has worked so far, and a bluff is, I think, an abuse. Cross, J. in my view rightly so held.

I should add that in the second appeal a special point was argued, and, as I understand it, it was this: that because in the case of an infant over the age of sixteen, the immigration officer, not only requires to be satisfied of paternity, F but in addition has a discretion in the exercise of which he may or may not consider the welfare of the proposed immigrant, the implementation of his adverse decision must await the expression of the court's view on the welfare aspect in order that he, the immigration officer, may reconsider his discretion in the light of that expression of view. I cannot accede to that argument which, it seems to me, only amounts to a particular assertion that the statutory provisions for the control of immigration under the Act of 1962 are somehow qualified G in the case of a ward of court.

I am conscious that this decision is flat contrary to a submission made in another case by the then Solicitor-General to the European Commission for Human Rights (6); but I cannot help that.

H I have thus far assumed that the issue of the summons did in each case make the infant a ward of court. I prefer not to decide whether in the particular circumstances of these cases the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, and the Rules of the Supreme Court had or had not that effect. It is possible that it would be held to have that effect if, for example, two parents of the infant already in England were in dispute as to the infant's future in England I should the immigration officer decide to cancel the removal order or to cancel the refusal to permit entry. In such case it might be held that a summons issued before that cancellation would, so to speak, as between the parents of the child have effect from its date. I too would dismiss both appeals.

---

(6) See Mohamed Alam and Mohamed Khan v. United Kingdom, Application No. 2991/66, heard on July 13 and 14, 1967; cf. Vol. 24 of the Collection of Decisions of the European Commission for Human Rights.

CUMMING-BRUCE, J.: I agree.

Appeals dismissed (7). Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: P. Halberstam (for the plaintiff Hanif); Lawford & Co. (for the plaintiff Singh); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

TICKLE v. TICKLE.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Sir Jocelyn Simon, P. and Willmer, L.J.), December 12, 13, 1967.]

Evidence—Res gestae—Health—Belief of patient regarding his health—Whether evidence of what doctor told patient as to his state of health admissible.

Magistrates—Desertion—Intention—Medical advice that separation or temporary separation from wife required by husband's health—Intention on part of husband to make separation permanent.

Magistrates—Husband and wife—Appeal—Divisional Court—Procedure—Notice of appeal, not case stated—Matrimonial Proceedings (Magistrates' Courts) Act, 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. 2 c. 48), s. 11—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 73 (2).

An appeal under the Matrimonial Proceedings (Magistrates' Courts) Act, 1960, to the Divisional Court of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division ought to be by notice of motion, exhibiting the notes of evidence and the justices reasons, and not by way of Case Stated (see p. 157, letter G, and p. 162, letter F, post).

Evidence as to what a doctor says to a patient about his state of health is admissible as part of the res gestae where the matter savouring of a res is what the patient believes as to his state of health (see p. 158, letter E, and p. 162, letter F, post).

Aveson v. Lord Kinnaird ((1805), 6 East. 188) applied.

The parties were married in 1958, three children being born between 1959 and 1965. After the first year of marriage they got into financial trouble and the husband began to suffer in his nervous health, and was unable to maintain a consistent working record. In 1966, the husband went into a mental hospital as an in-patient. At first he intended, when he was discharged, to return to the wife; but towards the end of his period as an in-patient he was given certain advice by his doctor in consequence of which he told the wife that, on his discharge, he proposed to live permanently with his mother instead of returning home. The wife did not accept that suggestion. On his discharge, the husband went home and, again acting, it seems, in accordance with his doctor's advice suggested to the wife that he should go and live with his mother for a period of three months, taking the children with him, but the wife refused that proposal as well. The husband left for a short time, returning afterwards and telling the wife that he was going and in fact going to live with his mother. Thereafter he never provided any money for the support of the wife, although he obtained work and maintained himself in employment. On the hearing of a summons by the wife alleging that he had deserted her, the husband said in evidence that he would never go back to her. The husband's doctor said in the course of his evidence that, if the husband were to return to the wife, he would have to go back to hospital again, and that no end to that position could be seen.

(7) The young Indian, N.S., obtained admission to England; see The Guardian Apr. 13, 1968, p. 1.

A On appeal by the wife from a decision of the justices that there was justification for a temporary separation, owing to the medical advice to the husband, and that there was no intention on his part to bring co-habitation permanently to an end, and accordingly dismissing her summons,

Held: although the husband would have been justified, in view of the medical advice that he was given, in temporarily separating from the wife, yet on the evidence, particularly as he had taken no steps to maintain her, he had manifested an intention to bring co-habitation permanently to an end; and the husband, therefore, was in desertion, notwithstanding the medical evidence that if he were to return to the wife he would have to go back to hospital (see p. 159, letter I, to p. 160, letter A, p. 161, letter C, and p. 162, letter E, post).

C Lilley v. Lilley ([1959] 3 All E.R. 283) followed.
Appeal allowed.

[ Editorial Note. Rule 73 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, is excepted from the general revocation of those rules on Apr. 11, 1968, by the Matrimonial Causes Rules 1968 (S.I. 1968 No. 219), r. 123 (2). ]

As to appeals from magistrates' courts in summary matrimonial cases, see 12

D HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 508, 509, para. 1115.

As to evidence of mental and physical conditions, see 15 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 281, para. 510; and for cases on the subject, see 22 DIGEST (Repl.) 65, 66, 429-432.

As to illness causing separation amounting to desertion, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 262, 263, para. 499.

E For the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1960, s. 11, see 40 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 415.

For the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, r. 73, see 10 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS (Second Re-Issue) 273.]

Cases referred to:

F Aveson v. Lord Kinnaird, (1805), 6 East. 188; 102 E.R. 1258; 22 Digest (Repl.) 92, 707.

G. v. G., [1964] 1 All E.R. 129; [1964] P. 133; [1964] 2 W.L.R. 250; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 355, 3037c.

Lilley v. Lilley, [1959] 3 All E.R. 283; [1960] P. 158; [1959] 3 W.L.R. 306; 123 J.P. 525; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 667, 619ba.

Appeal.

G This was an appeal by way of Case Stated from a decision of the Warrington justices given on Mar. 14, 1967, dismissing a summons by the wife alleging that the husband had deserted her on Oct. 31, 1966. The appeal was out of time, but at a sitting of the court in July, 1967, time was extended for the appeal to be brought.

The facts are set out in the judgment of SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P.

H A. B. Ewbank and D. R. A. Sich for the wife.

J. A. Stannard for the husband.

SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P.: This is an appeal by the wife against the decision of the Warrington justices, dated Mar. 14, 1967. The justices on that day dismissed a summons which she had taken out alleging that the husband had deserted her on Oct. 31, 1966. The appeal was out of time, but at the sittings of this court in July, 1967, time was extended for the appeal to be brought.

I The story of this marriage is an unhappy one. The parties were married in February, 1958, and have three children born between the years 1959 and 1965. At the outset of the marriage for about twelve months (a little longer probably) the parties lived with the husband's parents, and, for reasons which will be apparent, things went reasonably well during that period. However, at the end of that period, the parties moved away to a place of their own—first of all lodgings, and then their own house. They got into financial trouble, and the husband began to suffer in his nervous health. I think that those two matters were almost certainly inter-connected. The justices were somewhat critical of the wife for her lack of sympathy with the husband in his impairment of health. On the other hand, it seems to me that she must have had a very difficult and frustrating time herself, particularly since the husband, owing to his impaired state of health, was unable—even discounting a certain amount of what the wife said as exaggeration—to maintain a consistent working record. The husband finally went into a mental hospital as an in-patient at Easter, 1966. At first he intended, when he was discharged, to return to the wife; but towards the end of his period as an in-patient he was given certain advice. In consequence of that advice, he told the wife that, on his discharge, he proposed to live with his mother instead of returning home. I think that almost certainly the initial suggestion made by the husband was that he should live permanently with his mother and also that he should take the children there, the wife returning to her mother. Not surprisingly, the wife did not accept that suggestion. On a day which is not clear—or not consistent, anyhow, in the evidence—but which, I think, was almost certainly Oct. 31, 1966, the husband was discharged from hospital. He went home, and then suggested to the wife that he should go and live with his mother for a period of three months, taking the children with him. The wife refused that modification of the original proposal as well. The husband left for a short time, returning afterwards and saying: “I am going. I have had enough.” The wife asked him where he was going, and he said: “I am going back to hospital.” However, he did not go back to hospital. He went to live with his mother, in what was clearly a more propitious environment for him. He managed to get work and maintain employment. He sent money for the support of his children, but no money for the support of his wife.

In those circumstances, on Dec. 7, 1966, the wife issued her summons making the complaint of desertion from Oct. 31, 1966. That came on for hearing before the justices on Mar. 14, 1967. At that date, the husband was still living with his mother and was still supporting the children, but giving no support to his wife. The justices, as I have said, dismissed the wife’s complaint, though they made an order for the maintenance of the children. At the hearing in March, 1967, the husband and wife both gave evidence, making allegations against each other. However, the justices found that the evidence on neither side established such grave and weighty matter as would entitle them to live apart—or, to put it another way, to constitute constructive desertion on the part of either spouse. It has not been contended before us that that decision can be questioned. It was essentially a matter for the assessment of the justices who had these parties before them, and, in my view, can clearly be supported on the notes of evidence.

The husband called the consultant psychiatrist from the mental hospital where he had been a patient between Easter and October, 1966. That was a Dr. Fleming; and his evidence seems to me to be crucial in this case. He had first seen the husband in 1961, when he was referred to Dr. Fleming by his general medical practitioner; and Dr. Fleming saw him on a number of occasions between then and 1964, in addition to having him under his care at the hospital in 1966. He described the husband as follows:

“He was suffering from personality inadequacy and depression which I regarded as reactive to the circumstances in which he was living with his wife. There was a basic personality defect which had been there from very early childhood and which is constitutional; in other words, an inborn tendency to react in this inadequate way.”

When he said “react in this inadequate way”, he meant, as I understand it, an inability to cope adequately with a situation which a normal person could handle reasonably well. The doctor said that he gave the husband advice that there were three courses open to him, as there was no doubt that living with his wife would only serve to aggravate his condition; and in no circumstances—the

A note says "would", but it probably means "should"—he return and live there. "I had to advise the patient to seek another solution"—and then unfortunately at this critical point the note is corrupt, but I think that the doctor obviously meant that to go back to the wife would cause another breakdown, because he went on to say: "A recurrence of this situation would result in him requiring further hospital treatment." As I read Dr. Fleming's evidence, it seems to me that what he was putting forward as the first alternative, and probably the preferable one considering the interests of his patient, was that there should be a permanent separation between husband and wife; but, finding that that was unacceptable to the wife, he put forward a second alternative, namely, that there should be a temporary separation of some three months, during which the husband should live with his mother. There was a third course which was evidently in Dr. Fleming's mind; but he never said what that was, because at this stage of his evidence there was an objection by the advocate for the wife that the evidence was inadmissible, presumably under the hearsay rule, since the doctor was saying what advice he gave to the husband. The evidence was, therefore, left in the form that I have stated. The final questions asked of the doctor in examination-in-chief were these:

D "Q.—In your opinion, if he were to return to the wife, what would be the result? A.—In my opinion, if he were to return to his wife I am quite sure he would have to go back to hospital. Q.—How long will you anticipate this situation on medical grounds should prevail? A.—I cannot see any end to it."

The conclusion of the justices was stated in this way:

E "In these particular circumstances there is justification for a temporary separation. The [husband] is acting on the advice of his doctor, and we accept that the health of the [husband] demands a state of separation from the [wife], although at this stage the duration is uncertain. We did not find that there was any intention on the part of the [husband] to bring the cohabitation permanently to an end, and considered that if and when his mental health is satisfactorily improved he will then be able to return to the [wife]."

Before I come to the merits of this appeal and the substantial questions of law and fact which arise, there are two preliminary matters that I wish to deal with. The first is this: the appeal is brought by way of Case Stated. That is clearly not a method of appeal which in this jurisdiction is justified by the rules. The appeal ought to be by notice of motion, exhibiting the notes of evidence and the justices' reasons. In fact, we have the notes of evidence; and we have what is in substance the justices' reasons, though couched in the form of a Case Stated. The husband relies on the justices' reasons; and his contentions are not contained or set out in the Case Stated, and he has not required his contentions to be formally stated in that way. The result is that we have before us all the material necessary for a decision, and it has been agreed that we should act on such material in order to save further delay and expense, which would be caused by an adjournment in order for the appeal to be properly constituted. However, I must not be taken as approving an appeal brought in this way, which has a number of inconveniences. It is true that we do on occasions entertain an appeal by Case Stated; but that is when the point arises under the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, and not under the Matrimonial Proceedings (Magistrates' Courts) Act, 1960.

I The second preliminary matter is this. As I said, an objection was taken to Dr. Fleming's evidence. The question that was posed before the justices was: did the husband have good cause for separation? Clearly, the advice that was given to him by his doctor might in circumstances such as these be of crucial significance. It is true that a doctor can be, as this doctor was, called to say what his prognosis was if the husband resumed cohabitation with the wife. But the opinion that the doctor formed is one thing, as it seems to me; what he communicated to his patient might be quite another, and it is the state of the patient's mind and not the state of the doctor's which is in question. If, therefore, the law said that this evidence must be excluded, it would be running the risk of bringing about a miscarriage of justice; but I do not think that the law demands any such thing. A

In Aveson v. Lord Kinnaird (1), the court was concerned with an action on a policy of insurance which was effected by a husband on his wife's life. The defendants, the insurers, pleaded that, although the wife had been warranted to be in good health, she was not in fact at the time of the insurance, which was very shortly before her death, in good health, and that, therefore, they were not liable to pay on the policy. The husband, the plaintiff, called a surgeon who had examined the wife shortly before the policy was taken out. The defendants then called a woman, Susannah Lees, to say that, very shortly afterwards, the wife had said that she was in very impaired health and, indeed, had been so on the very day that she had been examined by the surgeon. Objection was taken to such evidence as hearsay. The trial judge, however, admitted it, and the question was whether it was rightly or improperly admitted. The court, consisting of LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., GROSE and LAWRENCE, JJ., held that it was rightly admitted as part of the res gestae—the res, as I understand it, being the wife's state of health. It was pointed out that the surgeon's own opinion must have been based on information that was given to him by the wife, and that what she said to Susannah Lees was no more hearsay than what she said to the surgeon. If what a patient says about her state of health to a doctor is admissible as part of the res gestae notwithstanding the hearsay rule, it seems to me that what the doctor says to the patient is no less admissible when its adduction is required in order that justice should be done. In my view, therefore, the res here being the husband's state of health—or perhaps, to put it more accurately, the matter savouring of a res (to adapt words used by LORD DUNEDIN) being what the husband believed as to his state of health—what the doctor told him was admissible as part of the res gestae. B C D E

With those preliminary observations, I turn to the main question in dispute here. If the finding of the justices that there was no intention on the part of the husband to bring cohabitation permanently to an end can be sustained, that, in my view, is the end of this appeal for two reasons: first, because in order for there to be desertion there must be an intention to bring cohabitation permanently, and not merely temporarily, to an end; and, secondly, because on the advice of the doctor and the opinion of the doctor communicated to the husband, a temporary separation was certainly, if not called for, at least justifiable. When there is a finding of fact of that sort by justices, we in this court will normally respect it. The reason for that is partly that we are in the same position as any appellate court compared to a court of trial, namely, that we do not have the witnesses before us, and findings of fact will, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, depend on an assessment of the evidence of the witnesses, which can only be arrived at by the court which sees and hears the witnesses. There is, however, a second reason, and that is this: normally we in this court do not enjoy the advantage which the Court of Appeal has on appeal from the High Court in having a transcript of evidence by way of question and answer. We normally have only the clerk's note of evidence. Even when it is copious, it does not necessarily include all the matters that the justices themselves consider of significance but only those matters which the notetaker considers of significance. In the present case, however, we do have a transcript of question and answer; and we were told that it was transcribed from a tape. Moreover, I do not think that the crucial finding of the justices, "We did not find that there was any intention on the part of the [husband] to bring the cohabitation permanently to an end", was a finding which depended on assessment of differential veracity of witnesses giving oral evidence. F G H I

What the husband said in evidence was this. I will read the whole passage. It

A was being put to him that he ignored the children in the street, although he was not living very far away, and he said:

“I have not. If I could see those children it would do me right down to the ground. Q.—You’re not even treating your wife as well as you would treat an ordinary lady in Densham Avenue now are you? A.—If I could see the children once a week it would be quite sufficient for me. Q.—I’m talking about your wife, Mr. Tickle. A.—Personally I would never go back on any consideration to her.”

That piece of evidence, as it seems to me, directly contradicts the finding of the justices that I have just read. It means that, on the face of it, the finding of the justices—the crucial finding as it seems to me—is not only not supported by the evidence but is contradicted by it. It is true that that answer may have been a slip by the husband; and it was ably argued by counsel for the husband that the justices could well have had that answer in mind and yet have come to the conclusion that they did. I cannot agree. It seems to me that, if the justices did have that answer in mind, they could not properly have framed their finding in the way that they did. I would have expected them to say: “It is true that the husband said that he would never go back to his wife, but we do not think that this represents his true intention.” However, they do not say that; and I can only assume that that piece of evidence escaped their notice.

If that stood alone, I might feel that it would be unsafe to act on it, but it does not stand alone. I was impressed by the point made by counsel for the wife in reply that it stands together with the evidence that the husband, although able to hold down a quite well-paid job while living with his mother, left his wife without any support. (Incidentally, it seems to me that, on the facts established so far, the wife would have had an unanswerable case on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain. However, she framed her case in desertion.) But, if this had been a temporary separation, I would have expected the husband to support his wife until his state of health was sufficiently robust for him to return to cohabitation with her; and that he failed to do so seems to me to be consistent with his meaning what he said when he said that he would never on any consideration go back to his wife. The situation, therefore, seems to me to be this: the husband would have been justified, on the advice which he was given, in a temporary separation from his wife. If he takes advantage of a temporary separation to manifest an intention never to resume cohabitation at all, he is guilty of desertion: see Lilley v. Lilley (2); G. v. G. (3).

Counsel for the husband, however, put his argument in another way. He said that, even if the husband did manifest an intention to live apart permanently from the wife, he was justified in doing so in view of the medical advice which he had received and in view of Dr. Fleming’s evidence that he, Dr. Fleming, could not see any end to the situation. The first thing to be said about that is that Dr. Fleming’s evidence does not seem to me to differ materially from that given by the consultant in Lilley v. Lilley (2), where, nevertheless, the Court of Appeal held that desertion was proved. Secondly, although Dr. Fleming did initially apparently, as I read his evidence, advise that there should be a permanent separation, he in the end resiled from that in the face of the wife’s objection and advised only a temporary separation. I do not propose to investigate what would be the situation if it is indeed proved that the state of a spouse’s health does demand a permanent separation. There are some dicta in G. v. G. (3) which bear on the matter; but, in my view, it does not arise for necessary decision in this case.

I base my decision in this appeal on the matters which I have already referred to, namely, that the husband had been advised that there should be a temporary separation, albeit that the situation at the end of that period could not be precisely envisaged, and that he took advantage of such temporary separation to manifest an intention to disrupt cohabitation permanently. In my judgment, if that is right, the wife proved her case of desertion and I would allow the appeal. A

(2) [1959] 3 All E.R. 283; [1960] P. 158.

(3) [1964] 1 All E.R. 129; [1964] P. 133.

WILLMER, L.J.: I have found this an obstinately difficult case, and it is only with some doubt and after a good deal of hesitation that I have been able to make up my mind as to what course we ought to take.

I think that the starting point must be the finding of the justices which appears in the Case Stated to the effect that, so far as the matrimonial relationship between the parties was concerned, the departure of the husband would amount to desertion. That means that, apart from the question of health, the justices were saying that the husband was no doubt in desertion. The question is whether the husband can justify his departure from the wife on the basis that this was forced on him for reasons concerning his health. The justices came to the conclusion that the mental ill-health of the husband amounted to what they described as a "super-vening cause", such as was envisaged by this court in G. v. G. (4), to which SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P., has referred. The effect of that, they thought, was that there was justification for a temporary separation on the part of the husband, and it was that which, as my lord has pointed out, they found. In Lilley v. Lilley (5) also, the Court of Appeal envisaged the possibility of ill-health on the part of one of the spouses justifying a temporary separation; but in that particular case they decided on the facts that the wife was in desertion because her expressed intention went far beyond a mere temporary separation. B C D

In the present case the justices, having said that there was justification for a temporary separation, went on to find that the husband did not have any intention to bring cohabitation permanently to an end. In other words, they were treating this case as one of a temporary separation. The crux of the case to my mind is whether that finding by the justices can be justified on the evidence which was before them. In this case, somewhat unusually, we are in the fortunate position of having a full transcript of the evidence that was given, so that we can see for ourselves what the husband actually said. On behalf of the wife reliance is, of course, placed on the answer which the husband gave, and which SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P., has read from the notes of evidence, in which he said: "Personally I would never go back on any consideration to her." It may, I think, be fairly remarked that that answer was in no way suggested to him by the question that was asked. It seems to have been quite gratuitously volunteered. It is said, however, on his behalf that that single answer should not necessarily be taken at its face value. It is said that we ought to have regard to the context in which the answer was given. It follows on very shortly after the husband's reference to what had been said by the wife, for a little earlier on the same page of the transcript he had said: "She's just stated that she would never have me back." In point of fact, the wife had said no such thing in evidence. It is to be presumed that what the husband was there referring to was what we are told happened at the outset of the hearing, when the justices enquired as to the possibilities of a reconciliation, and on that enquiry the wife is alleged to have said that she did not want the husband back. I pause there to remark that, if the husband was in desertion, that statement by the wife would go no distance towards terminating it; for I take it as well-established that a deserted spouse is under no duty to invite the deserter to come back. It is only when the deserting spouse makes some bona fide effort at a reconciliation that the state of mind of the deserted spouse becomes relevant. All the same, if that was in truth the attitude of the wife, it may be said that that helps to explain the husband's answer which he gave, namely, that he would never go back to his wife. I am bound to say that I see much force in the contention put forward on behalf of the husband that the justices, who after all had the advantage of seeing the husband and hearing him give his answer, may well have had good reasons for not taking that answer E F G H I

(4) [1964] 1 All E.R. 129; [1964] P. 133.

(5) [1959] 3 All E.R. 283; [1960] P. 158.

A at its face value, and for declining to find that there was any intention on his part to bring cohabitation permanently to an end.

Lilley v. Lilley (6), to which reference has been made, was a case in which the facts were a good deal stronger than those in the present case. It was a case which in fact resulted in a finding of desertion against the wife; but in that case the wife had not only expressed in court, in no uncertain terms, a fixed intention never to
B return to the husband, but had also written letters in which she expressed the same intention. In the present case the only direct evidence is the single answer given by the husband to which I have referred. It might be thought that that, standing by itself and given in the context to which I have referred, was an insufficient ground on which to upset the justices' finding that there was no intention on the part of the husband to separate himself permanently from the
C wife. In the end, however, I have come to the conclusion that the decisive factor is the point made by counsel for the wife in the course of his reply, when he drew attention to the fact that throughout the whole of the separation up to the date of the hearing the husband had never made any attempt to provide any maintenance for his wife. He argued—and argued I think with compelling force—that a husband who intended that his separation from his wife should only be temporary
D would surely have taken steps to maintain her during the temporary separation. That consideration to my mind tips the balance, and, on the whole, I have come to the conclusion that that, taken in conjunction with the evidence which the husband gave, admits of only one possible conclusion, namely, that the husband had arrived at a fixed determination permanently to bring cohabitation to an end. In those circumstances it seems to me that the finding of the justices that there
E was no such permanent intention is one that cannot be supported on the evidence which was actually given.

That, however, does not dispose of the case; for counsel for the husband urged that, even if the husband had arrived at such a fixed intention, that is to say, even if he did intend the separation to be permanent, that would not in all the circumstances of this case amount to desertion having regard to the medical F evidence. SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P., has already read the two vital answers given by Dr. Fleming at the conclusion of his evidence-in-chief, the effect of which was that, in his view, if the husband were to return to the wife, he would have to go back to hospital again, and also that he (the doctor) could not see any end to it. It is, I think, of no little significance that, on that particular aspect of the case, Dr. Fleming was not asked any question in cross-examination. Some support for
G the submission put forward on behalf of the husband is, I think, to be found in certain observations made by SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P., in G. v. G. (7), where he said:

“ Similarly, it seems to me that if the health of one spouse demands a state of isolation or separation, the law would be flying in the face of good sense if it were not to recognise that as affording justification for the spouses living
H separately. Again, if one spouse is suffering from a contagious disease of a serious nature, I can see no reason in principle why that might not justify the other spouse in living apart, so as to provide a defence to a charge of wilful separation without cause; and if the contagion is incurable that might afford justification for the other spouse to say that he or she will live apart
I permanently, so as to provide a defence to a charge of desertion. I cannot think that where cohabitation would be dangerous to the health of a respondent, he or she is not entitled to live separate and apart, even though that danger may arise from the misfortune rather than the fault of the complainant.”

Those observations of SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P., were not in the event necessary for the decision of the case; for, as he pointed out (8) later in the judgment, he could not find anywhere in the evidence in the case that the wife had declared, unequivocally and for all time, that she would not live with her husband again. In other words, the case actually concerned a mere temporary separation. Not unnaturally, however, I treat those observations with the greatest possible respect. On reflection, however, I have come to the conclusion that it is not possible to accede to this alternative argument put forward on behalf of the husband without flying in the face of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Lilley v. Lilley (9). In that case it was found on the medical evidence that a resumption of cohabitation would endanger the wife's health. Notwithstanding that, the Court of Appeal decided that, when she expressed her fixed intention never to return to her husband, she was to be regarded as in a state of desertion. This, I think, appears from what was said by HODSON, L.J. Having referred to the fact that what the wife said went far beyond saying, "I cannot return to you at present", but amounted to saying, "I never will", HODSON, L.J., went on (10):

(6) [1959] 3 All E.R. 283; [1960] P. 158.

(7) [1964] 1 All E.R. at p. 131; [1964] P. at p. 135.

"She has made a deliberate choice for all time, and she cannot properly complain of the natural consequences of her act. This is no doubt a strong case, for the neurosis of the wife is severe and may be incurable. It may appear hard, therefore, that she should be guilty of desertion if she expresses herself as unwilling ever to return to her husband, but we think that the conclusion that she is in desertion is inevitable on the evidence as it stands at present."

Doing my best loyally to follow that guidance from the Court of Appeal, I can only say that, in my judgment, the alternative argument put forward on behalf of the husband cannot, in the circumstances of this case, prevail. In the result, therefore, I have come to the same conclusion as SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P., viz., that this appeal should be allowed and an order made in favour of the wife on the ground of desertion.

I would like to add, however, two further observations. First, I have dealt only with what I regard as the essential point in the case. I have not referred to the other matters mentioned by SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P., namely, the procedural question as to the propriety of proceeding by way of Case Stated, and the question of admissibility of the evidence given by the doctor. So far as those two points are concerned, I desire to say no more than that I wholly concur with what has fallen from SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P. Secondly, I would repeat what LORD MERRIMAN, P., was never tired of saying in cases of this character, namely, to remind the parties that desertion need never be permanent; for it is always open to the husband in this case, as to any other deserting spouse, to terminate his desertion at any time by making a proper approach to the wife with a view to a resumption of cohabitation.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Cunliffe & Mossman, agents for Colin R. Watson & Co., Warrington (for the wife); Forshaw, Richmond & Co., Warrington (for the husband).

[Reported by ALICE BLOOMFIELD, Barrister-at-Law.]

(8) [1964] 1 All E.R. at p. 136; [1964] P. at p. 143.

(9) [1959] 3 All E.R. 283; [1960] P. 158.

(10) [1959] 3 All E.R. at p. 291; [1960] P. at p. 183.

A

DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD.
v. GARDNER AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning, M.R., Davies and Russell, L.JJ.), March 20, 21, 1968.]

B

Tort—Inducement to commit breach of contract—Indirect inducement—Recommendation of federation of newsagents, a trade association of retailers, to members to stop sale of newspaper—Federation seeking to induce breach of contract between wholesalers and newspaper proprietors—Ignorance of terms of contracts between proprietors and wholesalers no defence where act done without caring whether breach of contract caused—Interlocutory injunction granted.

C

Tort—Interference with contractual relations—Unlawful means—Recommendation by trade association to members to stop orders of newspaper—Recommendation deemed a restriction presumed contrary to public policy—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2 c. 68), s. 6 (7), s. 21 (1).

On Mar. 7, 1968, the first and second defendants, who were the president and the general secretary of the National Federation of Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers, sent a letter to all members of the federation saying that nothing less than the complete boycott of the plaintiffs' newspaper, the Daily Mirror, for one week would be effective: viz., effective to meet a request made by the plaintiffs to wholesalers to accept a small reduction in their margins on the price of the newspaper being increased on account of increased costs, of the rise in the cost of newsprint and of devaluation. With their letter were sent "stop-notices", which were to be sent by retailers, members of the federation, to their wholesalers. These instructed the wholesalers to discontinue the retailers' supplies of the newspaper from Monday, Mar. 18, to Saturday, Mar. 23, inclusive; and asked for the supply of the newspaper to be restored on Mar. 25. Posters were also sent with the letter reading "Trade Dispute. No Daily Mirror". The federation objected to the proposed reduction in the wholesalers' margin as likely to lead to a reduction in retailers' margins on sale to the public of the newspaper through the retailers. The plaintiffs' method of sale was to sell the newspaper to wholesalers, of whom there were about one thousand, and who in turn sold it to retailers for resale to the public. There were not, in general, written contracts between the plaintiffs and the wholesalers. The plaintiffs, having learnt of the letter, delayed issuing a writ while they published an explanation in the newspaper. A letter in reply on behalf of the federation was also published. On Mar. 15 an ex parte injunction was obtained restraining the defendants, who were the president, the general secretary and nine committee members of the federation, from doing anything further in the proposed boycott. On appeal the Court of Appeal took the view that there were running contracts between the plaintiffs and the wholesalers which were determinable on reasonable notice, which might be a matter of weeks and not days, and that a wholesaler had no right to stop the order of the newspaper for one week and then start the order again.

D

E

F

G

H

Held: (i) the plaintiffs having shown prima facie an actionable wrong by the defendants, as set out in paras. (ii) and (iii) below, the court should exercise its discretion to grant an interlocutory injunction, as the balance of convenience was greatly in favour of preserving the present position (see p. 169, letter F, p. 170, letter G, and p. 172, letter A, post).

I

(ii) the plaintiffs had established a prima facie case of inducement by the defendants without lawful justification of breaches of contract by the wholesalers with the plaintiffs, for the following reasons—

(a) on the facts the defendants had sought to induce the wholesalers to reduce greatly their orders for the newspaper on only a day or two's notice (see p. 167, letter I, p. 169, letter G, and p. 170, letter H, post), and

(b) it was no defence either that the defendants did not know the terms of the plaintiffs' contract with the wholesalers, because the defendants acted without caring whether they caused a breach of contract or not, and

(c) it was no defence that the defendants did not exert pressure directly on the wholesalers but only indirectly through the retailers (see p. 168, letters A, D and G, and p. 170, letters E and H, post).

Emerald Construction Co., Ltd. v. Lowthian ([1966] 1 All E.R. 1013) applied.

(iii) there was a prima facie case of interference by the defendants by unlawful means with contractual relations between the wholesalers and the plaintiffs, because the recommendation to the members of the federation to stop ordering the newspaper constituted unlawful means in that, prima facie, the recommendation was equivalent to a restriction deemed contrary to the public interest by virtue of s. 21 (1)* and s. 6 (7) of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (see p. 169, letter D, p. 170, letter F, and p. 171, letter I, post).

Re National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers' Agreement ([1965] 2 All E.R. 417) considered.

Appeal dismissed.

[As to the tort of inducement to commit a breach of contract, see 37 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 124, para. 216, and as to conspiracy to interfere with contractual relations, see ibid., 129, 130, para. 223; and for cases on the subject, see 45 DIGEST (Repl.) 303-310, 194-228.]

As to the presumption of restrictive trading agreements being contrary to the public interest and as to grounds justifying restrictions, see 38 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 113, 114, para. 149; 115-117, para. 151.

For the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, s. 6, s. 21, see 36 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 937, 954.]

Cases referred to:

Emerald Construction Co., Ltd. v. Lowthian, [1966] 1 All E.R. 1013; [1966] 1 W.L.R. 691; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 719, 1396a.

Lumley v. Gye, [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 208; (1853), 2 E. & B. 216; 22 L.J.Q.B. 463; 118 E.R. 749; 45 Digest (Repl.) 304, 198.

National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers' Agreement, Re, [1965] 2 All E.R. 417; L.R. 5 R.P. 236; [1965] 1 W.L.R. 826; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 711, 211b.

Quinn v. Leatham, [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1901] A.C. 495; 70 L.J.P.C. 76; 85 L.T. 289; 65 J.P. 708; 45 Digest (Repl.) 560, 1373.

Stratford (J. T.) & Son, Ltd. v. Lindley, [1964] 3 All E.R. 102; [1965] A.C. 269; [1964] 3 W.L.R. 541; 45 Digest (Repl.) 563, 1389.

Thompson (D. C.) & Co., Ltd. v. Deakin, [1952] 2 All E.R. 361; [1952] Ch. 646; 45 Digest (Repl.) 561, 1379.

Interlocutory Appeal.

The plaintiffs were a wholly-owned subsidiary of International Publishing Corporation, Ltd., and were the proprietors of the Daily Mirror. The general course of business, subject to small exceptions, was that the plaintiffs sold the newspaper to wholesalers, who numbered about one thousand. The wholesalers sold it to retailers, who in turn sold it to the public. The plaintiffs were not in contractual relation with the retailers. On Mar. 7, 1968, the first and second defendants, who were the president and the general secretary of the National Federation of Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers, sent to all members of the federation a letter suggesting a boycott of the Daily Mirror for a complete week from Mar. 18 to Mar. 23, 1968, inclusive, as stated at p. 165, letter I, to p. 166, letter C, post. The plaintiffs were advised that the federation was a trade association within s. 6 (8) of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956. The federation was a * Section 21 (1), so far as material, is set out at p. 171, letter B, post.

A registered trade union. It was deposed on behalf of the defendants, among many other matters, that all that the boycott sought to achieve was to protect the members of the federation from action which must harm their legitimate interests. By writ issued on Mar. 12, 1968, the plaintiffs sued the defendants, viz., the first and second defendants, and nine other defendants, committee members of the federation, for injunctions, damages for conspiracy and other relief arising out of the contemplated boycott of the Daily Mirror by members of the federation.

By order, made by COOKE, J., dated Mar. 15, 1968, it was ordered that the defendants by themselves, their agents or servants or otherwise, be restrained whether directly or indirectly from (a) doing any further act to procure compliance with the instructions or recommendations made by them and each of them to the members of the federation to boycott the Daily Mirror newspaper for one complete week from Mar. 15, 1968 (which instructions or recommendations were contained in a letter dated Mar. 7, 1968, headed "Official Document No. 5015"); (b) causing or permitting any other instructions or recommendations to be given or implemented for similar or like effect. The injunction was obtained ex parte and was to last until after the hearing of a summons returnable on Mar. 18, 1968. By order of PHILLIMORE, J., dated Mar. 19, 1968, it was ordered that the injunction granted on Mar. 15, 1968, be continued until the trial of the action or further order; and that the defendants should forthwith cause an official letter to be written and sent to all members of the federation instructing them that the instructions and recommendations contained in Official Document No. 5015 were withdrawn and revoked, and recommending the members to resume forthwith normal trading in the Daily Mirror newspaper. The mandatory injunction was stayed for twenty-four hours, and leave was given to appeal to the Court of Appeal.

A. L. Figgis for the defendants.

C. L. Hawser, Q.C., and L. Swift for the plaintiffs.

LORD DENNING, M.R.: The Daily Mirror, of which the plaintiffs are proprietors, has a circulation of five million copies a day. It sells to wholesalers who number about one thousand. The wholesalers sell to retailers who number many thousands. Before Jan. 31, 1968, the price of sale to the public was 4d. Out of that sum the average margin for the wholesaler was thirty-five per cent., of which he retained seven per cent. and the retailer took twenty-eight per cent.

On Jan. 31, 1968, the price of the Daily Mirror was increased from 4d. to 5d. The reason was because the cost of newsprint had gone up in 1967. Then in 1968 there was a further big increase as a result of devaluation. The cost of newsprint was to go up by £7 a ton as from Mar. 18, 1968. If the margins had remained at the same percentages as before, this would have meant a considerable increase for the wholesalers and retailers. Thirty-five per cent. of 5d. is much more than thirty-five per cent. of 4d. So the Daily Mirror asked the wholesalers to take one per cent. less, that is, to take thirty-four per cent. This meant that the wholesalers would, in turn, expect the retailers also to take a somewhat lesser margin than twenty-eight per cent., say twenty-seven per cent. or 27½ per cent., instead of twenty-eight per cent.

The National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers thought that this was just another case of "nibbling away of margins". They took strong objection to it. After long consideration, they decided to boycott the Daily Mirror for a period of one week, commencing Mar. 18, 1968. These were the steps they took. On Thursday, Mar. 7, 1968, the president and the general secretary, Mr. Gardner and Mr. Holt, the first and second defendants, wrote round to all their members, saying:

"We have . . . arrived at the conclusion that nothing less than a complete and utter boycott of the Daily Mirror for one complete week—as an initial step—will be effective."

They enclosed "stop notices" for their members to send to the wholesalers. These said:

" Please discontinue my supplies of Daily Mirror from Monday, Mar. 18, to Saturday, Mar. 23, both dates inclusive. Please resume my supply of Daily Mirror on Monday, Mar. 25."

They said in the letter:

" If your wholesaler should send you supplies of Daily Mirror in spite of your stop notice, you cannot be made to pay for them."

They also enclosed posters to be prominently displayed for customers to read, saying: " Trade Dispute. No Daily Mirror." The object of the letter was clear. The retailers, who were members of the federation, were to tell their wholesalers: " We will have no Daily Mirrors for the week commencing Mar. 18." Then the wholesalers could be expected to tell the Daily Mirror: " We don't want our usual quantity of Daily Mirrors for the week but a great many less."

When the plaintiffs got to know of that letter, they thought of issuing a writ and asking for an injunction at once; but they delayed for a few days. The reason was because they wanted to put their case before their readers: and they could not do so if a writ were issued, because it might be a contempt of court. They hoped, too, that there might be negotiations for a settlement. So on Mar. 13, in their issue of that day, they put their case. It explains it so simply that I will read it. They set out the increases in the cost of newsprint and went on to discuss the margins:

" What do these figures mean to the profit of the individual retail newsagent? When the Daily Mirror cost 4d. his profit on every one hundred copies he sold was 9s. 4d. When the Daily Mirror went up to 5d. his profit on every one hundred copies became 11s. 8d. Now that the Daily Mirror has reduced its terms to wholesalers, W. H. Smith and John Menzies are in fact apportioning the one per cent. reduction in discount between themselves and the retailers in such a way that the newsagent's profit on every one hundred copies will now be 11s. 4½d. Other wholesalers are likely to take similar action. The newsagent will, therefore, be better off by 2s. 0½d. on every one hundred copies he sells, an improvement in profit of over twenty per cent."

In answer to that case, the National Federation of Retail Newsagents wrote a letter to the plaintiffs which they published the next day, Thursday, Mar. 14, 1968. The federation pointed out that there had been no increase for them for over four years; that, when the price of the paper was increased, the sales were reduced: and that there was no reason why they should forfeit part of their earnings. They also pointed out that they had to bear the burden of selective employment tax, which the plaintiffs, as manufacturers, had not to do. Each side had, therefore, good commercial reasons for the stand it took; but that is not a matter for us to consider. We have only to consider whether the federation have acted lawfully or not.

Seeing that no settlement was reached, on Friday, Mar. 15, 1968, counsel for the plaintiffs went to COOKE, J., the judge in chambers and obtained from him, an ex parte injunction against the defendants, the chairman and general secretary and committee members of the federation. This injunction restrained them from doing anything further in the boycott. Then on Monday, Mar. 18, 1968, the matter was renewed before PHILLIMORE, J. He heard both sides, and, on Tuesday afternoon, with considerable hesitation, he continued the injunction and made a mandatory order on the defendants to send out letters to call off the boycott. They appeal to this court, and, as it was urgent, we interposed the case and have heard it yesterday and today.

The plaintiffs put their case in law in two ways. First, they say that the defendants are seeking to induce the wholesalers to break their contracts with the plaintiffs. Secondly, they say that the defendants are using unlawful means to injure the trade of the plaintiffs, namely, by means of a stop order, which is

A contrary to public interest laid down in the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956.

The first point (on inducing breach of contract) is based on the principle stated by LORD MACNAGHTEN in Quinn v. Leatham (1), following Lumley v. Gye (2):

“... it is a violation of right to interfere with contractual relations recognised by law, if there be no sufficient justification for the interference.”

B The contractual relations which are here said to be interfered with are the contractual relations between the plaintiffs and wholesalers. So we have to see what those relations are. There is no written contract between them. Their contractual relations are to be derived from the course of dealing over the years. Mr. Atkins, a director of the plaintiffs, has made an affidavit, in which he states:

C “The plaintiffs have running contracts with their wholesalers under which they supply the Daily Mirror to their wholesalers on the basis of standing orders for a specified number of copies. A wholesaler can alter the number if he so desires but in the absence of any such specific instructions or alterations, that number is delivered automatically and the wholesaler becomes liable to pay for it.”

D In a later affidavit he states that the plaintiffs accept returns in special circumstances, but apart from such special circumstances

“the plaintiffs have to my knowledge always regarded the contractual relationships with their wholesalers as subject to termination on reasonable notice and on the rare occasions when it has been necessary to terminate the contractual relationship with a wholesaler, notice has always been given, the length of which has varied according to the circumstances but has certainly never been less than one week.”

It is on such meagre evidence that we have to find the terms of the contract between the plaintiffs and the wholesalers. So far as I can see, it is a running contract which is not determinable at will. It can only be determined on reasonable notice. The plaintiffs could not say to a wholesaler: “we are not going to supply you with any papers after today.” They would have to give reasonable notice, which might run into weeks, not days. Conversely, the wholesaler could not say to the plaintiffs: “I will not take any copies of your newspaper after today.” He, too, would have to give a notice of weeks, not of days. There might be room for a margin, whereby either side might, on short notice, vary the order, say ten per cent. up or down; but neither could cancel the order altogether, or greatly reduce it, without reasonable notice. Nor could either side suspend supplies for a week and still keep the contract alive. The wholesaler has no right to say to the plaintiffs: “I am stopping the order for one week but you are to start again after the week has passed.” It is rather like the case of a working man who has a contract to serve determinable at a week’s notice. He cannot say: “I am going to stay away one day”, just to please himself. If he does stay away for a day, he is guilty of a breach of contract. So prima facie it is a breach of contract for a wholesaler to say to the plaintiff: “I am going to stop taking any of your papers for a week—or greatly reduce the order—and then start again.”

H On the material before us it seems that the defendants sought to induce the wholesalers to do just that very thing—to greatly reduce their order for a week—
I on a day or two’s notice only. The reduction would seem to be at least sixty per cent. and might be more. Such conduct raises a prima facie case that the defendants were seeking to induce the wholesalers to break their contracts with the plaintiffs.

It is said that the defendants did not know the terms of the contracts between the plaintiffs and the wholesalers, especially as the evidence is so meagre as to

(1) [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 1 at p. 9; [1901] A.C. 495 at p. 510.

(2) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 208; (1853), 2 E. & B. 216.

those terms. The answer was, however, given by this court in Emerald Construction Co., Ltd. v. Lowthian (3). Even though the person who induces a breach does not know the precise terms of the contract, he is acting unlawfully if he says to himself: "whether it is a breach of contract or not, I care not." If he induces a breach of contract recklessly, careless whether it is a breach or not—turning a blind eye to it—he is liable for interfering with contractual relations.

Then it was said that the defendants did not directly interfere with the contracts between the wholesalers and the plaintiffs. They did not exert directly any pressure or inducement on the wholesalers: at most they only did it indirectly by recommending the retailers to give stop orders. That is true, but I do not think that it is an answer. Counsel for the defendants relied much on D. C. Thomson & Co., Ltd. v. Deakin (4). He said that, in order to be actionable, the interference has got to be direct, but as at present advised, I think that that is an undue restriction of the principle. I do not think that the tort is so narrowly confined as the court there stated. I associate myself with what I gather to be the view of VISCOUNT RADCLIFFE expressed in the course of his opinion in J. T. Stratford & Son, Ltd. v. Lindley (5), mentioned in LORD WILBERFORCE's book on RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES AND MONOPOLIES (2nd Edn.), para. 2605. It seems to me that if anyone procures or induces a breach of contract, whether by direct approach to the one who breaks the contract or by indirect influence through others, he is acting unlawfully if there be no sufficient justification for the interference.

It was said that the defendants were not doing anything unlawful because the retailers, in giving stop orders, were not breaking their contracts with the wholesalers. Reliance is placed on the affidavit of Mr. Holt in which he states: "The retailer is normally entitled to change his order for newspapers overnight." (I am not sure that is altogether correct: for I see that there is correspondence which indicates that one firm of wholesalers, Surridge Dawson, have a clause that a retailer is to give six weeks' notice of termination. As at present advised I should be inclined to think that neither side could stop all supplies on a moment's notice.) However that may be, assuming that the retailers were entitled to give these stop orders to the wholesalers—without thereby being in breach of their contracts—nevertheless, I do not think that it affords the defendants an answer to the charge of interference with the contracts between the wholesalers and the plaintiffs. They were seeking by these stop orders to induce a breach by the wholesalers of their contracts with the plaintiffs. I acknowledge that this inducement was indirect, but nevertheless, if established at the trial, it is unlawful.

I turn now to the second point. It is said that the defendants are using unlawful means to injure the trade of the plaintiffs because they are contravening the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956. Under s. 6 (7) of that Act, it is plain that the recommendation by the federation to their members—recommending them to stop ordering the Daily Mirror—was a restriction which is equivalent to an agreement to which the Act of 1956 applies. Under s. 21 that restriction is deemed to be contrary to the public interest, unless the court is satisfied of one or more of some particular circumstances, and is also satisfied that it is not unreasonable. Counsel for the defendants submits to us that this restriction is freed by the gateway provided by s. 21 (1) (d). He says it is lawful because he says

"the restriction is reasonably necessary to enable the persons party to the agreement to negotiate fair terms for . . . the acquisition of goods from, any one person not party thereto who controls a preponderant part of the trade or business of acquiring or supplying such goods . . ."

(3) [1966] 1 All E.R. 1013.

(4) [1952] 2 All E.R. 361; [1952] Ch. 646.

(5) [1964] 3 All E.R. 102 at p. 110; [1965] A.C. 269 at p. 330.

A Counsel for the defendants distinguishes an earlier case of Re National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers' Agreement (6), with which this federation was concerned. He contends that International Publishing Corporation, Ltd., control a preponderant part of the trade or business of supplying periodicals, magazines and newspapers; and that this restriction is reasonably necessary to enable the federation to negotiate fair terms.

B I can see the force of counsel for the defendants' submissions. I accept that it is the object of the federation to negotiate fair terms; but I find it difficult to bring this case within the gateway (d). The retailers are not acquiring the goods from the plaintiffs or I.P.C. They are acquiring them from the wholesalers, and it is with the wholesalers that they must negotiate. I do not, however, pursue further the question whether the defendants can bring themselves within the

C gateway. Suffice it that this restriction is deemed to be contrary to the public interest unless the contrary is shown. Prima facie, therefore, the recommendation is unlawful. No doubt the final decision will rest with the Restrictive Practices Court. But I think that it comes within the purview of this court also. If the federation make a recommendation which is unlawful, as being prohibited by the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, I think that it ranks as "unlawful means".

D As such this court can intervene to stop it. I have always understood that if one person interferes with the trade or business of another, and does so by unlawful means, then he is acting unlawfully, even though he does not procure or induce any actual breach of contract. Interference by unlawful means is enough. On this ground also it seems to me that the plaintiffs have made out a prima facie case of unlawfulness.

E Then, however, the question arises: should this court intervene by way of interlocutory injunction? Counsel for the defendants said that the plaintiffs obtained the ex parte injunction without full disclosure: and they delayed unduly because they held up their application so as to put an article in the newspaper. I do not think that those considerations are enough to debar the plaintiffs of an interlocutory injunction. They were put in a very difficult position. They had to do all

F that they could to try and avert a calamitous situation. The boycott of the Daily Mirror could do very great harm. Weighing the balance on one side and the other, it seems to me it would be only right to preserve the position pending the trial of the action. We should grant an interlocutory injunction rather as the House of Lords did in J. T. Stratford & Son, Ltd. v. Lindley (7).

G I would be in favour of dismissing the appeal and affirming the order of PHILLIMORE, J.

DAVIES, L.J.: I agree and, as this is an interlocutory matter, I propose to add very little. It seems to me that, as LORD DENNING, M.R., has said, there is a prima facie case here made out on behalf of the plaintiffs. The evidence as to the contractual arrangements between the plaintiffs and the wholesalers, on the one hand, and the wholesalers and the retailers, on the other, is somewhat tenuous; but it appears to be clear—and no doubt the matter will be investigated much more thoroughly if this case goes to trial—that there were running arrangements both between the newspaper and the wholesalers and between the wholesalers and the retailers. There was no doubt a leeway for minor variations or alterations on both sides, but that would not, as I think, mean that without whatever in the circumstances would be reasonable notice, which might vary in the two classes of case, either party to those contracts could put an end to them. Moreover, it seems to me clear on the evidence that the federation, no doubt with the best motives, in order to try to bring the plaintiffs to heel about these discounts, set on a course of conduct in which they really did not mind how their object was to be achieved, in the sense that they did not mind whether their members acted in breach of their contracts or terminated their contracts by whatever was the proper notice, and did not mind whether the wholesalers would act in breach of their contracts with the plaintiffs or terminate their contracts with the plaintiffs by proper notice. Indeed, what they really were contemplating was a third and different kind of hybrid animal, neither a breach nor a termination, but a suspension, which is, as LORD DENNING, M.R., has said, an odd notion. A

(6) [1965] 2 All E.R. 417; (1965), L.R. 5 R.P. 236.

(7) [1964] 3 All E.R. 102; [1965] A.C. 269.

I think that this case at this stage is really covered by the observations that LORD DENNING, M.R., made in the case to which he himself referred, Emerald Construction Co., Ltd. v. Lowthian (8), where he said: B

“If the officers of the trade union knowing of the contract deliberately sought to procure a breach of it, they would do wrong: see Lumley v. Gye (9). Even if they did not know of the actual terms of the contract, but had the means of knowledge—which they deliberately disregarded—that would be enough. Like the man who turns a blind eye. So here, if the officers deliberately sought to get this contract terminated, heedless of its terms, regardless whether it was terminated by breach or not, they would do wrong. For it is unlawful for a third person to procure a breach of contract knowingly, or recklessly, indifferent whether it is a breach or not. Some would go further and hold that it is unlawful for a third person deliberately and directly to interfere with the execution of a contract, even though he does not cause any breach. The point was left open by LORD REID in J. T. Stratford & Son, Ltd. v. Lindley (10). It is unnecessary to pursue this today. Suffice it that if the intention of the defendants was to get this contract terminated at all events, breach or no breach, they were prima facie in the wrong.” C

In my view, those observations of LORD DENNING, M.R., apply at this stage to the facts of the present case. D

I do not propose to say anything about the point under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, save to say that I agree with the views stated by LORD DENNING, M.R., that prima facie, at any rate, this agreement, this restriction, was contrary to the public interest. E

There remains the question of convenience. Obviously the overwhelming balance of convenience in this case is that the position should be preserved by granting this injunction. We were told that the daily circulation of the Daily Mirror is something over five million. I will leave out the odd hundreds or thousands and take that figure. If the federation succeeded in their attempt, it would, if my mathematics are right, mean a cut for a week in daily circulation from five million to three million; that is to say that in a six-day week, the period for which this suspension was hoped or planned to take place, it would mean a loss of eighteen million copies of this newspaper. If it turns out in the end that the plaintiffs are wrong, then they will have to compensate the defendants in damages for this injunction, but I agree that at the present stage it should be granted and that the appeal should therefore be dismissed. F

RUSSELL, L.J.: I felt some difficulty on the evidence on the question of breaches of contract, but I do not on the whole dissent from the views expressed by my brethren, and I will not take up time by deploying the factors that have caused me to feel that difficulty. G

I feel that a stronger prima facie case for the plaintiffs can be based on the argument that the recommendation to boycott is to be regarded as contrary to the public interest by virtue of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, and that that which is to be so regarded is in this field to be regarded as the employment of unlawful means. H

The defendants rightly admit that this boycott instruction constitutes a relevant restriction under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956. It is clear I

(8) [1966] 1 All E.R. at p. 1017.

(9) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 208; (1853). 2 E. & B. 216.

(10) [1964] 3 All E.R. at p. 107; [1965] A.C. at p. 324.

- A that the inevitable result of the preliminary issue in Re National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers' Agreement (11) in 1965 is that that restriction is to be regarded as contrary to the public interest, although not yet formally so declared by the Restrictive Practices Court. The defendants admit that they cannot hope to save this present restriction, restrictive direction or recommendation from that same stigma unless they can escape through gateway
- B (d) in s. 21 (1) of the Act of 1956. That in effect says that a restriction is deemed contrary to the public interest unless the court is satisfied

“ that the restriction is reasonably necessary to enable the persons party to the agreement to negotiate fair terms . . . for the acquisition of goods from, any one person . . . who controls a preponderant part of the trade or business of supplying such goods.”

- C I have left out the words not relevant to the present case. The reason why that gateway was not open in Re National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers' Agreement (11) was that there was not a trade or business in the supply of the weekly publication Romeo so as to constitute that publication “ goods ” within para. (d). I cannot see how, in the light of that decision, the contrary can be argued in the case of the Daily Mirror newspaper publication:
- D so that it cannot be said that the plaintiffs are the one person under the paragraph with a preponderant part of the trade of supplying the Daily Mirror.

- The defendants seek to escape this by saying that the plaintiffs are a subsidiary of International Publishing Corporation, Ltd. (“ I.P.C.”), which itself controls a preponderant part, through subsidiary companies, of the trade or business of supplying newspapers, magazines and periodicals. I take their argument to be
- E that I.P.C. is to be “ one person ” referred to in para. (d) and that this specific action in relation to the Daily Mirror is one aspect of a general campaign or defence against the increase in prices charged to them by narrowing their percentage margins or recommended retail prices. It seems to me, however, that this paragraph is concerned with the negotiation of fair terms between buyers and sellers for the acquisition by the buyers from the sellers. The members of this
- F federation do not buy or acquire from I.P.C., or indeed from the plaintiffs. They are not in contractual relationship with either of those companies. They buy and acquire solely from wholesalers, save perhaps in a very few instances, which cannot cover or save the restriction in this case. Moreover, no-one buys the Daily Mirror from I.P.C. The wholesalers buy from the plaintiffs. It was argued that
- G “ one person ” in the paragraph should be construed as including a subsidiary, but when the legislature enacted the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, they were perfectly capable of making two into one in an artificial way, as is evidenced by s. 8 (9), which provides that “ two or more persons being inter-connected bodies corporate . . . shall be treated as a single person ”; but, unfortunately for the defendants, that is for the purposes only of that and the last foregoing section, and not for the purpose of s. 21.

- H On the view that I have formed, this restriction is one which, I think, the Restrictive Practices Court will inevitably in due course declare to be contrary to the public interest; indeed, when the final order in Re National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers' Agreement (11) is made in the near future, any repeat of the present endeavour would, it seems to me, come with-
- I in an injunction restraining other agreements to the like effect. As at present advised, I consider that a restrictive agreement, once found by the Restrictive Practices Court to be contrary to the public interest, would, if it were sought to be implemented, properly be regarded as the employment of unlawful means for present purposes. Further, I consider that we are entitled to regard as contrary to the public interest a restriction which it appears to us would necessarily be condemned by the Restrictive Practices Court in those terms.

In those circumstances, I consider that a sufficient prima facie case has been established to justify both the negative and the positive injunctions ordered by PHILLIMORE, J. The balance of convenience is, of course, heavily down on the side of the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs, in my judgment, have not been guilty of conduct such as should upset that balance. In my judgment, the appeal should be refused and the mandatory injunction must at once be complied with.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: Shaen Roscoe & Bracewell (for the defendants); Nicholson, Graham & Jones (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MANN v. D'ARCY AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Megarry, J.), January 11, 12, 15, 1968.]

Partnership—Authority of one partner to bind firm—Partnership with third party for single venture—Transaction involved was one that would be in usual way of partnership business—Firm of produce merchants—Joint venture with plaintiff in purchase and re-sale of potatoes arranged by one partner—Whether partnership bound—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 5.

In May, 1958, an oral agreement was made between the plaintiff and the first defendant, who was the active partner in a partnership of the three defendants as produce merchants carried on under the name of D'A. & Co., whereby the first defendant agreed with the plaintiff "to go on a joint account" on the purchase and re-sale of some 350 tons of potatoes forming part of the cargo of a vessel "Anna Schaar"—viz., in effect, an agreement for a partnership between the firm and the plaintiff in the single venture. The purchase and re-sale of the potatoes remained under the control of D'A. & Co. By this arrangement D'A. & Co. were in substance buying and selling potatoes, which was part of their business as produce merchants. The question arose whether the first defendant had implied authority to bind the firm, D'A. & Co., to a partnership with the plaintiff for the joint venture,

Held: the arrangement made by the first defendant with the plaintiff, being an arrangement for sharing profit and loss on a transaction of purchase and re-sale of potatoes, was something done for carrying on "in the usual way business of the kind carried on by" D'A. & Co. within s. 5* of the Partnership Act, 1890; and accordingly, even though a partner has no implied authority to make his co-partners partners with another person in another business, the first defendant had authority to bind, and did bind, D'A. & Co. to a partnership with the plaintiff for the single venture (see p. 176, letters C, D and G, post).

Dictum of JAMES, L.J., in Re European Society Arbitration Acts ((1878), 8 Ch.D. at p. 704) distinguished.

[As to the power of one partner to bind the firm, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 503, 504, para. 968 and for instances of implied authority of partners, see ibid., p. 505, para. 970 and for cases on the subject, see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 435-437, 91-106.]

For the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 5, see 17 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 584.]

* Section 5 is set out at p. 175, letter I, post.

A Cases referred to:

European Society Arbitration Acts, Re, Ex p. Liquidators of the British Nation Life Assurance Association, (1878), 8 Ch.D. 679; sub nom. Re European Assurance Society Arbitration, British Commercial Insurance Co. v. British Nation Life Assurance Association, 48 L.J.Ch. 118; 39 L.T. 136; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1165, 8113.

B Hawksley v. Outram, [1892] 3 Ch. 359; 62 L.J. Ch. 215; 67 L.T. 804; 36 Digest (Repl.) 438, 108.

Singleton, Dunn & Co. v. Knight, (1888), 13 App. Cas. 788; 57 L.J.P.C. 106; 59 L.T. 738.

Toune v. Eisner, (1918), 245 U.S. Rep. 418.

Action.

- C By his statement of claim endorsed on his writ of summons, issued on Mar. 11, 1964, the plaintiff pleaded that the defendant, Gordon Thomas D'Arcy, Maurice Wetherill Tiplady and John Langstaff (to whom he referred collectively as "the firm") at all material times between July, 1957, and October, 1958, carried on business together in partnership as produce merchants under the style "D'Arcy & Co.". The plaintiff further pleaded that in about May, 1958 the plaintiff
- D and the firm agreed to become partners in a joint venture (referred to as the "Anna Schaar venture") consisting of the purchase and sale of some 350 tons of potatoes forming part of the cargo of a ship called the Anna Schaar on the terms that the profits and losses of the venture should be paid and borne as to one half to and by the plaintiff and as to the other half to and by the firm; that the potatoes were discharged at Colchester in June, 1958, and were sold
- E during that month; that the firm received £11,180 or thereabouts in respect of the sale of potatoes and expended £8,770 or thereabouts in respect of the purchase thereof; but that the firm had failed to account to the plaintiff for his one half share of the profit of £2,410 or thereabouts. The plaintiff claimed a declaration that the plaintiff and the firm were partners in the Anna Schaar venture; a declaration that the partnership was dissolved as from the termination
- F of the Anna Schaar venture in June, 1958, or alternatively by the service of the writ; and that the affairs of the partnership might be wound up, and payments made and any sums found due to the plaintiff on the taking of accounts. The second defendant, by his defence served on Apr. 22, 1964, pleaded that he had no personal knowledge of the agreement referred to as the Anna Schaar venture; and that if either or both of the other defendants purported to enter
- G into any such agreement on behalf of the firm they did so without the authority of the second defendant and the agreement was not binding on the firm. The action came on for trial as between the plaintiff and the second defendant, but on motion for judgment in default of defence as against the first and third defendants.

M. Essayan for the plaintiff.

H M. Browne for the second defendant.

The first and third defendants did not appear and were not represented.

MEGARRY, J.: In this case the plaintiff claims that towards the end of May, 1958, an agreement was made whereby he entered into a partnership with the three defendants for a single venture, namely, the purchase and resale of some 350 tons of potatoes forming part of the cargo of the vessel "Anna Schaar".

I The potatoes were discharged from the Anna Schaar at Colchester on or about June 2, 1958. The three defendants were then carrying on business in partnership as produce merchants in Essex under the name of D'Arcy & Co. The partnership was converted into a limited company named D'Arcy & Co. (Colchester), Ltd. on Oct. 6, 1958, when the limited company took over the assets of the partnership and assumed its liabilities.

The plaintiff's case is that one morning at the end of May, 1958, about five days before the Anna Schaar arrived, the first defendant, in his office, asked him if he would go on a joint account on the Anna Schaar. The plaintiff did not agree at once; but two or three hours later, after lunch, he returned and said that he would, whereupon the first defendant said "All right, then". It is not disputed that the first defendant was the only active partner in D'Arcy & Co., and that he ran the business. The plaintiff alleges that the first defendant made the agreement on behalf of himself and his two partners, the other two defendants, and that it constituted a partnership. No evidence in writing of the partnership alleged has been put before me. Equally, however, it may be observed that there is no documentary evidence of the partnership agreement which constituted the admitted partnership of D'Arcy & Co.

The defence to this claim is two-fold. First, it is said that the alleged agreement was never in fact made; and this, of course, is a question of fact. Secondly, it is said that if the agreement was in fact made then the first defendant had no authority to bind the partnership; and this raises a somewhat interesting question of law. It is not disputed by the second defendant that if the agreement was made it constituted a partnership. The case comes on in the form of an action between the plaintiff and the second defendant and a motion for judgment in default of defence against the first and third defendants, who have taken no part in these proceedings before me. It appears that although the second defendant is a man of substance the first and third defendants are the reverse.

[His LORDSHIP turned to the first question. Having considered the evidence, His LORDSHIP decided that the agreement alleged was entered into as claimed and continued:] That brings me to the second main question, the question of law: had the first defendant an implied authority to bind the partnership? On this issue counsel for the second defendant based himself in the first instance on the proposition to be found in LINDLEY'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP (12th Edn., 1962), p. 187. It reads: "A partner has no implied authority to make his co-partners partners with other persons in another business." That proposition is supported by a footnote referring to three cases to which I will refer in a moment. These three cases have been closely analysed by counsel for the plaintiff; and in my judgment they require careful examination. I may take first the case of Hawksley v. Outram (1). This was a case which was not greatly pressed by counsel for the second defendant, and I think rightly so; for the issue there was the construction of a power of attorney. The passage cited from the judgment of LINDLEY, L.J., (2) does not, I think, provide any real assistance in the decision of this case.

The second of the authorities cited by LINDLEY is that of Singleton, Dunn & Co. v. Knight (3). The last sentence of the headnote in that case provides strong support for the passage from LINDLEY that I have quoted. It reads:

"One partner has no authority from the other partners to enter into a partnership with other persons in another business."

That sentence, however, is less well supported by the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, delivered by SIR BARNES PEACOCK. The case came from Quebec, and involved the Civil Code of Lower Canada, as Quebec was then called. There is a passage (4) on which counsel for the second defendant relied which states what had been decided by the Courts in Quebec; and the wording of this passage certainly provides some support for the quotation from LINDLEY'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP as a statement of the law of Quebec. The question in the case was whether one partner of C. & Co. could make the partnership liable to contribute to the losses of a business carried on by K., who had borrowed money from C. & Co. for five years and had promised to pay the interest and a half share of the profits of his (K.'s) business. K. had in fact never treated C. & Co. as partners, nor had he accounted for any profits. The case, however,

(1) (1892), 3 Ch. 359.

(2) (1892), 3 Ch. at pp. 373, 374.

(3) (1888), 13 App. Cas. 788.

(4) (1888), 13 App. Cas. at p. 790.

A largely turned on s. 1831 and s. 1855 of the Civil Code, which were by no means identical with English law. No doubt the case provides authority in Quebec for the statement in LINDLEY, in so far as the Quebec decisions were accepted by the Judicial Committee as correctly laying down the law of the Province; but I find it of little assistance on the law of England.

B The third authority cited by LINDLEY is Re European Society Arbitration Acts, Ex p. Liquidators of the British Nation Life Assurance Association (5). This was a somewhat complex case, but it contains a clear dictum by JAMES, L.J. uttered when delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal. He said of the association there being considered (6):

C “Prima facie there is nothing more inconsistent with the whole scope and character of such a body than it should enter into a contract of partnership with any other person or persons in any other business whatever. It would require very clear powers to enable a man's partner or partners, or, in a joint stock company, his delegated officers, or the majority of his co-shareholders, to make him a partner with any other person or a shareholder in any other society.”

D Even if this is a mere dictum, as it may indeed be, I would attach much weight to any words uttered by so great a master of equity. If with these words in mind one takes the proposition stated in LINDLEY'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP at its face value, it seems to me that it lays down that a partner in A. & Co. has no implied authority to make his co-partners partners with B., or with B. & Co., in another business; but in saying this I emphasise the words “in another business”. Accepting that proposition fully in relation to a partnership in another business concern, the question still remains whether it applies to the facts of this case.

E Two features in the present case seem to me to be of importance. First, the joint venture in the Anna Schaar was a venture to be managed by D'Arcy & Co., and not by the plaintiff. Accordingly, so far as the partners in D'Arcy & Co. were concerned, there was no element of added risk; there was no danger of the plaintiff involving the partners in D'Arcy & Co. in any liabilities which they had not already contemplated. They plainly contemplated dealing with potatoes. All that was being done was to halve the risks of loss and halve the prospects of profit. This is not a case of D'Arcy & Co. being made partners in a business to be controlled by the plaintiff, or in a joint venture to be managed by him, whether wholly or in part. From first to last the transaction remained under the sole control of D'Arcy & Co.

G Secondly, the Anna Schaar venture as a whole was in the ordinary course of D'Arcy & Co.'s business. The only question lies in the plaintiff's participation in it, bearing half the losses and taking half the profits. This took place at a time when the potato market was in a difficult state; as the second defendant said, in May, 1958, the market was becoming unprofitable. The joint venture produced something of the same result as insuring against an unprofitable deal; and it enabled D'Arcy & Co. to continue trading when the market conditions were uncertain, instead of having to cease trading and yet continue to carry their overheads. This, said counsel for the plaintiff, fell within the terms of the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 5. That provides as follows:

H “Every partner is an agent of the firm and his other partners for the purpose of the business of the partnership; and the acts of every partner who does any act for carrying on in the usual way business of the kind carried on by the firm of which he is a member bind the firm and his partners, unless the partner so acting has in fact no authority to act for the firm in the particular matter, and the person with whom he is dealing either knows that he has no authority, or does not know or believe him to be a partner.”

(5) (1878), 8 Ch.D. 679.

(6) (1878), 8 Ch.D. at p. 704.

The question on s. 5 that has troubled me a little is the phrase "in the usual way". In relation to any joint ventures, counsel for the plaintiff has expressly disclaimed any usage of produce merchants in general; and on the facts of this case he cannot rely on any course of conduct in this particular partnership. He does, however, place some weight on a passage discussing this section set out on p. 168 of LINDLEY'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP, though he couched his arguments in terms of what was "reasonably necessary" for carrying on the business, rather than on carrying on the business "in the usual way". His link between these two expressions was that to do what was absolutely necessary for the conduct of the business, or what was reasonably necessary, or even what was highly desirable for it, was to carry on the business "in the usual way".

In my judgment the reality of the matter is that what in substance D'Arcy & Co. were doing through the first defendant was to buy and sell potatoes; and this was plainly carrying on business "in the usual way". The terms on which the first defendant bought and sold the potatoes were also plainly matters within his authority. Clearly he could agree the prices and other terms both for purchases and sales. Equally, I think, it was within his implied authority to insure the goods, whether during transit or otherwise. In my judgment the arrangement for sharing the profit and the loss which he made with the plaintiff falls within this sphere of authority. The arrangement was merely one mode of buying and selling what he was authorised to buy and sell on behalf of the partnership; and he was mitigating the risk at the expense of reducing the profit. Accordingly, it was within his authority. Although the joint venture was a partnership, I do not regard it as being "another business" within the meaning of the doctrine set out in LINDLEY'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP at p. 187.

It is important not to be bewitched by words. There are partnerships and partnerships. A general partnership for a period of years may be very different in substance from a partnership in a single venture; and one single venture may differ greatly from another. In Towne v. Eisner (7) HOLMES, J., reminded us that "a word is not a crystal, transparent and unchanged, it is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in color and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used." One must, I think, penetrate beyond the word "partnership" to the substance of the transaction and not generalise the words of either JAMES, L.J., or LINDLEY'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP beyond anything that they can fairly have intended. Looking in that way at the transaction in this case, I reach the conclusion that it was within the scope of the first defendant's authority to enter into the alleged partnership agreement and that he thereby bound not only himself but also the second and third defendants.

Declarations accordingly as against all three defendants.

Solicitors: E. Edwards, Son and Noice, agents for Nelson Mitchell & Williams, Southend-on-Sea (for the plaintiff); Jaques & Co., agents for Scholefield, Taylor & Maggs, Batley (for the second defendant).

[Reported by R. W. FARRIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRITISH OXYGEN CO., LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Buckley, J.), April 1, 2, 3, 10, 1968.]

Trade—Investment grants—Machinery and plant—Gas manufacturers—Transporters and cylinders used for the sale and delivery of gas—Articulated vehicles—Hydrogen trailer, and individual gas cylinders, which were left with customers for the gas to be drawn off—Whether capital expenditure on provision of such new equipment for distributive purposes or storage purposes was eligible for investment grant—Discretion of Board of Trade over approval of capital expenditure—Low cost of individual items not by itself a sufficient ground for withholding investment grant when aggregate expenditure was substantial—Industrial Development Act 1966 (c. 34), s. 1 (1), (2) (a), (3) (b) (c), s. 13 (1).

A company manufactured, delivered and sold industrial and medical gases. The gases required special containers. The gases in liquid form had to be kept at very low temperatures. Gases in gaseous form, particularly hydrogen, had to be kept at high pressures. For delivery of the gases the company had three kinds of transporters; and in addition the company used very many individual cylinders as containers for storing and transporting gas, the customers retaining the cylinders while using the gas. One type of transporter was a large tanker assembly, comprising a tractor and a half trailer. The tractor was a four-wheeled vehicle and was bought by the company from suppliers. The half trailer included an insulated tank for containing gas at low temperature, a pump for pumping the gas into customers' storage tanks, controls, and other incidental equipment. When used for transport the tractor and half trailer were always united. The second kind of transporter equipment was the small tanker assembly, which served a similar purpose to the large assembly. The insulated tank, pumping equipment and other associated items on the small tanker assembly were not, however, detachable, from the chassis of the vehicle, which was not an articulated vehicle. The third kind of equipment was a hydrogen trailer assembly, comprising a tractor, which the company bought from outside suppliers, and a half trailer. The half trailer had only two wheels at the rear. Nine steel cylinders were assembled on the half trailer, capable of containing hydrogen under pressure of about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  tons to the square inch. The half trailer was frequently detached from the tractor and left detached at a customer's premises, the customer drawing gas from the cylinders as required. The cylinders were not usually detached from the trailer. Gas from the cylinders could, however, be delivered from the half trailer into a customer's own storage cylinders when delivery was made. It was admitted that the individual gas cylinders, which constituted the fourth type of equipment in the present case, were plant for the purposes of Pt. 1 of the Industrial Development Act 1966. These gas cylinders were bought by the company for about £20 each. In the year ending with September, 1966, the company expended a total of £1,707,000 on such cylinders. There was, apparently, a general practice in the government department administering investment grants not to approve for grant expenditure on items of equipment costing individually less than £25\*, however great the number of such items might be. Questions had arisen whether expenditure in providing new equipment of the types mentioned would be eligible for investment grant.

Held: (i) expenditure on the provision of a new large tanker or small tanker assemblies would not be eligible for investment grant for the following reasons—

(a) the large tanker assembly, whose components were only occasionally

* See, as to this practice, p. 186, letter D, post.

separated, was an articulated vehicle, and the small tanker assembly was also a vehicle, and they would not, therefore, be machinery or plant for the purpose of qualifying under s. 1 of the Industrial Development Act 1966, unless they were vehicles within para. (a) of the definition of machinery and plant in s. 13 (1);

(b) these transporters were, however, comprehensive units which carried a load of gas in addition to the tanks and associated equipment incorporated in them, with the consequence that they were not vehicles that satisfied the requirements of para. (a) of the definition, namely, that of being constructed to carry no other load than the tanks and other associated equipment (see p. 183, letters C, G and I, and p. 184, letter A, post).

(ii) expenditure on the provision of new hydrogen trailers was eligible for investment grant for the following reasons—

(a) although a hydrogen trailer was mobile when attached to the tractor it was not a vehicle, for, as it had only two rear wheels, it could not be moved until it was attached to the tractor which thus took the weight of the front portion of the trailer (see p. 183, letter F, and p. 184, letter A, post);

(b) as it was necessary to keep hydrogen under high pressure, a hydrogen trailer served the purposes of a qualifying industrial process within s. 1 (2), as a purpose of packing or storage was not wholly excluded from s. 1 (2) of the Act of 1966; alternatively, if the matter did not fall within s. 1 (2) itself, the hydrogen trailer was to be treated by virtue of s. 1 (3) (b) or (c) as being for a process that was incidental to the manufacture of hydrogen within s. 1 (2) (a) (see p. 184, letters F, G and H, post).

(iii) expenditure on the provision of new gas cylinders was eligible for investment grant for the same reason as that expressed at (ii) (b) above, the company's gas being in effect stored in the cylinders (see p. 184, letter I, to p. 185, letter A, post).

(iv) to refuse to consider an application for approval of capital expenditure for the purpose of awarding investment grant solely on the ground of low individual cost of items (viz., that individual items cost less than £25 each) would not be a proper exercise of the discretion, conferred by the Act of 1966 on the Board, over the approval of capital expenditure for that purpose (see p. 187, letter C, post).

Dictum of LORD REID in Padfield v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food ([1968] 1 All E.R. at p. 699) applied.

[As to investment grants, see SUPPLEMENT to 38 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) para. 240A.

For the Industrial Development Act 1966 s. 1, s. 13, see 46 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 820, 832.]

Cases referred to:

Cherry v. International Alloys, Ltd., [1960] 3 All E.R. 264; [1961] 1 Q.B. 136; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 568; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 586, 205a.

Baker, Re, Nichols v. Baker, (1890), 44 Ch.D. 262; 59 L.J.Ch. 661; 62 L.T. 817; 4 Digest (Repl.) 544, 4747.

Julius v. Oxford (Lord Bishop), [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 43; (1880), 5 App. Cas. 214; 49 L.J.Q.B. 577; 42 L.T. 546; 44 J.P. 600; 19 Digest (Repl.) 360, 1526.

Padfield v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, [1968] 1 All E.R. 694; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 924.

Adjourned Summons.

The plaintiff company, British Oxygen, Ltd., applied by originating summons, dated July 7, 1967, for the determination of questions arising on the interpretation and the effect of Part I of the Industrial Development Act 1966. The questions raised by the summons included the following—(i) whether on the true

- A construction of the Industrial Development Act 1966 (a) the tank and pump portions of gas tankers and (b) the hydrogen gas trailer constituted "machinery or plant" or "part of any machinery or plant" within the meaning of s. 13 (1) of the Act of 1966; and (ii) a declaration that (a) the tank and pump portions of the gas tankers, (b) the hydrogen gas trailer and (c) the metal cylinder were capable of being approved capital expenditure within the meaning of s. 1 (1)
- B and s. 13 of the Act of 1966 notwithstanding that each was a form of container or served a distributive function and (iii) a declaration that the Board of Trade was not entitled to decline to make a grant towards bulk capital expenditure on the metal cylinders on the sole ground that each cylinder cost less than £25. The tank and pump portions of the gas tankers, the hydrogen gas trailer, and the metal cylinders were identified by reference to photographs that were intended to be
- C exhibited to affidavits in the proceedings; their nature sufficiently appears from the statement of fact that follows hereafter. For the purposes of his judgment His Lordship, BUCKLEY, J., read the provisions of Pt. 1 of the Act of 1966, which are set out below*. The following description of the plaintiff company's business and of the equipment with which the present case was concerned is taken from the judgment.
- D The plaintiff company's major activity consisted in the manufacture, delivery and sale of industrial and medical gases in gaseous and liquid form. By their nature the gases required special containers. It was necessary for the plaintiff company to undertake delivery of the gases to the purchaser's premises and to * Section 1 of the Industrial Development Act 1966, so far as relevant provides:

E "(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, the Board of Trade . . . may make to any person carrying on a business in Great Britain a grant towards approved capital expenditure incurred by that person in providing new machinery or plant for use in Great Britain—(a) for carrying on a qualifying industrial process in the course of that business; or (b) for carrying on in the course of that business scientific research relating to a qualifying industrial process whether carried on in the course of that business or not.

F "(2) For the purposes of this section a qualifying industrial process is a process for or incidental to any of the following purposes, that is to say—(a) the making of any article; . . ."

"(3) For the purposes of this section—

"(a) the repair or maintenance in the course of a business of an article which is used in the course of that business for carrying on a process for or incidental to any of the purposes mentioned in sub-s. (2) of this section;

G "(b) the storage in the course of a business of anything which is to be used in the course of that business for carrying on any such process or which is to be or has been subjected to, or has resulted from, any such process carried on in the course of that business; and

"(c) the packing in the course of a business of anything which is to be or has been subjected to, or has resulted from, any such process carried on in the course of that business

H "shall be treated as a process incidental to that purpose, but, save as aforesaid, repair, maintenance, storage or packing shall not be treated as a process incidental to any of the purposes mentioned in sub-s. (2) of this section.

"(6) Subject to any order under s. 7 of this Act, the amount of any grant under this section shall be twenty per cent. of the expenditure in respect of which it was made, except that it shall be forty per cent. of the said expenditure so far as it qualifies as development area expenditure in accordance with Sch. 1 to this Act."

Section 7 to the Act of 1966 gives power to vary the rates of grant under the Act. Sections 2, 3, 5, and 6 provide that the Board of Trade may make grants under the

I Act in respect of computers, hover vehicles, ships and mining works. The following are the relevant definitions in s. 13 (1)—

"Approved capital expenditure' in relation to any grant means expenditure appearing to the Board to be of a capital nature and approved by [the Board] for the purposes of the grant;

"Article' means an article of any description (including any means of transport) and includes part of an article;

"Machinery or plant' includes part of any machinery or plant but does not include a computer, ship or aircraft or any vehicle except—(a) a vehicle constructed or adapted for the conveyance of a machine incorporated in or permanently attached to it and of no other load except articles used for the purposes of the machine; . . ."

do so in a manner which permitted the gases to be used when delivered. Ex-works delivery to purchasers was impracticable in this business. Gases provided and sold in a liquid form must be preserved at low temperatures to retain their liquidity, and in the tankers used to transport them the pressure of the gas within the container might be anything between the normal pressure of the atmosphere and twice that pressure. Gases that were sold in a gaseous form and, in particular, hydrogen, had to be transported and delivered at a very high pressure which might be as much as 224 times the normal atmospheric pressure.

For the purposes of their business the plaintiff company used three kinds of transporter. The first of these was a tanker with a cubic capacity of 410,000 cubic feet (herein referred to as "the large tanker assembly"). It consisted of two principal component parts: a tractor and a half trailer. The tractor was bought by the plaintiff company from an outside supplier. It was a Foden tractor, a four-wheeled tractor fitted with an internal combustion engine and a driver's cab, mounted on a chassis which extended some four or five feet behind the driver's cab and had mounted on it a turntable. The half trailer consisted of certain components which were bought from other makers, and other components which were made by a subsidiary of the plaintiff company. The component which was bought was a four-wheeled bogey, each wheel unit being a double wheel, consisting therefore of eight wheels on a double axle, which supported the rear of the half trailer. The other component parts of the half trailer consisted of a vacuum insulated tank suitable for carrying gas and keeping it at an appropriate low temperature; a pumping unit, which consisted of an alternator, which was in fact mounted on the tractor and powered by the engine of the tractor; an electric motor for driving the pump; a centrifugal pump, a liquid meter and counter, and various controls, valves and pipework, and a pressure raising coil. These components, apart from the alternator, were all assembled on the half trailer. The half trailer was detachable from the tractor and when assembled with the tractor the trailer connected with the turntable on the tractor. The half trailer was fitted with jacks towards its front which could be lowered so as to support the front of the half trailer when the tractor was detached. The pressure in the customer's storage tanks into which the liquid gas must be delivered was customarily much higher than the pressure in the tanker and might be as high as twenty times the normal atmospheric pressure, and, accordingly the pump which formed part of the equipment had to be of a sufficient power to overcome the resistance of that pressure. The half trailer, in the case of this assembly, was only detached from its associated tractor for maintenance purposes or, perhaps, occasionally for domestic reasons of the plaintiff company's, but when it was in use for the purpose of transporting and delivering the plaintiff company's product, the tractor and the half trailer were always united.

The second kind of equipment (referred to as "the small tanker assembly") served a similar purpose as the large tanker assembly. It had a cubic capacity of two hundred thousand cubic feet. It consisted of an Albion "Clydesdale" chassis, which was an ordinary kind of lorry chassis with four wheels, two in the front and two at the rear; mounted on that chassis behind the driver's cab was a vacuum insulated tank with pumping equipment and other associated items similar to those which were mounted on the large tanker assembly, but in this case the insulated tank and the other items associated with it were not detachable from the chassis of the vehicle. This assembly was used in precisely similar ways to those in which the large tanker assembly was used. It was merely a smaller variant of the same kind of equipment mounted on four wheels and not articulated, whereas the large tanker assembly, when the tractor and the half trailer were united, constituted an articulated vehicle.

The third kind of equipment (referred to as "the hydrogen trailer assembly") had a capacity of thirty-eight thousand cubic feet. It consisted of a tractor provided by an outside supplier and a half trailer. In this case the half trailer did not have a

A four wheeled bogey at the rear, but had two wheels at the rear. Mounted on the platform of the half trailer were two bulkheads, one at the front and the other at the back, between which were assembled nine steel cylinders, which were bought from another company, capable of containing hydrogen under a pressure of up to 224 atmospheres, viz., one and a half tons to the square inch. Various controls and meters were assembled on the rear bulkhead for use when the gas was delivered out of the cylinders. The half trailer part of this assembly was detachable from the tractor and frequently was detached and left detached at a customer's premises so that the customer might draw the gas out of the cylinders as he required it for his own consumption. The cylinders themselves were not usually detached from the half trailer. They were only detached for certain statutory tests at five yearly intervals and for maintenance. This half trailer was also equipped with jacks towards its forward end, which were lowered to support that end of the half trailer when the tractor was withdrawn. There were two methods of delivery of gas to customers by means of this equipment. Either the gas was delivered out of the cylinders on the half trailer into the customer's own storage cylinders when delivery was made, or the half trailer was detached from its tractor and left at the customer's premises, connected to the customer's supply lines so that the customer might use the gas as he wished direct from the plaintiff company's cylinders on the half trailer, or a combination of those two methods might be employed: part of the gas might be decanted into the customer's own storage capacity and in part the gas might be drawn from the half trailer directly to the point of use.

The fourth kind of equipment was individual cylinders of gas. Very large quantities of certain of the gases produced by the plaintiff company were stored under pressure in metal cylinders which, for the most part, were between 3 ft. 11 ins. and 4 ft. 9 ins., in length and of a diameter between 9 ins. and 11 ins., though there was considerable variation in sizes of cylinders. Metal cylinders containing gas were delivered to customers. The cylinders remained in the customer's possession until the gas had been exhausted, when they were returned to the plaintiff company. While the gas was being drawn off, the cylinder was normally connected to the customer's equipment and might remain so connected for many days or weeks until the gas was used. A rental was generally charged by the plaintiff company for the use of the cylinder while in the customer's possession.

J. A. Brightman, Q.C., and P. E. Whitworth for the plaintiff company.
G M. Finer, Q.C., and J. P. Warner for the Board.

Cur. adv. vult.

Apr. 10. BUCKLEY, J., having read s. 1 (1), (2) (a), (3), (6), having referred to the general nature of ss. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, having read the definitions quoted in the footnote at p. 179, letters E to I, ante, and having stated that it was conceded that the gases manufactured and dealt in by the plaintiff company came within the definition of the word "article", described in the manner previously set out the activities of the plaintiff company and the nature of the equipment with which the case was concerned, and continued: With the assistance of an analysis which counsel for the plaintiff company made for the purposes of his argument, I can, I think, summarise the effect of the sections of the Industrial Development I Act 1966 so far as they relate to the present case as follows. 1. The plaintiff company to qualify as a recipient of the grant under the Act of 1966 must be a person carrying on business in Great Britain. 2. The grant must be towards expenditure which (a) appears to the Board of Trade to be of a capital nature and (b) is approved by the Board for the purposes of the grant. 3. The expenditure must be incurred in providing new machinery or plant for use in Great Britain except any vehicle other than a vehicle qualified under para. (a) of the definition of "machinery or plant" in s. 13 (1) of the Act of 1966. 4. The machinery or plant must be provided for carrying on a process for or incidental to the making of gas in the course of the plaintiff company's business. 5. Such processes include (a) the storage in the course of that business and (b) the packing in the course of that business of anything which has been subjected to or has resulted from a process for or incidental to the making of gas in the course of that business.

No question arises on paras. 1 or 2 (a) of this analysis in this case, nor does any arise on para. 3 except whether and to what extent the assets in respect of which the plaintiff company seeks a grant are "vehicles" and, if so, whether they fall within the terms of para. (a) of the definition of "machinery or plant". If and so far as any of them is a "vehicle", it cannot qualify for grant unless it satisfies para. (a). It is for consideration whether any of these assets falls within para. 4, taken apart from para. 5. It is also for consideration whether any of them can be brought within para. 4 by virtue of para. 5. None of these assets, which is not within para. 4 and cannot be brought within that paragraph by reference to para. 5, can qualify for grant because it will not have been provided for a "qualifying industrial process". If any of these assets qualifies for grant, a further question arises about the nature and extent of any discretion vested in the Board to determine whether and to what extent the expenditure shall be approved by the Board for the purposes of the grant.

The plaintiff company says that it is apparent from the Industrial Development Act 1966 that it is intended to provide industry with an incentive to invest in new equipment with a view to faster modernisation, greater output and an improved balance of payments. I think that the apparent intention or policy of the Act of 1966 is to encourage capital investment, in those fields of industrial activity which are indicated in s. 1 (2), by way of providing plant or machinery and thus improving or maintaining the capital stock of industry in this country consisting of physical assets of this kind, and so increasing or maintaining industrial efficiency and productivity. This may be little more than a paraphrase of the plaintiff company's submission. It is, I think, only relevant as a guide to the interpretation of the statute so far as it may be found to be capable of more than one interpretation, in which case I shall adopt that one which best suits the object and scope of the Act of 1966 (Cherry v. International Alloys, Ltd. (1)); but, as will appear hereafter, I think that it is relevant to the consideration of the nature and scope of the Board's discretion to approve expenditure for the purposes of the grant.

The plaintiff company contend that the word "vehicle" is one of general import incapable of precise definition and that, accordingly, I should adopt that legitimate interpretation of the word which is most consistent with the intention of the Act of 1966. They point out that the insulated tanks of the large and small tankers and the cylinders of the hydrogen trailer are specifically designed in the one case to maintain the necessary low temperatures of liquid gases, and in the other to maintain hydrogen at the necessary very high pressure so that the plaintiff company's products can be delivered in an acceptable form at the point of delivery to the customers. They are, the plaintiff company say, sophisticated forms of storage which, if they were immobile, would qualify for grant and for which one would not expect the grant to be denied merely because the plant is mobile. They invite me to construe "vehicle" in s. 13 as meaning ordinary vehicles such as lorries, trucks and motor cars intended for transporting goods or people. The plaintiff company asked me to consider the trailer part of both the large tanker assembly and the hydrogen trailer assembly separately from the tractor parts, and to hold that the former part is not in either case a "vehicle" but should be regarded as a load which is moved by the tractor part. They point out that the trailers are immobile on their own and are only mobile when married to the tractor portion which is bought separately although designed specifically for this purpose.

A The Board, on the other hand, submits that a trailer as a means of transport is itself a "vehicle" within the meaning of s. 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1966, as it is for the purposes of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, and so cannot be "plant or machinery" for the purposes of the Act of 1966. The fact that they are specialised vehicles is, they say, neither here nor there.

B In my opinion, a distinction must be drawn between the large tanker assembly and the hydrogen trailer assembly. The two component parts of the former are never separated in use. The trailer is only severed from the tractor occasionally for maintenance and sometimes, maybe, for domestic reasons of the plaintiff company's own such as convenience of parking in the plaintiff company's garage or transferring a tractor from one trailer to another. The hydrogen trailer, on the other hand, is commonly divorced from the tractor at the customer's

C place of business. It would, in my judgment, be over-refined to refuse to recognise the entire large tanker assembly as a vehicle in ordinary parlance. It is an articulated vehicle and none the less so because its two component sub-assemblies can be, and occasionally are, separated. Accordingly, in my judgment, the large tanker assembly cannot be machinery or plant for the purposes of the Act of 1966, unless either (a) "vehicle" in s. 13 ought to be construed in some

D narrower sense excluding such a vehicle or (b) the large tanker assembly satisfies para. (a) of the definition of "machinery or plant". I am unable to accept the plaintiff company's contention that "vehicle" here means only such ordinary means of transport as lorries and motor cars. The terms of para. (a) of the definition of plant and machinery, in my judgment, make clear that it extends to specialised vehicles and I think that it embraces the large tanker assembly.

E The hydrogen trailer, on the other hand, seems to me to stand in a different position in this respect. The trailer constitutes a distinct piece of equipment capable of being used, and frequently used, separately from the tractor which moves it. When separate from any tractor it is completely immovable. Although it is fitted with two wheels at the rear, it cannot be moved until the rear wheels of a tractor unit have been inserted under its front portion to take the weight of F that part of the trailer. In my judgment, it is realistic to describe this trailer as a load which is moved by and on its tractor. Although it has some of the characteristics of a vehicle, I do not consider that, when its true nature is appreciated, it can be appropriately described as a vehicle.

The next question about the large tanker assembly is whether it satisfies para. (a) of the definition of "machinery or plant" in s. 13 (1) of the Act of 1966.

G The same question arises in connexion with the small tanker assembly which is, in my judgment, indisputably a vehicle. The plaintiff company say that these vehicles are constructed for the conveyance of a machine for storing and delivering liquid gas in a state and manner acceptable to customers. I am prepared to assume that the insulated tanks and associated equipment may properly be described as a machine which is incorporated in or permanently attached to the

H vehicle, but, in my judgment, it is impossible to say that the vehicle carries no other load. When the tank is full the vehicle carries a load of gas. This is clearly not part of the machine nor, in my judgment, is it "an article used for the purposes of the machine". The machine serves the gas, not the reverse. Accordingly, in my opinion, neither the large tanker assembly nor the small tanker assembly is "machinery or plant" for the purposes of the Act of 1966. The same

I would be true, in my judgment, of the hydrogen trailer if, contrary to my view, the trailer were a vehicle within the meaning of the section.

The plaintiff company suggested that the insulated tanks and the pumping equipment, gauges and so forth, associated with them could be regarded as machinery or plant provided separately from the vehicular parts of the assemblies. I cannot accept this view. The large tanker assembly and the small tanker assembly are, in my judgment, comprehensive units every part of which contributes to and is necessary for the functioning of the whole. The tanks, pumps, gauges and so forth are incorporated in and form part of the vehicle. Unless the vehicle so constructed can satisfy para. (a) of the definition of "machinery or plant", no part of it can, in my opinion, be treated as within the definition. A

For these reasons I reach the conclusion that the hydrogen trailer is, but the large tanker assembly and the small tanker assembly are not, nor is any part of them, machinery or plant within the meaning of the Industrial Development Act 1966.

The next question is whether the hydrogen trailer is provided for carrying on a "qualifying industrial process" (2) within the meaning of the Act of 1966. B
The plaintiff company urge, as is the fact, that it is essential that hydrogen should be kept under very high pressure and delivered under very high pressure to the customer. It would be useless to produce hydrogen unless the means of so keeping it and delivering it were available. Such means is, therefore, they submit, a process incidental to the making of the hydrogen. The Board, on the other hand, C contends that the fact that storage and packing are separately dealt with in s. 1 (3), indicates that s. 1 (2) (a) refers to the actual process or processes of making any article and processes directly incidental to making it. Transporting the article when it has been made is not, they say, such a process.

The terms of s. 1 (3) indicate, in my opinion, that the Act of 1966 is meant to have a wide scope of operation. The circumstance that packing and storage are D there mentioned separately from the processes dealt with in s. 1 (2) does not require s. 1 (2) to be construed in a way which would exclude all kinds of packing and storage from its scope. There is likely to be a very large number of kinds of packing or storage falling within the terms of s. 1 (3) of which it would be at least doubtful whether they could properly be described as processes for or incidental E to one or other of the processes referred to in s. 1 (2). It is, therefore, sensible for s. 1 to contain sub-s. (3) notwithstanding that some processes of packing or storage may come within the scope of sub-s. (2). The provision of suitable means of transporting and delivering hydrogen is, in my opinion, clearly part of the business of a manufacturer of hydrogen, and, in my judgment, such transport and delivery are accurately described as processes incidental to the making of hydrogen since F without them no purchaser could be supplied and no hydrogen would be marketed or made.

If, contrary to this view, these processes do not fall within s. 1 (2) (a), then, in my judgment, the hydrogen trailer is provided for use in a process which must be treated as incidental to making hydrogen by reason of s. 1 (3) (b) and (c), or one of those paragraphs. From the time of manufacture until delivery to the customer the hydrogen must be kept under the necessary pressure. The character of the commodity is such that during this period, be it long or short, it must be stored G or packed in a particular manner, i.e., under very high pressure to make delivery to the customer possible. For these reasons, the hydrogen trailer is, in my judgment, eligible for grant under the Act of 1966.

I come now to the cylinders. These are admitted to be plant within the meaning of the Act of 1966. The Board contends that the evidence does not establish H that these cylinders are used for storage in the course of the plaintiff company's business, but merely that they are at times used as a means of storage by customers who do not return the cylinders to the company until they have exhausted the gas from them. This, in my view, is not the effect of the plaintiff company's evidence, which is uncontradicted. That evidence is that very large quantities of gas produced by the company are stored under pressure in these cylinders and I that, when the gas is sold, it is delivered in the cylinders which are retained by the purchasers until the gas is exhausted, after which the cylinders are returned to the company. As I understand this evidence, the plaintiff company hold a stock of gas in these cylinders. Such a stock of gas so held appears to me to be accurately described as "stored" in the cylinders. Moreover, if I am right in my view of the hydrogen trailer, exactly similar considerations apply to the

(2) The words "qualifying industrial process" are defined in s. 1 (2) of the Act of 1966, see p. 179, letter F, ante.

A cylinders. Consequently I am of opinion that the cylinders are eligible for grant under the Act of 1966.

In the course of the correspondence which passed between the parties before these proceedings were launched the Board expressed the view that no grant is payable under the Act of 1966 on containers in any form. I can find no justification in the Act of 1966 for this broad statement. In this respect, the Board, has,

B in my judgment, misconstrued the Act of 1966.

I now reach the question of the nature and extent of the Board's discretion under the Industrial Development Act 1966. That the Board has a discretion is not disputed. The plaintiff company say that this arises from the fact that s. 13 (1) provides that approved capital expenditure means (3) expenditure approved by the Board for the purposes of the grant. Once expenditure has been so approved,

C they say that no further discretion is conferred on the Board by the use (4) of the word "may" in s. 1 (1) which must be construed as conferring a power coupled with a duty to exercise it in respect of the expenditure so approved. In this connection I was referred to the well-known case of Julius v. Lord Bishop of Oxford (5), and in particular to the speech of EARL CAIRNS, L.C. (6), and to Re Baker, Nichols v. Baker (7). The Board, on the other hand, contends that the

D Act of 1966 confers on it a discretion whether or not to make a grant in any particular case which is wholly uncontrolled by anything in the Act of 1966 and derives from the word "may" in s. 1. The Board submits that the words "approved by them for the purposes of the grant" in the definition section (8) relate only to quantum. Thus, for instance, if an applicant for a grant has expended £10,000 on providing plant which would otherwise rank for grant but

E could have been obtained for £8,000, the Board could approve the expenditure for the purposes of the grant to the extent of £8,000 only. I can see no reason for restricting these words to approval on grounds relating only to quantum. In my judgment, the word "may" in s. 1 and the reference to approval for grant in the definition section refer to one and the same discretion. The Board has a discretion whether to approve the making of a grant in any particular case or not to do so.

F In the exercise of this discretion it can approve the whole expenditure, refuse to approve any of it or approve part only of it for the purposes of the grant. This discretion, however, must be lawfully exercised. It must be exercised impartially; it must not be exercised arbitrarily. It must be exercised in good faith so as to promote the policy and object of the Act of 1966. (See Padfield v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (9), per LORD REID.) If in any case it were

G established that the Board in reaching a conclusion had misdirected itself about the meaning of the Act of 1966 or as to the facts or as to the relevance or irrelevance of particular facts, it is possible that an exercise of the discretion founded on that conclusion could be assailed as unlawful (Padfield v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (10)). The policy and object of the Act of 1966 must be determined by construing the Act as a whole (see ibid., per LORD REID (11))

H in the light of its terms and of any properly admissible extraneous considerations but without regard to other extraneous matters, such, for instance, as what is usually referred to as the Parliamentary history of the statute.

I have indicated earlier what I consider to be the intention and policy of this Act and, in my judgment, the Industrial Development Act 1966 imposes a duty on the Board to exercise its discretion in accordance with that intention and policy.

I The discretion is otherwise unfettered. Whether any particular equipment is machinery or plant within the meaning of the Act of 1966 is a question of law

(3) For the relevant definition, see p. 179, letter I, ante.

(4) for the relevant terms of s. 1 (1) see p. 179, letter E, ante.

(5) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 42; (1880), 5 App. Cas. 214.

(6) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. at p. 47; (1880), 5 App. Cas. at p. 222.

(7) (1890), 44 Ch.D. 262.

(8) See s. 13 (1) of the Act of 1966, definition of "approved capital expenditure".

(9) [1968] 1 All E.R. 694 at p. 699.

(10) [1968] 1 All E.R. 694.

(11) [1968] 1 All E.R. at p. 699.

depending on the construction of the Act of 1966, but whether, if it is machinery or plant within that Act, it should be approved for the purposes of the grant, is a matter to be decided by the Board in the exercise of its discretion in accordance with the intention and policy of the statute.

In the course of the correspondence in the present case the Board stated its position as follows in a letter dated Oct. 24, 1967:

“ It has occurred to the Board’s legal advisers that you may not appreciate the significance of the government policy underlying the investment grants scheme. The Board takes the view that it would be inconsistent with such policy to make grants in the case of any equipment such as that in dispute, which the Board regards as serving primarily a distributive function, even if, which is not admitted, the payment of those grants would be authorised by the Act. For this reason, even if your clients were successful in obtaining declarations favourable to them on the questions raised in the summons, the Board would nevertheless, in the exercise of its discretion, feel bound to refuse to make a grant.”

The Board also has adopted another general rule of practice not to approve for grant expenditure on items of machinery or plant which individually cost less than £25 however great the number of such individual items provided at any one time may be. In the course of the exercise of the discretion of the kind which the Board has under this Act, it is inevitable that a body of precedents will accumulate in the department and that certain classifications of what will or will not be approved will become established. This does not mean that each application should not be considered on its merits. If the view that it is inconsistent with government policy to make grants in the case of any equipment serving primarily a distributive function means that grants should not be made in respect of vehicles, this would depend not on government policy but on the interpretation of the Act of 1966; but presumably it is meant to have a much wider significance. If it means that expenditure on plant which is not a vehicle within the meaning of the Act of 1966 but primarily serves a distributive function will be disapproved by the Board because approval would be inconsistent with government policy, an exercise of the discretion for this reason might, I think, be assailable on the ground that the Board ought to exercise the discretion not in the light of government policy but of the policy of Parliament expressed in or inferred from the statute. I am not, however, asked to decide any question about this and I do not propose to do so. If the question had been asked in the originating summons, evidence might have been filed which I have not got. Moreover, although the Board has, in the letter to which I have referred, expressed an intention to refuse approval, it has not yet done so and it is not for me to attempt to in any way control the exercise of the discretion, notwithstanding that after its exercise another court may be asked to say whether it has been well exercised.

I am asked by the summons to declare that the Board is not entitled to decline to make a grant towards the capital expenditure on cylinders on the sole ground that, as is the fact, each cylinder costs less than £25. The average cost of a cylinder is about £20. They are bought by the plaintiff company in very large quantities. In the period of twelve months ended on Sept. 30, 1966, the company expended the sum of £1,707,000 in the provision for use in its business of such cylinders and the evidence contains an estimate that in the three years ending on Sept. 30, 1968, the total expenditure by the company in the provision of such cylinders will exceed £4,000,000. I can well understand that on administrative grounds the Board might consider it unreasonable that it should be required to entertain applications for grants in respect of small expenditures. In the present case the expenditure is not small because the cylinders are bought in bulk, although the cost of any one cylinder is small. This question was raised by amendment when the case was opened. The Board, who had been given a few days’ notice of the plaintiff company’s intention to ask leave to amend, has filed no

A evidence and did not seek an adjournment for this purpose. I have no indication, therefore, of the nature or purpose of what has been called in argument "the £25 rule", other than appears in the exhibited correspondence, the effect of which I have stated. The existence, however, of this practice is admitted, and I doubt if any evidence would assist me very much. I, therefore, feel able to deal with this question on the material before me. I agree with the plaintiff company's submission that to refuse to consider an application for approval for a grant in respect of a bulk purchase of a large number of items individually costing less than £25 solely (and I emphasise solely) on the ground of the low individual cost of the items would not be an exercise of the discretion but an abrogation of it. As I have already said, every application—that is, every genuine and reasonable application—must be considered on its merits. Refusal to consider an application merely on the ground of the low cost of the individual equipment provided involves ignoring whatever characteristics the application has meriting approval. Low individual costs cannot, in my judgment, be so weighty and conclusive a consideration (and I make no attempt otherwise to assess the importance of low individual costs) as to make all other considerations irrelevant.

D Accordingly, I think that this question in the originating summons should be answered affirmatively and that I should make a declaration accordingly.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Stafford Clark & Co. (for the plaintiff company); Solicitor, Board of Trade.

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

JAKUES v. LLOYD D. GEORGE & PARTNERS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning, M.R., Edmund Davies, L.J., and Cairns, J.), February 19, 20, 1968.]

F Estate Agent—Commission—Agreement to pay commission on introduction of person willing to sign a document capable of becoming a contract to purchase—Misrepresentation as to effect of written clause governing commission—Introduction of person who signed a contract subject to landlord granting licence to assign lease—Licence refused—Whether agent entitled to commission.

G The plaintiff was the proprietor of a café with a lease which had seven years to run. In 1965, he was desirous of selling the café and orally agreed with a representative of the defendants, a firm of estate agents, to sell for £2,500 cash; the representative told the plaintiff that if the defendants found a suitable purchaser and the deal went through, he would have to pay the defendants £250. He signed a printed form of particulars of sale which contained the following clause: "Should you be instrumental in introducing a person willing to sign a document capable of becoming a contract to purchase at a price, which at any stage of the negotiations has been agreed by me, I agree to pay you a commission of £250 . . ." That clause was not explained to the plaintiff; and a copy of it was not left with the plaintiff. The defendants introduced S. who signed a contract of sale, under which the plaintiff was to sell the café to S. for £2,500 and S. was to pay the defendants £250 deposit as selling agents, the agreement being subject to the landlord granting a licence to assign and S. supplying satisfactory references for that purpose. S. paid the deposit to the defendants, but his references were unsatisfactory and the landlord refused to grant a licence to assign. The plaintiff told the defendants to release the deposit to S., but they claimed that they were entitled to commission of £250. S. having recovered £250 from the plaintiff, the plaintiff claimed to recover it from the defendants who counterclaimed £250 commission.

Held: (i) the defendants were not entitled to the commission for which they counterclaimed because:

(a) (per LORD DENNING, M.R., and CAIRNS, J.) the meaning of the clause was so uncertain that it was not enforceable (see p. 190, letter H, and p. 194, letter F, post); and

(b) (per LORD DENNING, M.R., and EDMUND DAVIES, L.J.) the defendants' representative misrepresented to the plaintiff the effect of the clause, and therefore the defendants were not entitled to enforce the clause so as to recover the stipulated commission in the circumstances (see p. 191, letter B, and p. 193, letter G, post).

Sheggia v. Gradwell ([1963] 3 All E.R. 114) distinguished.

(ii) accordingly the plaintiff was entitled to recover £250 from the defendants (see p. 191, letter F, p. 193, letter H, and p. 194, letter H, post).

Appeal allowed.

[As to estate agents' commission, see, 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 198, 199, para. 457; and for cases on the subject, see 1 DIGEST (Repl.) 594-596, 1909-1925.]

Cases referred to:

Ackroyd & Sons v. Hasan, [1960] 2 All E.R. 254; [1960] 2 Q.B. 144; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 810; 1 Digest (Repl.) 589, 1893.

Curtis v. Chemical Cleaning and Dying Co., Ltd., [1951] 1 All E.R. 631; [1951] 1 K.B. 805; 3 Digest (Repl.) 103, 289.

Dellafiora v. Lester, Lester v. Adrian Barr & Co., Ltd., [1962] 3 All E.R. 393; [1962] 1 W.L.R. 1208; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 8, 1925a.

Hocker v. Waller, (1924), 29 Com. Cas. 296; 1 Digest (Repl.) 581, 1859.

L'Estrange v. F. Graucob, Ltd., [1934] All E.R. Rep. 16; [1934] 2 K.B. 394; 103 L.J.K.B. 730; 152 L.T. 164; 12 Digest (Repl.) 69, 395.

Midgley Estates Ltd. v. Hand, [1952] 1 All E.R. 1394; [1952] 2 Q.B. 432; 1 Digest (Repl.) 595, 1913.

Nicolene, Ltd. v. Simmonds, [1953] 1 All E.R. 822; [1953] 1 Q.B. 543; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 717; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 274, 458a.

Reed (Dennis), Ltd. v. Goody, [1950] 1 All E.R. 919; [1950] 2 K.B. 277; 1 Digest (Repl.) 594, 1911.

Scammell v. Ouston, [1941] 1 All E.R. 14; [1941] A.C. 251; 110 L.J.K.B. 197; 164 L.T. 379; 39 Digest (Repl.) 448, 31.

Sheggia v. Gradwell, [1963] 3 All E.R. 114; sub nom Schegsia v. Gradwell, [1963] 1 W.L.R. 1049; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 8, 1914a.

Wilkinson (A.L.), Ltd. v. Brown, [1966] 1 All E.R. 509; [1966] 1 W.L.R. 194; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 10, 1914b.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE POTTER at Bow county court on June 28, 1967. On Dec. 21, 1966, the plaintiff was ordered by His Honour JUDGE STOCKDALE at Ilford county court to pay £250 to one Sullivan, who had paid that sum to the defendants, as estate agents, as a deposit for the purchase of the plaintiff's café. The plaintiff claimed this sum from the defendants who counterclaimed for the same amount as commission. His Honour JUDGE POTTER found for the plaintiff on the claim and for the defendants on the counterclaim. The facts are set out in the judgment of LORD DENNING, M.R.

G. K. Rice for the plaintiff.

Leon Brittan for the defendants.

LORD DENNING, M.R.: The plaintiff, Mr. Jaques, was the proprietor of a café business at 159, Chingford Road, Walthamstow. He had a lease which had seven years to run; but he was advised by his doctor that he ought to give up the business. So he put it into the hands of two estate agents for sale in the middle of 1965. They had not found a purchaser by October, 1965. Then a

- A Mr. Higgins went along to see the plaintiff. He was a representative of the defendants, another firm of estate agents called Lloyd D. George & Partners, Ltd. He told the plaintiff that he had heard that he was wanting to sell the business, and that he would like to assist him. The plaintiff told him that the price he would like to get was £2,950. Mr Higgins went away. He came back again on Nov. 28, 1965, and said: "I have found a prospective purchaser; he will pay £2,500."
- B The plaintiff replied: "I am willing to sell for £2,500 if it is a cash price." Mr. Higgins said: "Yes, it will be a cash price." He added: "If we find a suitable purchaser and the sale goes through, you will pay us £250." Then Mr. Higgins produced a printed form of particulars of sale. He wrote down the details of the business and he asked the plaintiff to sign the form. There were conditions on the form. Mr Higgins said: "You realise we are sole agents."
- C The plaintiff said: "No, it is already in the hands of two agents." Thereupon Mr. Higgins struck out one of the clauses in the form. The plaintiff signed the form with the remaining clauses in it. Mr. Higgins did not explain them to the plaintiff. He went away taking the form with him. He did not leave a copy with the plaintiff. Unbeknown to the plaintiff the form contained these important clauses:

D "1. I hereby instruct you to use your best endeavours to sell the above in accordance with the terms appearing below . . .

"3. Should you be instrumental in introducing a person willing to sign a document capable of becoming a contract to purchase at a price, which at any stage of the negotiations has been agreed by me, I agree to pay you a commission of £250 or 7½ per cent. of the selling price, whichever is the greater."

- E A few days later, on Dec. 3, 1965, Mr. Higgins brought along the prospective purchaser, a Mr Sullivan and his wife. The plaintiff did not think much of them. They were not suitable people to run a café. He told Mr. Higgins so. Mr. Higgins said: "What do you want to bloody-well worry about? As long as you get your money, you can hop it." Mr Higgins produced a printed form of contract of sale. Under it, the plaintiff was to sell the business to Mr. Sullivan for £2,500.
- F Mr. Sullivan was to pay a deposit of £250 to the defendants as selling agents for the vendor. There was also this:

"This agreement is subject to the landlord under the said lease granting his licence to assign and the purchaser hereby agrees to supply satisfactory references for this purpose."

- G The plaintiff and Mr. Sullivan signed the form. Mr. Higgins got them both to instruct the same solicitor. He said: "If you take our solicitor, we can get the deal through quickly." So the one firm of solicitors acted for the vendor, the purchaser and the agents. Mr. Sullivan paid his deposit of £250 to the defendants and gave the names of four referees. The solicitors took up the references.
- H but they were far from satisfactory. In consequence, the landlord refused to grant a licence to assign, on the simple ground that the purchaser, Mr. Sullivan, was not a suitable person to buy the business. So the sale fell through. The plaintiff told the defendants to release the deposit to Mr. Sullivan. The defendants gave the retort direct: "Not bloody likely." They claimed that they were entitled to commission, £250, equal to the amount of the deposit, although the sale had
- I never gone through.

So the parties went to law. In the first place, the purchaser, Mr. Sullivan, issued proceedings against the vendor, the plaintiff, and the agents, the defendants, claiming back his deposit of £250. On Dec. 21, 1966, the county court judge gave judgment against the plaintiff for £250 and costs. He held that the agents had received the deposit as agents for the vendor, and that the vendor had to pay it back to the purchaser, although he had not received a penny of it himself. Naturally enough, the plaintiff then turned round on the defendants and said: "You received this £250 as my agents. Pay it back to me as money had and received." The defendants had no answer, but at the doors of the county court they put in a counterclaim for commission. They said that, in the terms of their printed form, they were entitled to £250 commission which wiped out the deposit. The judge held that the defendants were entitled to stick to the £250, although they had done nothing to deserve it. He said: "I have the greatest sympathy for the plaintiff, but I am driven to decide against him." He referred to a dictum of UPJOHN, L.J., in Ackroyd & Sons v. Hasan (1), and asked himself: Does the clause cover the event which has happened? As it did, he held that the defendants were entitled to their commission. The plaintiff appeals to this court.

We have had many cases on commission claimed by estate agents. The common understanding of mankind is that commission is only payable by the vendor when the property is sold. It is payable out of the purchase money; but some agents have sought, by their printed forms, to get commission even though the property has not been sold or the purchase money received. At first, it was "when a binding contract is signed". Next, it was if they introduce a person "ready, able and willing to purchase". Then they missed out "able" and wanted commission if they only got a "prospective" purchaser or a "willing" purchaser who was unable to purchase. Now we have got to the widest clause that I have yet seen.

"Should you be instrumental in introducing a person willing to sign a document capable of becoming a contract to purchase . . ."

Can an estate agent insert such a clause and get away with it? I think not. I regard this clause as wholly unreasonable and totally uncertain. Suppose a man signed a piece of paper which had just got on it the address of the premises and the price. That could be said to be "a document capable of becoming a contract", even though there was not an offer contained in it. So, also, if a man signed a document which was expressly "subject to contract"; or even signed a blank form with all the blanks to be filled in. It might be said to be "a document capable of becoming a contract". Even if the man was quite unable to complete, he might still be a person "willing" to sign. So we are faced with the question in this case: to what extent can estate agents go in putting a form before vendors to sign?

The principles which, in my opinion, are applicable are these: When an estate agent is employed to find a purchaser for a business or a house, the ordinary understanding of mankind is that the commission is payable out of the purchase price when the matter is concluded. If the agent seeks to depart from that ordinary and well-understood term, then he must make it perfectly plain to his client. He must bring it home to him so as to make sure he agrees to it. When his representative produces a printed form and puts it before the client to sign, he should explain its effect to him, making it clear that it goes beyond the usual understanding in these matters. In the absence of such explanation, a client is entitled to assume that the form contains nothing unreasonable or oppressive. If he does not read it and the form is found afterwards to contain a term which is wholly unreasonable and totally uncertain, as this is, then the estate agent cannot enforce it against the innocent vendor. Applying this principle, I think that the clause in this case was wholly unreasonable and totally uncertain. It can and should be rejected, leaving the agent to his commission on the usual basis, namely, that, if the sale goes through, he gets his commission. That follows from the principle laid down by the House of Lords in Scammell v. Ouston (2), together with the corollary stated by this court in Nicolene, Ltd. v. Simmonds (3). The other principle is that an estate agent cannot rely on the printed form when his representative misrepresents the content or effect of the form. In Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Goody (4), the representative said that it was "merely a routine matter"

(1) [1960] 2 All E.R. 254 at p. 257; [1960] 2 Q.B. 144 at p. 154.

(2) [1941] 1 All E.R. 14; [1941] A.C. 251.

(3) [1953] 1 All E.R. 822; [1953] 1 Q.B. 543.

(4) [1950] 1 All E.R. 919 at pp. 924, 925; [1950] 2 K.B. 277 at p. 287.

A when he asked the seller to sign. In the present case, he said: "If we find a suitable purchaser and the deal goes through, you pay £250." That is equivalent to a representation that the usual terms apply. It was a misrepresentation of the effect of the document. No person can hold another to a printed form which has been induced by a misrepresentation, albeit an innocent misrepresentation. I well remember SCRUTTON, L.J., in L'Estrange v. F. Graucob, Ltd. (5) saying with emphasis: "... In the absence of fraud, or, I will add, misrepresentation, the person signing it is bound."

Applying this other principle I think that the agent misrepresented the effect of the document, and for this reason it can and should be avoided, leaving the agent to claim for commission on the usual basis. It was said that this misrepresentation was not pleaded. True enough; but the claim for commission was not inserted until the last moment. I see no reason why, in answer to it, the plaintiff should not put forward the misrepresentation, especially, as Mr. Higgins did not go into the witness box to say anything to the contrary.

C Counsel for the defendants relied very much on Midgley Estates, Ltd. v. Hand (6), and Sheggia v. Gradwell (7), in this court. Those cases are distinguishable. In each of them the vendor had a remedy. In Midgley Estates, Ltd. v. Hand (6), D he forfeited the deposit. In Sheggia v. Gradwell (7) he had a remedy against the purchaser for damages for breach of contract. Those cases have no application to a case such as the present one where the deal goes off without any fault of the vendor and he is without any remedy against the purchaser.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal. The plaintiff is entitled to the £250 deposit paid to the defendants. The counterclaim of the defendants for commission should be dismissed. I may add that the plaintiff did not claim in this action the costs which he had to pay in the action brought against him by Mr. Sullivan. He might, perhaps, have recovered them as the client did in Dellaflora v. Lester. Lester v. Adrian Barr & Co., Ltd. (8); but it would have to be raised as a claim for breach of duty by the agent in not handing over the deposit when told to. It is too late to raise it now in this action, and, when this was pointed F out, counsel for the plaintiff did not pursue it.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and hold that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the £250.

EDMUND DAVIES, L.J.: This is yet another of these difficult and by no means infrequent cases arising out of a claim for commission by a firm of estate agents. In Midgley Estates, Ltd. v. Hand (6), where the agent was held G entitled to commission on introducing a purchaser who signed a legally binding contract even though he was unable to raise enough money and forfeited his deposit, JENKINS, L.J., said (9):

"... prima facie, the intention of the parties to a contract of this type is likely to be that the commission stipulated for should only be payable in the event of an actual sale resulting. The vendor puts his property into the hands of an agent for sale and, generally speaking, contemplates that, if a completed sale results, and not otherwise, he will be liable for the commission, which he will then pay out of the purchase price... but this does not mean that the contract, if its terms are clear, should not have effect in accordance with those terms even if they do involve the result that the agent's commission is earned and becomes payable although the sale in respect of which it is claimed for some reason or another turns out to be abortive."

By today the cases on this branch of the law have become many and not always

(5) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 16 at p. 19; [1934] 2 K.B. 394 at p. 403.

(6) [1952] 1 All E.R. 1394; [1952] 2 Q.B. 432.

(7) [1963] 3 All E.R. 114.

(8) [1962] 3 All E.R. 393.

(9) [1952] 1 All E.R. at pp. 1396, 1397; [1952] 2 Q.B. at pp. 435, 436.

consistent. But I would respectfully adopt the summation of their effect expressed by HARMAN, L.J., A. L. Wilkinson, Ltd. v. Brown (10), in the following words:

"It comes to this in the end, that before it is found that the commission is payable, the court must be satisfied that the condition on which it is payable has been fulfilled. There is nothing more in it than that. There is no question of construing the document pro or contra the estate agent. It is a question of what, in the events which happened, can be said as to the fulfilment of the vital condition."

The effectiveness of such a test depends, of course, on the employment of perfectly clear language in expressing the condition the fulfilment of which entitles the estate agent to his commission. It is, for example, conceivable that an owner may be willing to bind himself to pay commission for the mere introduction of one who offers to purchase at the specified or minimum price, but such a construction of the contract would require clear and unequivocal language (see Hocker v. Waller (11)), and if the language of the contract prepared by the agent is ambiguous it should, notwithstanding the foregoing observation of HARMAN, L.J., be interpreted contra proferentem. Great (and at times unattractive) ingenuity has been shown by some estate agents to ensure their being paid commission even although, through no fault of the vendor, no concluded bargain has resulted. Sheggia v. Gradwell (12) was such a case, and it is no wonder that counsel for the defendants now strongly relies on it. For the reasons tellingly given by SALMON, L.J., in A. L. Wilkinson, Ltd. v. Brown (13), however, it would be undesirable to extend the scope of that decision, for the consequence might well be to compel the courts to give effect to ridiculous bargains where the parties were in reality not on equal terms, the one being perfectly familiar with the language and effect of the contract he was proffering, the other coming to it dewy-eyed and venturing forth into wholly unknown territory.

One ventures to express the hope that the clause (14) here relied on is not in common use among estate agents, for it is likely to trap all except the most wary. Nevertheless, however much to be condemned, is cl. 3 clear and certain? And did the defendants in fact introduce to the would-be vendor "a person willing to sign a document capable of becoming a contract to purchase at a price which . . . has been agreed"? Those two questions do not, as it seems to me, of necessity demand the same answer. In other words, the exact scope and operation of the clause may, when considered in general, be uncertain (and counsel for the defendants did not contend otherwise), and yet, at the same time, one may be satisfied that, having regard to later events, the condition laid down by cl. 3 was in truth fulfilled. I think that may well be the case here. One may conjure up a number of hypothetical cases (and some, but by no means all, have already been adverted to by LORD DENNING, M.R.) and remain in doubt whether the condition contained in cl. 3 has been fulfilled in those circumstances. Nevertheless, whatever the degree of doubt which might arise in relation to such other cases, it may well be that (as counsel for the defendants has submitted) there can be no possible room for doubt that the defendants did in truth introduce in Mr. Sullivan a person who was not only "willing to sign a document capable of becoming a contract" but also one who actually entered into a binding written contract to purchase the plaintiff's premises. In this context, it is to be observed that the county court judge's note of counsel for the plaintiff's opening speech concludes with the following sentence: "Concede document signed was capable of becoming a contract to purchase." For my part, I think that it may well be that counsel for the defendants is correct in submitting that, whatever else cl. 3 may mean,

(10) [1966] 1 All E.R. 509 at p. 510.

(11) (1942), 29 Com. Cas. 296.

(12) [1963] 3 All E.R. 114.

(13) [1966] 1 All E.R. at pp. 514, 515.

(14) The terms of the clause (cl. 3) are at p. 189, letter D, ante.

A it unmistakably does involve the vendor in the payment of commission in the event (which happened here) of a binding contract being entered into.

While thus indicating the way in which I should in all probability have decided this point, however, I do not, in the light of the other circumstances, consider it necessary to express any final conclusion on it. I approach the case generally in this way. On any view, cl. 3 is ambiguous in its meaning and scope, and
 B commission could become payable thereunder on the happening of one or other of a variety of events. If, when proffering a contract ambiguous as to payment of commission (as in this case), the estate agent there and then explains away all ambiguity by orally specifying the circumstances which must arise before he could become entitled to commission, it would clearly be unconscionable for him to claim commission notwithstanding that those circumstances have never
 C arisen. Would he, however, be pursuing a claim which, in addition to being unconscionable, could not be sustained in law? In L'Estrange v. F. Graucob, Ltd. (15), SCRUTTON, L.J., said:

“When a document containing contractual terms is signed, then, in the absence of fraud, or, I will add, misrepresentation, the party signing it is bound, and it is wholly immaterial whether he has read the document or not.”

No suggestion of fraud arises in the present case, but was there misrepresentation? For the reasons and in the circumstances already referred to by LORD DENNING, M.R., I think that there clearly was. That being so, what consequences flow? Despite the assurance by the defendants' accredited representative that the E commission would be payable only if the sale went through and Mr. Sullivan paid cash, did they become entitled to payment even though the sale fell through and Mr. Sullivan paid no cash? I should answer that question in the affirmative with the greatest reluctance and only if the law compelled me to arrive at so unrighteous a conclusion. Fortunately, I do not think that it does. The facts in Curtis v. Chemical Cleaning and Dyeing Co., Ltd. (16) differed from those of F the present case, but there, also, one contracting party's agent had innocently misrepresented the legal effect of the document which the other party signed, and the former was held disentitled to enforce the contract which ex facie had thereby been concluded. I see no reason for adopting a different approach in the present case. In the result, even assuming that, putting the narrowest construction on the wording of cl. 3 of the contract here under consideration, the event thereby contemplated had arrived, the accompanying circumstances
 G were such that the defendants were nevertheless not entitled to recover any part of the stipulated commission. Their agent having misrepresented the position, it was not open to them to insist on payment notwithstanding the turn of events which had completely defeated the very purpose for which the plaintiff (being thus assured) entered into the contract.

H Accordingly, although not on exactly the same grounds, I concur with LORD DENNING, M.R., in holding that this appeal should be allowed.

CAIRNS, J.: I agree that this appeal must be allowed. I rest my judgment on the vagueness of the commission clause relied on by the defendants. In Ackroyd & Sons v. Hasan (17), UPJOHN, L.J., said:

I “When an agent claims commission from a principal there are certain principles of law applicable which cannot be doubted. First: when an agent claims that he has earned the right to commission the test is whether on the proper interpretation of the contract between the principal and the agent the event has happened on which commission is to be paid. Secondly: there are no special principles of construction applicable to commission contracts with estate agents. Thirdly: contracts under which a principal is bound to pay commission for an introduction which does not result in a sale must be expressed in clear language.” A

(15) [1934] All E.R. Rep. at p. 19; [1934] 2 K.B. at p. 403.

(16) [1951] 1 All E.R. 631; [1951] 1 K.B. 805.

(17) [1960] 2 All E.R. at p. 257; [1960] 2 Q.B. at p. 154.

The necessity for the term being clear was emphasised also by JENKINS, L.J., in Midgley Estates, Ltd. v. Hand (18).

In the clause relied on in this case, I can find no clear meaning at all. It might be taken to mean that commission would become payable if the proposed purchaser signed any document which could be completed so as to form the contract of sale, so that the signature on a blank piece of paper might be sufficient. It might mean that the document must be such as would become a contract of sale if the vendor added his signature. It might mean or include a contract subject to a condition which required no further action on the part of the parties; for example, a condition in the terms “if the bank rate is not raised before the date of completion”. I see no way of determining which of these or various other possible meanings was intended. Counsel for the defendants argued that, whatever meaning is adopted, it must be wide enough to cover an actually completed contract of purchase and that that is sufficient to enable the agents to recover when such a contract has been executed. In my view, that will not do. For the clause to have legal effect, it must be ascertainable at the time of the contract of agency what class of events will attract commission. I accept that, if there is such a class of events, the clause may be valid although it might be difficult to define the exact boundaries of the class; but here I have no idea what the class is intended to be. B C D

Counsel for the defendants, further contends that the case is governed by the decision of the majority of this court in Sheggia v. Gradwell (19). That seems to me to be quite a different case. The literal meaning of the express words of the commission clause there was clear enough. The only question was whether the wide literal meaning could be cut down by importing the proviso that the person introduced must be ready, willing and able to purchase. E

In this case, because the clause has no clear meaning at all, it is, in my judgment, of no effect. This does not mean that, if a sale actually went through, the agent would get no remuneration. He could recover either commission on the basis that, once this clause is gone, an undertaking to pay commission on the usual terms must be implied or possibly on the basis of a quantum meruit. F

As to counsel for the plaintiff's other argument, which has found favour with both my lords, the argument founded on the misrepresentation of which the plaintiff gave evidence, my view is that, as no plea of misrepresentation or estoppel appeared on the pleading, this point was strictly not open to the plaintiff. It is true that the defendants' counterclaim had been raised by a last-minute amendment, but I consider that, if this answer to it was to be relied on, it should have been raised at the latest at the end of the plaintiff's case and before counsel for the defendants had elected to call no evidence. I gather that it was not raised until counsel for the plaintiff made his final speech, and I take the view that it was then too late. G H

However, on the former ground I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Edwin Roast & Co., Barking (for the plaintiff); Nairnsey, Fisher & Co. (for the defendants). I

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

(18) [1952] 1 All E.R. at pp. 1396, 1397; [1952] 2 Q.B. at pp. 435, 436.

(19) [1963] 3 All E.R. 114.

A

THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

OWNERS OF MOTORSHIP SAPPORO MARU v. OWNERS OF STEAM TANKER STATUE OF LIBERTY.

B

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Sir Jocelyn Simon, P.), March 18, 1968.]

Shipping—Collision Evidence—Radar echoes recorded mechanically—Real evidence—Radar not monitored by human agency—Whether photographic record admissible in evidence in collision action.

C

The record made, by purely mechanical means and without human intervention, by a radar set at a shore radar station, in respect of the echoes of two ships involved in a collision at sea, is in the nature of real evidence and is admissible in evidence in a collision action; and the same principle will apply to other types of real recordings (see p. 196, letters F and H, post).

R. v. Maqsood Ali. R. v. Ashiq Hussain ([1965] 2 All E.R. 464) considered.

D

[Editorial Note. Proposed legislation is now before Parliament to amend the Evidence Act, 1938, and to abolish the hearsay rule and reform the law of evidence in other respects; the proposed new legislation is to include provisions directed to the admissibility in evidence in civil proceedings of the products of computers and other business machines (see Civil Evidence Bill 1968 (No. 114), cl. 5, cl. 10).

E

As to the admissibility in evidence of photographic recordings, see SUPPLEMENT to 15 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) para. 486.]

Cases referred to:

F

Myers v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1964] 2 All E.R. 881; [1965] A.C. at p. 1009; [1964] 3 W.L.R. at p. 153; 128 J.P. 481; 48 Cr. App. Rep. 348; affg. sub nom. R. v. Myers, [1964] 1 All E.R. 877; sub nom. Myers v. Director of Public Prosecution, [1965] A.C. 1001; [1964] 3 W.L.R. 145; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 255, 377a.

R. v. Maqsood Ali, R. v. Ashiq Hussain, [1965] 2 All E.R. 464; [1966] 1 Q.B. 688; [1965] 3 W.L.R. 229; 129 J.P. 396; 49 Cr. App. Rep. 230; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 261, 4063Aa.

R. v. Senat, R. v. Sin (Mar. 16, 1968), The Times; 112 Sol. Jo. 252.

G

Summons for directions.

On a summons for directions in a pending action, folio 20 of 1965, between the plaintiffs, the owners of the motor ship Sapporo Maru, and the defendants the owners of the steam tanker, Statue of Liberty, the question arose whether a record on cinematograph film of the radar echoes, recorded mechanically, of the vessels involved in the collision should be admitted in evidence. The summons was heard in chambers, and is reported on this point by permission of the President, SIR JOCELYN SIMON. The collision occurred in the River Thames.

H

J. D. H. Rochford for the plaintiffs.

Michael Thomas for the defendants.

I

SIR JOCELYN SIMON, P.: This summons arises out of a collision which occurred in December, 1964, in Sea Reach of the river Thames between the plaintiffs' vessel, the Sapporo Maru, which was proceeding down river, and the defendants' vessel, the Statue of Liberty, which was proceeding up river. The question which arises on the summons is whether a certain piece of evidence should be admitted to prove such facts as can be deduced from it. What the plaintiffs ask for and what the defendants resist is that a film strip from a shore radar station should be admitted in evidence.

At a shore station at Thames Haven there is a radar set in operation. It records, ultimately on a cinematograph film, echoes of vessels which are within its range. It is said that the echoes of the two ships involved in this collision appear on the film and that a succession of photographs from the film will throw light on where and how the collision occurred and the responsibility of each ship. Normally this radar and screen are monitored by human agency, but on this occasion—for reasons I was not told, nor needed to be—it was not monitored. The film strip, however, is available. The defendants resist the admissibility of this strip of film on the broad ground that it is a piece of evidence produced purely mechanically without human intervention and as such offends against the hearsay rule. Counsel for the defendants relies on Myers v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1). He has argued robustly that it makes all the difference that no human agency is available to verify or explain what the machine records. The Evidence Act, 1938, does not render this sort of evidence admissible, in his submission.

I am clearly of the opinion that the evidence is admissible, and could, indeed, be a valuable piece of evidence in the elucidation of the facts in dispute. In a case concerned with mechanical recordings by tape recorder, R. v. Maqsum Ali, R. v. Ashiq Hussain (2), the Court of Criminal Appeal, in ruling that the tape recordings were admissible, stated (3) that it could see no difference in principle between a tape recording and a photograph. See also R. v. Senat, R. v. Sin (4). Moreover, R. v. Maqsum Ali (2) makes it plain that we are not here concerned with evidence admissible under the Evidence Act, 1938, because that Act is not applicable to criminal proceedings. Counsel for the defendants seeks to distinguish R. v. Maqsum Ali (2) from the present case on the ground that in the former case the police officer set up a recording machine to overhear part of a recorded conversation and claimed to be able to identify the voices recorded. I should be sorry to think that that was a ground for distinction; for in R. v. Maqsum Ali (2), the language was a dialect of Punjabi, not understandable by Urdu experts, let alone by English police officers. In my view the evidence in question in the present case has nothing to do with the hearsay rule and does not depend on the Evidence Act, 1938. It is in the nature of real evidence, which is conveniently defined in COCKLE'S CASES AND STATUTES ON EVIDENCE (10th Edn., 1963) at p. 348:

“Real evidence is evidence afforded by the production of physical objects for inspection or other examination by the court.”

If tape recordings are admissible, it seems equally a photograph of radar reception is admissible—as, indeed, any other type of photograph. It would be an absurd distinction that a photograph should be admissible if the camera were operated manually by a photographer, but not if it were operated by a trip or clock mechanism. Similarly, if evidence of weather conditions were relevant, the law would affront common sense if it were to say that those could be proved by a person who looked at a barometer from time to time, but not by producing a barograph record. So too with other types of dial recordings. Again, cards from clocking-in and out machines are frequently admitted in accident cases. The law is bound these days to take cognisance of the fact that mechanical means replace human effort.

Ruling accordingly.

Solicitors: Middleton, Lewis & Co. (for the plaintiffs), Norton, Rose, Botterell & Roche (for the defendants).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

(1) [1964] 2 All E.R. 881; [1965] A.C. 1001.

(2) [1965] 2 All E.R. 464; [1966] 1 Q.B. 688.

(3) [1965] 2 All E.R. at p. 469; [1966] 1 Q.B. at p. 701.

(4) (Mar. 16, 1968), The Times; 112 Sol. Jo. 252.

A

LADYMAN v. WIRRAL ESTATES, LTD.

[LIVERPOOL ASSIZES (Fisher, J.), February 12, 1968.]

B

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Business premises—New tenancy for three years “from” May 1, 1963—First rent payable on May 1, 1963—Rent payable in advance—Notice terminating tenancy on Apr. 30, 1966—Validity of notice—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2 c. 56), s. 25 (4).

C

Time Computation—Period within which an act may be done—New tenancy of business premises for three years “from” May 1, 1963—Rent payable in advance, first payment on May 1, 1963—Notice terminating tenancy on Apr. 30, 1966—Validity of notice—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2 c. 56), s. 25 (4).

D

A tenant held business premises under an agreement for a new tenancy which was reached pursuant to the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954. The agreement provided for a tenancy “for the term of three years from May 1, 1963”, at a rent payable quarterly in advance on May 1, Aug. 1, Nov. 1 and Feb. 1, the first of such payments to become due on May 1, 1963. On Sept. 22, 1965, the landlords served on the tenant notice, under s. 25 (1)* of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 “... terminating your tenancy on Apr. 30, 1966.” By s. 25 (4) of the Act of 1954, a notice under s. 25 was not to specify a date of termination earlier than the date on which, apart from Part 2 of that Act, the tenancy would have come to an end by effluxion of time. On the question whether the notice was bad on the ground that the term would not expire until the end of May 1, 1966,

E

Held: the notice was good, because, although the general principle was that a term limited to commence from a certain date commenced on the first moment of the day following that named, yet that was only a prima facie construction of the document of demise; in the present case, however, there was a clear indication from the agreement that the parties had a different intention, for the rent was payable in advance and the first payment was to be made on the day from which the term was to run, viz., May 1, 1963, and, therefore, that day should be included in the term demised, which accordingly began with the beginning of May 1, 1963 (see p. 200, letter A, and p. 199, letter E, post).

F

G

Ackland v. Lutley ((1839), 9 Ad. & El. 879) and Lester v. Garland ([1803-1813] All E.R. Rep. 436) considered.

[Editorial Note. This decision should be considered with Re Figgis ([1968] 1 All E.R. 999.

H

As to a landlord's notice to terminate business tenancy, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 889, 890, para. 1711.

As to the inclusion or exclusion of first or last days in the computation of prescribed periods of time, see 37 HALSBURY'S LAWS 92-99, paras. 161-173; and for cases on the subject, see 45 DIGEST (Repl.) 252-257, 195-250.

For the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 25, see 34 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 410.]

I Cases referred to:

Ackland v. Lutley, (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 879; 8 L.J.Q.B. 164; 112 E.R. 1446; 31 Digest (Repl.) 581, 7013.

Cartwright v. MacCormack, [1963] 1 All E.R. 11; [1963] 1 W.L.R. 18; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 945, 8653a.

English v. Cliff, [1914] 2 Ch. 376; 83 L.J.Ch. 850; 111 L.T. 751; 17 Digest (Repl.) 366, 1721.

* Section 25 (1), so far as material, is set out at p. 198, letter H, post.

- Lester v. Garland*, [1803-13] All E.R. Rep. 436; (1808), 15 Ves. 248; 33 E.R. 748; 45 Digest (Repl.) 254, 211. A
- Sidebottom v. Holland*, [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 617; [1895] 1 Q.B. 378; 64 L.J.Q.B. 200; 72 L.T. 62; 31 Digest (Repl.) 488, 6136.
- Trow v. Ind Coope (West Midlands), Ltd.*, [1967] 2 All E.R. 900; [1967] 2 Q.B. 899; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 633. B

Action.

This was an action by the plaintiff, Arthur Edward Ladyman, the tenant of premises at 52, Park Lane, Liverpool, against the defendants, Wirral Estates, Ltd., the landlords, claiming that a notice given by the landlords under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 25, terminating his tenancy was bad. The facts are set out in the judgment. C

Gerson Newman for the tenant.

J. Turner for the landlords

FISHER, J.: This case raises a very short point under the law relating to landlord and tenant. The plaintiff held premises at 52, Park Lane in the city of Liverpool under an agreement for a lease made on Nov. 22, 1962, from the defendants. The agreement recites that the tenant is in occupation of the property thereafter described under and by virtue of a lease dated Apr. 30, 1958, between the landlords of the one part, and the tenant of the other part. Notice under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, terminating that tenancy on May 1, 1963, was served by the landlords on the tenant, and agreement for terms of a new tenancy, had been reached to commence as from May 1, 1963, on the terms hereinafter appearing. The agreement then continues, by cl. 1; D

“The landlord agrees to let and the tenant agrees to take the tenancy of all that piece of land and premises now in occupation of the tenant situated at 52, Park Lane in the city of Liverpool for the term of three years from May 1, 1963, at a rent payable by four equal instalments in advance on May 1, Aug. 1, Nov. 1, and Feb. 1 in each year.” E

The first of such payments if it became due was to be made on May 1, 1963. On Sept. 22, 1965, the landlords' solicitors served on the tenant a notice under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 in these terms: F

“We, solicitors for the defendants, the landlords of the above-mentioned premises, hereby give you notice terminating your tenancy on Apr. 30, 1966.” G

The premises are agreed to be premises to which Part 2 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, applies, and by s. 25 (1) of that Act it is provided that:

“The landlord may terminate a tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies by a notice given to the tenant in the prescribed form specifying the date at which the tenancy is to come to an end . . .” H

By sub-s. (3) of that section, provision is made for tenancies which could have been brought to an end by notice to quit given by the landlord. Subsection (4) deals with any other tenancy, and provides:

“a notice under this section shall not specify a date of termination earlier than the date on which apart from this Part of the Act the tenancy would have come to an end by effluxion of time.” I

The tenant contends that the notice (in this case the notice given on Sept. 22, 1965) is bad since it states as the date on which the tenancy is terminated Apr. 30, 1966, and the tenant contends that the date on which, apart from the Act of 1954, the tenancy would have come to an end by effluxion of time is not Apr. 30, but May 1. The reason why that contention is put forward is that the agreement for a lease provides that the tenancy is to commence from May 1, 1963. It is conceded by counsel for the tenant that, if the agreement had

- A provided that the tenancy should commence on May 1, 1963, then the notice under the Act of 1954 would be in order. His contention, shortly put, is that, where a lease provides that the term is to commence on a named date, the tenancy commences at the first moment of that date, but that, where a lease provides that the tenancy is to commence from a named date, the tenancy commences at the first moment of the day following. Counsel for the landlords
- B contends that, on the true construction of this agreement for a lease, whatever may be the general rule, it is clear that it was the intention of the parties that the tenancy should commence from the first moment of May 1.

I have been referred to a number of text-books and decided cases, from which it is clear that there have been differences of opinion as to the moment at which a lease commencing from a given date commences. It seems to me that a general

C rule can be derived from the authorities, namely, that, prima facie, a lease in those terms commences from the first moment of the day following that named, but it seems to me equally to be well-established by the cases that this is only a prima facie indication, and that it can be displaced if, on the construction of the lease or agreement for a lease, a contrary intention can be derived. In Ackland v. Lutley (1), LORD DENMAN, C.J., giving the judgment of the court,

D said:

"The general understanding is, that terms for years last during the whole anniversary of the day from which they are granted. Indeed, if this were otherwise, the last day, on which rent is almost uniformly made payable, would be posterior to the lease."

- E It seems to me, by parity of reasoning, that, if one finds a case where rent is payable in advance, and the first payment of rent is to be made on the day which is stated in the lease as being that from which the term is to run, that is an indication that the parties intended that day to be included in the term. It is, of course, open to the parties to provide that the first payment of rent shall be made before the term commences, but where as in the present agreement
- F the dates mentioned are quarterly dates (though not the usual quarter days), it seems to me that that is a strong indication that the parties intended that the date of the first payment should be a date included in the term.

The leading case on the subject is that of Lester v. Garland (2) which is cited at length in Carthwright v. MacCormack (3). As I understand the judgment of SIR WILLIAM GRANT, M.R., he is there laying down that, although as a general

G rule a day stated as being that from which the time is to run should be excluded, this general rule must give way to the conclusion to be drawn from a construction of the particular deed in question. Counsel for the landlords referred me to one case where this course was followed, namely, English v. Cliff (4), and, as I understand the reasoning of WARRINGTON, J., in that case, he was basing his decision on the intention to be inferred from the document which he was considering.

- H Counsel for the landlords has drawn my attention to Sidebottom v. Holland (5), and, although the dictum was obiter, it seems to have been the view of LINDLEY, L.J., and LORD HALSBURY, who agreed with LINDLEY, L.J., that no distinction was to be drawn between terms commencing on a certain date and terms commencing from a certain date. It is conceded that a term commencing on May 1, would include that day, and, if that reasoning were right, a tenancy commencing
- I from May 1, would, in any case, lead to the same result, but I do not feel able to decide the case on that ground. In the recent case of Trow v. Ind Coope (West Midlands), Ltd. (6), although LORD DENNING, M.R., was disposed to say that no distinction should be drawn between periods commencing on a date and

(1) (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 879 at p. 894.

(2) [1803-13] All E.R. Rep. 436; (1808), 15 Ves. 248.

(3) [1963] 1 All E.R. 11.

(4) [1914] 2 Ch. 376.

(5) [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 617 at p. 620; [1895] 1 Q.B. 378 at p. 384.

(6) [1967] 2 All E.R. 900; [1967] 2 Q.B. 899.

periods commencing from a date, neither of the two other members of the Court of Appeal were prepared to take the same view. A

Nothing which I have said in this judgment is intended to cast any doubt on the general principle which I find well established in the cases that in the absence of any indication to the contrary a term limited to commence from a certain date commences on the first moment of the day following, but in this case I find a clear indication in the document itself that the parties had a different intention, and, accordingly, I find that the notice was good, and the action must be dismissed with costs. B

Action dismissed.

Solicitors: Thos. R. Jones & Son, Liverpool (for the plaintiff); J. M. Quiggin & Son, Liverpool (for the defendants). C

[Reported by K. B. EDWARDS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. SHILLINGFORD. R. v. VANDERWALL.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Salmon, L.J., Phillimore and Blain, JJ.), February 12, 1968.] D

Criminal Law—Drugs—Administering drug to woman to obtain intercourse—Intent to stupefy to enable more than one man to have unlawful sexual intercourse—Essence of the offence the administration of the drug—Indictment containing two counts in respect of one administration—One administration one offence—Conviction on second count quashed—Sexual Offences Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2 c. 69), s. 4 (1). E

A French au pair girl, who worked in Oxford, went to London. At about 10 p.m. she got into conversation in Leicester Square with the appellants. When they got to Paddington the last train back to Oxford had left. The appellants took her to S.'s flat, where he gave her three Nembutal pills. She fell asleep and when she woke up she found herself naked in bed with the appellant S., who was trying to have intercourse with her, and subsequently, according to her evidence, the other appellant got into the bed and also tried to have, or had, intercourse with her. S. had bought a bottle of Nembutal tablets on a doctor's prescription, and when the bottle was discovered subsequently in the flat three tablets were missing from it. On the following morning the girl went to hospital and was examined. On examination signs were found showing that probably there had been an attempt to have sexual intercourse with her. The appellant S. was charged (count 1) with administering a drug, namely the three tablets of Nembutal, to her with intent to stupify or overpower her, so as thereby to enable him to have unlawful sexual intercourse with her contrary to s. 4 (1)* of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956. He was also charged (count 2) with administering the same three tablets of Nembutal to her with like intent so as to enable the second appellant, V., to have unlawful sexual intercourse with her contrary to s. 4 (1). By s. 4 (2) a person could not be convicted under s. 4 of the Act of 1956 on the evidence of one witness, unless the witness was corroborated by evidence implicating the accused. Both appellants were also convicted of aiding and abetting attempted rape. In summing-up to the jury the trial judge correctly directed them on corroboration with regard to the charges relating to attempted rape; but gave them no different direction in regard to count 1, the charge under s. 4 (1) of the Act of 1956. On appeal (among other matters) against the convictions, F

Held: (i) the essence of the offence under s. 4 (1) of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956, was the administering of the drug, and as there had been only G

* Section 4 (1) is set out at p. 202, letter H, post. H I

A one administration, there could be only one offence; accordingly S.'s conviction on the second count (i.e., the second charge under s. 4 (1)) would be quashed (see p. 202, letter I, and p. 203, letter B, post).

(ii) the direction concerning corroboration required for the purposes of count 1 (the first charge under s. 4 (1)) was not the same as that required for the charges of rape (viz., that it would be dangerous to convict in the absence of corroboration), but was that the jury could not convict unless there were corroboration; however, as the court was satisfied that the jury would have come to the same verdict if the correct direction had been given, the conviction on count 1 would stand* (see p. 203, letters G and H, and p. 204, letter G, post).

Appeal allowed in part.

C [As to the offence of administering a drug to facilitate intercourse, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 749, para. 1444.

For the Sexual Offences Act, 1956, s. 4 (1), see 36 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 200 and 818.]

Appeal.

D The appellants, Holly Shillingford and Rayonne Niel Vanderwall, were convicted on July 25, 1967, at the Central Criminal Court. The appellant Shillingford, was convicted on four counts. The first two counts were of causing a drug to be taken by a woman with intent to stupefy her so as to enable a man to have unlawful sexual intercourse with her, contrary to s. 4 (1) of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956. The third count charged Shillingford that on Mar. 27, 1965, he had sexual intercourse with the woman without her consent; the fourth count charged Shillingford with aiding and abetting Vanderwall to have sexual intercourse with the woman. On the third and fourth counts the appellant Shillingford was convicted of attempted rape and of an offence of aiding and abetting attempted rape. The appellant Vanderwall was convicted of attempted rape. Shillingford was sentenced to imprisonment for a total of five years and Vanderwall for three years. They appealed against conviction by leave of the Court of Appeal, criminal division. The following additional grounds of appeal were notified on behalf of both appellants—(i) that the conviction of Shillingford on the first two counts was bad in that both counts charged him in respect of the same administration of the drug; (ii) that the trial judge failed to direct the jury in relation to the first two counts against Shillingford as to the statutory requirement of corroboration under s. 4 (2) of the Act of 1956; and, in regard to both appellants, that the trial judge omitted to direct the jury on what constituted in law an attempt; that in dealing with what could amount to corroboration on counts 3 and 4 he had failed to distinguish between his function and those of the jury and that he had wrongly directed the jury as to matters which they should regard as corroboration. There were other grounds of appeal not material to be stated in this report.

H L. Giovane for the appellants.

D. H. Spencer for the Crown.

I SALMON, L.J., delivered the following judgment of the court: On Mar. 26, 1967, a French au pair girl, who was referred to throughout the trial as Miss "X" and who was then aged some twenty-two years and a virgin, went from Oxford, where she worked, to London for the day intending to catch the last train back to Oxford from Paddington. According to her, she missed a woman whom she had come up to London to spend the afternoon with and she walked around Leicester Square at around 10 p.m. at night. She got into conversation with the appellant Shillingford and also with the appellant Vanderwall, whom she had never seen before, and they undertook, according to her evidence, to drive her to Paddington. She had the impression that going to Paddington they made some detours, and she admitted that she allowed a good deal of kissing and cuddling to go on in the motor car. When they finally arrived at Paddington it was discovered that she had missed her last train back to Oxford, which left at about 11.30 p.m., and that the next train did not go until 6.22 a.m. on the following morning.

* See s. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, as amended by s. 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1966; 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 929 and 46 ibid., 55.

According to her, the appellants suggested that they should go to a night club but first go back to the appellant Shillingford's flat; and they did go back to the appellant Shillingford's flat. She admitted that they danced to a gramophone in his flat and there was a good deal of kissing and cuddling. She said that the appellant Shillingford offered her some coffee and then suggested to her that she might take three pills which he offered her because they would have the effect of keeping her awake, and she took the three pills.

According to the case for the prosecution these pills were a barbiturate known as Nembutal, and undoubtedly the appellant Shillingford had bought on a doctor's prescription a bottle of these sleeping pills about a week previously, and when the police discovered the bottle in his flat there were three missing. The girl said that she fell asleep, and woke up naked in bed some time later, that the appellant Shillingford was in bed with her virtually naked on top of her trying to have sexual intercourse with her and that after that the appellant Vanderwall got into the bed virtually naked and also tried to have sexual intercourse with her, or had it.

She said that the next morning the appellant Shillingford said that he could not drive her to the station until 10 a.m., so she set out to walk there assisted by the appellant Vanderwall. On the way she felt extremely ill and went to the hospital. When she went to the hospital her genitalia were examined and they were extremely tender and, indeed, so painful that it was difficult for the doctor to examine them. Some semen was found either in or just outside the vagina, and it appeared that there had been penetration of the vagina to the extent of about half an inch, but the hymen was not fractured.

The appellants were eventually tried at the Central Criminal Court and there were four counts. On the first count the appellant Shillingford was charged that on Mar. 27, 1967, he caused a drug, namely three tablets of Nembutal, to be taken by a person called Miss X with intent to stupefy or overpower her so as thereby to enable him to have unlawful sexual intercourse with her, and in the second count he was charged with administering the same three tablets of Nembutal with intent to stupefy or overpower her, so that thereby the appellant Vanderwall might have unlawful sexual intercourse with her.

The appellant Shillingford was found guilty on both those counts; and one point, the first point that emerges, before I deal with the rest of the appeal, is this. That count was laid under s. 4 (1) of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956, which reads as follows:

"It is an offence for a person to apply or administer to, or cause to be taken by a woman any drug, matter or thing with intent to stupefy or overpower her so as thereby to enable any man to have unlawful sexual intercourse with her."

The point is taken on behalf of the appellants—and, in the opinion of this court, it is a good point—that the essence of this offence consists in administering the drug, and that accordingly in this particular case there was one offence only under the section. Therefore, since the appellant Shillingford was found guilty on count 1 that is an end of the matter as far as an offence under s. 4 (1) was concerned. The second count ought not to have been charged because there was only one administration, and the verdict in respect of the second count ought to have been not guilty. In this particular case the point is of little practical significance, because the appellant Shillingford was sentenced to two years' imprisonment on each count, the sentences to run concurrently. The point, however, may in the future be of some general importance. If it were

- A possible in respect of one administration to put several counts into an indictment, because the drug was being administered to enable several different men to have intercourse with the woman, it would be possible if there were a conviction on more than one of the counts that the sentences might be consecutive. In the view of this court, if there is only one administration there is only one offence, whether it is with the purpose of enabling one man or half a dozen men to have intercourse with the woman in question. Therefore, this court will quash the conviction on the second count.

- B In the third count the appellant Shillingford was charged with having had sexual intercourse with Miss X without her consent, and he was found guilty of the attempt but not guilty of rape. The appellant Vanderwall was charged with having had sexual intercourse with Miss X without her consent, and he was found guilty of the attempt but not guilty of rape, and in that count the appellant Shillingford was also charged with aiding, abetting and assisting the appellant Vanderwall to commit the offence.

- C The appellant Vanderwall was sentenced to three years in respect of attempted rape. The appellant Shillingford was sentenced to three years in respect of attempted rape, two years consecutive in respect of administering the drug contrary to s. 4 of the Act of 1956 and two years concurrent for aiding and abetting the appellant Vanderwall's offence.

- D The court will now deal with the count which relates to the appellant Shillingford's conviction under s. 4 of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956. Section 4 (2) provides that

- E "A person shall not be convicted of an offence under this section on the evidence of one witness only, unless the witness is corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused."

- It is clear that the judge ought to have told the jury that they could not convict the appellant Shillingford in respect of the count under sub-s. (1) unless they were satisfied that there was corroboration of the girl's evidence to the effect that the drug had been administered to her for the purpose stated in the count.
- F Unfortunately, the judge apparently overlooked sub-s. (2), and perhaps even more unfortunately, when very properly his attention was drawn to this omission or oversight by counsel, he said that he had already dealt with it. What he had done was to give the jury a perfectly clear and proper direction as far as the counts of rape or attempted rape were concerned, that it would be unsafe to convict unless there had been corroboration, and he gave them precisely the same direction in respect of the first count under s. 4. The direction was, as the court has indicated, satisfactory and, indeed, perfectly proper so far as rape was concerned; but it was the wrong direction under s. 4, because the direction there ought to have been not that it would be unsafe to convict but that it would be impossible in law to convict without corroboration.

- G This court, however, has come to the clear conclusion that there is no possibility of any miscarriage of justice having occurred. The court has no doubt but that this jury, had it had the correct direction as to corroboration in respect of count 1, would undoubtedly have come to the same conclusion as that at which it did arrive on the direction which it received.

- H During the course of the girl's evidence the judge invited the jury in the clearest possible terms to stop the case against the appellants. The jury refused that invitation and said that they would like the case to go on. Then later on during the girl's evidence, before any other testimony had been called, the judge reminded the jury that they were entitled to stop the case if they thought that they had heard enough of it; but the jury said no, they wanted the case to proceed.

I The case did proceed. It is quite clear to this court that it is in the highest degree unlikely that the jury would have convicted either of these men on the girl's evidence if it had stood alone. They had at a very early stage of the trial the clearest intimation from the judge that it did not amount to much standing by itself, but they possibly sensibly decided that they would like to go on and find out what evidence there was against the appellants other than the girl's own testimony; and as it turned out there was a great deal of other evidence.

The appellant Vanderwall was seen by the police, and he said: "Eddie [that is the appellant Shillingford] gave her the tablets." I am omitting the immaterial part of what he said. "I took her to hospital. I was in bed with her. I slept with her. She allowed it." Then he was asked—this is all after caution— "Do you mean you had intercourse with her?" "Yes", he said. "She slept with Eddie as well." Then the officer said: "What happened then?" and the appellant Vanderwall said: "After a while she fell asleep. We undressed her and put her in bed." "Naked", said the officer, "Was that necessary? What then?" "We had sex with her." At the trial the appellant Vanderwall said something quite different from that. He said that she had played about with him and taken off her pants, but that he had not attempted to have intercourse with her and never had intercourse with her nor went to bed with her.

Then the appellant Shillingford was questioned by the police after caution. He was asked "Your friend says you both had intercourse with her", to which he replied, "He did later. I didn't. I just laid with her." "You were all naked?" "Yes." "Wasn't she unconscious or asleep?" to which he made no reply. Then later on at the police station the appellant Shillingford said: "I only gave her the pills. They did her no harm. I only slept in the bed with her. Jooy [that is Vanderwall] had sex with her. I had all this trouble because of him. Can I see my brother?" When he gave evidence he denied all that and said in fact that none of them ever went to bed at all on that night.

If the jury believed, as apparently they did, that the appellants stated to the police what has just been recited, and if, coupled with that, they accepted the medical evidence that the next morning this girl's genitalia were extremely painful and that she appeared to have had her vagina penetrated, that there were traces of semen in the region of her vagina and clear evidence of Nembutal in her blood, there was about as strong corroboration as it is possible to imagine of the girl's story, however unreliable she may have appeared when she was giving evidence-in-chief.

In these circumstances, it seems to this court as far as count 1 is concerned that if the jury had been told that they could not convict without corroboration they would certainly have come to the same conclusion as that at which they arrived after being told that it would be dangerous to convict without corroboration. The summing-up as a whole seems to this court to have been absolutely fair. It put the case for the accused as plainly as possible to the jury. The judge had indicated that he did not take a very rosy view of the girl or the evidence she gave, but he did indicate what the jury might regard as corroboration. He made it abundantly plain that the statement made by the appellant Shillingford was evidence only against him and not against the appellant Vanderwall, and he made the same thing clear mutatis mutandis in relation to the statement made by the appellant Vanderwall. He explained the onus of proof perfectly fairly. The only criticism that can be made of the summing-up is the mistake to which I have referred in relation to corroboration under count 1; but for the reasons already stated that mistake is quite irrelevant. It cannot possibly have caused any miscarriage of justice. Save that the conviction on count 2 will be quashed the appeals against conviction are dismissed.

There are no grounds for reducing the sentences, and the application for leave to appeal against sentence are dismissed.

Conviction on count 2 quashed. Appeal on count 1 dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar of Criminal Appeals (for the appellants); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the Crown).

[Reported by JUDITH ASHER, Barrister-at-Law.]

A

ELECTROCHROME, LTD. v. WELSH PLASTICS, LTD.

[GLAMORGAN ASSIZES (Geoffrey Lane, J.), January 24, 1968.]

B

Negligence—Duty to take care—Property—Damage to property—Consequential loss to plaintiffs who did not own the property damaged—Defendants damaged hydrant on industrial estate—Water supply cut off for repairs—Loss of a day's work at plaintiff's factory on same estate owing to water being cut off—Plaintiffs having no cause of action against defendants for negligence.

C

The defendants' servant negligently drove their lorry so as to collide with and damage a fire hydrant near the defendants' factory on an industrial estate. Water escaped and the supply of water through the main had to be stopped for some hours. As a result the plaintiffs' factory had its water supply cut off, and this caused the loss of a day's work at their factory. The main and the hydrant were not the property of the plaintiffs, but, so it seemed, of the owners of the industrial estate. In an action by the plaintiffs in negligence to recover the amount of their loss from the defendants,

D

Held: the action did not lie because there was no injuria, the duty of care owed by the defendants not to damage the hydrant being owed not to the plaintiffs but to the owners of the hydrant that was damaged (see p. 208, letter F, p. 209, letter A, post).

Simpson v. Thomson ((1877), 3 App. Cas. 279) applied.

E

[Editorial Note. This is a rather striking instance of the application of the long standing principle that damnum sine injuria is not actionable; the same principle was applied recently in relation to the carriage of goods by sea in Margarine Union G.m.b.H. v. Cambay Prince Steamship Co., Ltd. ([1967] 3 All E.R. 775). In the present instance the outcome may seem contrary to what might be expected to be the law; loss such as that in the present case could, presumably, be covered by insurance by factory occupiers in the position of the plaintiffs.

F

As to the circumstances in which a legal duty to take care arises, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 7, para. 4, and as to the necessity for a duty of care to be owed to the plaintiff if liability in negligence to him is to be established, see ibid., p. 3, para. 1; and for cases on the subject, see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 12-25, 34-112.]

G

Cases referred to:

Cattle v. Stockton Waterworks Co., [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 220; (1875), L.R. 10 Q.B. 453; 44 L.J.Q.B. 139; 33 L.T. 475; 39 J.P. 791; 1 Digest (Repl.) 37, 277.

Simpson v. Thomson, (1877), 3 App. Cas. 279; 58 L.T. 1; 3 Asp. M.L.C. 567; 1 Digest (Repl.) 61, 452.

H

Weller & Co. v. Foot and Mouth Disease Research Institute, [1965] 3 All E.R. 560; [1966] 1 Q.B. 569; [1965] 3 W.L.R. 1082; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 554, 109c.

Action.

I

The factories of the plaintiffs, Electrochrome, Ltd., and of the defendants, Welsh Plastics, Ltd., were on the same industrial trading estate, about five hundred feet apart. The Estate Corporation was responsible for the supply of water to these and other factories on the estate. In November, 1964, the defendants were constructing or enlarging the access road to their factory. On Sunday, Nov. 8, 1964, a little after midday a servant of the defendants was driving a van of theirs at a point just outside their factory, and negligently (as was admitted in the action) collided with a fire hydrant there. Water flowed from the damaged hydrant and, so soon as possible, the mains were turned off. Repairs began about 7.30 a.m. on the following Monday morning. The supply of water was restored between 10 a.m. and 10.30 a.m. on that day.

The plaintiff's manufacturing process involved plating small items of hardware. Water was essential to it, and the boilers took some ten hours to heat; moreover at the time of the accident water was also essential for heating the factory, because the weather was extremely cold. It was not disputed that the factory did not operate during Monday, Nov. 9, 1964, owing to there being no water. The reason why there was no water was that the main supplying the hydrant was on the same water circuit as that which supplied the plaintiffs' factory; and so the collision with the hydrant was the cause of the water supply being cut off from the plaintiffs' factory and the loss of work at the factory on Nov. 9, 1964. The plaintiffs claimed as damages the loss suffered by them by stoppage of the work for Nov. 9, 1964. At the trial it was ultimately conceded that the amount of their loss for this was £29 10s.

Michael Evans for the plaintiffs.

Bruce Griffiths for the defendants.

GEOFFREY LANE, J., having stated the nature of the action and reviewed the facts and evidence, made the finding that it was the knocking over of the hydrant which indirectly caused the water supply to be cut off from the plaintiffs' factory, and, having considered the evidence regarding the plaintiffs' consequential loss, stated that the amount of the loss (£29 10s.) was conceded and continued:] I will now turn to examine the question, which is purely a matter of law, whether on the facts the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the £29 10s., or indeed anything, from the defendants.

The circumstances in law can, perhaps, be put thus. With knowledge that the damage to this particular hydrant and damage to this particular water main might cause inconvenience or loss to other people on the industrial estate (that knowledge I assume against them for the purposes of argument) the defendants, through their servant, nevertheless damaged the hydrant. The hydrant and the water main did not belong to the plaintiffs; indeed, the plaintiffs had no proprietary rights or possessory rights of any sort either in the hydrant or the main. That hydrant and that main, so far as I know—there has been no specific evidence to this effect—were the property of the industrial estate. If then damage was done to the property of the industrial estate, damage negligently done to that property, can the plaintiffs, whose property it was not, succeed in an action for damages for financial loss which they have suffered as a consequence of such damage?

The matter is set out in convenient form in SALMOND ON TORTS (14th Edn.), p. 702. It is headed as follows: "Damnum suffered by one person and injuria by another" and it reads:

"In the second class of case there is both damnum and injuria, but the damnum is suffered by one person and the injuria by another. A person who suffers damnum cannot recover compensation on the basis of injuria suffered by another. He who does a wrongful act is liable only to the person whose rights are thereby violated. He is not bound to make compensation to all persons who, in the result, suffer harm from his wrongdoing. The damnum and injuria must be united in the same person. So in Cattle v. Stockton Waterworks Co. (1) the plaintiff was a contractor who had undertaken to construct a tunnel under land belonging to another person. The defendants, the owners of the adjoining waterworks, negligently allowed the escape of water from their main, and this escape rendered the completion of the plaintiffs' contract much more difficult and costly than it would otherwise have been. Nevertheless the plaintiff was held to have no cause of action for the loss so suffered by him."

That statement of the law I adopt as correct.

(1) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 220; (1875), L.R. 10 Q.B. 453.

A The ratio is set out clearly in the decision of the House of Lords in Simpson v. Thompson (2). The headnote in that case, which I am reading, as it is quoted in Weller v. Foot and Mouth Disease Research Institute (3), to which I must refer later, runs as follows:

B “There is no independent right in underwriters to maintain in their own name, and without reference to the person insured, an action for damage to the thing insured. Although the underwriters have paid for a total loss, and are entitled to all the rights in the injured ship which belong to its owner, yet if that owner cannot assert a right for damages against the wrongdoer, neither can the underwriters.”

I turn to the opinion of LORD PENZANCE which runs as follows (4):

C “But in the argument at your lordships’ Bar the learned counsel for the respondents took their stand upon a much broader ground. They contended that the underwriters, by virtue of the policy which they entered into in respect of this ship, had an interest of their own in her welfare and protection, inasmuch as any injury or loss sustained by her would indirectly fall upon them as a consequence of their contract; and that this interest was such as would support an action by them in their own names and behalf against a wrongdoer. This proposition virtually affirms a principle which I think your lordships will do well to consider with some care, as it will be found to have a much wider application and signification than any which may be involved in the incidents of a contract of insurance. The principle involved seems to me to be this—that where damage is done by a wrongdoer to a chattel not only the owner of that chattel, but all those who by contract with the owner have bound themselves to obligations which are rendered more onerous, or have secured to themselves advantages which are rendered less beneficial by the damage done to the chattel, have a right of action against the wrongdoer although they have no immediate or reversionary property in the chattel, and no possessory right by reason of any contract attaching to the chattel itself, such as by lien or hypothecation. This, I say, is the principle involved in the respondents’ contention.”

Breaking off there for a moment, that is precisely the contention put forward by counsel for the plaintiffs in this case, and he so concedes. That is exactly what happened here. Damage was done by a wrongdoer to the hydrant in which the plaintiffs had no immediate or reversionary property and no possessory right by reason of any contract, and as a result of that damage the contract which the plaintiffs had with the industrial estate for the supply of water became less beneficial. That is precisely the claim made in this case. I resume reading the opinion of LORD PENZANCE (4):

H “This, I say, is the principle involved in the respondents’ contention. If it be a sound one, it would seem to follow that if, by the negligence of a wrongdoer, goods are destroyed which the owner of them had bound himself by contract to supply to a third person, this person as well as the owner has a right of action for any loss inflicted on him by their destruction. But if this be true as to injuries done to chattels, it would seem to be equally so as to injuries to the person. An individual injured by a negligently driven carriage has an action against the owner of it. Would a doctor, it may be asked, who had contracted to attend him and provide medicines for a fixed sum by the year, also have a right of action in respect of the additional cost of attendance and medicine cast upon him by that accident? And yet it cannot be denied that the doctor had an interest in his patient’s safety. In like manner an actor or singer bound for a term to a manager of a theatre is disabled by

(2) (1877), 3 App. Cas. 279.

(3) [1965] 3 All E.R. 560; [1966] 1 Q.B. 569.

(4) (1877), 3 App. Cas. at p. 289.

the wrongful act of a third person to the serious loss of the manager. Can the manager recover damages for that loss from the wrongdoer? Such instances might be indefinitely multiplied, giving rise to rights of action which in modern communities, where every complexity of mutual relation is daily created by contract, might be both numerous and novel. My lords, I have given these illustrations because I fail to see any distinction in principle between them and the right asserted by the underwriters in the present case; and if I am right in so regarding them, they show at least how much would be involved in a decision by your lordships whereby that right should be affirmed. But the ground upon which I will ask your lordships to reject this contention of the respondents' counsel is this —that upon the cases cited no precedent or authority has been found or produced to the House for an action against the wrongdoer except in the name, and therefore, in point of law, on the part of one who had either some property in, or possession of, the chattel injured. On the other hand, the existence of authorities in which the suit has been brought in the name of the owner, though for the benefit of persons having a collateral interest, is somewhat strong to show that such persons had no right of action in themselves."

Counsel for the plaintiffs has been no more successful than counsel before the House of Lords in Simpson v. Thomson (5) in finding cases to support his contention. It is perfectly true that it may seem inequitable that a person who has undoubtedly suffered loss in this manner should have no right of action against the person who started off the train of events, who first put a match to the blue touch-paper, but one only has to consider the possible results if such an action succeeded to realise that this is one of the cases where public convenience and interest demand that the right of action must stop short.

In the case of water being cut off in this manner one can imagine a whole series, maybe hundreds, of actions being brought against the defendants based on this type of negligence and, as LORD PENZANCE said, the complexity of society would mean in effect that there might be no end to the concatenation of resulting damage. However, whatever the reasons behind it may be, it is perfectly plain to me that for the reasons which I have given English law does not allow the plaintiffs in circumstances such as these to succeed.

I am fortified in that view by the judgment of WIDGERY, J., as he then was, in Weller & Co. v. Foot and Mouth Disease Research Institute (6). The facts in that case were these:

"In consequence, as was assumed, of the escape of a virus imported by the defendants and used by them for experimental work on foot and mouth disease at land and premises owned and occupied by them, cattle in the vicinity of the premises became infected with the disease. Because of the disease an order was made under statutory powers closing cattle markets in the district, with the result that the plaintiffs, who were auctioneers, were temporarily unable to carry on their business at those markets and suffered loss. The court was required to assume that the loss to the plaintiffs was foreseeable and that there was neglect on the part of the defendants which caused the escape of the virus. On the question whether in law an action for damages would lie for the loss,"

WIDGERY, J., held as follows:

"(i) an ability to foresee indirect or economic loss to another person as the result of a defendant's conduct did not automatically impose on the defendant a duty to take care to avoid that loss; in the present case the defendants were not liable in negligence, because their duty to take care to avoid the escape of the virus was due to the foreseeable fact that the virus

(5) (1877), 3 App. Cas. 279.

(6) [1965] 3 All E.R. 560; [1966] 1 Q.B. 569.

A might infect cattle in the neighbourhood and thus was owed to owners of cattle, but, as the plaintiffs were not owners of cattle, no such duty was owed to them by the defendants."

I have, I hope, said enough to indicate the basis on which, on these facts, I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs fail and the defendants succeed. There must be judgment for the defendants.

B Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: R. L. Edwards & Evans, Bridgend (for the plaintiffs); S. Garelick & Co., Cardiff (for the defendants).

[Reported by T. M. EVANS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

Re WALLACE'S SETTLEMENTS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Megarry, J.), February 21, 22, 23, 1968.]

D Trust and Trustee—Variation of trusts by the court—Power of appointment—Fraud on power—Principle governing court's approach to question of approving proposed arrangement—Fair case for investigation whether fraud on power—Question to be resolved before arrangement approved—Factors of possible benefit to appointors, being life tenants of funds—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (6 & 7 Eliz. 2 c. 53), s. 1 (1).

E Trust and Trustee—Variation of trusts by the court—Protective trusts—"Like" trusts to protective trusts—Determinable life interests—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (6 & 7 Eliz. 2 c. 53), s. 1 (2).

Under cl. 14 of a settlement made in 1912 each of two life tenants had a life interest determinable on alienation, etc., and on determination thereof a discretionary trust would arise in favour, among others, of the former life tenant and her issue. By cl. 9 each life tenant had a special power of appointment in favour of her children, with (in effect) per stirpes interests for remoter issue. Each life tenant was over sixty years of age, and each had two children of full age. One child of each life tenant had been married and had issue. Each life tenant had for some time been intending to appoint in exercise of the special power, and in November, 1967, each did so, one appointing to one of her two children absolutely and the other appointing equally between her two children. An arrangement was made between the life tenants and the appointee children, under which each life tenant was to receive the actuarial value of her life interest, calculated on the basis of its being indefeasible, not determinable, and the rest of the capital of the trust fund was to be received by the appointees. On application under s. 1 (1)* of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 for approval of the proposed arrangement,

H Held: (i) the trusts in cl. 14 of the settlement, being closely similar in objective, in structure and in operation to the trusts stated in s. 33 of the Trustee Act, 1925, were "like trusts" to those of s. 33 for the purposes of para. (d) of s. 1 (1) of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958; accordingly the proviso to s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1958 did not forbid the court approving the proposed arrangement on behalf of any person prospectively entitled under the discretionary trusts of cl. 14 without being satisfied first that carrying out the arrangement would be for his benefit (see p. 212, letters B and D, post).

I (ii) (a) although, if there were a fair case for investigation whether a proposed arrangement involved a fraud on a power and that question remained unresolved, the court should not give approval under s. 1 (1) of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, to the proposed arrangement; yet in the present case the power had been exercised bona fide having regard to the factors stated in (b) below, and the proposed arrangement would be approved (see p. 214, letter A, and p. 216, letters E and F, post).

* Section 1 so far as material, is set out at p. 211, letter H, post.

Re Robertson's Will Trusts, ([1960] 3 All E.R. 146, n.) considered.

(b) the factors that the actuarial values of the life interests exceeded their market value, that these values were estimated on the basis of indefeasible, not determinable, life interests and that the life tenants were to receive disposable capital sums, did not in the circumstances of the present case render the arrangement beneficial to the life tenants for the purposes of inferring an intention to exercise the special powers of appointment so as to benefit themselves; and, having regard to the fact that each life tenant had been intending for some time past to make such appointments as these, no fraud on the power was involved (see p. 215, letter I, and p. 216, letters A and E, post).

Pelham Burn, Petitioners (1964 S.C. 3) considered.

[As to a fraud on a power, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 275-278, paras. 522-524, and for cases on the subject, see 37 DIGEST (Repl.) 375-383, 1110-1161.]

As to variation of trusts by the court, see 38 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 1029-1031, para. 1772.

For the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, s. 1, see 48 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1130.]

Cases referred to:

Baker's Settlement Trusts, Re, [1964] 1 All E.R. 482, n.; [1964] 1 W.L.R. 336, n.; 47 Digest (Repl.) 335, 2999.

Druce's Settlement Trusts, Re, [1962] 1 All E.R. 563; [1962] 1 W.L.R. 363; 47 Digest (Repl.) 333, 2996.

Munro's Settlement Trusts, Re, [1963] 1 All E.R. 209; [1963] 1 W.L.R. 145; 47 Digest (Repl.) 339, 3027.

Pelham Burn, Petitioners, 1964 S.C. 3; [1964] S.L.T. 9; 47 Digest (Repl.) 327, *1076.

Robertson's Will Trusts, Re, [1960] 3 All E.R. 146, n.; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 1050; 47 Digest (Repl.) 336, 3010.

Wyndham, Petitioners, [1964] S.L.T. 290.

Adjourned Summonses.

These were three applications under s. 1 (1) of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, by originating summonses seeking the court's approval of proposed arrangements varying trusts, which trusts in each case subsisted under the same three settlements, viz., settlements dated Aug. 25, 1912, July 18, 1913, and Mar. 15, 1916, all made between A. F. Wallace and others. The plaintiffs in the first summons (the "Fane" summons) were Barbara Kathleen Fane, Venetia Sophia Diana Fane and Vere John Alexander Fane. In the second summons (the "Chance" summons) the plaintiffs were Daphne Corona Chance and Daphne Ann Barrington Hewitt; and in the third summons (the "Wallace" summons) the plaintiff was Alexander Lewis Paget Falconer Wallace. The plaintiffs in all three cases were beneficiaries in funds subject to certain trusts subsisting under the three settlements, the first plaintiff in each of the first two summonses and the plaintiff in the third summons each having a terminable life interest in a certain share of a fund referred to in the settlements. The defendants to the first two summonses were the two trustees, of whom the first was the plaintiff on the Wallace summons and the second was Archibald Leslie Hutson. The second defendant trustee to the first two summonses was also the twelfth and last defendant to the Wallace summons. The first three defendants to the Wallace summons were adult children of the plaintiff on that summons, and the fourth to eleventh defendants were an infant child and infant grandchildren of his. The relevant provisions of the first settlement are set out in the judgment.

A The cases noted below* were cited during the argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment.

A. L. Price for the plaintiff beneficiaries on the Fane and Chance summonses.

J. M. E. Byng for the defendant trustees to the Fane and Chance summonses and the twelfth defendant to the Wallace summons.

B Martin Nourse for the first three defendants to the Wallace summons (adult children of the plaintiff life tenant).

O. M. W. Swingland for the fourth to eleventh defendants (infants) to the Wallace summons.

C MEGARRY, J.: There are three cases before me. The first may conveniently be called by the name of "Fane", the second by the name of "Chance" and the third by the name of "Wallace". All three are applications made under the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, and arise out of the same settlement, dated Aug. 25, 1912. The first two cases are closely similar. They raise points of some importance which are almost identical. I propose to deal first with these two cases together, and then to turn to the third case.

D In each of the first two cases a lady, whom for convenience I shall call "the life tenant", has a life interest under trusts of pure personalty. By cl. 14 of the settlement each life interest is made determinable if the life tenant

E "shall at any time alienate or charge or affect to alienate or charge the said income or by reason of any act or event (whether done or happening before or after such life or less interest shall come into possession not being merely a consent to the exercise of a power of advancement) the said income or any part thereof shall or but for this present clause would become vested in or charged in favour of some other person persons or a corporation . . ."

Upon such an event occurring the trustees are required to

F "pay all or any part of the said income to or apply the same for the maintenance and personal support or benefit of all or any one or more to the exclusion of the others or other of the following objects namely such person his wife or her husband (if any) and his or her children or remoter issue for the time being in existence whether minors or adults and the other person or persons for the time being entitled or interested whether absolutely contingently or otherwise to or in the said income or the capital from which the same proceeds or any part thereof respectively G under the trusts herein contained to take effect after the death of such person in such proportions and manner as the trustees shall in their uncontrolled discretion from time to time think fit . . ."

The first question arises under s. 1 (1) (d), the proviso to s. 1 (1) and s. 1 (2) of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958. Under s. 1 (1) (d)

H "... the court may if it thinks fit by order approve on behalf of— . . . (d) any person in respect of any discretionary interest of his under protective trusts where the interest of the principal beneficiary has not failed or determined, any arrangement . . ."

put before the court. The proviso to s. 1 (1) reads:

I "Provided that except by virtue of para. (d) of this subsection the court shall not approve an arrangement on behalf of any person unless the carrying out thereof would be for the benefit of that person."

Subsection (2) reads:

"In the foregoing subsection 'protective trusts' means the trusts specified in paras. (i) and (ii) of sub-s. (1) of s. 33 of the Trustee Act, 1925, or any like trusts, 'the principal beneficiary' has the same meaning as in the said sub-s. (1) and 'discretionary interest' means an interest arising under the trust specified in para. (ii) of the said sub-s. (1) or any like trust."

* Portland v. Topham, [1861-73] All E.R. Rep. 980; (1864), 11 H.L. Cas. 32; Re Greaves, [1954] 1 All E.R. 771; [1954] Ch. 434; Re Burney's Settlement Trust, [1961] 1 All E.R. 856.

On these provisions the question is whether in relation to the familiar trusts to be found in s. 33 of the Trustee Act, 1925, the trusts in cl. 14 of the settlement are "like trusts", so that the opening words of the proviso to s. 1 (1) of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, apply and the court is not required to ascertain that the arrangement would be for the benefit of the persons contingently entitled under the discretionary provisions.

In my judgment these trusts plainly are "like trusts". The word "like" requires not identity but similarity; and similarity in substance suffices, without the need of similarity in form or detail or wording. Indeed, every word of a clause might differ from the corresponding words of s. 33, and yet the two provisions might be clearly similar in substance and effect, and so "like" each other. Without comparing in detail the terms of cl. 14 and those of s. 33 of the Act of 1925, and setting out the similarities and dissimilarities, it can be said that in objective, in structure and in operation the trusts under cl. 14 are closely similar to those under s. 33. Accordingly, I hold that s. 1 (1) (d) of the Act of 1958 applies, and so by the opening words of the proviso to s. 1 (1) the prohibition against approving an arrangement on behalf of any person unless the carrying out thereof would be for his benefit has no application in relation to those who are prospectively entitled under the discretionary trusts.

The main discussion in these cases has centered round the doctrine of a fraud on a power. Clause 9 of the settlement gives to each life tenant, who is referred to as the "grandchild", a wide power of appointment among his or her issue, with a provision in default of appointment

"in equal shares for all or any of the children or child of such grandchild living at the time of the death of such grandchild or the end of the accumulation period whichever shall last happen who shall attain the age of twenty-one years or being female marry under that age and for all or any of the issue living at such time who shall attain the age of twenty-one years or being female marry under that age of any child of such grandchild who shall die before such time leaving issue living at such time such issue to take through all degrees according to their stocks in equal shares the share or shares which their parent would have taken if living at such time and having then attained a vested interest and so that no issue shall take whose parent is living at such time and so capable of taking . . ."

There is then a provision for hotchpot.

Each life tenant is in her sixties, and each has two children of full age; and in each case one of the two children is married and has issue. The persons entitled in default of appointment have accordingly yet to be ascertained. In each case the life tenant irrevocably exercised the power of appointment by a deed executed last November, shortly before the summons was issued, in one case one day before, and in the other case five days before. In the case of "Chance" the appointment was to one child absolutely, and in the case of "Fane" equally between the two children absolutely. The effects of each appointment were, first, that the persons prospectively entitled in default of appointment were as such excluded from all possibility of benefit under the trusts, and so do not fall to be considered under s. 1 of the Act of 1958. It thus became unnecessary for the arrangement to include any provision for their benefit. Second, the appointees became persons of full age absolutely entitled with whom the life tenant could negotiate the terms of an arrangement.

The arrangement proposed in each case is for a simple division of the capital of the trust funds between each life tenant and the appointees. The life tenant is to receive the actuarial value that her life interest would have had if, instead of being determinable, it had been absolute; the appointees are to receive the

A remainder. This arrangement is likely to result in a considerable saving of estate duty, though the whole benefit of this saving would accrue not to the life tenants but to the appointees. Each life tenant would have whatever advantage there may be in having the capital value (on the actuarial basis that I have mentioned) of her present interest in income.

B In these circumstances, the question has arisen whether the approval of the court to the arrangement ought to be withheld on the ground that a fraud on the power is or might be involved. In Re Robertson's Will Trusts, (1) RUSSELL, J., began his judgment with these words:

C "I myself raised the question whether possibly the appointment was a fraud on the power, because, if it were, the proposed scheme of arrangement, involving the disbursement of the fund, would be one which the court ought not to approve. I have considered the evidence and the additional information supplied to the court as to the working out of the scheme, and I am satisfied that there is no reason to continue to suppose that there was a fraud on the power."

D If it is clear that a fraud on the power is involved, then plainly the court ought to withhold its approval. The power of the court under the Act of 1958 is a discretionary power exercisable if the court "thinks fit"; and I cannot conceive that it would be fitting for an arrangement to be approved if that arrangement had been made possible by a manifest fraud on a power, or was in some way connected with such a fraud. On the other hand, there is no difficulty if it is plain that there is no fraud on the power. But between plain fraud, on the one
E hand, and no fraud, on the other hand, there is a wide spectrum, ranging from strong though not conclusive evidence to far-fetched suspicion. At what point should the court draw the line? The first sentence of the judgment of RUSSELL, J., may possibly be read in two ways, depending on what was meant by the words "if so". On one view what the court ought not to approve is an arrangement involving what in fact was a fraud on the power. On the other view, it suffices
F if the arrangement involves what was possibly a fraud on the power.

Counsel for the trustees' instructions were to support the arrangement. His clients were fully prepared to accept any risks that they might run if the appointment were to be set aside. At my invitation, however, counsel for the trustees assumed the additional function assigned to counsel for the trustees by RUSSELL, J., in Re Druce's Settlement Trusts, (2) and by WILBERFORCE, J., in *Re Munro's
G Settlement Trusts*, (3). He accordingly performed the duties of a watch dog for those who might be adversely affected by the arrangement. I will not say whether he gave tongue with greater force as their watch dog than as a guide dog for the trustees; but owing to interventions from the Bench it was undoubtedly at greater length. I am indebted to him for the painstaking discharge of his dual function, as I am to counsel for the beneficiaries for his performance in unquity.
H At one stage counsel for the trustees suggested that only if there was prima facie evidence of a fraud on the power ought the court to withhold its approval. After some discussion, however, he abandoned this formulation and accepted the suggestion that the real question was whether it appeared to the court that there was a case for investigation; and counsel for the beneficiaries concurred in this.

I In substance, I consider that this is right. The evidence in an application under the Act of 1958 may or may not deal in detail, or at all, with the circumstances of the appointment. It cannot be right to say that the court will grant its approval in every case unless the parties have been incautious enough to provide evidence of a prima facie case of a fraud on the power. On the other hand, I do not think that it would be right to withhold approval merely by reason of far-fetched suspicions of a possible fraud on the power. If as a result of either the presence of evidence or its absence the court comes to the conclusion that there is a fair case for investigation whether a fraud on the power is involved, approval should be withheld until such investigation has been made and satisfactorily resolved. In reaching the decision whether there is a fair case for investigation, I would disregard remote possibilities or fantastic suggestions; equally, I would not require cogent evidence. In my judgment, if to a fair, cautious and enquiring mind the circumstances of the appointment, so far as known, raise a real and not a merely tenuous suspicion of a fraud on the power, the approval of the court ought to be withheld until that suspicion is dispelled. But, I may add, however alert and persistent a watch dog should be, I do not think that he ought to be required to discharge the functions of a bloodhound or a ferret.

(1) [1960] 3 All E.R. 146 at pp. 147, 148.

(2) [1962] 1 All E.R. 563 at p. 568.

(3) [1963] 1 All E.R. 209 at p. 212.

One further question has arisen in these cases, and that is whether the arrangements will benefit the life tenants. If they do not, then the main basis for any contention that there has been a fraud on the power disappears. Each life tenant has made it plain in evidence that she does not desire the arrangement to involve any element of benefit to her personally. There is satisfactory evidence that each will receive merely the actuarial value that her life interest would have were it not determinable. There is also, however, evidence that this actuarial value exceeds the market value of such a life interest, the difference being due to the limited market for such interests and the cost to the purchaser of replacing the capital invested in a wasting asset of this nature. In one case the market value is nearly £5,000 less than the actuarial value of over £25,000, and in the other, where the actuarial value is over £46,000, there is a difference of rather less than £6,000. Accordingly, it can be urged that the arrangement is for the benefit of the life tenant in each case on three grounds. First, in place of an inalienable and defeasible interest in income the life tenant will receive an absolute interest in capital, thereby gaining in certainty and flexibility; for, unlike income, capital may be used either as capital or to produce income. Second, the capital sum is the actuarial equivalent not of the determinable life interest which the life tenant actually has, but of a different and better life interest which she has not, namely, an indefeasible life interest. Third, even if the difference between a determinable life interest and one that is indefeasible be ignored, in receiving the actuarial equivalent the life tenant would be receiving appreciably more than she could obtain for her life interest on the open market.

In this connexion I have been referred to two Scottish cases in the First Division of the Court of Session, namely, Pelham Burn, Petitioners (4), and Wyndham, Petitioners (5), each concerning the same trusts. These cases present an initial difficulty to an English lawyer in that they concerned "alimentary liferents", a term of art not current in England. During the argument I was able to contribute little more on the meaning of this term than my recollection of a passage in a book not normally cited in these cases, MISCELLANY-AT-LAW (5a). On p. 145 of that book it is said that "Even among the most learned conveyancers there are some who do not know that the familiar 'protective trusts' of the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 33, initially suffered a statutory Scots christening: for in the original version of s. 33 as it appeared in the Law of Property Act, 1922, s. 115 (1), the phrase required to bring the section into operation was a direction to hold the income 'on alimentary trusts'."

Over the adjournment I sought the aid of such Scottish books as lay readily to hand. DALRYMPLE AND GIBB'S SCOTTISH JUDICIAL DICTIONARY (1946) did not define the term. It defined the word "aliment", but the definition failed to advance my understanding. The definition reads:

(4) 1964 S.C. 3.

(5) [1964] S.L.T. 290.

(5a) (1955), by R. E. MEGARRY; "a diversion for lawyers and others".

- A "Aliment.—For purposes of personal diligence, this word includes inlying expenses and expenses of an action for aliment."

However, it appears from GLOAG AND HENDERSON'S INTRODUCTION TO THE LAW OF SCOTLAND (5th Edn., 1952) pp. 504, 505 and SMITH'S SHORT COMMENTARY ON THE LAW OF SCOTLAND (1962), pp. 491-495 that in English law the nearest analogue to an alimentary liferent is a life interest subject to the now extinct restraint on anticipation. Indeed, GLOAG AND HENDERSON at p. 504 in note 37 states:

"The English equivalent of a wife's alimentary liferent, the 'restraint upon anticipation', has recently been abolished."

- C Across the Atlantic, the "spendthrift trust", against which PROFESSOR JOHN CHIPMAN GRAY inveighed so forcefully and so vainly in his RESTRAINTS ON THE ALIENATION OF PROPERTY (2nd Edn., 1895), seems to be of a similar nature. For present purposes I hope it will suffice if I assume that an alimentary liferent differs widely from the English protective trust (which is perhaps why the word "alimentary" did not survive the transit from the Law of Property Act, 1922 to the Trustee Act, 1925), and that such a liferent is a life interest which, by direct prohibition and without the machinery of determinable interest and discretionary trust, can neither be alienated nor be attached by the liferenter's creditors.

- E Each of the Scottish cases concerned applications under s. 1 of the Trusts (Scotland) Act, 1961, which made provisions similar to those of the English Variation of Trusts Act, 1958. In each case the court considered the doctrine of fraud on a power; and in each case the court took the view that as under the arrangement the liferentrix received no more than the actuarial value of her liferent interest, there was no benefit to her. As the liferent was an interest which was inalienable but not determinable, no question arose as to putting an actuarial value on a life interest different from that which in fact existed; the actuary did not have to value as indefeasible that which was in fact determinable.
- F Nor did any question arise of any difference between actuarial value and market value; for the liferent was inalienable, and was valued as such, without any hypothetically alienable and indefeasible life interest entering the picture in the way that it has in this case. There were, however, valuable expressions of opinion, particularly by LORD SORN in Pelham Burn, Petitioners (6), that on the facts of the case the liferentrix did not derive any benefit merely because in place of her liferent she received an equivalent capital sum.

- G With these matters in mind, I turn to the facts of this case. I consider that there was here a fair case calling for investigation whether there was a fraud on a power; but in my judgment, having regard in particular to the further affidavits filed by the life tenants, there is sufficient material before me, when coupled with counsel for the beneficiaries' persuasive explanations, to satisfy me that there is no real substance in the suspicions, and accordingly that I ought not to withhold approval on this score. As regards such advantages as there may be in the certainty and flexibility of capital as opposed to the limitations of an inalienable and defeasible life interest, I am satisfied that in relation to the other material circumstances of the life tenants there is no real advantage to either of them; and plainly I must consider the position of these particular life tenants and not the position in which other life tenants in other circumstances might be. On this score the reasoning in Pelham Burn, Petitioners (7), indeed seems cogent. Secondly, on the facts of these cases the prospects of the life interests determining in the lifetime of either life tenant seem to me to be negligible. Thirdly, on the facts of these cases the gap between actuarial value and market value appears to be without real significance. Rights may have no market value because they are unmarketable, and yet they may be most valuable to their owner. In my judgment each life tenant will receive no more than the value to her of her life interest: and if that is so, it matters not that she will be receiving more than she would have received if, her life interest being different from what it is and being marketable, she had sold it in the open market. A

(6) 1964 S.C. at p. 11.

(7) 1964 S.C. 3.

One further point should be mentioned. There is clear evidence that for some years each life tenant has been intending to make the appointment that she now in fact has made. As counsel for the beneficiaries pointed out, far from facilitating the arrangement, the making of the appointment immediately prior to the application to the court created difficulties in each case by injecting considerations as to a possible fraud on a power into a situation otherwise free from such doubts. As each life tenant had the long-settled intention to make the appointment, and also to secure for the appointees all the advantages resulting from the saving of estate duty, it would have been wrong for her to have abstained from making the appointment. For if she had, she would nevertheless have been under a duty to the court to reveal frankly her subsisting intention to make the appointment in the near future. With the appointment impending, there would then have been great difficulty in determining the quantum of the provision for the persons entitled in default of appointment which would have been for their benefit. Further, any provision for those entitled in default of appointment would have diminished the property that would go to the appointees, and to that extent the life tenant's intention to secure all the benefit for the appointees would have been defeated. C D

My conclusion on the whole of the facts is that in each case the power has been exercised bona fide for the purpose for which it was intended, and not for any ulterior purpose. In my judgment the extent to which the appointments have become embangled with the arrangements has not tainted the appointments; and there is no fraud on the power. E

As to the protective trusts, the question posed by UNGOED-THOMAS, J., in Re Baker's Settlement Trusts (8), was whether these trusts "continue to serve any useful purpose". In the circumstances of these cases, and having regard to the march of the years in particular, I feel no hesitation in holding that these trusts have long outlived their initial purposes, and that today they achieve nothing useful. Accordingly I approve the arrangements. F

As regards the third case, having regard to what I have decided in the first two cases in relation to "like trusts", I feel no difficulty in saying that the arrangement put before the court is a proper one. I therefore approve that arrangement also. G

Orders accordingly.

Solicitors: Caprons & Crosse (for the plaintiff beneficiaries on the Fane and Chance summonses); Slaughter & May (for the trustee defendants to the Fane and Chance summonses and the plaintiff on, and fourth and twelfth defendants to, the Wallace summons); Withers & Co. (for the first two and fifth to ninth defendants to the Wallace summons); Dawson & Co. (for the third, tenth and eleventh defendants to the Wallace summons). H

[Reported by R. W. FARRIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

I

A

In the Estate of BRAVDA (deceased).
BRAVDA AND ANOTHER v. BRAVDA.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Wilmer, Russell and Salmon, L.J.J.), January 31, February 1, 2, 1968.]

B

Will—Attestation—Superfluous signature—Intention with which signature affixed—Will signed by four persons below word “witnessed”—First two signatures those of testator’s daughters who were his sole residuary legatees—Presumption of signing as witnesses—Daughters signed at testator’s request “to make it stronger” after independent witnesses had signed—Whether inference that daughters signed as witnesses was rebutted—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 15.

C

By his will the testator left the whole of his estate to his two daughters. It was a holograph will, written on one side of a half sheet of notepaper with the testator’s signature at the foot and on the back the words “witnessed 14.12.65” at the top. Evidence showed that two independent witnesses signed first, one of them being fetched at the testator’s instance to be “the other witness”, and that the two daughters then signed at the testator’s request “to make it stronger”. They signed in the space which was left above the signatures of the two independent witnesses and immediately below the word “witnessed”; and, so it seemed, signed at that place at the testator’s request*.

D

E

Held: there was nothing in the evidence sufficient to rebut the prima facie inference that the daughters’ signatures at the back of the will under the word “witnessed” were signed as those of witnesses; and accordingly the consequence enacted in s. 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, followed, even though there were two independent witnesses to the will, and the gifts to the daughters, which the will purported to make, were void (see p. 221, letter H, p. 222, letters B and D, p. 223, letter F, p. 224, letter E, and p. 225, letters A and I, post).

F

Kitcat v. King ([1930] P. 266) distinguished and doubted.

Per WILLMER, L.J.: (i) although the court would naturally be reluctant to defeat the manifest intention of the testator, that was an irrelevant circumstance when considering the narrow question whether the daughters signed as witnesses (see p. 220, letter I, post).

G

(ii) if there had been a substantial break between the execution of the will by the two independent witnesses and the subsequent signatures by the plaintiffs, that would have been a matter of no little significance in determining whether the plaintiffs’ signatures were affixed as those of witnesses (see p. 221, letter F, post).

Decision of CAIRNS, J. ([1967] 2 All E.R. 1233) reversed.

H

[Editorial Note. The Wills Bill (No. 80), which is before Parliament at the date of this report, will negative the result reached in the present case, if the Bill becomes law.

As to superfluous attestation, see 39 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 871, para. 1319, and for cases on the subject, see 48 DIGEST (Repl.) 134, 135, 1156-1173.

I

For the Wills Act, 1837, s. 15, see 26 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1338.]
Cases referred to:

Denning, Re, Harnett v. Elliott, [1958] 2 All E.R. 1; [1958] 1 W.L.R. 462; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 552, 1031a.

Kitcat v. King, [1930] P. 266; 99 L.J.P. 126; 143 L.T. 408; 48 Digest (Repl.) 97, 761.

Peeverett, In the Goods of, [1902] P. 205; 71 L.J.P. 114; 87 L.T. 143; 23 Digest (Repl.) 102, 1030.

* See, e.g. p. 225, letter G, post.

Sharman, In the Goods of, (1869), L.R. 1 P. & D. 661; 38 L.J.P. & M. 47; A
 20 L.T. 683; 33 J.P. 695; 48 Digest (Repl.) 134, 1163.
Smith, In the Goods of, (1889), 15 P.D. 2; 59 L.J.P. 5; 62 L.T. 183; 54 J.P. 199; 48 Digest (Repl.) 135, 1169.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the defendant by notice dated June 21, 1967, against an order of CAIRNS, J., made on May 12, 1967, and reported [1967] 2 All E.R. 1233, whereby on the grant of probate of the will dated Dec. 14, 1965, of Lewis Bravda, deceased, the names of the plaintiffs were ordered to be omitted from the will where they appeared on the second and third lines of the second page. The defendant, who was the testator's second wife and had been separated from him for many years, sought that the order of CAIRNS, J., should be discharged and that on the grant of probate the names of the plaintiffs should be included where they appeared on the second and third lines of the second page of the will. The grounds of appeal were: (i) that there was no evidence on which the judge could find that the plaintiffs did not sign the will as attesting witnesses, and (ii) that the judge misdirected himself in holding that the plaintiffs were not attesting witnesses and ought to have found that they were attesting witnesses.

Gavin Lightman for the defendant.

A. Garfitt for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 2. The following judgments were read.

WILLMER, L.J.: This is an appeal against a judgment (1) given by CAIRNS, J., on May 12, 1967, on a motion in a probate action relating to the testamentary dispositions of Mr. Lewis Bravda, deceased. The plaintiffs are two daughters of the testator by his first wife. The defendant is the testator's second wife, from whom he had been separated for a number of years under a decree of judicial separation. The motion brought by the two plaintiffs asks for three forms of relief, and I read from the notice of motion: first, it asks for the grant of letters of administration made to them on July 29, 1966, to be revoked; secondly, it asks that the plaintiffs be granted probate of the will dated Dec. 14, 1965; and, thirdly, it asks "that on the grant of probate as aforesaid the names of the plaintiffs be omitted from the said will where they appear on the second and third lines of the second page thereof."

There has been no dispute as to the first two of those three headings. As to the third point, the reason for the application is that the effect of the will sought to be propounded was that the testator left the whole of his estate to the two plaintiffs. Unhappily for them, their signatures appear on the face of the document, apparently as witnesses to the execution of the will, along with the names of two other witnesses. If they are to be regarded as having in fact signed as attesting witnesses, it seems plain that, pursuant to s. 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, they would not be entitled to take under the will. That, it is said, would defeat the plain intention of the testator, and would render the will, in the words of the judge below (2), "a mere shell of a will".

The matter arises in this way. I have said that the testator was married twice. After the death of his first wife, he married the present defendant in 1944. He and his second wife, however, separated in or about 1945; and on May 15, 1947, a decree of judicial separation was pronounced. For a number of years the testator paid alimony to the defendant; but on Apr. 13, 1961, an agreement was arrived at, the effect of which was that he settled his future liability for alimony by a lump sum payment of £1,100. The will which is propounded was executed on Dec. 14, 1965. It is a holograph will, written on a

(1) [1967] 2 All E.R. 1233.

(2) [1967] 2 All E.R. at p. 1234.

A half sheet of notepaper. I say no more at the moment, because I shall have to return hereafter to describe the form of the will.

The testator died on Feb. 23, 1966. It is said that the will could not then be found. The plaintiffs consulted a solicitor and, on his advice and with his assistance, obtained a grant of letters of administration on July 29, 1966. I propose to say nothing as to the advice which was given by that solicitor, or as to the propriety of the course which was then taken; for it has now ceased to be relevant in any way, the reason being that the will was in fact subsequently discovered. After its discovery, the present proceedings were set on foot.

The judge, after considering a number of authorities, which were cited to him and after reviewing the evidence contained in the affidavits put before him, decided in favour of the plaintiffs and acceded to the application under heading (3) of the notice of motion. He expressed his conclusion in the following words (3):

“ In my judgment, the evidence here does sufficiently show that the two plaintiffs signed, not as attesting witnesses, but simply in order to please their father, who thought that in some way the addition of their signatures would improve the will.”

D The defendant now appeals to this court.

I return now to the will itself. It is a short document and I think it only right that I should read the whole of it. It is dated at the top and is in the following terms, on the front of the half sheet of notepaper:

E “ I leave the whole of my estate to my two daughters Sarah Lebovic and Rachel Wachtel who will act as my trustees and to whom I give the following instructions. If my granddaughter Fay Lebovic does not live or get married in London, but lives elsewhere, then the £3,000 which I have invested and left in trust as a present for her when she gets married shall be shared by my two daughters, Sarah Lebovic and Rachel Wachtel.”

F Then follows the signature of the testator. On the back of the document, on the top line it says “ witnessed 14/12/65 ”; underneath that, the signature of Sarah Lebovic; underneath that, the signature of Rachel Wachtel; underneath that the signature of Leonard Sidney Haseldine, followed by his address and a repetition of the date; and underneath that again, the signature of Rebecca Levy, with her address, again followed by the date, Dec. 14, 1965.

G The story as to how the will came to be prepared and signed in that form is told in the affidavits which were before the judge. There is not, I think, any discrepancy with regard to the substance of what the different witnesses said. The story is most fully set out, I think, in the affidavit of Rachel Bravda (formerly Wachtel), and I cannot do better than read a short extract from her affidavit.

H “ (12) The circumstances leading to the signatures of my sister and I appearing upon the said document are that on Dec. 14, 1965, when both my sister and I were at No. 24, Sharon Gardens aforesaid with my father, he said that he was going to make his will and ‘ as Len is here he can be a witness ’. By ‘ Len ’ I know my father referred to Mr. Hasledine who was then working at the house as he often did. My father then said to me ‘ Go and get Mrs. Levy, she can be the other witness ’. I then went into the kitchen and saw Mr. Hasledine and asked him to come into the room after which I went up the road to Mrs. Levy’s house and asked her if she would come and witness my father’s will, which she agreed to do and accompanied me back to the house.

I “ (13) Before making his will my father said to the four of us who were assembled there that he was making the will as he wished to see his children provided for.”

Then follows a passage about the ill-health of the testator, which is not relevant. A

"(14) My father then asked me to write out the will. He dictated it, I wrote it down, read it back to him at his request and then he signed it in the presence of all four of us. My father then asked Mr. Haseldine and Mrs. Levy to sign as witnesses, which they did in that order. After this my father asked my sister and I to sign the will in order, as he said, 'to make it stronger'. We did not know what he meant as the will had already been witnessed, but we signed as he wanted." B

As I have already indicated, on the face of the will it appears that the two plaintiffs signed as witnesses. They signed in the place immediately underneath the words "Witnessed 14/12/65". That circumstance, I have no doubt, raises a rebuttable presumption against them. I do not think it has really been disputed that the relevant law on the subject is correctly stated in TRISTRAM AND COOTE (22nd Edn.) at p. 46, from which I read a short passage: C

"It would appear not unreasonable to state that any person who has signed at the end of a will has to rebut the strong presumption that he did so as a witness. The strength of the presumption may vary according to the position of the signature and the order of signing; it may be less strong if the signature appears in a place other than that of the first or second witness; but if such a person desires to assert his right to benefit by a bequest under the will it is incumbent on him to rebut the presumption that he put his signature there as a witness." D

The question on this appeal is whether the facts such as were proved by the affidavits of the witnesses are sufficient to rebut that presumption. We have in the course of the hearing been referred to quite a number of reported cases, including (as a matter of interest) cases from Ireland, from India and from New South Wales, in which the court has been able to reach the conclusion that the signature of a beneficiary, though appearing on the will, was not appended by way of attestation of its execution. None of these cases is binding on this court. They all arose in differing circumstances; and, except in so far as they indicate the kind of rebutting evidence to which the court has been prepared to give effect, I cannot say that I have found them particularly helpful. In those circumstances, I do not propose to refer to them again in detail. Most of them were fully discussed in the judgment of the judge below (4). In the end, however, I agree with the view of the judge (5) that the question to be decided is a question of fact which must necessarily depend on the circumstances of the particular case. E

On behalf of the defendant, reliance is, of course, placed in the main on the internal evidence provided by the form of the document. The form of the document is such as undoubtedly does make a strong prima facie case to show that the plaintiffs were signing it as attesting witnesses. If there were no more to it than the state of the document itself, it seems to me that there could not possibly be any answer to the defendant's case. The judge, however, expressed the view (5) that the trend of the more recent cases cited to him showed a development of the law in the direction of leaning towards a construction which would not defeat the intention of a testator. As to that, I am disposed to agree with the submission made to us by counsel for the defendant that, although the court will naturally be reluctant to defeat the manifest intention of the testator, this is really quite an irrelevant circumstance when the court has to consider the narrow question whether or not the beneficiaries concerned signed as witnesses. That is a question which has to be determined without regard to what the consequences may happen to be. F

Certain pointers in favour of the plaintiffs were relied on by the judge (6) G

(4) [1967] 2 All E.R. 1233.

(5) [1967] 2 All E.R. at p. 1237, letter F, G.

(6) [1967] 2 All E.R. at pp. 1237, 1238. H I

A and have again been canvassed in argument before us. First, some reliance is placed on the fact that, whereas the two outside witnesses appended their addresses, following what I think is the usual custom, neither of the plaintiffs recorded their addresses when they signed the document. So far as that point is concerned, I do not think that there is any substance whatsoever in it. Both B those plaintiffs were daughters of the testator. They were both living in the house with him. There could not ever be any conceivable difficulty in identifying them and tracing them at any future time, as might have been the case in relation to wholly independent witnesses.

The second pointer is the piece of evidence which described Mrs. Levy as "the other witness". That, it is said, shows that the testator realised that the two witnesses were necessary for the proper execution of his will, and it is further C said to show that he did not intend that more than two persons should sign as witnesses. That appeals to me as a point of rather more substance than the first one to which I referred; but let it be assumed that the testator did know that two witnesses were required. He was only a layman, and it does not follow that, as a layman, he would also know that the two plaintiffs would forfeit their right to take under the will if they signed as witnesses, so as to preclude the D inference that he changed his mind about the number of witnesses that he desired.

Thirdly, reliance is placed on what is said to have been a break between the formality of the execution of the will by the testator and the two independent witnesses and the subsequent signature by the two plaintiffs. It is not in dispute that the two plaintiffs, although their names appear first, did in fact sign after E the two independent witnesses. Mr. Hasledine said in his affidavit that their signatures were requested by the testator "almost as an afterthought". Had there been a real substantial break between the execution by the two independent witnesses and the subsequent signature by the two plaintiffs, I should have been disposed to say that that would have been a matter of no little significance. On a fair reading of the affidavits, however, I can only conclude that the signatures of the two plaintiffs were really appended as part of the same single F transaction or, as counsel for the defendant put it, as part of the res gestae.

The other point mainly relied on on behalf of the plaintiffs was the remark of the testator that he wanted the plaintiffs to sign, as this would "make it stronger". That phrase used by the testator was relied on as being in line with the phrase "to make it legal", which was the subject of the decision in G one of the cases cited, viz., Kitch v. King (7). As in that case, so in this, the phrase was relied on as a ground for drawing the inference that the beneficiaries, in signing, did not sign as witnesses. For my part, I find it difficult to draw any conclusion from the use of this rather curious phrase. I do not see how it could be construed as meaning that the signatures were to make the will stronger, for the terms of the will are abundantly clear and quite decisive. It could, H however, mean "to strengthen the evidence of execution"; but that is a construction of the words which does not help the plaintiffs' case. In these circumstances, it does seem to me that all the pointers which were relied on in argument, and by the judge in his judgment, as going in favour of the plaintiffs are, at the best equivocal. They are, in my judgment, quite insufficient to outweigh the inference raised by the form of the document itself.

I I should mention one other point, which was only faintly argued, or rather adumbrated, before us. The suggestion was made that s. 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, was never intended to apply in a case where there was already a valid execution by two unimpeachable witnesses. It has been suggested that the object of the section was merely to ensure that a will would not fail altogether if one or both of the two witnesses required were named as beneficiaries, as had been the case earlier. In other words, what is said is that the object of the section was merely to ensure that both those witnesses would be "credible" witnesses. That result was achieved by requiring that they should forego any benefits they would otherwise derive, but that the will would be left unimpaired. That is a point which does not appear to have been argued in the court below. It is not, of course, raised in the notice of appeal. There has been no cross-notice on behalf of the plaintiffs; and I do not think, in those circumstances, that the point is strictly open in this court. If it were open, I should merely say that, in my judgment, it is a point of no substance, for two reasons. One is that I think the words of the section are much too plain to admit of this rather tortuous construction. Secondly, I think that, after 130 years, it is now much too late to endeavour to put this entirely new construction on the well-known words of this section.

It follows that, with all respect to the views expressed by the judge, I find myself unable to draw the same inference as was drawn by him. I do not think that the evidence adduced here was sufficient to rebut the presumption or displace the inference arising from the form of the document and from the fact of the presence of the signatures of the two plaintiffs on the document. In those circumstances, I see no alternative but to allow the appeal and refuse the relief sought under the third heading of the notice of motion. I confess that I reach this conclusion with no little regret; for it is quite manifest to me that the consequences which will follow will be quite contrary to the plain and expressed intentions of the testator. In the present state of the law, however, I do not think it is possible, without doing violence to the known facts as disclosed in the will itself and in the affidavits, to reach any other conclusion. I would accordingly allow the appeal.

RUSSELL, L.J.: The question here is whether the two daughters in fact signed the will as witnesses to the execution of it by the testator. Taking the document by itself, there can be no doubt: they signed under the word "witnessed" and are followed by the two non-beneficiary witnesses. The other evidence of fact shows, however, that the document is misleading, at least as to the sequence of events. The testator proposed originally that he should execute a will and that his execution should be witnessed by two strangers to the will—one a builder working in the house, the other an acquaintance living down the road—and sent for them for that purpose. He dictated his will to his daughter Rachel in the presence of all four. Rachel wrote "witnessed" on the back of the sheet; the testator signed on the front; the two strangers then signed, with their addresses, on the back. The will was then complete and valid. Then something new happened. The daughter Rachel thus describes it in para. 14 of her affidavit:

"After this my father asked my sister and I to sign the will in order, as he said, 'to make it stronger'. We did not know what he meant as the will had already been witnessed but we signed as he wanted."

The other daughter confirms that version. The witness Mrs. Rebecca Levy deposed in the same manner, saying that the testator asked her and the other stranger witness "to sign the will as witnesses" and "then said that he would like his daughters to sign the will as well as he thought that it would make it stronger". The other stranger witness, Mr. Haseldine, does not say that the testator used the words "as witnesses" in their case and does not, therefore, reflect any contrast in phraseology. He also remembers the phrase "make it stronger", and says the testator's request to his daughters to sign "appeared almost as an afterthought".

The case on motion states that the testator directed the daughters to sign where they did, which was between the words "witnessed" and the first stranger's signature. Counsel for the plaintiffs, who settled the case on motion and also the affidavits, tells us that he then worked on a typed copy of the will which placed the daughters' signatures above the word "witnessed"; but, although the affidavits do not say that the testator told them to sign where they did,

- A counsel cannot, I think, have imagined that detail. It must be taken to have emerged in his instructions; and he, of course, on the basis of the typed copy, would have thought it, if anything, advantageous to the daughters' case. But there are the signatures under the word "witnessed". The relevance is this. It might be suggested that the testator should be expected to know, on balance of probabilities, that witnessing by his daughters would be fatal to their beneficial claims, and that was why he sent out for strangers. If that was so, however, it is difficult to see how he could possibly have directed them to sign under the word "witnessed", sandwiched between it and the other witnesses. It would seem more likely that he thought that, provided he had two stranger witnesses, the addition of the daughters could do no harm and might do good. The phrase "make it stronger" seems to me equivocal. It could well mean that, though he originally intended only two witnesses, he thought that the addition of two more would make it more certain that, if there was any challenge to the will, there was a greater chance of more witnesses to the due execution surviving. The daughters say, as I have already quoted: "We did not know what he meant, as the will had already been witnessed, but we signed as he wanted." This seems to me, at best, quite ambiguous on the question whether they were signing as additional witnesses or for some other purpose. The alternative is that somehow he was only hoping to strengthen the chances of the will being carried out by getting the trustee daughters to sign by way of approval and acceptance of its contents and of the instructions contained in it. The daughters, however, were the sole beneficiaries; and the only instructions it contained seem to me by way, if anything, of cutting down some inter vivos provision for a grand-daughter in certain circumstances in favour of the same two daughters. There is, it seems to me, absolutely nothing in the will which would be likely to make the testator want the daughters to bind themselves in some way by setting on it signatures of approval. Finally, the evidence distinguishing the request to sign as witnesses and the request to the daughters to sign is far too meagre to support a conclusion contrary to the face of the document.
- F In the end, I think there is nothing here sufficient to upset the prima facie appearance from the will of their position as witnesses to the execution. Counsel for the defendant, rightly I think, says that we cannot work on some presumption in favour of effectiveness of testamentary dispositions. We can only decide whether or not the daughters signed as witnesses to the execution by the testator on the totality of the evidence; and, on the basis of that decision, s. 15 of the
- G Wills Act, 1837, either does or does not operate. There is here no place for the maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta, which was behind the cases of In the Goods of Peverett (8) and Re Denning, Harnett v. Elliott (9), referred to by CAIRNS, J. I do not think that the dictum of LORD PENZANCE in the case of In the Goods of Sharman (10), quoted by CAIRNS, J. (11), can be taken either at its apparent width or as covering this case; and counsel for the
- H plaintiffs rightly accepts that prima facie the signatures are to be taken as attestations of the execution by the testator. The case of Kitcat v. King (12) was not defended and, even if correctly decided, it contained evidence that the signatures were put "to show approval".

CAIRNS, J., relied, as a pointer in favour of the plaintiffs, on the fact that they did not append their addresses, as did the two stranger witnesses. Addresses, however, would be for the purpose of identifying and tracing witnesses and would be quite unnecessary in the case of the plaintiff daughters. He took as another pointer that the testator started with the intention of having only two witnesses; but this cannot be inconsistent with the apparent addition of two more. Thirdly, he considered that there was a definite break between complete execution and witnessing of the will and the request to the plaintiffs to sign; but the evidence

(8) [1902] P. 205.

(9) [1958] 2 All E.R. 1.

(10) (1869), L.R. 1 P. &amp; D. 661, at p. 663.

(11) [1967] 2 All E.R. at p. 1235.

(12) [1930] P. 266.

does not really suggest any break at all. The story flows straight on, and the "apparent afterthought" seems to have been immediate. A

I am most loth to do so; but, try as I have—and, I think, manifestly did in the course of argument—I cannot uphold the plaintiffs' claims as a matter of law. They are hit, I think quite unnecessarily, by s. 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, and the whole estate will go to the defendant, the widow, who compounded her alimony several years ago, unless the daughters or either of them, by reason of some disability, can establish a claim under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938. B

It was debated in argument (the point originating from the Bench) whether s. 15 could be construed so as not to destroy a benefit given to an attesting witness if, without that witness, there were not less than two other witnesses to whom no benefit was given. This suggestion was made by analogy from the old law. A will of realty, for example, before the Wills Act, 1752, required three credible witnesses for validity (13), a beneficiary not being a credible witness; but, as I understand it, provided there were three credible witnesses, the will was valid and a fourth witness, being a beneficiary, could take his benefit. The Act of 1752 first introduced the system found in s. 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, by which all witnesses were in effect made credible by avoiding any benefit given (14). I would have thought it a very reasonable system of law that benefits to witnesses are not avoided if there are two independent witnesses; but the other view has been generally accepted in the authorities for a very long time indeed, and the language of s. 15 of the Act of 1837 is, I think, too forthright to be overcome by the analogy suggested. I have not myself looked at the language of the Act of 1752. C

I would welcome a change in the law in this regard. I would expect most people to regard the outcome of this case as monstrously unfair to the testator and to his daughters. I do myself; but every time a beneficiary is an attesting witness, s. 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, deprives him of his benefit and defeats the testator's intention. This is considered necessary to ensure reliable unbiased witnesses of due execution; but why it was thought necessary to interfere in cases where there are the requisite number of unbiased witnesses. I cannot imagine. I regretfully agree that the appeal succeeds. D

SALMON, L.J.: With very great regret, I also agree that this appeal succeeds. I was at an early stage struck by the force of the argument on the part of the defendant. I confess that I tried very hard to find some way round it—some ground on which in conscience I could find in favour of the plaintiffs; but I have failed. The words of s. 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, are too plain, and the evidence filed on behalf of the plaintiffs is wholly inadequate. Section 15 makes it clear that, if any person attests the execution of any will to whom or to whose wife or husband any benefit is given under the will, then that part of the will which gives the benefit shall be null and void, but such person shall be a competent witness to prove the validity or invalidity of the will. E

That statutory provision makes it impossible for the intentions of the testator to be carried out in the case of a beneficiary signing the will as a witness. That is the very object of the statutory provision. So, when the court is faced with the kind of problem which arises in this case, it is not open to the beneficiary to urge that the intention of the testator must not be defeated. Parliament has clearly laid down that, when the testator intends to benefit a person who signs the will as a witness, the testator's intention shall be defeated. I wholly agree with RUSSELL, L.J., for the reasons which he gives, that it is high time that this provision of the Wills Act, 1837, should be amended, so that, when there are two independent credible witnesses, the mere fact that a beneficiary has also signed as a witness should not operate (as it now does) to defeat the intention of the testator. F

The law is quite plain. The presumption is that any signature appearing on a will

A after that of the testator is presumed to be the signature of a witness to the will. The strength of this presumption depends to some extent on where the signature on the will is found. Sometimes there are just two signatures on the back of a will and nothing on the document which expressly states the capacity in which the signatories are signing. There is still a presumption that they sign as witnesses. In this case, however, as my lords have pointed out, the signatures of B the plaintiffs appear immediately under the words "witnessed 14.12.65". It really is not a question here even of presumption. The document which they signed states on its face that they signed as witnesses.

In spite of that, I can imagine evidence which might justify us in holding that when they signed they had no intention of signing as witnesses, that they were signing merely to verify the contents of the will or for some other purpose which
 C had nothing to do with attestation. There have been many cases in which beneficiaries who have signed a will have, on the evidence before the court, been able to persuade the court that they were not signing as witnesses; but in all those cases there has been the most clear and unequivocal express evidence that the beneficiaries signed in some other capacity (see, for example, In b. Sharman (15) and In b. Smith (16)). The judge relied strongly on Kitcat v. King (17). That case, however, is only very shortly reported. The evidence is by no means fully set out and I observe that in the headnote it is said (18): "There was evidence that the two beneficiaries signed otherwise than as attesting." This is the only case in the books in which, when a beneficiary's signature appears after that of the testator in a will and the courts have held that he was not signing as a witness, the report does not make it quite plain that there
 E was unequivocal express evidence that it was not his intention to sign as a witness. Having regard to the meagreness of the report, I am not satisfied that there was no such evidence in that case.

In the present case, the plaintiffs, do not anywhere in their affidavits say that it was not their intention to sign as witnesses. Even had they done so, it might perhaps have been difficult to persuade a court to accept their evidence, having
 F regard to the place where their signatures appear. However this may be, in the absence of any express statement by them that they did not intend to sign as witnesses, the court can only take what the document says. After all, they signed it. Moreover, the case on motion which was settled by counsel on the instructions of the plaintiffs states that they signed where they did at the request of their father. We know that Mr. Haseldine and Mrs Levy signed as witnesses
 G before the plaintiffs appended their signatures and that accordingly it was quite unnecessary for either of the daughters to sign as witnesses. Mr. Haseldine was the witness to sign first. There was quite a large space left between his signature and the words "witnessed 14.12.65". It was in this space that the plaintiffs signed, and signed there at the request of the testator. Obviously, this would always have been a very difficult case for them. If it was not their H intention to sign as witnesses, but for some other purpose, they should have said just that, and stated what the other purpose was. It may be that there would have been an application to cross-examine. It may be even so that their evidence would have been accepted. The evidence, however, just does not exist; and, without it, their case is, in my view, hopeless.

In those circumstances, although I have the greatest sympathy for them, I
 I cannot see how it is possible to support the finding of the judge in their favour. I therefore agree, with great reluctance, that this appeal succeeds.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Lovell, White & King, agents for Charles Webb & Sons, Brighton (for the defendant); Barber, Young & Co. (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

(15) (1869), L.R. 1 P. & D. 661.
 (17) [1930] P. 266.

(16) (1889), 15 P.D. 2.
 (18) [1930] P. at p. 266.

DASS (an infant) v. MASIH.

A

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning, M.R., Salmon and Edmund Davies, L.J.J.), March 7, 8, 1968.]

County Court—New trial—Further evidence—Expert evidence on handwriting—Alleged forgery of postscript in letter—Letter written in Punjabi—Written report of experts ultimately obtained by defendant some months after judgment at adjourned hearing to allow expert evidence—Expert in India—Amount in issue £298 10s.—Necessity of attendance of expert for cross-examination—Whether new trial should be granted.

B

Document—Admissibility in evidence—Expert's report on handwriting—Whether a statement tending to establish a fact—Document written in Punjabi—Expert living in India—Whether admissible under Evidence Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6 c. 28), s. 1 (1).

C

The plaintiff, an Indian, sued the defendant for £298 10s., money lent between October, 1964 and October, 1965. When the case came on first in June, 1966, the plaintiff produced a letter written by the defendant and dated May 4, 1965, which contained at the bottom, near the signature, the following postscript—"£200 I will be paying you when I come out of the hospital". The letter was written in Punjabi. The defendant admitted that he had written the letter, but alleged that the postscript was a forgery. The letter was sent to the forensic laboratory at Cardiff; but the report was inconclusive because there was no expert available conversant with Punjabi script. At a further hearing on Sept. 28, 1966, the case was adjourned for handwriting experts to be called, and the judge told the defendant that he would be wise to obtain such evidence. On May 17, 1967, the case came on again and the plaintiff called two witnesses, who testified that the postscript was in the defendant's handwriting, viz., in the same handwriting as the rest of the letter. The defendant cross-examined the two witnesses, but called no evidence of his own. Judgment was given for the plaintiff. In November, 1967, the defendant applied for a new trial on the ground that he had obtained the written report of one, P., a handwriting expert in India. P.'s written report analysed the letter of May 4, 1965, and concluded that the postscript was not in the same handwriting as the rest of the letter. The county court judge refused to grant a new trial, on the ground that he was not satisfied that the new evidence could not have been adduced with reasonable diligence in May, 1967. He was of opinion that if P. had been available to give evidence in person, the court might have come to a different conclusion, but that it would have been necessary for P. to be called as a witness. At that time the defendant did not propose to call P., who was in India. On appeal,

D

E

F

G

Held (LORD DENNING, M.R., dissenting): applying the tests laid down in Ladd v. Marshall a new trial should not be granted, for the evidence contained in P.'s report could have been obtained by the time of the adjourned hearing in May, 1967; and further, as the question was whether there had been forgery of the postscript, it would have been necessary to call P., if the court of first instance was to be convinced that the postscript was written by the defendant, but it was not a practical proposition to bring P. from India for the purpose (see p. 232, letters A, E and H, p. 233, letter I, p. 234, letter C, and p. 235, letter I, post).

H

I

Ladd v. Marshall ([1954] 3 All E.R. 745) applied.

Per LORD DENNING, M.R., SALMON, L.J., concurring, EDMUND DAVIES, L.J., dissenting: P.'s report, giving his expert opinion that the postscript was not written by the defendant and his reasons for that conclusion, was admissible in evidence at the trial by virtue of s. 1 (1)* of the Evidence

* The relevant words of s. 1 (1) of the Evidence Act, 1938, are set out at p. 229, letter F, post.

- A Act, 1938, as a statement "tending to establish that fact" (see p. 229, letter B, p. 233, letter H, post; cf., p. 235, letter H, post).

Appeal dismissed.

- [ Editorial Note. The principal interest of the present decision lies in the dicta on whether the handwriting expert's written report, which gave his opinion, was admissible under s. 1 of the Evidence Act, 1938, as tending to establish a fact. In their recent report on hearsay (Cmd. 2964) the Law Reform Committee confined their recommendations to written statements of fact; they said that they proposed to deal with evidence of opinion in a separate report (para. 13). Meantime the Civil Evidence Bill has passed the report stage in the House of Lords. The Bill will repeal s. 1 of the Evidence Act, 1938, but, as at present proposed, the Bill does not seem necessarily to alter the question whether an expert opinion states a "fact". It should be emphasised, however, that the words "tending to establish that fact", which are quoted in LORD DENNING's judgment at p. 229, letter H, post, are not at the date of this report contained in the replacing provision of the new Bill (Bill No. 114, cl. 2 (1)).

- C As to the admissibility in evidence of statements in documents, see 15 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 315, para. 573.

- D As to ordering a new trial in a county court, see 9 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 266, 267, para. 628, and as to appeal on such an application, see ibid., p. 269, para. 633.

- E As to the grounds on which a new trial may be granted, by the Court of Appeal, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 475, 476, para. 891; and as to new trials on the ground of new evidence, see DIGEST (Practice) 865-867, 4158-4170, and ibid., 823-828, 3794-3829.

For the Evidence Act, 1938, s. 1, see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 626.]

Cases referred to:

- F Ladd v. Marshall, [1954] 3 All E.R. 745; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1489; 51 Digest (Repl.) 827, 3826.
Lenehan v. Queensland Trustees, Ltd., [1965] Qd.R. 559.
Warner v. Women's Hospital, [1954] V.L.R. 410; [1954] A.L.R. 682; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 535, 1828c.

Appeal.

- G This was an appeal by the defendant, Sardar S. Masih, by notice dated Feb. 19, 1968, from an order of His Honour JUDGE RAWLINS on Nov. 7, 1967, at the Oxford county court, refusing his application for a new trial. The grounds of appeal were: (i) that the county court judge misdirected himself as to the principles to be applied in deciding whether or not to grant a new trial on the ground of fresh evidence; (ii) that, having come to the conclusion that, if the fresh evidence had been available, he might have come to a different conclusion at the trial, the judge wrongly decided that the defendant had not exercised due diligence and did not consider whether the fresh evidence could have been available with due diligence at the trial; (iii) that the judge wrongly considered that fresh evidence would not be available at the new trial; and (iv) that he failed to take into account that there was no expert on Punjabi handwriting available in England and the financial circumstances of the defendant who at the material times could not afford to obtain an expert's report from Pakistan. The plaintiff, Banta Dass, was nineteen years of age at the hearing on June 22, 1966. The plaintiff's claim as pleaded in his particulars of claim was for a total of £298 10s. money lent; the defendant's defence was a denial of the loans alleged by the plaintiff, but he admitted a loan in November, 1965, of £85, which he pleaded that he had repaid within three weeks.

J. Allott for the defendant.

The plaintiff did not appear and was not represented.

LORD DENNING, M.R.: Mr. Dass, the plaintiff, came to England from India in September, 1963. He claims in this action a sum of £298 10s. money lent to the defendant, Mr. Masih. It is made up in this way: £100 in October, 1964; £100 in March, 1965; £15 in July, 1965; £10 in August, 1965; and other small items until the last one of £12 in October, 1965. It seems remarkable that the plaintiff, during the short time he has been in this country, should have been able to save all those sums: and even more remarkable that he should lend it all to the defendant, not getting a receipt for any of the sums. Nevertheless he claims that he did lend the sums. In April, 1966, he took out a summons in the Oxford county court. It came on for hearing in June, 1966. The plaintiff gave oral evidence in support of the loans. His wife supported him. He also produced a letter from the defendant which he claimed corroborated the first £200. It was written in the Punjabi language by the defendant on May 4, 1965, from the Osler Hospital, Headington. It has been translated for the court. The first part of it is just a friendly greeting. It starts: "My dear Dass, Greetings"; then a sentence or two and then finishing—"Would you come and see me this Friday. It is very urgent. Yours sincerely, S. Masih". Then near the signature, pressed into the bottom of the letter, there is this statement: "£200 I will be paying you when I come out of the hospital." The plaintiff says that that last sentence was written by the defendant in Punjabi in his handwriting and is written corroboration of the loan of the first £200.

At the hearing there was much controversy about that sentence. The defendant said that it was not his handwriting but was a forgery. It was inserted, he suggested, by the plaintiff. The judge asked the forensic science laboratory in Cardiff to examine the letter. They could not express a definite conclusion one way or the other. The reason was because it was in Punjabi handwriting, of which they were ignorant. On that report being received, the judge adjourned the case again. He told the plaintiff that he should get an expert in handwriting. He also told the defendant to get an expert.

Eventually the case came on for hearing in May, 1967. The plaintiff then called two witnesses. One of them said that he had served in the police and knew the Punjabi language. The other was Mr. Chopra, an M.A. of the Punjab University. They both said that the disputed sentence was in the handwriting of the defendant. The defendant did not call any evidence. So judgment was given by the judge against the defendant for the full amount of £298.

The defendant was disappointed by the result. He then went to great pains to try and get the evidence of a handwriting expert in Punjabi. There was none to be found in England. He wrote to the High Commissioner for India in London. The High Commissioner could not help. The defendant then wrote to a handwriting specialist in England, Major Wilkins, who gave him the names of three handwriting experts in India who were familiar with the Punjabi language. The defendant wrote to them. The first two each wanted £50 for an opinion. So the defendant did not engage them. The third, Mr. Puri, said he would give an opinion for £15. Mr. Masih engaged him; and on Oct. 18, 1967, Mr. Puri made a report on the disputed sentence. His report is seven pages long. It analyses the handwriting and goes into great detail about the hooks, curves, dots and the like. He came to the conclusion that the disputed sentence was not written by the defendant.

Thereupon the defendant went to the county court judge and applied for a new trial on the ground that this was evidence which he could not reasonably have had available at the trial. The judge said:

"If the evidence of the expert had been available, I might have come to a different conclusion."

He indicated, however, that he would want to hear Mr. Puri in person, and to have him cross-examined, before he could hold that the disputed sentence was a forgery. He thought that Mr. Puri could not be got over from India: so it

A would be no use ordering a new trial. He also said that he was satisfied that the defendant did not exercise due diligence and it was, therefore, too late for him to apply for a new trial.

The defendant appeals to this court, with the assistance of legal aid. We have had before us the case of Ladd v. Marshall (1), which sets out the three conditions for a new trial.

B "...first, it must be shown that the evidence could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial: second, the evidence must be such that, if given, it would probably have an important influence on the result of the case, though it need not be decisive; third, the evidence must be such as is presumably to be believed, or, in other words, it must be apparently credible, although it need not be incontrovertible."

C It seems to me that those three tests are satisfied. In the first place I do not think that the defendant could reasonably have been expected to get the evidence of Mr. Puri for use at the first trial. It is true that the judge, when he granted an adjournment, told him to get an expert; but there was no expert in Punjabi handwriting in England. Moreover, I do not think that at that stage he could have been expected to go beyond England. When things went so badly for him, however, he went to the extreme length of writing out to India. Secondly, it seems to me that Mr. Puri's evidence, if given orally, would have had an important influence on the result of the case. The judge said: "If the evidence of the expert had been available, I might have come to a different conclusion."

E It was also apparently credible; for the analysis appears to be carefully done, and such as to be accepted unless upset by cross-examination. The difficulty is that Mr. Puri is not here to give evidence orally. The defendant said that he was ready to pay all the expense of getting Mr. Puri over here; but I do not think that that is a practical proposition. It would not be right to spend all that money over a claim of this amount; but I must say that I think that Mr. Puri's report itself would be admissible under the Evidence Act, 1938. Section 1 provides:

"In any civil proceedings where direct oral evidence of a fact would be admissible, any statement made by a person in a document and tending to establish that fact shall, on production of the original document, be admissible as evidence of that fact if the following conditions are satisfied, that is to say—(i) if the maker of the statement either—(a) had personal knowledge of the matters dealt with by the statement; or (b) . . . and (ii) if the maker of the statement . . . is beyond the seas and it is not reasonably practicable to secure his attendance . . ."

G Applying the section it seems to me that the fact in issue was: In whose handwriting was the disputed sentence? Did the defendant write it? I think that "direct oral evidence" would be admissible of that fact. Direct oral evidence could be given by someone who saw the defendant write or knew his handwriting. Next, I think that the statements made by Mr. Puri in his report "tend to establish that fact". His report is an analysis of the disputed sentence. It tends to establish the fact that it was not in the handwriting of the defendant. It stands on the same footing as an analysis made by a chemist of a substance. It tends to establish its ingredients. Next, I think that Mr. Puri had "personal knowledge of the matters dealt with by the statement" in that he had personal knowledge of the analysis contained in the report and of his opinion thereon. Finally, Mr. Puri is beyond the seas and it is not reasonably practicable to secure his attendance. In my opinion, therefore, Mr. Puri's report would be admissible in evidence under the Evidence Act, 1938. Its weight, however, is an entirely different matter. That is for the judge who tries the case.

It has been said that statements of opinion are not admissible under the Evidence Act, 1938, but only statements of fact. I do not agree. When there is a fact in issue (such as the cause of death), the statements made by an expert in a report (stating the nature of the wounds and their probable cause) tend to establish that fact. Such a report by an expert who has examined the body is admissible. So also with any other report which is based on an analysis of observed facts. A

In support of this view I would rely on PROFESSOR CROSS ON EVIDENCE (3rd Edn.), pp. 485, 486, together with the Australian authorities to which he refers, Warner v. Women's Hospital (2) and Lenahan v. Queensland Trustees, Ltd. (3). I would not suggest that every statement of opinion is admissible. For instance, if a bystander who saw an accident makes a statement of facts seen by him, that would be admissible: but if he gave his opinion that one of the drivers was negligent, it would not be admissible. It would not be admissible even if given on oath. So it is certainly not admissible under the Evidence Act, 1938. But the opinion of an expert, based on his observed facts, is admissible on oath: and if he is not available, his report is admissible under the Evidence Act, 1938. So Mr. Puri's report is, in my opinion, admissible. B

The only remaining question is whether, as a matter of discretion, a new trial should be granted. The judge did not think it right to order a new trial; but he had not the benefit of any argument on the Evidence Act, 1938. If he had realised that Mr. Puri's report was admissible, I think that he might have ordered a new trial, especially in view of his statement: "if the evidence of an expert had been available, I might have come to a different conclusion." It is a very difficult point, but on the whole I would be in favour of ordering a new trial. C

SALMON, L.J.: The facts of this case are quite simple. They do, however, give rise to questions which are certainly not free from difficulty. D

The plaintiff, who is a young man of nineteen years of age with a wife and child and is earning between £13 and £15 a week, alleged that during 1963, 1964 and 1965 he had lent just under £300 to the defendant. He claimed that the defendant had not repaid that money. He accordingly brought an action in the county court against the defendant asking for repayment of the loan. The case originally came before the learned county court judge on June 22, 1966. The plaintiff went into the witness box and gave evidence in support of his case. He was corroborated by his wife who said that she was present when some of the loans were made. He also called his brother-in-law who deposed to the fact that he was present on an occasion when the defendant acknowledged that he owed the money to the plaintiff. That was all the oral evidence called by the plaintiff. The defendant said that he had borrowed £88 from the plaintiff during 1964, that he had repaid that money, and that he had borrowed nothing at all since. E

So far as the oral evidence went, one had the plaintiff and his wife and brother-in-law on the one side and the defendant on the other. If the evidence had stopped there, the task of the judge would have been extremely difficult. How he would have decided it we do not know: but the plaintiff produced a letter which was undoubtedly written by the defendant dated May 4, 1965, and this letter had a postscript: "£200 I will be paying you when I come out of the hospital." The defendant says that that postscript was not in his handwriting but had been added to the body of the letter after he had dispatched it. F

The letter was obviously of the greatest significance. Without it the judge would merely have had to weigh up the view that he took of the witnesses for the plaintiff and the view he took of the defendant, and, as I have already said, no-one knows how he would have decided the issue. The letter was, however, critical. If the postscript was in truth in the defendant's handwriting, there was an end of the defendant's case. If it was not in his handwriting, the only other way it G

(2) [1954] V.L.R. 410.

(3) [1965] Qd.R. 559.

A could have got on to the letter would have been by forgery and the only person who would have had any interest in forging it would have been the plaintiff. In these circumstances, the plaintiff or someone at his procuration must have forged it. If that postscript was a forgery, quite obviously the plaintiff would fail.

B At the end of the hearing on June 12, 1966, the judge had no material before him on which he could decide whether this was a forgery or not. He accordingly adjourned this matter for expert evidence. The case came before him again on Sept. 28, 1966, the letter in the meantime having been sent to the forensic science laboratory at Cardiff. The laboratory had produced a report but it was entirely inconclusive. The expert at the laboratory, perhaps not unnaturally, was not conversant with the Punjabi script and he would not express a view one way or the other as to whether the postscript was genuine. So the case was then adjourned for further expert evidence. According to the judge, he then told the defendant that he would be very wise to obtain expert evidence. Now it is quite plain from a letter which was written by the defendant, which is exhibited to one of the affidavits on the application to the judge, that the defendant is an intelligent and well educated man who writes excellent English. It is difficult to believe D that he did not understand what he was told by the judge: nor that a man of his education and intelligence could have been in any doubt about the importance of his obtaining expert evidence.

E The case did not come before the court again until May 17, 1967, that is more than 7½ months later. The defendant came to the court on that occasion with no expert evidence. On the other hand, the plaintiff produced two witnesses, both Indians, one of whom said he specialised in the Punjabi language. He said in effect that the postscript was written by the same man who wrote the body of the letter. He said that he thought it was unlikely that the plaintiff had written it because the letter, including the postscript, was clearly in the writing of an educated man. He had seen the plaintiff's writing and it did not look to him as if the plaintiff was an educated man or that he wrote an educated hand. F This witness does not appear to have had any serious qualifications except certain experience of assisting the Royal Air Force police in translating Punjabi documents. The second witness was an M.A. of the Punjab University. Whether he had any other qualifications the note of the evidence does not relate, but he supported the view that the postscript was in the same handwriting as the letter. It appears that the defendant contended that the first witness who gave evidence G on May 17, 1967, was nothing but an enthusiastic amateur, but the judge said he thought that he was a good deal more than that and was apparently impressed by his evidence.

H In that state of affairs the judge gave judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant applied to the judge in November, 1967, for a new trial, and he based his application for a new trial very largely on a report by a Mr. Puri from Patiala dated Nov. 18, 1967, in which Mr. Puri, who stated that he was a handwriting expert, said that after analysing the letter of May 4, 1965, he was of the opinion that the postscript was not written in the same handwriting as the body of the letter.

I The judge refused the application, and he did so on two grounds. First, he said that he was not satisfied that the defendant had complied with the first requisite for an order for a new trial laid down in Ladd v. Marshall (4), namely, he was not satisfied that the evidence contained in Mr. Puri's report could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial. Secondly, he said that if Mr. Puri were called to give the evidence in this report and was subjected to cross-examination, and he believed Mr. Puri, as he might have done, he might well have come to a different conclusion. Since, however, the judge was told that it was not proposed to call Mr. Puri, he concluded that there could be no point in granting the application for a new trial. A

For my part I think that the judge was right on the first point and I have come to a clear conclusion that he was right on the second. As I have already indicated, there was an interval between the hearing on Sept. 28, 1966, and the hearing on May 17, 1967, of some 7½ months. If the defendant had taken the steps in September, 1966, which he took after he lost the case in May, 1967, he could easily have had Mr. Puri's statement in England, if not Mr. Puri in person, by May 17, 1966. This follows from the fact that he obtained the statement from Mr. Puri about four months after he first took any steps to obtain it. I cannot see, particularly as the judge warned him that he ought to get the evidence, any excuse for his not having taken the appropriate steps in time. I cannot for my part understand how there is any real ground for saying that that evidence could not have been available by May 17, 1967. I am singularly unimpressed, as apparently was the judge, by the excuse put forward by the defendant. He said that he was quite prepared to rely on any expert witnesses that were produced by the plaintiff. He said that he could not believe that any expert called by the plaintiff would support the plaintiff. His whole case was that the plaintiff was making a dishonest claim against him and had backed it up by forging a document. It is difficult to believe that a man of intelligence and education could say to himself: "Oh well, I can, of course, safely rely on any expert that this man produces." B C D

On the other point I would have thought that the judge was absolutely right in the view that he took that it was only if Mr. Puri were called before him that there could be any chance that he would come to a different conclusion from the one at which he arrived at the first trial. It is said on behalf of the defendant, first of all, that the report is admissible in evidence—I will deal with that point in a moment—and that accordingly even if Mr. Puri had not been called before the judge, the judge on the strength of Mr. Puri's written report might have come to a different conclusion from that which he had reached on the May 17, 1967. What that argument comes to is that there is a real chance that the judge could have found the plaintiff guilty of forgery and perjury on the written report of Mr. Puri. Even giving the most impressive letter heading that Mr. Puri adopts its full weight, I do not think that any such conclusion is possible. I have no reason to suppose, nor do I think the judge would have supposed, that handwriting experts in Patiala are any more or any less reliable in the views they express than handwriting experts in this country. Questions as to whether or not a document has been forged are very difficult questions to decide and are questions about which there are often different opinions. The judge had had the opportunity of seeing and hearing the plaintiff and seeing and hearing the experts whom he called. It is true that this report of Mr. Puri is extremely detailed, and he gives all the reasons why he has come to the conclusion at which he has arrived. There are many cases, however, in which handwriting experts do just that when they are in the witness box and yet the court is unable to accept their opinion. I entirely agree with the county court judge when he makes it plain, as I think he does, that it could only be if Mr. Puri came to give evidence before him and he heard him cross-examined that there would be any chance that he might reverse his original decision. Now it would be ridiculous in this case to bring Mr. Puri from India. Nor is there any material before this court, certainly no evidence, which makes it seem at all likely that he would be called; indeed, when the matter was before the county court judge he was told that Mr. Puri would not be brought to this country. E F G H

Having regard to the view I take on the two points to which I have referred, it is not necessary for me to express any opinion about the true construction of s. 1 of the Evidence Act, 1938. This, however, is an important point, and since it has been dealt with by LORD DENNING, M.R., I think it right that I should express, at any rate, a provisional view about it. I consider that it is important, if I

A possible, to give a liberal construction to this section. I have formed the provisional view that it is possible to give it such a construction. The material words are:

B “In any civil proceedings where direct oral evidence of a fact would be admissible, any statement made by a person in a document and tending to establish that fact shall, on the production of the original document, be admissible as evidence of that fact . . .”

C Pausing there, I would have no doubt at all but that the words are wide enough in circumstances such as these to let in a statement of opinion, providing such a statement would be admissible if made orally in the witness box. The fact about which direct oral evidence is obviously admissible is the fact as to whether or not the postscript was in the handwriting of the defendant. A statement of opinion by a handwriting expert as to whether or not the postscript was in the handwriting of the defendant clearly tends to establish the fact as to whether or not it was in the handwriting of the defendant. It is only if you read into the words of the section which I have recited the words “of fact” after the word “statement”, so that it reads “any statement of fact made by a person in a document”, and so on, that the section would exclude statements of opinion. I can see no compelling reason to read such a limitation into the section. The only doubt that I feel is in regard to the conditions which, according to the language of the section, have to be satisfied before the statement is admitted in evidence. They are

E “(1) if the maker of the statement either—(a) had personal knowledge of the matters dealt with by the statement; or (b) where the document in question is or forms part of a record purporting to be a continuous record, made the statement . . . in the performance of a duty to record information supplied to him by a person who had, or might reasonably be supposed to have, personal knowledge of those matters; . . .”

F That looks perhaps as if the section is referring, at any rate primarily, to statements of fact. I think on the whole, however, that the word “statement” may cover statements of opinion as well as statements of fact although the conditions may appear to be particularly designed to meet the case where the statement concerned is a statement of fact. The written statement of opinion must, as I have already indicated, certainly be of a kind which would be receivable in evidence if given orally. In any event I should have thought that in a matter of G this kind, a statement of opinion by a handwriting expert, when he sets out the facts on which his opinion is founded, is a statement in respect of which the person making it has personal knowledge of the matters dealt with in the statement. Even if a written statement of opinion by an expert be admissible in evidence, it may be of little weight if there is evidence to the contrary. In H such circumstances it is difficult to see how the court could normally accept one opinion rather than the other without hearing the witnesses and hearing their evidence tested in cross-examination.

I Without expressing any concluded view on the matter, I am, however, inclined to agree with LORD DENNING, M.R., that this written statement of Mr. Puri would be admissible in evidence. Nevertheless, for the reasons which I have given, I consider that the judge came to a correct conclusion. He exercised his discretion properly, and I would dismiss the appeal.

EDMUND DAVIES, L.J.: I concur with SALMON, L.J., in thinking that this application should be dismissed. I am particularly struck by the fact that at an early stage the defendant, who is clearly a man of intelligence and education, was confronted by a situation in which not only had witnesses been called to support the plaintiff's testimony that he had lent money to the defendant but there had been produced a letter, the greater part of which was admittedly in his handwriting and to which, if the defendant was right, someone had appended a forged and most damaging postscript. In those circumstances, albeit he had not at that time applied for or obtained legal aid, he must have realised the gravity of the situation. The judge then warned him of the desirability of his being legally aided; but he let no less than 7½ months elapse before the next hearing of the court, and it was only after judgment was entered against him that he took any steps to obtain that testimony which is now the basis of his application for a new trial. A

What excuse does he advance for that extremely long delay? He says that he was relying on the expert testimony of the plaintiff's own witnesses. It is indeed strange for the defendant to express confidence in the quality of the testimony which the plaintiff (who, according to the defendant, had forged his admission of a debt) was likely to adduce. I think this applicant has wholly failed to show anything like the due diligence which could reasonably be expected in the circumstances. On that and the other grounds adverted to by SALMON, L.J., I would dismiss this application. B

SALMON, L.J., has dismissed it, however, even though he concluded that the written opinion of Mr. Puri might well be admissible under the Evidence Act, 1938. It is not necessary for me to express a final conclusion about that matter, but I respectfully entertain substantially greater doubts than SALMON, L.J., appears to entertain on the point. As at present advised, it would appear to me that the whole structure of the Act of 1938 points to and deals with written evidence as to facts, as opposed to written evidence relating to opinion. I entirely agree that a liberal approach to and construction of the Act of 1938 is desirable, but nevertheless I do venture to draw attention to one or two features of this legislation. Section 6 in dealing with the word "statement" does not, it is true, provide an all-inclusive definition, but what it does is to furnish a useful pointer to the area intended to be covered by the Act of 1938. It provides that C

" 'statement' includes any representation of fact, whether made in words or otherwise."

Section 1 opens with these words: D

"In any civil proceedings where direct oral evidence of a fact would be admissible, any statement made by a person in a document and [I agree that these following words are important] tending to establish that fact shall . . ."

in certain circumstances be admissible as evidence. Then one gets these important provisions: First, "(1) if the maker of a statement either (a) has had personal knowledge of the matters dealt with by the statement". I ask myself: does that sound like a reference to an opinion or to a statement of fact? I am inclined to think that it refers to the latter. Again, the second requirement is that "(b) where the document in question is or forms part of a record purporting to be a continuous record . . .", the person responsible therefor "made the statement . . . in the performance of a duty to record information supplied to him . . ." That provision again appears to me to be far more appropriate to statements of fact than to statements of opinion. E

There are two Australian cases where the liberal construction which LORD DENNING, M.R., has firmly adopted was received with favour. The first is Warner v. Women's Hospital (5), where SNOLL, J., said that one important question (which he did not have to decide finally) was whether "statements" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act obtaining in Australia (which is in wording identical with the Act of 1938) excluded statements of opinion. Without expressing a firm conclusion, he expressed the view that in all probability the Act did extend to expressions of opinion and was not restricted to statements of fact. F

A In Leuchan v. Queensland Trustees, Ltd. (6), HART, J., was firmly in favour of the view that the Act did apply to statements of opinion, saying:

"The word 'statement' is, I think, wide enough to include a request or a statement of intention or a statement of opinion, as in my view the Act should be widely and liberally construed."

B The Law Reform Committee in its thirteenth report, entitled "Hearsay evidence in civil proceedings", which was issued in May, 1966, (7) expressed themselves, as I see it, as being clearly of the opinion that the Evidence Act, 1938, deals only with facts. A distinction is drawn in para. 13 of that report between evidence of facts on the one hand and evidence of opinion on the other. The opening sentence is in these words: "The Evidence Act, 1938 deals only with facts of which direct oral evidence would be admissible", the word "facts" being italicised. The remainder of the paragraph contrasts facts on the one hand with opinions on the other.

C Finally, in CROSS ON EVIDENCE (3rd Edn.), p. 495, there is a passage on this matter (to which reference has already been made by LORD DENNING M.R.). Having stated that there is no doubt that the word "fact" in s. 1 is wide enough to cover opinion, he goes on to raise what I regard as a matter important to be borne in mind. The question is: what is the object of the exercise? In the present case it is not to establish that Mr. Puri holds a certain opinion, but that the opinion of Mr. Puri is well-founded and should be adopted by the court. Having referred to the Australian authorities, however, PROFESSOR CROSS appears, if I may say so respectfully, to make a point which is not valid. He states (at p. 481) that if the Act is to be regarded as extending to matters of opinion,

E "... it is not easy to see how, as a matter of construction, admissibility could be confined to statements of opinion which would be admissible if given on oath in court. For example, it is difficult to believe that a written statement by someone who saw a motor accident suggesting that one of the drivers was negligent would be admitted under the Act, but once 'statement' is held to include a statement of opinion, it is hard to see how this type of statement could be excluded."

F In my judgment, there would be in those circumstances a clear ground for excluding such a statement, because the opening words of the Act of 1938 are: "In any civil proceedings where direct oral evidence of a fact would be admissible ...". Clearly the opinion of a lay witness as to which of two motor drivers was negligent would not be admissible on oath, and in the same way his signed statement on the matter would be equally inadmissible.

G In view of the reference to the Act of 1938 and the conclusion which has been arrived at by LORD DENNING, M.R., I have thought it right to deal with the matter to the extent that I have. While not expressing any firm opinion, my present view is that the Act of 1938 does not extend to statements which consist of expressions of opinion. Accordingly, for my own part, I doubt whether the report embodying the Puri opinion would be admissible in evidence; but, be it admissible or not admissible, I agree with SALMON, L.J., for the reasons he has given, that this application for a new trial should be refused.

Appeal dismissed.

I Solicitors: Trower, Still & Keeling, agents for Thomas Hallam, Grimsdale & Co., Oxford (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BAKER v. WILLOUGHBY.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Donaldson, J.), February 26, 27, March 11, 1968.]

Damages—Personal injury—Subsequent further injury to plaintiff, as victim in a robbery, necessitating amputation of limb previously injured—Whether damages for injury originally caused by tortfeasor should be reduced by reason of subsequent greater injury supervening.

In September, 1964, the plaintiff suffered serious injuries to his left leg in an accident on the highway caused by the negligent driving of a motorist, the defendant, but attributable as to one quarter to the plaintiff's contributory negligence. After prolonged hospital treatment the plaintiff re-entered employment. In May, 1966, he had good functional movement in his left leg, but the medical view at that time was that degenerative changes would develop and would eventually limit his activities. He was less well able as a result of the accident to compete in the labour market, and his earning capacity was reduced. The court would have assessed, before Nov. 29, 1967, the plaintiff's general damages as £1,200 (i.e., £1,600 less £400). On Nov. 29, 1967, in the course of the plaintiff's employment he was an innocent victim of an armed robbery in which he received gunshot wounds necessitating the immediate amputation of his defective left leg. On the question of the amount of damages for the plaintiff's injuries in the traffic accident of September, 1964, which came before the court for assessment in February, 1968.

Held: the plaintiff's loss from the traffic accident in September, 1964, was in no way reduced by the amputation of his leg consequent on the injury to him in the robbery on Nov. 29, 1967, and accordingly the damages which would have been recoverable from the defendant immediately prior to his injury in the robbery should not be reduced; the plaintiff's general damages, therefore, would be assessed at £1,200 (see p. 240, letters A and G, post).

Principle in The Haversham Grange ([1905] P. 307) applied.
The Carslogie ([1952] 1 All E.R. 20) considered.

[As to the date by reference to which damages are measured, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 237, 238, para. 405; and for cases on the measure of damages in tort, see 17 DIGEST (Repl.) 101, 102, 155-173; 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 199-202, 1048-1070; DIGEST (Cont. Vol. A) 465, 173a.

As to what a defendant may prove in mitigation of damages for a tort, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 291, 292, para. 479; as to the exclusion of collateral matters in mitigation of damages, see ibid., p. 293, para. 481; and for cases on mitigation of damages in tort, see 17 DIGEST (Repl.) 111, 112, 249-259.

As to collateral matters in relation to the assessment of damages, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 240, para. 408.]

Cases referred to:

Carslogie, The, Carslogie Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Royal Norwegian Government (Represented by the Norwegian Shipping & Trade Mission), [1952] 1 All E.R. 20; [1952] A.C. 292; 42 Digest (Repl.) 939, 7304.

Haversham Grange, The, [1905] P. 307; 74 L.J.P. 115; 93 L.T. 733; 10 Asp. M.L.C. 156; 29 Digest (Repl.) 287, 2168.

Performance Cars, Ltd. v. Abraham, [1961] 3 All E.R. 413; [1962] 1 Q.B. 33; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 749; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 465, 173a.

Williamson v. John I. Thornycroft & Co., Ltd., [1940] 4 All E.R. 61; [1940] 2 K.B. 658; 110 L.J.K.B. 82; 36 Digest (Repl.) 223, 1194.

Yorkshire Electricity Board v. Naylor, [1967] 2 All E.R. 1; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 1114.

A Action.

In this action, commenced by writ dated Aug. 4, 1966, the plaintiff, George Robert Baker, claimed damages against the defendant, Arthur George Willoughby, for personal injuries received and loss caused by the negligent driving of a motor vehicle by the defendant on Sept. 12, 1964. The plaintiff received prolonged hospital treatment for fractures of the lower left leg and left ankle, and subsequently re-entered employment. On Nov. 29, 1967, whilst in the course of his employment by a scrap metal merchant the plaintiff was the innocent victim of an armed robbery in which he received gunshot wounds necessitating the immediate amputation of his defective leg. The plaintiff's action for damages against the defendant came before the court on Feb. 26, 1968, and DONALDSON, J., found that the negligent driving by the defendant was established and that there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, and HIS LORDSHIP apportioned the liability as to three-quarters to the defendant and one-quarter to the plaintiff. The report is confined to the question whether the measure of damages which the court would have found to be recoverable by the plaintiff from the defendant before the further injury suffered by the plaintiff on Nov. 29, 1967, was in any way altered at the date of the present hearing by reason of that further injury.

D. E. Hill-Smith for the plaintiff.

Derek Wood for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Mar. 11. DONALDSON, J., read the following judgment: In this action the plaintiff claims damages for personal injuries sustained when he was knocked down by a car driven by the defendant. The accident occurred on the Croydon Road, Mitcham, at about 8 a.m. on Sept. 12, 1964. [HIS LORDSHIP then reviewed the facts disclosed by the evidence of the witnesses relevant to the accident, and, after finding that the defendant was liable for the injuries suffered by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's negligent driving but that the plaintiff contributed to the accident by his own negligence to the extent of twenty-five per cent., continued:] As a result of this accident the plaintiff suffered fractures of the lower left leg and left ankle. He was admitted to hospital and detained there for some six months after which he was discharged on crutches. During his stay in hospital the leg was manipulated on three occasions under an anaesthetic and fragments of bone were fixed with screws. The plaintiff's leg was in plaster for three months after his discharge from hospital. In all he seems to have been on crutches but able to put varying amounts of weight on the leg for some six months. He was seen by a consultant orthopaedic surgeon in May, 1966, who reported as follows:

"[The plaintiff] suffered a severe fracture of the distal end of the left tibia and fracture of the shaft of the fibula. These have at last united with slight deformity and he now has, for practical purposes, a good range of functional movement. Owing to the slight displacement of the posterior malleolus and the fact that he is a large heavy man, he will probably develop degenerative changes in the ankle joint. These changes are expected eventually to limit his activities and it is possible, but not probable, that further surgery will be required in some years' time."

At this time the plaintiff was complaining of pain around the ankle, occasional shooting pain up the back of his leg from the ankle when walking, swelling of the foot and ankle at the end of the day and limitation of movement. Both the latter facts were confirmed by physical examination. The consultant examined the plaintiff again at the end of November, 1967, although the report is dated Dec. 4, 1967, and reported that he saw no reason to change his original opinion. At that time the plaintiff continued to have pain and stiffness in his ankle first thing in the morning and after resting. He could not run. He could walk well over a mile and could go upstairs, but had to be careful when going down stairs. A

At the time of the accident the plaintiff was self-employed in a somewhat ill-defined capacity. He told me that he engaged in street trading and minor demolition work. Following the accident he took a job hosing down lorries and thereafter as a member of a cable laying gang in which capacity he had to do a good deal of digging. This work was too heavy for him and he was out of work for six months. He then took employment in the business of a scrap metal merchant. B In this capacity he put in a five-hour day sorting light metals and assisting generally and found that this was within his capabilities. It was agreed that his special damage to the date of the hearing amounted to £3 9s. 6d. but it is clear that he was less well able to compete in the labour market than he was before his accident and was thus abnormally exposed to the risk of unemployment. C It is perhaps surprising that being only able to work a five-hour day and having been unemployed for six months, he should have so small a claim for special damage, but there may be a number of explanations for this. In all the circumstances I think that it must be accepted that as a result of the accident the plaintiff's earning capacity was reduced, although it is undoubtedly difficult to quantify this reduction with any accuracy.

Thus far there is little to distinguish this action from hundreds of others D which come before the courts each year and if it had been tried before Nov. 29, 1967, I should have awarded the plaintiff £1,200 as general damages, this sum being £1,600 less twenty-five per cent. on account of contributory negligence. In assessing these damages I should have taken account of pain, discomfort and the restrictions on the enjoyment of life which he had experienced up to the date of the hearing and my appreciation of the pain, discomfort, restrictions and loss E of earning potential which he might be expected to suffer thereafter. The case, however, was not tried before Nov. 29, 1967, and it is clear law that a court must not speculate where it knows: see Williamson v. John I. Thornycroft & Co., Ltd. (1). In assessing damages I should, of course, have taken account of the fact that the plaintiff would not live for ever and that in twenty-five years or so he would have retired. It would never, however, have occurred to me to contemplate the possibility F that the plaintiff would be the innocent victim of a robbery whilst in the course of his employment by the scrap metal merchant and that he would suffer gunshot wounds in his defective leg necessitating immediate amputation. Yet this is in fact what happened on Nov. 29, 1967.

What is the effect on the damages to which the plaintiff is entitled? For the plaintiff it is said that this subsequent misfortune makes no difference. For the G defendant it is said that I must only concern myself with loss suffered before Nov. 29, 1967, and that thereafter all loss is merged in and flows from the loss of the leg in the course of the robbery—in other, and less attractive words, I should treat the plaintiff as fully recovered from his motor accident injuries on Nov. 29, 1967. Counsel for the parties have been unable to refer me to any case in which a similar situation has been considered by the courts, but reliance is H placed by counsel for the plaintiff on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Performance Cars, Ltd. v. Abraham (2). In that case a motor car suffered damage to a front wing which necessitated a re-spray. Before the wing was re-sprayed, it was involved in a further accident in which the same wing suffered different damage the repair of which also necessitated a re-spray. The owner of the motor car recovered judgment for the cost of the re-spray from the driver who had been I responsible for the first accident. This judgment was unsatisfied and he then sought, unsuccessfully, to recover the cost of the re-spray from the driver responsible for the second accident. The reason why the plaintiff was unsuccessful was stated by LORD EVERSHED, M.R., in these words (3):

(1) [1940] 4 All E.R. 61; [1940] 2 K.B. 658.

(2) [1961] 3 All E.R. 413; [1962] 1 Q.B. 33.

(3) [1961] 3 All E.R. at p. 416; [1962] 1 Q.B. at p. 40.

- A "In my judgment in the present case the defendant should be taken to have injured a motor car that was already injured in certain respects, that is, in respect of the need for re-spraying; and the result is that to the extent of that need or injury the damage claimed did not flow from the defendant's wrongdoing."
- B Counsel for the plaintiff therefore submits that although the robbers could, if sued, take credit for the fact that they destroyed the plaintiff's defective leg and not his good one, the loss of the leg does not affect the amount of the damages which the plaintiff can recover from the defendant. Counsel for the defendant submits that it is for the plaintiff to prove that he has suffered or will suffer a loss and that that loss flows from the act of the defendant. Thus, he says, the plaintiff will fortunately suffer no degenerative changes or further pain in his
- C left leg and any reduction in earning capacity or loss of the amenities of life will flow from the amputation for which the defendant was in no way responsible. Accordingly the court should assess damages on the basis of a temporary incapacity which happily ceased on Nov. 29, 1967.
- D The defendant's argument may be thought more ingenious than attractive, but it is certainly worthy of serious consideration. Support for it is said to be provided by the decision of the House of Lords in The Carslogie, Carslogie Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Royal Norwegian Government (4). In that case a ship (The Heimgar) was damaged in collision with The Carslogie, the latter being wholly to blame. The Heimgar was temporarily repaired so as to make her seaworthy and it was estimated that permanent repairs would taken ten days to effect. The owners were under no obligation to effect these repairs at once, but they decided
- E to send her to New York with a view to their being effected at that port. On the voyage The Heimgar suffered heavy weather damage as a result of which she became unseaworthy and immediate repairs became necessary. These latter repairs occupied thirty days and The Carslogie collision repairs were effected concurrently. The dispute between the parties concerned the liability of The Carslogie for ten days' detention of the vessel and the decision was that her owners were not
- F liable.
- G This decision has to be contrasted with that of the Court of Appeal in The Haversham Grange (5), which was approved by the House of Lords in The Carslogie (4). There a ship, The Maureen, was involved in two successive collisions, both of which rendered her unseaworthy and necessitated immediate repairs involving her detention. The Haversham Grange was responsible for the second collision. Both repairs were effected simultaneously and the repair of the damage caused in the second collision did not increase the period during which the vessel was detained. The owners of the vessel which was involved in the first collision were held responsible for the detention of The Maureen to the exclusion of any liability on the part of the owners of The Haversham Grange.
- H The distinction between these two cases is this. In both cases the plaintiff had to prove that the act of the defendants had deprived them of the use of a profit earning chattel. In The Carslogie (4) the vessel had been made seaworthy by temporary repairs and was therefore a profit earning chattel. Whether such a loss occurred depended on when the repairs were effected. In fact they were effected at a time when the vessel for extraneous reasons had ceased to be a profit
- I earning chattel. The plaintiffs therefore failed to prove such deprivation. In The Haversham Grange (5), by contrast, the vessel ceased to be a profit earning chattel at the time of the first collision and remained in this state at all material times thereafter, the second collision having no effect on this aspect of the matter. The plaintiffs therefore succeeded in proving such deprivation by the act of the ship involved in the first collision.

(4) [1952] 1 All E.R. 20; [1952] A.C. 292.

(5) [1905] P. 307.

Applying the reasoning underlying these decisions to the facts of the present case, I have to ask myself what loss the plaintiff has proved. If, as I have already found, he has proved a loss valued at £1,600, subject to the effect of the shooting and amputation, have these events in any way reduced his loss? In my judgment they have not. It seems to me that a distinction has to be made between a supervening event which prevents an anticipated loss occurring and one which causes a greater loss, whether or not of precisely the same kind, in which the anticipated loss is merged or submerged. An example of the first category of supervening event would be the creation in November, 1967, of a new category of employment offering exceptionally high wages which was restricted to those suffering from the plaintiff's disabilities. Had this surprising event occurred, I should have had no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff's loss and corresponding entitlement to damages had thereby been reduced. An example of the second category of supervening event would be provided if a man were so injured that he had to purchase a special shoe for the injured foot and subsequently lost the foot and so did not have to buy special shoes. It seems to me that in such a case the true view is that the loss which he suffered by the amputation is reduced by the saving which he made on shoe leather, but not that his original loss was in any way reduced. If the supervening event takes the form of the death of the plaintiff, as might well have occurred, in the present case, the usual consequence will be a diminution in the liability of the defendant. As most people would regard death as involving a greater loss to the plaintiff than many kinds of injury, this result may seem to be anomalous and to indicate some error in the approach which I have formulated. I accept that there is an anomaly, but not that it flows from any error in my approach. The explanation lies in the fact that the law takes a remarkably pessimistic view of future prospects of happiness, as is demonstrated by the level of awards of damages for loss of expectation of life. If death supervenes, the plaintiff has, in the contemplation of the law, had the good fortune to have a relatively minor loss substituted for a more major one, with the necessary consequence that the amount of the defendant's liability to the plaintiff, or his estate, is reduced. When the contemplation of the law and that of the public are at variance, it is the law which suffers—and rightly so in a matter of this kind. In Yorkshire Electricity Board v. Naylor (6), LORD DEVLIN suggested that this was an area in which there was scope for reform of the law. I respectfully agree.

As, in my judgment, the plaintiff's actual and prospective loss flowing from the defendant's negligent act has not been reduced by the subsequent loss of his leg, I consider that he is entitled to judgment. I should say that the agreed special damages, as a result of my judgment are reduced to seventy-five per cent.

Judgment for the plaintiff (7).

Solicitors: Parlett, Kent & Co. (for the plaintiff); Michael Stone & Co. (for the defendant).

[Reported by K. DIANA PHILLIPS, Barrister-at-Law.]

(6) [1967] 2 All E.R. 1 at p. 12.

(7) Judgment was for £1,202 10s.

THORNTON v. FISHER & LUDLOW, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Danckwerts, Diplock and Sachs, L.JJ.), February 28, 1968.]

Factory—Lighting—Roadway in Factory—Lighting equipment sufficient but light not turned on in early morning before full daylight—Employee going to work at 6.45 a.m. tripped on coil of wire in roadway and fell—Whether breach of obligation to make effective provision for securing and maintaining sufficient lighting—Factories Act, 1961 (9 & 10 Eliz. 2 c. 34), s. 5 (1).

Factory—Passage—Freedom from obstruction—Roadway thirty feet wide in factory area—Employee coming to work in early morning tripped on coil of wire in roadway—Pavement of roadway normally obstructed—Roadway not swept at night—Whether roadway a “passage” or “gangway”—Factories Act, 1961 (9 & 10 Eliz. 2 c. 34), s. 28 (1).

In the half-light of early morning, at 6.45 a.m. in October, a cleaner, employed by the defendants, occupiers of a factory, was on her way to work in the factory. She was walking on a factory roadway, thirty feet wide. She was not on the pavement, because the pavement was usually obstructed. She tripped over a coil of wire, one end of which had been forced into the tarmac of the roadway. She fell and was injured. There were sufficient and suitable lights along a wall by the roadway, but they were not turned on. The roadway was used by numerous vehicles during the day and to a lesser degree during the night and early morning. Twenty men were employed by the occupiers of the factory under a supervisor between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. daily to sweep the six miles of factory roadway and free it from all pieces that might be found on it. The roadway was not swept or freed during the night. The cleaner sued the occupiers of the factory (her employers) for breach of statutory duty under s. 5 (1)* and s. 28† of the Factories Act, 1961, and at common law for negligence.

Held: (i) the defendants were liable to the cleaner for damages in respect of her injury for the following reasons:

(a) because by not ensuring that the lighting was turned on they had failed to make “effective provision” for securing and maintaining sufficient lighting in a part of the factory, and were thus in breach of s. 5 (1) of the Factories Act, 1961 (see p. 243, letter G, p. 245, letters C and E, and p. 246, letters B and H, post).

(b) (per DIPLOCK and SACHS, L.JJ., DANCKWERTS, L.J., expressing no opinion) the defendants had been guilty of negligence at common law either in not having turned on the lights or in having failed to take steps to see that the wire was not on the roadway (see p. 246, letters A and D, post; cf. p. 243, letter H, post).

(ii) (per DANCKWERTS, and SACHS, L.JJ., DIPLOCK, L.J. dissenting) the occupiers of the factory were not in breach of any duty under s. 28 (1) of the Factories Act, 1961, because, giving the words “floors, passages or gangways” therein their ordinary meaning, the roadway was not within that meaning (see p. 244, letters F and H, and p. 247, letter D, post; cf. p. 245, letter I, post).

Appeal allowed.

[As to the lighting of factories, see 17 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 103, 104, para. 171; as to access to floors, passages, stairs, etc., see ibid., pp. 84, 85, para. 142; and for cases on the subject see 24 DIGEST (Repl.) 1064-1066, 265-277.

For the Factories Act, 1961, s. 5 (1), s. 28 (1), see 41 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 248, 271.]

* Section 5 (1) is set out at p. 242, letter I, post.

† Section 28 (1) is set out at p. 243, letter I, post.

Case referred to:

Kimpton v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd., [1960] 2 All E.R. 274; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 527; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 591, 262a.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff by notice dated Sept. 5, 1967, against an order of His Honour JUDGE SUNDERLAND made in Birmingham county court on Aug. 1, 1967, in favour of the defendants in an action for damages for personal injuries for negligence and breach of statutory duty. The grounds of appeal were: (i) that the judge was wrong in law in holding that the roadway where the plaintiff's accident occurred was not a floor, passage or gangway within the meaning of s. 28 (1) of the Factories Act, 1961; (ii) that he ought to have held that the defendants were in breach of s. 5 (1), s. 28 (1) and s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1961; and (iii) that he ought to have found negligence on the part of the defendants, their servants or agents. The defendants served a respondents' notice dated Jan. 19, 1968, that they intended to support the judgment of the county court judge on the following additional grounds; that on the evidence they had done all that was reasonably practicable to comply with their duty both at common law and under the Factories Act, 1961, if and in so far as the Act of 1961 applied.

John D. Stocker, Q.C., and D. H. Stemberge for the plaintiff.

R. G. Rougier for the defendants.

DANCKWERTS, L.J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE SUNDERLAND at Birmingham county court given on Aug. 1, 1967. It relates to an accident which the plaintiff suffered in a fall. She was a cleaner employed at the defendant company's factory, and she was on her way with four other cleaners to work at 6.45 a.m. on Oct. 14, 1965. At 6.45 a.m. there was about half an hour, or perhaps a little more, before sunrise; I think that it was said by someone that there was a half light. She was proceeding along what was plainly a roadway thirty feet wide on her way to work. The roadway had a pavement, but the pavement at the material time was obstructed by various objects as shown by the photographs taken at another time, but which give a very fair impression of what the situation was like. In the two photographs all kinds of things are shown, trolleys and other things, on the pavement, so that it was quite impracticable for the five women to proceed along the pavement, and they were driven, therefore, to proceed along the road. The road was one on which during the day numerous vehicles passed, and even during the night and early morning it appears that vehicles to a lesser degree passed along it.

As the plaintiff proceeded on her way, she caught her foot in what has been described as a coil of wire which was lying on the roadway with one end apparently forced into the tarmac of the roadway, presumably by a heavy lorry, or something of that sort, which was passing by. Of course, the fact that it was attached at one end made it more dangerous and more likely to cause a person to trip than if it had been absolutely free. The plaintiff tripped over the wire, lost her shoe around which apparently the wire wound, fell on her face and broke a bone in her elbow. She was injured and therefore out of action for a time. The county court judge dismissed the claim, but he assessed the damages at £400 general damage, and £27 10s. 3d. as special damage. In dismissing the action, the judge considered the various grounds which were put forward, and we must consider those grounds, and consider whether the judge was right or wrong.

The first ground was based on s. 5 (1) of the Factories Act, 1961, and also on common law negligence. It is obvious that on this point the two run rather closely together, and I will first consider the provisions of s. 5 (1). The terms of that subsection are:

"Effective provision shall be made for securing and maintaining sufficient and suitable lighting, whether natural or artificial, in every part of a factory in which persons are working or passing."

A The plaintiff, of course, was "passing", and the roadway was part of the premises of the factory. The light, as I have said, was half daylight, or half light. Along the wall of the factory past which the plaintiff was going there were lamps rather high up on the wall; someone suggested, I think, that they might be five hundred watts, or something of that sort, and they were thirty yards apart. But they were not turned on, and that was the basis of the claim which was made under that subsection.

The lights, when they were turned on, would provide sufficient light, according to the evidence, so that the plaintiff might well have seen the piece of wire and avoided it. The question is whether the lighting, if it is to be treated as "sufficient and suitable" if it was turned on, was within the mischief of that subsection, so that the liability falls on the defendants because the lights either had been turned off too early, or because they had not been turned on. The evidence, so far as it went, was that sometimes the lights were turned on at this time of the morning when apparently the cleaners always came on duty, and sometimes not. One of the troubles in regard to this case is that the note of the evidence, as so often happens in a county court case, is not the same as a shorthand note taken at the hearing of the action, and questions from which one might derive further information either were not asked or perhaps they were not recorded. There is, for instance, no real evidence whatever about the nature of the wire which caused the plaintiff to trip, whether it was stout wire or whether it was very thin wire. I can only draw the conclusion that perhaps it was moderately thick wire used for some purpose or other in the factory. It may have been dropped by a vehicle, or it may have been dropped by someone connected with the factory; there was no evidence whatever on the point. The evidence whether the plaintiff could have seen the wire or not, had the lights been on, is not very strong perhaps, but on the whole I think that one can fairly reach the conclusion that at any rate she would have had a better chance of seeing the wire if the lights had been on. The evidence was that in the condition of half light she could not really see the wire, and would not be likely to see the wire unless she had been looking down at her feet. Anyhow, she tripped and fell.

The point which really arises is that, assuming that there was sufficient and suitable lighting provided by the lamps to which I have referred, was it effective within the meaning of s. 5 of the Act? I have come to the conclusion that it was not. It seems to me, on the construction of this subsection, that "effective" means lighting which is functioning effectively, and lighting which may be admirable in construction and in the provision of proper bulbs and so on, is not effective when it is not turned on. Therefore it appears to me that there was a breach of s. 5 (1) of the Factories Act, 1961, and therefore that is sufficient to give the plaintiff a cause of action.

There is also the question whether there was negligence at common law. I do not need to rely on that since I have already given a reason for allowing the appeal on the construction of the subsection. It seems to me that there might possibly be a cause of action at common law, the question being whether it was reasonably foreseeable by the defendants that an accident of this kind would happen in the conditions which existed. I prefer not to express an opinion on the point in the circumstances.

One other section was relied on by the plaintiff, and that was s. 28 (1). That section has at the beginning in black print the words: "Floors, passages and stairs", and provides:

"All floors, steps, stairs, passages and gangways shall be of sound construction and properly maintained and shall, so far as is reasonably practicable, be kept free from any obstruction and from any substance likely to cause persons to slip."

Assuming that the subsection applies, the question was whether it was reasonably practicable, and whether proper precautions were taken by the defendants, to keep it free from any obstruction. There is no doubt whatever that the wire was an obstruction, and I should have said a dangerous obstruction. A

The evidence on behalf of the defendants was that there was a man who had under him twenty men whose job it was to sweep the roadway and to pick up all pieces, whatever they might be, that might be found on it. Their hours of working were from 7 a.m. until 6 p.m. There were about six miles of roadway on the premises of the defendants, and each of the men was given a certain length to keep free from objects and to sweep. It appears, however, that work went on at the factory at night, and therefore there were thirteen hours, I think, at a time when work might be going on and things might be dropped owing to vehicles coming by when there was no sweeping or picking up of anything that might be there. Therefore it appears to me that it is probably not true to say that it was not reasonably practicable to deal with this incident, or to say when the coil of wire actually fell or was dropped, whichever it was, by, for instance, further shifts of men working through the night, which of course would be more expensive; but it may be that the expense would not have been so great in view of the risk which was entailed by the possibility of objects being left on the roadway. I do not think that I need decide that question because I propose now to deal with the construction of the section. B C D

At first glance it would appear to me that "floors, passages and stairs", if effect is to be given to those words (those being the opening words in the black print) show that "all floors, steps, stairs, passages and gangways" are matters which were inside the buildings of the factory. It has been argued (and there is some force in the contention) that it must also include things which are outside the factory premises, indeed which might be just outside the entrance to a factory, and so on. The question, however, in whether the words of the section do apply to this roadway in the circumstances of the case. As to the words which are really material, it has not been seriously argued that the word "floors" applies, and I do not think that the roadway was a "floor", anyway. The words to be considered accordingly are "passages and gangways". E

Counsel for the plaintiff has called our attention to the definitions given in the OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY, which are these. "Passage" is defined there apparently as: F

"That by which a person or thing passes or may pass, way, road, path or channel especially when serving as an entrance or exit."

The definition of gangway is: "A road, thoroughfare or passage of any kind, a passage in a building." Notwithstanding the definition of the words in the dictionary, certainly in common language I should not have said that this roadway thirty feet wide, with a pavement running along it, was a "gangway." We are told that "gangway" is derived from a Scottish or other term meaning a "going-way", a way in which you go. That seems to me a bit archaic in the circumstances, and I should not have expected the draftsman of the Act of 1961 to use it in that way. "Passage" is perhaps more easy because "passage" may well mean something on which people pass; but I should have thought that the ordinary common-place use of "passage" is not usually used in connexion with a roadway thirty feet wide. "Passage" in ordinary use, I should have thought, suggested something narrower, in the same way as the description with which one is quite familiar, narrow passages going through various places, or between walls or between other bits of land, as the case may be. That, however, does not suggest to me, at any rate, a roadway of this kind; and therefore, so far as s. 28 (1) is concerned, I should come to the conclusion that it is not within the provisions of s. 28 (1) of the Act of 1961. However, as I am of the opinion that it was the failure to turn on the lights that was the effective cause of the accident that occurred, in my view the appeal must be allowed and judgment entered for the plaintiff in the sum of £427 10s. 3d. G H I

A DIPLOCK, L.J.: I agree that this appeal should be allowed, and will add a word or two as to my view of the construction of the sections of the Factories Act, 1961, which we have been discussing during the course of today. The county court judge took the view that s. 5 requires only the provision of a "sufficient and suitable" lighting installation in the factory, and so far as that section is concerned it did not matter twopence whether it was ever turned on or not.

B I do not so read the section. What it provides is that:

"Effective provision shall be made for securing and maintaining sufficient and suitable lighting, whether natural or artificial, in every part of a factory in which persons are working or passing."

C I draw attention to the present tense of those last words, which is to be contrasted with the words in s. 29 of the Act of 1961, which refer to places "at which any person has at any time to work". It seems to me to be plain on the words of the section, and as a matter of common sense, that the section is concerned with the lighting being on as well as the installation being there. In my view what the section requires of the occupier of the factory is that the artificial lighting installation must itself be "sufficient and suitable", and that the employers

D must either take all practicable steps to ensure that the lights are switched on whenever the natural lighting is insufficient for persons who are working or passing, or must provide switches reasonably accessible to any persons who are working or passing for whom such artificial illumination is required so that they may switch it on themselves.

E As I read the judgment of the county court judge, it was his view that had the lights been on the probability is that this accident would have been avoided. There is thus sufficient causal connexion between the breach of statutory duty and the accident, and I would allow the appeal on that ground. That would make it unnecessary for me to go on to consider the construction of s. 28 of the Act of 1961; but as DANCEWERTS, L.J., has expressed his view as to the construction, I cannot resist putting my weight (such as it is) in the scale on the other side.

F I need not read the familiar s. 28 again except to draw attention to the last words, "be kept free from any obstruction and from any substance likely to cause persons to slip". I think that it is necessary, if we can, to give to that section a construction which will give effect to a sensible policy on the part of Parliament, and not one which is merely whimsical; and the policy, as I see

G it, in this section is that all parts of the factory on which persons stand or pass, at any rate on foot, must be "of sound construction and properly maintained . . . so far as is reasonably practicable". Whether a particular part of the factory falls within the word "passages" seems to me to depend on what it is used for. The evidence here is that because of the obstruction of the pavement (which would be the natural place for persons to pass on foot) it was necessary for pedestrians

H coming along to do their work in the factory to walk down the roadway. The evidence was that at that time in the morning the pavement was normally obstructed, and that it was the roadway that was normally used by pedestrians. In my view it does not matter whether the path which they take is thirty feet wide or two feet wide. Provided that it is a part of the factory which is normally used for persons to pass along on foot, it falls within the definition of "passage"

I in s. 28 of the Factories Act, 1961. If I am right about that—the county court judge took a different view—it follows that the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed on that ground also, because there is a finding of fact by the county court judge that the defendants had not shown that it was not reasonably practicable to remove or prevent the obstruction.

Finally just one word about common law negligence. There was ample evidence that it was foreseeable that objects would fall off into the road by night as well as by day. Twenty men were engaged during the day time on picking them up. I should put the case of common law negligence against the defendants very simply. Either they ought to have turned on the lights so as to make smallish objects of this kind visible and avoidable by persons passing down the roadway or they ought to have taken steps to see that such objects were not there. On all three grounds, therefore, I would allow the appeal. A

SACHS, L.J.: I agree that the county court judge took too narrow a view of the provisions of s. 5 (1) of the Factories Act, 1961. I agree too with the constructions placed on that section by my lords. The practical result is that an employer must provide sufficient and suitable artificial lighting where natural light is not of itself sufficient and suitable. B

In the present case, having regard to the existence along the roadway of available lighting, which was not in action at the material time, there seems to be no material difference in the end between the duty under s. 5 (1) and the common law duty to take proper care for the safety of employees. To my mind, when employees are going to work on a dull and dark October morning half-an-hour before sunrise, it is simply stupid not to turn on lights which can assist (and in this case would have assisted) those going to work in observing anything on the road, be it patches of oil, small pieces of material, or even larger objects. In those circumstances it seems to me that the defendants were in breach of their common law obligation to take care, and also in breach of their obligations under s. 5 (1) to provide sufficient and suitable lighting. C D

I have had more difficulty than my lords as regards whether on the facts of the case the absence of added artificial lighting in the half-light at that time of the morning was a cause of the accident. That hesitation is due to the three following factors: (i) This court knows very little indeed of the size and shape of the piece of wire which, so far as the plaintiff's evidence is concerned, is described in the judge's own notes as a coil of wire, in notes which he approved as a piece of wire which caught round the shoe and was coiled, and by another witness as follows: "I pulled a piece of wire off her shoe; it was stiff and round her shoe". (ii) Account has to be taken of the natural instinct not to look at the ground in a way that leads one to see pieces of wire, and the evidence of the defendants' expert that: E F

"If a person is not looking down, she would not be able to see the wire, but if looking down it could be seen. I think that this is the sort of accident that could happen in full light."

(iii) The courts must be on guard not to put an impracticably high burden on employers with regard to small objects which can drop on to a roadway; indeed, for a plaintiff to recover against an employer in respect of an isolated piece of wire in a roadway must come near to a high water-mark in this class of case. Having said that, however, it seems to me that there is at any rate a clear inference to be drawn on the evidence that there was a reasonable chance that the additional lighting might have prevented the accident; and I do not disagree with the view that there were sufficient chances to make that likelihood a probability. It follows to my mind that this appeal succeeds both at common law and on breach of duty under s. 5 (1) of the Factories Act, 1961. G H

In view of the course which this appeal has taken and the careful arguments which have been addressed to the court on the point, it seems proper to add my views in regard to the interpretation of s. 28 (1) of the Act of 1961. This is a section which has as its statutory side-note the words: "Floors, passages and stairs." Whether the spot which is marked "X" on the photograph is or is not a floor, passage or gangway seems to me to be to a considerable degree a matter of impression; and I have in mind a passage in Kimpton v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (1) where SELLERS, L.J., said: "I think that the whole Act has regard to what is the ordinary description of things in a factory", and the later passages which illustrate the desirability of looking at a word in its ordinary meaning. I

(1) [1960] 2 All E.R. 274 at p. 276.

- A When once one has seen the photograph which is numbered 1 in the bundle before me, and looks at the thirty feet roadway extending far into the distance as part of a network, one was told, of roadways, I find myself on first impression at least in agreement with what was said by the county court judge: "Equally it seems to me that this thirty feet roadway cannot be described as a passage or gangway in any ordinary sense", having previously likewise dismissed the submission that
- B this roadway was a "floor".

- Turning from first impressions, one can look at the statute as a whole, remembering, of course, that its primary object is the protection of workmen, but on the other hand that its provisions are of a penal nature; and then one finds that there are provisions relating to the protection of workmen in relation, under s. 29, to means of access and their place of work. So means of access, which this
- C roadway undoubtedly was, and places of work are not left out of the ambit of carefully framed provisions in the statute. Then one turns to the additional specific provision which, as already mentioned, is side-noted. "Floors, passages and stairs". For my part I can see no reason, when one has found that Parliament has in s. 29 provided precautions with regard to the relevant areas, to proceed to strain the words in s. 28 beyond the bounds of normal language. That then,
- D albeit obiter, is my view of the point and it follows that to my mind that thirty feet road was not a floor, passage or gangway within the meaning of those words in the latter section. For the reasons already given, I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

- E Solicitors: Sharpe Pritchard & Co., agents for F. A. Greenwood & Co., Birmingham (for the plaintiff); E. P. Rugg & Co., agents for William F. Hatton & Co., Birmingham (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister at-Law.]

F

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (DIVORCE).

- G Magistrates—Husband and wife—Appeal—Delay—Legal aid—Need to avoid unnecessary delay on appeals to Divisional Court.

- The attention of courts of summary jurisdiction, legal aid committees and practitioners is drawn to the importance of avoiding delay in appeals to the Divisional Court from magistrates exercising their matrimonial jurisdiction.
- H A successful appeal generally means that people of small means have either been wrongly denied, or wrongly ordered to pay maintenance. Some delay may be unavoidable, due to the necessity of compliance with procedures for legal aid, but every effort should be made to mitigate even this and to ensure that no further or other delay takes place.

By direction of the President.

- I Apr. 23, 1968.

COMPTON MILLER,
Senior Registrar.

GILBERT &amp; PARTNERS (a firm) v. KNIGHT.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Harman, Davies and Widgery, L.J.J.),
February 7, 1968.]

Contract—Quantum meruit—Existing contract—Additional work—Need for implication of new contract and thus to get rid of old contract—Contract by surveyor to arrange, supervise, etc. specified building work estimated to cost £600 for fee of £30—Additional work bringing cost to £2,283 ordered by building owner and supervised by surveyor—No request by surveyor for increasing fee until after work completed—Whether surveyor entitled to more than £30 agreed fee.

In August, 1965, a surveyor agreed with an owner of a house to prepare drawings, to arrange tenders, to obtain necessary consents and to settle the accounts for certain proposed alterations to the house, and to supervise the work of alteration, the cost of which he estimated at roughly £600, for a fee of £30, which would cover possible extras but not other work. In April and May, 1966, when the builder had started work, the owner ordered some more work, which brought the total cost to £2,283. The surveyor supervised the additional work, but did not say anything about a fee for doing so until after the work was finished, when he submitted an account for £135, being the agreed £30 plus 100 guineas, a scale fee for supervising the additional work. The owner paid only the agreed £30.

Held: the surveyor was entitled to the agreed fee of £30 only, because, although the fee was agreed in relation only to the work originally estimated and possible extras to it, no charge by way of quantum meruit for supervising the additional work ordered in 1966 was recoverable unless a new contract to pay a fee in respect of that work could be implied, and no such implication could be made as the parties had never discharged the original contract for one lump sum fee of £30 (see p. 250, letter I, p. 251, letters B and I, and p. 252, letter C, post).

Principle stated by LORD DUNEDIN in The Olanda ([1919] 2 K.B. at p. 730) applied.

Appeal dismissed.

[As to when payment may be recovered on a quantum meruit for work voluntarily done, see 8 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 226, para. 390; and for cases on quantum meruit see 12 DIGEST (Repl.) 129-131, 802-816.]

As to entitlement of architects and surveyors to payment for work done, see 3 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 539 para. 1081, and p. 541, para. 1088; and for cases on the subject, see 7 DIGEST (Repl.) 377-381, 155-187.]

Cases referred to:

Olanda, The, Stoomvaart Maatschappij Nederlandsche Lloyd v. General Mercantile Co., Ltd., (1917), [1919] 2 K.B. 728, n.; 41 Digest (Repl.) 352, 1453.

Steven v. Bromley & Son, [1919] 2 K.B. 722; 88 L.J.K.B. 1147; 121 L.T. 354; 41 Digest (Repl.) 573, 3518.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by a firm of surveyors, Gilbert & Partners, against the decision of His Honour JUDGE IFOR LLOYD, Q.C., at Wandsworth County Court, dated June 29, 1967, dismissing their action against the defendant, Mrs. R. Knight, for 100 guineas on a quantum meruit in respect of additional work which they had done for her in connexion with further alterations to her house at 19, Cavendish Road, Balham, beyond the alterations originally ordered for her.

Mr. K. B. Tyrrell, a partner in the plaintiff firm, had arranged to do surveyor's work in respect of alterations at a house, 19, Cavendish Road, Balham, which the defendant was buying. The fee for the work was agreed at £30, which Mr. Tyrrell confirmed to the defendant by letter dated Aug. 25, 1965, which is set out at p. 249, letter H, post. Further alterations were arranged subsequently.

A For the whole work the plaintiff claimed £135, of which £105 (the difference between the total claimed and the fee of £30) was claimed on a quantum meruit. This ground was pleaded in the plaintiffs' reply as follows—

"4. On the defendant's express instructions further works and/or alterations were carried out at the premises and the defendant expressly or impliedly requested the plaintiffs to perform professional services in respect thereof. The plaintiffs rendered these services, full details of which have been delivered to the defendant and the services were accepted by the defendant.

"5. It was implied by the said request that the plaintiffs would be entitled to be paid at a reasonable remuneration in respect of the services."

C The trial judge decided that the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant was to be found in the letter dated Aug. 25, 1965, he held that the plaintiffs had agreed to an inclusive fee of £30 for the work, that they had bound themselves thereby to do all surveyor's work in supervising the whole of the alterations at 19, Cavendish Road for that sum, and that a claim by way of quantum meruit did not lie. By notice dated Aug. 4, 1967, the plaintiffs gave notice of appeal, from the judgment of the trial judge specifying, among other grounds of appeal, that he was wrong in law in not holding that the plaintiffs were entitled to remuneration on a quantum meruit basis for the professional services set out in para. 4 of the reply.

N. R. Hannah for the plaintiffs.

Richard Rampton for the defendant.

E HARMAN, L.J.: In August, 1965, the defendant, Mrs. Knight, was minded to purchase a house, 19, Cavendish Road, Balham, to make some alterations to it, and to use it partly to live in herself and partly to make a living by letting out lodgings of some sort or other. She got in touch with the plaintiffs, a firm of chartered surveyors, and asked them to carry out a survey for her before she entered into the contract. That they did, and for that they were paid

F a sum of £24, which included testing the drains. At about the same time there was a meeting between the lady and a Mr. Tyrrell, one of the partners in the plaintiff firm, on the site of the house. She showed him what alterations she wanted done. They were alterations to the ground floor—very largely altering the lounge and turning an old conservatory into an extension of that room. He agreed to prepare drawings, to arrange for tenders, to settle the accounts, and to supervise the work. He estimated rather roughly that it would cost about G £600. He said that he would charge her a fee of £30, and to that she agreed. The result of that agreement is embodied in a letter, which is included in the correspondence, in these terms:

H "Dear Madam, Further to our recent meeting at the above address [that is 19, Cavendish Road] I confirm your instructions to prepare drawings, etc. and obtain the necessary consents for the alterations to the above house. I will then prepare a brief specification, supervise the works and settle the account on your behalf. As agreed I confirm that my fee for carrying out this work is to be £30."

I Apparently there was a good deal of difficulty about finding a builder, and also a certain amount of delay with the local authorities, who of course under modern conditions had to give their consent to the alterations, and it was not until April, 1966, that an estimate was received from a firm called Spa Lodge, Ltd., to do the work. That estimate for the work came to £662, and they added a further £400 or so for work of decoration and kitchen equipment, a prime cost estimate, the articles in question not having been ordered and in fact never in the upshot being ordered.

During April and May, 1966, the work was begun. By that time the defendant decided that she wanted some more work, and a second estimate was prepared.

That was done by the builders. There was no specification by the plaintiff surveyors, although no doubt they were familiar with what was going on because Mr. Tyrrell was visiting the place every now and again. During those months of April and May, the appetite growing by what it fed on, the defendant required still further work to be done and then there was another estimate of £600, bringing the total amount (taking off the electrical work not done) to £2,283 in all. A

Mr. Tyrrell never said anything more to the defendant about charges; she never said anything more to him; the matter went on until October, 1966, when the work was finished; and the plaintiffs submitted an account in November, 1966, for £135, with a covering letter: B

"I enclose for your attention our account in respect of the services provided for the alterations to the above property. Yours faithfully." C

To that the defendant promptly replied—and this is the only letter that she wrote during the whole transaction—

"Dear Sir, In reference to your account dated Nov. 15, 1966, I would draw your attention to your letter dated Aug. 25, 1965, agreeing the sum of £30 for charges in connexion with the alterations at No. 19, Cavendish Road. It would appear that this letter has escaped your attention." D

In other words, the defendant says: You agreed an all-in fee and an all-in fee you shall have; and £30 she afterwards paid, leaving the 100 guineas outstanding, in respect of which the present action is brought.

The judge came to the conclusion that, on the true construction of the contract, the contract was for all the work that should be done, whenever it was done, on this house, and that the plaintiffs can get no more. I think that the conclusion to which he came is right. It is not quite the way in which I should have put it. This no doubt was a contract for £30, a lump sum for doing the work then contemplated and possibly extras but not other work: that was in August, 1965. E

The most attractive way in which one can put the surveyor's case, I think, is to say that that was one contract: there was another contract, and a new one, made in April, 1966, and that was to do with supervision of the further and different work at a further and different sum, namely, something approaching a scale fee. It is agreed that the defendant did not know anything about scale fees. She was not to know that that is the way that surveyors charge. She did know that they had agreed in fact not to take the scale fee—because £30, although it is said to represent between five and six per cent. on the £600, does not cover the rest of the first estimate, which is another £400 or £500, and the plaintiffs agreed that they would have had to supervise that for the original figure. The question is whether, having agreed a lump sum figure and to charge by lump sum, the surveyors can now change their tune and say that that was for that contract, but that for this contract they are going to charge in a different form, namely, on a scale. F G H

LORD DUNEDIN makes an observation on this subject which seems to me really pertinent in The Olanda (1) in the House of Lords, a report of which is set out at the end of Steven v. Bromley & Son (2). He said this (1):

"As regards quantum meruit where there are two parties who are under contract quantum meruit must be a new contract, and in order to have a new contract you must get rid of the old contract." I

I do not think that these parties did get rid of the old contract: there it was still outstanding, not having been discharged—it was never mentioned—and I think the defendant was entitled to assume that it was still running between them and that she would not be asked for a different sum on a different basis. Mr. Tyrrell very frankly admitted that it was an error on his part not to remind

(1) [1919] 2 K.B. 728, n. at p. 730.

(2) [1919] 2 K.B. 722.

A her. He might so easily have done so when he wrote to her and said "Of course, now you are undertaking this new work if you want me to supervise it you must remember that I am a professional man and shall charge a professional fee". He did not do so. I think that she was entitled to suppose, and did suppose, that the lump sum which she had agreed to pay would cover whatever alterations she wanted done to this house.

B It is perhaps rather a hard case on the plaintiffs, but if it is a case of hardship to them or hardship to her, it is they who should suffer because it is they after all who are professionals and she is not. I do not see that there was any such "getting rid of the old contract", as LORD DUNEDIN puts it, as to entitle them to their quantum meruit under a new contract—because a new contract there must be, as quantum meruit played no part in the old one.

C Consequently, though perhaps not for the reasons given by the judge, I would dismiss this appeal.

DAVIES, L.J.: I agree. The evidence of these two parties as to what was said in 1966 can be summarised quite shortly from the judge's note. In his evidence, Mr. Tyrrell said, referring to the "extras", as we have conveniently called them, which were ordered in 1966:

D "The question of my fees for these extra works was not discussed. I always assumed that she would not expect me to continue with all this extra work for the original fee . . . Till Nov. 15, 1966, I did not tell the defendant I was going to charge more than the £30 I had agreed. It was an unfortunate lapse on my part."

E The defendant, dealing with the negotiations in August, 1965, said:

"Estimate No. 1 was what I wanted done. I did say to Mr. Tyrrell about all the other oddments that I might want to be done when fee of £30 was mentioned."

F Then she said this, which I think must be referring to 1966 when the extras were ordered (I am altering the note slightly):

"I understood when I wanted other work done upstairs the plaintiff was to supervise it for the same price because he did not mention it to me."

And finally she said:

G "Columns 2, 3 and 4 [those are the extras] were not discussed with Mr. Tyrrell in August, 1965, when the fee of £30 was agreed. Those items I asked to be done at a later stage or stages. I agree the £30 fee was in respect of the items in column 1. I think all the other work should be covered by the £30 since Mr. Tyrrell did not say anything to me."

H In order to make a person liable on a quantum meruit there has to be a necessary implication that the person liable is agreeing to pay. In the ordinary way if one employs a professional man to give professional services it is a necessary implication, unless anything to the contrary is expressly said, that the employer (to use that word) will pay a reasonable remuneration for those services. But in this case the cardinal point is that there had been this previous agreement to do some work for a lump sum of £30, and I for myself cannot see that there is any necessary implication that, when the work was going to be extended, or increased, in the absence of any express mention of it the defendant should be liable to make any further payment to the plaintiffs. If Mr. Tyrrell had said, in 1966, that he had only agreed to do the other work for £30, and that if the defendant wanted him to do the extra work he would have to have a further figure or scale fees, the defendant (this is pure speculation) might have done one of two things. She might have said that if that was going to be added to the cost of it she was not going on. Alternatively, she might have said that there was the builder, who, no doubt would be very pleased to do this extra work, and that she would carry on with the builder without Mr. Tyrrell's intervention at all. What she would in fact have said we do not know. A

Like HARMAN, L.J., I do not quite agree with the ground on which the county court judge based his decision; but in essence I think that it was right and that he reached the right conclusion on the issues in the case. Sympathy no doubt one may have for the plaintiffs; but, after all, they have only themselves to blame for undertaking this extra work without specifically mentioning that they proposed to charge, if they wanted to do so. I think it is very likely that the defendant, in her letter of Nov. 22, 1966 (which HARMAN, L.J., has read), when she was presented with this bill, was quite right in saying: "It would appear that this letter [that is the letter of Aug. 25, 1965] has escaped your attention." Mr. Tyrrell had probably forgotten all about his lump sum agreement and thought that he was working all the time at the scale fee. I agree with what HARMAN, L.J., has said and that this appeal fails. B

WIDGERY, L.J.: I agree with both judgments, and there is nothing which I can usefully add. C

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sidney Davidson & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Claremont, Haynes & Co. (for the defendant). D

[Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GIBSON v. UNION OF SHOP, DISTRIBUTIVE AND ALLIED WORKERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Buckley, J.), February 22, 23, 1968.] E

Declaration—Discretion to grant—Period of suspension from office almost expired—Declaration sought that trade union's decision to expel member, and subsequent decision on appeal to suspend him were ultra vires and void—Substantial issue not academic in character, when action brought—Whether declaration should be granted. F

The plaintiff was a member of the defendant trade union. On Jan. 10, 1966, his branch of the union purported, in exercise of disciplinary powers, to expel him. He appealed to the executive council of the union and on Mar. 13, 1966, it allowed the appeal to the extent of substituting for the sentence of expulsion, suspension of the plaintiff from office in his branch and from acting in any representative capacity on behalf of the union for a period of two years from Mar. 13, 1966. An appeal by him against this decision of the executive council was dismissed on May 8, 1966. The plaintiff brought an action seeking a declaration that the decisions of Jan. 10, 1966, Mar. 13, 1966, and May 8, 1966, were ultra vires and void and an injunction to restrain the union from acting on the decisions. The two-year period of the plaintiff's suspension would end three weeks from the date on which the trial opened. On a preliminary question whether, in view of the approach of the end of the two-year suspension, declaratory relief should in any event be granted, G

Held: if, when an action was instituted the plaintiff had, or might have had, a good ground of complaint involving substantial legal issues, not of an academic character, the lapse of time between the issue of the writ and the time when, having regard to the business of the court and the necessary preparatory steps, the action came on for trial, did not disentitle the plaintiff to declaratory relief (see p. 254, letters B and G, post). H

I

- A [As to declaratory judgments, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 748, 749, para. 1610; and for cases on the subject, see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 172-175, 228-240.

As to remedies for improper expulsion from a trade union, see 38 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 356, 357, para. 615.]

Action.

- B This was an action by the plaintiff Peter Charles Gibson begun by writ issued on Nov. 29, 1966. He claimed (i) a declaration that the decision of the South West London branch of the defendant union made on or about Jan. 10, 1966, purporting to expel the plaintiff from membership of the union was ultra vires and void; (ii) a declaration that the decision of the executive council of the union made on or about Mar. 13, 1966, purporting to substitute for the aforesaid invalid penalty the penalty that the plaintiff be suspended forthwith from any offices of the branch and from acting in any representative capacity on behalf of the union for a period of two years therefrom was ultra vires and void; (iii) a declaration that the decision of the executive council of the union made on or about May 8, 1966, dismissing an appeal of the plaintiff from the decision last aforesaid and re-affirming such decision was ultra vires and void; and (iv) an injunction restraining the union, by itself, its servants or agents or otherwise from acting on the aforesaid decisions or any of them. Judgment was given first on a preliminary point.

D. J. Turner-Samuels for the plaintiff.

P. R. Pain, Q.C., and I. A. Macdonald for the defendant union.

- E BUCKLEY, J.: This is an action brought by the plaintiff who is a member of the defendant trade union, and by his statement of claim he alleges that on Jan. 10, 1966, the branch of the union of which he is a member purported to expel him from membership of the defendant union. He disputes the validity of the resolution of the branch on certain grounds which are stated in his statement of claim.

- F The plaintiff appealed from that decision of his branch to the executive council of the defendant union and on Mar. 13, 1966, the executive council, according to the statement of claim, allowed the appeal in this sense, that it substituted for the sentence of expulsion, the suspension of the plaintiff from office in the branch and from acting in any representative capacity on the part of the union for a period of two years from Mar. 13, 1966. The plaintiff disputes the validity of that decision of the executive council on the grounds that are stated in the statement of claim. He appealed against that decision of the executive council under machinery which I assume exists in the constitution of the defendant union. That appeal came before the executive council on May 8, 1966, and was dismissed by the executive council. The plaintiff disputes the validity of that decision of the executive council, again for reasons which are set out in the statement of claim.

- H In this action he is seeking a declaration that the decision of the branch made on Jan. 10, 1966, was ultra vires and void, a declaration that the decision of the executive council made on Mar. 13, 1966, was ultra vires and void, and a declaration that the decision of the executive council made on May 8, 1966, was ultra vires and void, and he seeks an injunction restraining the defendant union from acting on any of those decisions. The two-year period of the plaintiff's suspension under the decision of the executive council of Mar. 13, 1966, will come to an end today three weeks, on Mar. 13, 1968, and the preliminary points are taken on opening the trial of this action (i) that no useful purpose can be served by trying the action because the primary relief which is sought by the plaintiff is declaratory relief, and because the end of the period of suspension is now so near at hand that no practical results will follow from declaring the suspension to be invalid; and (ii) that the case is not one in which the court ought to make a declaration and, perhaps a fortiori, is not one in which the court ought to grant any such injunction as is claimed.

I have been referred to a number of authorities but I do not think that it is necessary for me to go through them, for the problem turns on the question how the court ought to exercise its discretionary power of granting declaratory relief. I can easily understand why, if a plaintiff starts an action seeking declaratory relief in respect of some question of such a kind that no legal results will flow from the declaration which he seeks, the court will be disinclined to entertain his action and to grant any relief in it; and I can understand that the action would be dismissed as being one which it would serve no useful purpose to try. If, however, when the action is instituted the plaintiff has or may have a good ground of complaint, not of an academic character but involving substantial legal issues, it seems hard that, when the case comes on for trial, he should be faced with the suggestion that it ought not to be tried because by then the relief which he seeks has become much less important or has ceased to have practical implications, owing to the lapse of time between the date when he issued the writ and the time when, having regard to the business of the court and the necessary preparatory steps, the action comes on for trial.

In the present case, even today I do not think that it could be said that the question raised in this action is strictly an academic one, for the period of suspension, although it has only a short time to run, is still current and there are three weeks during which, if the decision of the executive council is allowed to stand, the plaintiff will be inhibited by that decision from doing things which otherwise it is possible that he might have been able to do in his capacity as a member of the union. I will say at once that counsel for the union says he cannot see that any such occasion will arise within the period of the next three weeks and counsel for the plaintiff agrees that, so far as he can foresee at the present time, nothing is likely to occur within the next three weeks in respect of which the plaintiff would be in any way affected by the fact that the suspension is in operation. Nevertheless, the issue between the parties is not in this case a purely and exclusively academic one. Moreover, the powers that are here said to have been improperly exercised by the defendant union are disciplinary powers and the question whether they were rightly or wrongly exercised, I think, may well have repercussions which are not in the nature of legal results flowing from that disciplinary action but are repercussions which might affect the plaintiff in his union in the future; if, for instance, he desires to seek office in the future in the union. It would be a hardship on him if he were not now allowed to have the issues which he seeks to raise in the action tried, notwithstanding that the only relief which he seeks is of a declaratory nature supported by the claim for an injunction which can operate, if it is granted at all, only until Mar. 13, 1968. Accordingly, I think that the preliminary point must fail and the action should proceed to trial.

Ruling accordingly.

[His LORDSHIP then heard the action and on Feb. 27, 1968, made a declaration that the decisions of the branch committee or of the executive council on Jan. 10, Mar. 13 and May 8, 1966, were void.]

Solicitors: B. M. Birnberg & Co. (for the plaintiff); Blatchfords (for the defendant union).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

A GOODCHILD v. GREATNESS TIMBER CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning M.R., Salmon and Edmund Davies, L.J.J.), March 1, 1968.]

Limitation of Action—Extension of time limit—Discretion—Principle governing determination whether leave should be granted—Reasonable prospect of winning action and obtaining adequate damages on known position, if competently advised—Preliminary issue without evidence directed—Severe injury to plaintiff in 1961—Deterioration in 1965—Plaintiff alleged want of knowledge of future deterioration before 1965—Limitation Act 1963 (c. 47), s. 1 (3), s. 7 (4).

The three year limitation period for bringing an action for personal injuries should not be extended under s. 1 of the Limitation Act 1963 unless a reasonable person, competently advised, in the position of the plaintiff would not have realised within the three years that he had a “worth-while” cause of action: time should not be extended simply because the plaintiff’s injury turns out after the three years to be more serious than he previously realised (see p. 257, letters B and F, and p. 258, letter B, post).

On Feb. 1, 1961, the plaintiff, while employed by the defendants, tripped and fell when walking across a bridge on the defendants’ premises. He fractured his right shoulder and was unable to work for three months. He received out-patient treatment for nearly two years. In December, 1965, the condition of his right shoulder deteriorated and he returned to hospital for further treatment. On Nov. 4, 1966, the judge granted leave on the plaintiff’s ex parte application under s. 1 of the Limitation Act 1963. In reply to the defendants’ plea that the action was statute-barred the plaintiff pleaded that the fact that the condition of his right arm would deteriorate was outside his actual or constructive knowledge until December, 1965, and that it was a fact of decisive character for the purposes of s. 1 (3) of the Act of 1963. On appeal from an order reversing the master’s order directing that the point raised by the reply should be tried as a preliminary issue without evidence,

Held: in the circumstances of the present case the court might be able to say, without further evidence, that any reasonable person in the position of the plaintiff had known everything material to enable him to bring a worth-while action within three years of the accident; the point was, therefore, suitable to be tried by way of preliminary issue without evidence and the order of the master would be restored (see p. 257, letter I, p. 258, letter A, and p. 259, letter A, post).

Per CURIAM: leave for the purposes of s. 1 of the Limitation Act 1963 should not be given as of course, and the evidence in support of an application for such leave should be very carefully scrutinised (see p. 257, letter I, and p. 258, letters E and I, post).

[As to the extension of the limitation period in certain cases, see SUPPLEMENT to 24 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) para. 381; and for cases on the subject, see DIGEST (Cont. Vol. B) 501, 502, 2022a, 2022aa.

For the Limitation Act 1963 s. 1, s. 2, s. 7, see 43 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 614, 615, 618.]

I Case referred to:

Cozens v. North Devon Hospital Management Committee, [1966] 2 All E.R. 799; [1966] 2 Q.B. 330; [1966] 3 W.L.R. 279; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 500, 1933a.

Interlocutory Appeal.

This was an appeal by the defendants Greatness Timber Co., Ltd., by notice dated Jan. 29, 1968, from an order of CANTLEY, J., dated Jan. 17, 1968, reversing an order made by Master DIAMOND, dated July 6, 1967, ordering that the following preliminary question or issue without evidence be tried: whether the fact set out in para. 2 of the reply was a fact of a decisive character as defined in s. 7 (4) A of the Limitation Act 1963 and, if not, whether the present proceedings were maintainable by the plaintiff, having regard to the provisions of the Limitation Acts, 1939 and 1954. The grounds of appeal were among others, (i) that the judge was wrong in holding that the court in trying the issue might require to hear evidence, and that, even if the court might require to hear evidence that was a reason for dismissing the defendants' application for a preliminary trial B of the issue and (ii) that the judge gave insufficient weight to the fact that the trial of the issue would result in a substantial saving of costs to the parties.

A. R. A. Beldam for the defendants.

P. J. Cox, Q.C., and R. J. Merrett for the plaintiff.

LORD DENNING, M.R.: The plaintiff, Mr. Goodchild was an office C manager employed by the defendants, the Greatness Timber Co., Ltd., at Westerham in Kent. On Feb. 1, 1961, he tripped and fell as he was walking across a concrete bridge in the timber yard. He broke his right shoulder. He was unable to work for three months. But his employers paid him his full salary. Then he went back to work. He received out-patient treatment for nearly two years. The plaintiff did not make any claim for damages for some years. The D three years period of limitation expired. Still he made no claim. He retired from work. Then nearly five years after the accident in December, 1965, he had greatly increased pain in his arm and shoulder. It considerably affected his daily activities. So he went back to hospital and received further treatment.

On Nov. 7, 1966, he sought to issue a writ against his employers for damages E for the accident in 1961. It was far outside the period of limitation. It was getting on for six years instead of three years. So under the Limitation Act 1963 he applied ex parte to the judge for leave. He put in an affidavit by a doctor which said:

"In my opinion the right shoulder became increasingly painful in about December, 1965, and it is also my opinion that this deterioration in his condition could not have been foreseen by the intended plaintiff and that F such symptoms were due to his original injury in February, 1961."

The judge gave leave ex parte. When the writ was served, the defendants would have liked to challenge it, but owing to the decision of this court in Cozens v. North Devon Hospital Management Committee (1), they could not G challenge it at that time.

The action proceeded. A statement of claim was delivered alleging that the employers were negligent in failing to provide a safe means of access across the bridge. It gave particulars of injuries. The defence pleaded that the action was barred by statute. The reply said:

"2. The fact that the said condition of the plaintiff's right arm would deteriorate was at all times until December, 1965 outside the actual or H constructive knowledge of the plaintiff . . . 3. The said fact was of a decisive character and was included in the facts relating to the cause of action herein."

The defendants ask that this point raised by the reply should be tried as a preliminary issue without any evidence. The question which they suggest is:

"In view of the injuries set out in the particulars of injuries in the statement of claim, whether the fact set out in para. 2 of the reply is capable I of being a fact of a decisive nature as defined in the statute?"

Master DIAMOND made an order for trial of the preliminary issue without evidence. CANTLEY, J., reversed it and gave leave to appeal to this court. Now it comes before us to determine.

(1) [1966] 2 All E.R. 799; [1966] 2 Q.B. 330.

- A We have had to consider the Limitation Act 1963 on several occasions. It is very difficult to understand. The particular section here in question is s. 7 (4) which defines which facts are of a "decisive character". I can best explain it by stating the way in which it should be applied. Take all the facts known to the plaintiff, or which he ought reasonably to have ascertained, within the first three years, about the accident and his injuries. Assume that he was a
- B reasonable man and took such advice as he ought reasonably to have taken within those three years. If such a reasonable man in his place would have thought he had a reasonable prospect of winning an action, and that the damages recoverable would be sufficiently high to justify the bringing of an action—in short, if he had a "worth-while action"—then he ought to have brought the action within the first three years. If he failed to bring an action within those three years, he is
- C barred by the statute. His time will not be extended under the Limitation Act 1963 simply because he finds out more about the accident or because his injuries turn out to be worse than he thought. His time will only be extended if a reasonable man in his place would not have realised, within the first two or three years, that he had a "worth-while action". Then, if it should turn out after the first two or three years that he finds out facts which make it worth while
- D to bring an action, he must start it within twelve months after he finds out those facts. Then, and then only, will the time limit be extended so that he is not barred.

In this case the plaintiff knew all the material facts relating to his accident and injuries within the first three years, save this: he says that he did not know the "extent of the personal injuries" within s. 7 (3) (b) of the Act of 1963.

- E Those words, however, are intended to apply to cases where a man has an injury which he reasonably believes is trifling (e.g., a knock on the head) and it is not worth-while to bring an action for it: but then after three years it is found to be far more serious than anyone realised (e.g., to cause a tumour). In such a case the newly found "extent of the injuries" is a fact of a material and decisive character. His time will be extended. But if the injury was from the beginning
- F fairly serious, or at any rate sufficiently serious to make it worth while to bring an action, then he must bring it within the first three years. The time will not be extended simply because it turns out after three years to be more serious than he at first thought.

- Applying these considerations here, taking the affidavits and the medical reports as they stand, it seems to me that the court, without further evidence,
- G may be able to say that the plaintiff (or any reasonable person in his position) knew everything which was material within the first three years to bring a worth-while action. He had a badly broken shoulder with a comminuted fracture; he was off work for three months; he was attending hospital for two years. He ought to have brought his action within the first three years. The fact that it has got much worse lately is not a new fact of a decisive character such as to
- H warrant an extension of time.

- The point is so short that I think it would be advantageous to deal with it as a preliminary point. It must be remembered that DONALDSON, J., granted leave ex parte. The defendants were not heard. By allowing the defendants to take it as a preliminary point, we can enable them to be heard at an early stage without all the expense of witnesses, and so forth: and thus achieve in substance
- I the result which SALMON, L.J., thought in Cozen's case (2) was so desirable. I would add, however, that when application is made for leave under the Limitation Act 1963, a judge in chambers should not grant leave as of course. He should carefully scrutinise the case to see whether it is a proper one for leave. In this difficult case I find myself in agreement with the master. I would reverse the order of the judge and restore the order of the master for a preliminary issue without evidence in a slightly modified form of question. I would allow the appeal accordingly.

SALMON, L.J.: I agree. This is a difficult case. The difficulty is due chiefly to the obscure way in which the Limitation Act 1963 has been drafted. Although I appreciate the cogent reasons on which the judge based his decision, on the whole I have come to the conclusion that the order of Master DIAMOND ought to be restored. This, I think, may well dispose of the whole issue in respect of the Limitation Act 1963. A

In my view s. 7 (4) of that Act of 1963 means that if at any particular time within the period of limitation a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position on the facts known to him would have concluded that there was a reasonable prospect of his succeeding in an action, and that as a result there would be an award of damages sufficient to justify bringing the action, then if he does not issue a writ within that period, the action is statute-barred. On the admitted facts, there seems much to be said for the view that the present is such a case. A reasonable man who concludes that there is such a prospect may nevertheless elect not to bring an action. He may do this for many reasons. For example, it may be because of the regard he has for the defendants or perhaps because he is averse to litigation. If, however, he should appreciate as a reasonable man that the damages would be sufficient to justify bringing the action, his election not to do so, in my view, prevents him from bringing it after the three years have expired. I would accordingly allow the appeal. B
C
D

I want to add only this, and I do not intend it as any criticism of the judge who made the order on the plaintiff's ex parte application for leave under s. 2 of the Act of 1963. It has now been decided that defendants have no right to go back to the High Court to challenge such orders (Cozens v. North Devon Hospital Management Committee (3)). Accordingly, it is particularly important that when such an application is made, the order should not follow as a matter of course. The evidence in support of the application ought to be very carefully scrutinised, and, if that evidence does not make it quite clear that the plaintiff comes within the terms of the Limitation Act 1963, then either the order ought to be refused or the plaintiff ought perhaps to be given an opportunity of supplementing his evidence. It must, of course, be assumed for the purpose of the ex parte application that the affidavit evidence is true; but it is only if that evidence makes it absolutely plain that the plaintiff is entitled to leave that the application should be granted and the order made, for, as I ventured to point out in the Cozen's case (3), such an order may have the effect of depriving the defendant of a very valuable statutory right. It is not in every case in which leave has been given ex parte on inadequate evidence under s. 2 that the defendant will be able to mitigate the injustice which this may have done him by obtaining an order for the trial of a preliminary issue. E
F
G

EDMUND DAVIES, L.J.: Were the order of the judge to stand, the provisions of the Limitation Act 1963 would not only qualify in a restricted way the operation of the earlier statute of limitation but would also go largely to nullify it in a substantial number of cases. It would enable an injured person, whenever he discovered that his injuries were more serious in their consequences than he had at first realised, to institute proceedings even though his initial injuries were clearly such as to have well merited an action within the usual three years statutory period. In my judgment, the wording of s. 7 (4) prohibits any such implementation of the Act of 1963. H

I desire to say nothing as to the original granting of leave by DONALDSON, J., on the ex parte application of the plaintiff, but I do desire to concur in and respectfully underline the observations which have just been made by SALMON, L.J., in relation to the care called for on the hearing of such an application, for there is a real risk of prejudice resulting to a defendant who is being sued after a long period of years. DONALDSON, J., of necessity came to his decision on I

A an ex parte basis. Now that the whole material has been examined and this court has had the advantage of hearing counsel on both sides, I concur with my lords in holding that this appeal should be allowed and the master's order restored.

Appeal allowed.

B Solicitors: E. P. Rugg & Co. (for the defendants); Montagu's and Cox & Cardale (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C MILK MARKETING BOARD v. HALL AND OTHERS.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Blain, JJ.), March 25, 1968.]

Food and Drugs—Sale—Milk not of the substance demanded—Warranty as defence—Milk Marketing Board—Milk sold by farmers to board under warranty—Milk purchased by wholesaler from board under warranty—Pasteurisation, testing and bottling by wholesalers—Subsequent sale to retailer—Sale by him to sampling officer—Excess of penicillin in milk—Board brought into proceedings consequent on defence of wholesalers relying on warranty—Whether defence of warranty by farmers available to board—Food and Drugs Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2 c. 16), s. 115 (1).

E In the defence afforded by s. 115 (1)* of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, the temporal element which is enacted in para. (c) of sub-s. (1), namely that the food was "then" in the same state, refers to the time of the "alleged offence" specified in para. (b), viz., if the offence is a sale by a retailer, the time of that sale; the reference is not to the time of the act or default of another person brought before the court on proceedings against him, not the retailer, by virtue of s. 113 (3)† of the Act of 1955 (see p. 263, letters C, E and G, post).

F The appellant board purchased five lots of milk from five farmers, in each case under a written warranty that it was pure new milk, sweet, clean, marketable with all its cream and without the addition of any preservatives. The same day the board sold it to wholesalers, the Central Dairies, under the same warranty. The board had no reason to suppose that the milk was otherwise than as warranted. Central Dairies broke bulk, pasteurised, tested and bottled the milk and sold it to a retailer on the same day. The retailer sold two bottles of the milk on the next day to the first respondent, a sampling officer. The milk was found to contain an excess of penicillin, which had got into the milk from one of the five farms, but it was not known which farmer had supplied the milk. Under s. 113 (3)† of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, Central Dairies proved that they had exercised all due diligence and had purchased the milk from the appellants under a written warranty, and, pursuant to s. 113 (1) the board were brought before the court. On appeal by the board against conviction,

H Held: the board were rightly convicted for the reason stated at letter E, above (see p. 263, letters F and G, post).

I Appeal dismissed.

[As to the standard of quality for milk and the position where milk is sold in the condition in which it was given by cows, see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 534, 535, paras. 1002, 1003; and for cases on the subject, see 25 DIGEST (Repl.) 145-149, 592-619.

* Section 115 (1), so far as material, is set out at p. 262, letters G and H, post.

† Section 113 (3) is set out at p. 262, letter B, post.

As to the defence of warranty in proceedings for offences under the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 598, para. 1154. A

For the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, s. 113, s. 115, see 35 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 194, 197.]

Case Stated.

This was a Case Stated by justices for the county of Salop sitting at Oswestry in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court on Dec. 29, 1967. On Oct. 4, 1966, an information was preferred by the respondent, George Raymond Hall against Elwynne Owen-Jones and Elmira Francis Jones, the second respondents (hereinafter called "Central Dairies") that on Sept. 14, 1966, John Edward Jones of 4, Stanley Place, Salop Road, Oswestry in the county of Salop did unlawfully sell to the prejudice of the respondent, the purchaser, certain food namely milk which contained penicillin and which was not of the substance demanded by the purchaser contrary to s. 2 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955. The Salop county council, the food and drugs authority concerned, being reasonably satisfied that the offence was due to the act or default of Central Dairies and that the said John Edward Jones could establish a defence under s. 113 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, Central Dairies were summoned to answer the said information in accordance with s. 113 (3) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955. Central Dairies in turn alleged that the contravention was due to the act or default of the appellant, the Milk Marketing Board, and applied that the board be brought before the court to answer the charge pursuant to the said section. On Nov. 25, 1966, the justices started to hear the said information against Central Dairies and held that Central Dairies had a defence under s. 115 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955. Accordingly they dismissed the information against Central Dairies and the board. The present respondent appealed by way of Case Stated and on the hearing of the appeal* on July 6, 1967, it was ordered by the High Court that the Case be remitted to the justices with the opinion of the High Court that they were wrong in finding that Central Dairies had a defence under the said s. 115 and that they should continue the hearing under s. 113 (1) of the Act of 1955. On Sept. 29, 1967, the justices continued the hearing under s. 113 (1) of the Act of 1955, and found the following facts. (a) The respondent was at all material times the Assistant County Public Health Inspector of Salop County Council and an authorised sampling officer; (b) Central Dairies ("the dairies") carried on business at all material times as a wholesale dairy; (c) at about 12.30 p.m. on Sept. 14, 1966, the respondent in his capacity as sampling officer purchased two pint bottles of Channel Islands pasteurised milk from one John Edward Jones, a milk retailer ("the retailer") of 4, Stanley Place, Salop Road, Oswestry; (d) before and after purchasing the same the respondent observed all the required statutory formalities; (e) the respondent properly took samples of the milk and submitted the same to the public analyst who found that it contained penicillin in excess of the recommended limit of 0.05 international units per millilitre; (f) the penicillin was present in the milk when the respondent purchased the same; (g) the penicillin was present when the milk came from the cow; (h) the retailer had purchased the said milk from the dairies on Sept. 13, 1966; (i) the dairies had purchased the said milk from the board on Sept. 13, 1966; (j) property in the milk passed to the dairies when the board delivered the milk in churns to Central Dairies' premises; (k) between the time of purchase of the milk by the dairies and the time when they sold and delivered the same to the retailer, the dairies had bulked the milk from separate churns, pasteurised the milk, tested and bottled the same; (l) the dairies had proved that the contravention of s. 2 of the Act of 1955 was due to the act or default of the board and that the dairies had used all due diligence to secure that the provisions in question were complied with; (m) the board had bought the milk in churns from five farmers. The contracts between the board and these five farmers were in substantially identical terms. In the case of each * See Hall v. Owen-Jones and Jones (trading as Central Dairies), [1967] 3 All E.R. 209.

A of the five contracts the appellants bought the milk with a written warranty that each and every consignment of milk should at the time when the property passed to the appellants be pure new milk, sweet, clean and marketable with all its cream and without the addition of any preservative. Further, there was a written warranty contained in labels attached to each churn in the following terms: "Warranted Pure New Milk, sweet clean and marketable with all its cream and without the addition of any preservative".

B In the case of each of the five contracts the property in the milk passed to the board, at the directed place of delivery, which was the dairies' premises, and at the same place and point of time property in the milk passed from the board to the dairies; (n) the board had complied with the formalities required by s. 115 (2) (a) of the Act of 1955; (o) at the time when the board sold the milk to the dairies the board had no reason

C to suppose that the milk was otherwise than as warranted; (p) at the time when the retailer sold the milk to the respondent the board had no reason to suppose that the milk was otherwise than as warranted; (q) at the time when the board sold the milk to the dairies the milk was in the same state as when they purchased it; (r) at the time when the retailer sold the milk to the respondent the milk was not in the same state as when the board had purchased it having in the meantime been

D bulked from the separate churns and pasteurised tested and bottled by the dairies.

In view of the justices' finding set out in para. 3 (l) hereof they dismissed the information against the dairies and continued with the hearing against the board.

On behalf of the board it was contended before the justices that they had established a defence of warranty under s. 115 of the Act of 1955, and that the word "then" in s. 115 (1) (c) referred to the time of the board's act or default to which the contravention of the Act of 1955 was due namely their sale of the milk to the dairies. On behalf of the respondent it was contended that the board had not established a defence of warranty under s. 115 of the Act of 1955 on the grounds that—(a) the word "then" in para. (c) of s. 115 (1) referred to the time of the offence of which the board might be convicted namely the sale by the

E retailer to the respondent at which time the milk was not in the same state as when the board purchased it; and (b) that the warranty defence was not available to the board where separate lots of milk were bought from different persons although each lot was bought with the appropriate warranty.

The justices were of opinion that the board had proved what was required by s. 115 (1) (a) and (b), but they were of opinion that they had not proved what was

G required by s. 15 (1) (c) since in their view the word "then" in sub-s. (1) referred to the time of the sale by the retailer to the respondent at which time the milk was not in the same state as when the board had purchased it. Accordingly they convicted the board and fined them £25 and ordered them to pay £75 costs to the respondent and £140 costs to the dairies.

The questions for the opinion of the High Court were—1. Whether the justices

H were right in law holding that the word "then" in s. 115 (1) (c) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, referred to the time of the sale by the retailer to the respondent; 2. Whether the justices were right in law in holding that the board had proved what was required by s. 115 (1) (a).

David Kemp for the appellants.

A. F. B. Scrivener for the respondent.

I

LORD PARKER, C.J.: On Sept. 13, 1966, the Milk Marketing Board ("the board") purchased five lots of milk from five farms. That milk was subject in each case to a warranty that it was pure new milk, sweet, clean and marketable with all its cream and without the addition of any preservatives. The same day the board sold that milk to Central Dairies ("the dairies"), again under the same warranty. The property in each case passed at the same time, namely on delivery to the dairies. The dairies broke bulk, pasteurised and bottled the milk, and in due course sold the bottled milk to one John Edward Jones, a retailer. That was all on Sept. 13, and on the next day, Sept. 14, the retailer sold two bottles of milk to the present respondent, the sampling officer. That milk was found to have an excess of penicillin and it is quite clear that the penicillin got into the milk in the case of one of the five farmers, a man unknown.

This was a case in which the prosecution have availed themselves of s. 113 (3) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, which provides that:

"Where it appears to the authority concerned that an offence has been committed in respect of which proceedings might be taken under this Act against some person [in this case the retailer] and the authority are reasonably satisfied that the offence of which complaint is made was due to an act or default of some other person and that the first-mentioned person could establish a defence under sub-s. (1) of this section, they may cause proceedings to be taken against that other person without first causing proceedings to be taken against the first-mentioned person."

That is all I need read at the moment of that section, and that having been done, the dairies in turn alleged that the contravention was due to the act or default of the present appellant, the board, and accordingly pursuant to s. 113 (1) of the Act of 1955 the board were brought before the court.

Now, in these proceedings the dairies relied on the warranty under which the board had sold the milk to them, and the justices upheld that defence, namely the defence of warranty. On appeal to this court by way of Case Stated, it was held (1) that the justices were wrong, in that a warranty defence is only available if the milk was in exactly the same state when sold as when it was purchased. The court held that it was not in such a state, because the dairies had broken bulk, had pasteurised and had bottled the milk. Accordingly the matter went back to the justices to consider the position of the board.

In the case which has now been stated, the justices come to the conclusion that the dairies had used all due diligence to secure that the provisions of the Act of 1955 were complied with, but the board sought to say that they were entitled to rely on the warranties which they had received from the farmers. The justices held that they could not avail themselves of the warranty defence, and accordingly convicted the board. The question is whether the board were rightly convicted. That in turn depends on the proper construction of s. 115 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, and in particular sub-s. (1). Subsection (1) is in these terms

"Subject to the provisions of this section, in any proceedings for an offence under this Act . . . being an offence consisting of selling . . . it shall be a defence for the defendant to prove—

"(a) that he purchased it as being an article or substance which could lawfully be sold or otherwise dealt with as aforesaid, or, as the case may be, could lawfully be so sold or dealt with under the name or description or for the purpose under or for which he sold or dealt with it, and with a written warranty to that effect, and

"(b) that he had no reason to believe at the time of the commission of the alleged offence that it was otherwise, and

"(c) that it was then in the same state as when he purchased it."

The sole question is as to the time to which the word "then" refers. The magistrates held that "then" refers to the alleged offence in sub-s. (1) (b) and that the alleged offence could only be the offence resulting from the sale by the retailer to the sampling officer. If that is right, then at that stage the milk was not in the same state as when the board purchased it, and the warranty defence is not available.

In this appeal counsel for the appellant has urged that this construction does produce in certain cases a very unfair result and he says, amongst other things,

(1) See Hall v. Owen-Jones and Jones (trading as Central Dairies), [1967] 3 All E.R. 209.

A that one should if possible give the words a construction which will result in testing the defendant's state of mind, whether he had reason to believe or not, in relation to a time when the article in question is under his control. I confess that I sympathise with that view and in addition sympathise with the board, for, unless that is right, they are quite clearly going to be in grave difficulty in relying on the warranty, because, when ultimately the bottled milk is sold, it is really impossible then to know from which farm and which farmer the milk in the bottles originally emanated, so that they will be unable to bring the farmer before the court and secure his conviction and their own acquittal.

B Having said that, however, there is no doubt that one has got to construe the section and in my judgment the construction is perfectly plain. In s. 115 (1) (c) the word "then" clearly refers back to the words "alleged offence" in para. (b) and the word "offence" in para. (b) clearly refers back to the opening words of the section "in any proceedings for an offence". The proceedings for an offence related to the sale by the retailer to the sampling officer. The matter is made almost plainer when one realises that under the third party procedure in s. 113, when a third party is brought before the court, he can only be convicted of the offence, i.e., the original offence. The words in s. 113 (1) are

D "... if, after the contravention has been proved, the original defendant proves that the contravention was due to the act or default of that other person, that other person may be convicted of the offence ...",

E the offence being the last selling, in this case by the retailer to the sampling officer. In my judgment there is no means of getting away from that, and I find it quite impossible to accede to counsel for the appellant's suggestion that the words "then" and "alleged offence" in s. 115 (1) should be given a completely different meaning, namely meaning act or default as opposed to contravention, the act or default of the person who is brought before the court. In my judgment that would amount to a complete re-writing of the subsection and I am unable to accede to the argument. In my judgment the justices came to the right conclusion. This appeal is dismissed.

F ASHWORTH, J.: I agree that in the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, if counsel for the appellant were right, s. 115 (1) (b) would have to be construed as meaning that "he had no reason to believe at the time when he sold the article that it was otherwise than in the same state". That does involve not interpretation, but re-writing, the subsection, and for reasons given by LORD PARKER, C.J., I share his views.

H BLAIN, J.: I agree. I will add only this, that in s. 115 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, Parliament appears to have made it plain that to constitute the defence, the defendant has to prove three things: (a) goes to his act or default, (b) goes to his state of mind in so far as it is a matter of knowledge and (c) is absolute and has nothing to do with the state of mind.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Eldis & Fairbairn (for the appellants); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. (for the respondent).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

Re VICKERS &amp; BOTT, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Pennycuick, J.), February 26, 1968.]

Company—Registration—Restoration of name to register—Service of petition—Name of company struck off register in 1963—Sum of money subsequently becoming payable to company—Creditors' petition for restoration of company's name to register.

[As to the procedure for restoration of a company's name to the register, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 789, para. 1591; and for cases on the subject see 10 DIGEST (Repl.) 1142, 7950-7957.]

For the Companies Act, 1948, s. 353 (5), (6), see 3 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 727.]

Case referred to:

Kenyon (Donald), Ltd., Re, [1956] 3 All E.R. 596; [1956] 1 W.L.R. 397; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 200, 7949a.

Petition.

The Commissioners of Customs and Excise as creditors presented a petition under s. 353 (6) of the Companies Act, 1948, for the restoration of the above-named company's name to the register of companies. The company had been ordered to be compulsorily wound-up on Apr. 11, 1949, and a liquidator was subsequently appointed. In the course of the winding-up dividends were paid to preferential creditors (including the commissioners) amounting to six shillings in the pound. On May 11, 1960, the liquidator was released pursuant to s. 251 of the Companies Act, 1948, and on May 28, 1963, at the completion of the winding-up the company's name was struck off the register of companies under s. 353 (5) of the Act of 1948. Subsequently a sum of £700 became payable to the company by way of dividend in a bankruptcy.

L. J. Bromley (for J. P. Warner): It is submitted that it was correct that the petition was not served on anyone. When the company's name is restored the company will continue in liquidation with the Official Receiver as liquidator. There is no letter exhibited in evidence from the Treasury Solicitor relating to bona vacantia. It is submitted that where a petition under s. 353 (6) is presented by a Crown department the question whether the Treasury Solicitor has any objection is an internal one to be dealt with by inter-departmental consultation. In fact there is no objection.

No special order relating to limitation of actions is required in view of the wording of s. 353 (6); Re Donald Kenyon, Ltd. (1) is distinguishable.

PENNYCUICK, J.: It does not apply where the company is already in liquidation.

L. J. Bromley: I ask that the name of the company be restored to the register of companies and that the commissioners' costs of the petition be taxed and included in the expenses of the winding-up.

PENNYCUICK, J.: Yes, I will make that order.

Solicitors: Solicitor, Commissioners of Customs and Excise (for the petitioners).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

A

APPLEBY v. SLEEP.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Blain, JJ.), March 22, 1968.]

B

National Health Service—Pharmaceutical services—Supply of medicine or drug—Contractual relationship between chemist and National Health Service Executive Council that of contract for services—Supply of drug by chemist against a prescription—Whether a sale to executive council—Sliver of glass in bottle of medicine—Whether offence of selling drug not of the nature, etc. demanded—National Health Service Act, 1946 (8 & 10 Geo. 6 c. 81), s. 38—National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1966 (S.I. 1966 No. 1210), reg. 23, Sch. 4, Pt. 1—Food and Drugs Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2 c. 16), s. 2 (1).

C

D

E

F

G

A woman took to the pharmacy of the respondent, who was a registered pharmaceutical chemist, a National Health prescription for Penicudural syrup obtained from her family doctor. She was supplied with a bottle of the syrup. When on the following Monday her child came to take a dose, she saw a lump in the medicine as it came out of the bottle. The lump was a piece of glass. The respondent was charged with selling to the prejudice of the National Health Service Executive Council, the purchaser thereof, a drug which was not of the quality demanded by the purchaser in that it contained a sliver of glass contrary to s. 2* of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955. Under the scheme of the legislation, s. 38† of the National Health Service Act, 1946, taken in conjunction with reg. 23† of the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical) Regulations 1966 and the terms of service in Pt. 1 of Sch. 4 to those regulations, the council were under a duty to provide pharmaceutical services; only those chemists who applied and joined were included in the list of chemists willing to serve, and each became liable to the terms of service in Pt. 1 of Sch. 4, and was under obligation to supply persons with drugs or medicines on presentation of the necessary prescription, payment being made pursuant to reg. 26 and in accordance with the drug tariff. On appeal from dismissal of the charge,

Held: the true contractual relationship between the respondent and the executive council was that of a contract for services, and what the respondent was paid was remuneration for services; there was not a sale of the drug by the respondent to the executive council, and accordingly the charge under s. 2 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, had been rightly dismissed (see p. 269, letters B, G and I, and p. 270, letter A, post).

Appeal dismissed.

[As to arrangements for pharmaceutical services, see 27 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 604, 605, para. 1124.]

H

For the National Health Service Act, 1946, s. 38, see 15 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 372.

For the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, s. 2, see 35 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 97.]

Case Stated.

I

This was a Case Stated by the justices for Hampshire in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court, sitting at Hythe on Oct. 11, 1967. On June 30, 1967, an information was preferred by the appellant Fred Roper Appleby, clerk to the Rural District Council of New Forest, Hampshire, against the * Section 2, so far as material, provides: "(1) if a person sells to the prejudice of the purchaser any . . . drug which is not of the nature, or not of the substance, or not of the quality, of the . . . drug demanded by the purchaser, he shall . . . be guilty of an offence."

† Section 38, so far as material, is set out at p. 267, letters E to H, post. Regulation 23 and Sch. 4, Pt. 1, so far as relevant are set out at p. 268, letters B to F, post; reg. 26, so far as material, is set out at p. 268, letters G to I, post.

respondent, Ernest Charles Sleep, charging that he sold to the prejudice of the National Health Service Executive Council for Hampshire the purchaser thereof a certain drug, namely, thirty millilitres of Penedural syrup which was not of the quality of the drug demanded by the purchaser in that the syrup contained a sliver of glass, contrary to s. 2 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955. The following facts were found. On Apr. 7, 1967, Mrs. A. R. Magee took a national health prescription obtained from her family doctor to the Ferry Pharmacy at 19, High Street, Hythe, which was at all material times owned by the respondent. She was handed a bottle of Penedural syrup as called for in the prescription form. The prescribed dose was four half-teaspoon doses daily for her child. At 5.30 p.m. on the following Monday, Mrs. Magee saw a lump in the medicine as it came out of the bottle which she found to be a piece of glass. The respondent was at all material times a registered pharmaceutical chemist and included in the pharmaceutical list and was engaged under a contract with the National Health Service Executive Council for Hampshire. The contract, in accordance with reg. 23 of the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1966, incorporated the terms of service contained in Part 1 of Sch. 4 to these regulations. Payment was made to the respondent in respect of the drug in accordance with the drug tariff, which payment included the price of the drug, i.e., 54d.

It was contended by the respondent that there was no definition of sale in the Food and Drugs Act, 1955; it was necessary to refer to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893; s. 1 of the Sale of Goods Act provided that a contract for the sale of goods was a contract whereby the seller transferred or agreed to transfer the property in goods to the buyer for a money consideration called the price; in Pfizer Corp'n. v. Ministry of Health* in the court of first instance, Court of Appeal and House of Lords, it had been held that the supply of drugs to a patient under a national health service prescription was not a sale to the patient; the National Health Service Act, 1946, and the above-mentioned regulations referred throughout to a "supply" and not to "sale"; the contract between the respondent and the National Health Service Executive Council was a contract of service and not a contract for sale; the property in the drug did not pass to the National Health Service Executive Council, but passed to the patient (see Pfizer Corp'n. v. Ministry of Health, per WILLMER, L.J., and DIPLOCK, L.J.); as the property in the drug did not pass to the National Health Service Executive Council, there was no sale to the council. Section 135 (2) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, provided (in some cases) that the supply of food should be deemed to be a sale. That section did not extend to drugs. It was contended by the appellant that the meaning of "sale" in the law relating to food and drugs was wider than the definition of "sale" in s. 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. Section 18 of the Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933, referred only to "sales"; s. 19 of that Act exempted from s. 18 certain supplies in certain circumstances. The supplies not exempted were by implication included in s. 18 and were considered to be sales for the purpose of that Act. Further, in s. 19 (3), proviso (a) of the same Act, as amended by the National Health Service Act, 1946, s. 76, and Sch. 10, Pt. 1, the section actually referred to the supply of medicines, on prescription, under the Act of 1946. If the definition in s. 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, was held to apply, then there was a sale within that section under which it was agreed that the property in the goods should pass to the buyer (i.e., the National Health Service Executive Council). Under s. 18 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, r. 5 (1), the property in unascertained goods sold by description passed to the buyer when the goods of that description were unconditionally appropriated to the contract. Any property released by the National Health Service Executive Council in favour of the patient was conditional on the patient using the drug in accordance * [1963] 1 All E.R. 590; revsd., C.A., [1963] 3 All E.R. 779; affd., H.L., [1965] 1 All E.R. 450.

A with the prescription. The definition in s. 135 (2) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, was included for the purpose of meeting the case where food was supplied, such as sauce and sugar in restaurants, and no payment was made. Pfizer Corp. v. Ministry of Health* was concerned with whether there had been a sale by a national health hospital to the patient. It was not considered whether there was a sale to anyone else. The prosecution accepted that there was no sale

B to the patient in the present case.

The justices upheld a submission by the respondent that there was no case to answer and dismissed the information, and the appellant now appealed.

The authority and cases noted below† were cited during the argument.

A. F. B. Scrivener for the appellant.

R. I. S. Bax, Q.C., and J. R. Peppitt for the respondent.

C LORD PARKER, C.J.: Let me say at once, before turning to the very short facts of the case, that the sole question here was whether there ever was a sale by the respondent chemist to the National Health Service Executive Council. The short facts were that, on Apr. 7, 1967, a Mrs. Magee took a national health prescription obtained from her family doctor to the respondent's pharmacy.

D She was then handed a bottle of Penedural syrup as called for by the prescription form, and, when her child came to take it, Mrs. Magee saw a lump in the medicine as it came out of the bottle, which she found to be a piece of glass.

One starts here with the National Health Service Act, 1946. Section 38 of that Act provides:

E “(1) It shall be the duty of every Executive Council in accordance with regulations to make as respects their area arrangements for the supply as from the appointed day, whether at a health centre or otherwise, of proper and sufficient drugs and medicines and prescribed appliances to all persons in the area who are receiving general medical services . . . and the services provided in accordance with the arrangements are in this Act referred to as ‘pharmaceutical services’.

F “(2) Regulations may make provision for securing that arrangements made under this section will be such as to enable any person receiving general medical services to obtain proper and sufficient drugs and medicines and prescribed appliances, if ordered by the medical practitioner rendering those services, from any persons with whom arrangements have been made under this section, and to enable any person receiving general dental

G services to obtain prescribed drugs and medicines, if ordered by the dental practitioner rendering those services, from any persons with whom such arrangements have been made, and the regulations shall include provision—

H (a) for the preparation and publication of lists of persons who undertake to provide pharmaceutical services; and (b) for conferring a right, subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act relating to the disqualification of practitioners, on any person who wishes to be included in any such list to be so included for the purpose of supplying such drugs, medicines and appliances as that person is entitled by law to sell . . .”

Section 39 (2) provides:

I “Except as may be provided by regulations, no arrangements for the dispensing of medicines shall be made with persons other than persons who are registered pharmacists or are authorised sellers of poisons within the meaning of the Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933, and who undertake that all medicines supplied by them under the arrangements made under this Part of this Act shall be dispensed either by or under the direct supervision of a registered pharmacist or by a person who for three years immediately before Dec. 16, 1911, acted as a dispenser to a medical practitioner or a public institution.” A

* [1965] 1 All E.R. 450.

† BENJAMIN ON LAW OF SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY (8th Edn. 1950), pp. 1, 7, 327, 329; Berry v. Henderson, (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 296; R. v. Wood Green Profiteering Committee, Ex p. Boots Cash Chemists (Southern) Ltd., (1920), 122 L.T. 120; Watson v. Coupland, [1945] 1 All E.R. 217; Pfizer Corp. v. Ministry of Health, [1963] 1 All E.R. 590; [1964] Ch. 614; [1963] 3 All E.R. 779; [1964] 1 Ch. 633; [1965] 1 All E.R. 450; [1965] A.C. 512.

The regulations in question now are the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1966 (1). Regulation 23 in Part 7 dealing with chemists provides that: B

“The arrangements which a council are required by s. 38 of the Act to make for the supply of drugs and medicines and prescribed appliances to persons receiving general medical services, and of prescribed drugs and medicines to persons receiving general dental services, shall incorporate the terms of service contained or referred to in Part 1 of Sch. 4 to these regulations.” C

Part 1 of Sch. 4 contains a number of paragraphs, the more important of which are these:

“3 (1) A chemist shall supply with reasonable promptness to any person who presents an order for drugs or appliances on a prescription form provided for the purpose by a council and signed by a practitioner on the medical list of a council or by his deputy or assistant such drugs as may be so ordered.” D

“9 (1) A chemist is required to furnish to the council or to such other person or body as they may direct, on dates to be appointed by the Minister, the forms on which the orders for drugs and appliances supplied by him were given, arranged in such manner as the council may direct, together with a statement of accounts containing such particulars relating to the provision by him of pharmaceutical services as the council, with the approval of the Minister, may from time to time require . . .” E

“(4) Payment shall be made for drugs and appliances in the manner provided for in the drug tariff for the time being in force and the payment to be made for containers and in respect of dispensing fees shall be calculated in the manner set forth therein.” F

I turn back to Part 7 of the regulations themselves, and the only other regulations to which I need refer are reg. 26 and reg. 31. Regulation 26, which is headed “Prices and standards of drugs and appliances”, provides:

“For the purpose of enabling arrangements to be made for the supply of drugs and appliances of proper quality, the Minister shall cause to be prepared a statement (in these regulations referred to as ‘the drug tariff’) which shall include—” G

“(a) the prices on the basis of which the payment for drugs and appliances ordinarily supplied is to be calculated; (b) the method of calculating the payment for drugs not mentioned in the drug tariff; (c) the method of calculating the payment for containers; (d) the dispensing or other fees payable in respect of the supply of drugs and appliances . . .” H

“The prices referred to in para. (a) of this regulation may be fixed prices or may be subject to monthly or other periodical variation to be determined by reference to fluctuations in the cost price of drugs and appliances.” I

Regulation 31 (1) provides that:

“A practitioner or chemist shall properly submit applications for the payment of fees, allowances and remuneration which are required to be claimed under these regulations on the appropriate form and in the appropriate manner.”

A Pausing there, it is clear that the scheme here is that the council are under a duty to provide services. For that purpose they have to draw up a list of chemists willing to serve; only those chemists are included who apply to go on the list and join the service, and any chemist who does so becomes liable to the terms of service set out in Part 1 of Sch. 4 to the regulations. Further, he is under an obligation to supply any person with the drugs or medicine who presents the necessary prescription. In return he gets payment from the council according to the drug tariff in respect of each supply against a prescription.

As I have said, the sole question here is whether there can properly be said to have been a sale by the chemist to the council. The first thing that is clear is that there will have been no sale by the chemist to the patient, the person presenting the prescription. Not only has that been so held (2), but it is clearly the case, because the patient is not paying for the medicine or drugs, and that is so even if there is a prescription charge. It does not, however, follow that, because there is not a sale to the patient, albeit there is a supply (and for my part I think that the property passes to the patient), there is a sale to anyone else. The way, however, counsel for the appellant puts it is this. He says that notionally, when the chemist puts down the drug or medicine on the counter he has passed the property to the council, and that he then under his terms of service on behalf of the council supplies, or delivers, that drug or medicine to the patient. He says that the contract here between the council and the chemist is a purchase by the council of the drug or medicine on the prescription form, that there is an undertaking to pay, and that the property passes as soon as the goods are appropriated, and, as he would say, as soon as they are put on the counter.

For my part, I find that the idea of property passing to the council is a notional idea and not in any sense realistic, and I think that where I differ from counsel for the appellant is in his general approach. He says: never mind the scheme, never mind the services that were set up and to be rendered; if in the performance of those services he can find any transaction which falls within the definition of a sale, then there has been a sale, and, if there has been a sale to the council, then s. 2 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, applies. I myself do not think that that is the right approach. I think that one must take a broader view and say: what was the real relationship between the council and the chemist? As I see it, it was a contract for the rendering of a service; after all, it was pharmaceutical services which were being dealt with. Any chemist who came on the list undertook the obligations to perform services. He entered into an obligation (and I need not read the provisions in any detail) to supply with reasonable promptness any order appearing on a prescription form; he undertook to keep open for certain periods, and he undertook to supply free of charge containers for the drugs or medicine. His payment is referred to as a payment in para. 9 of Part 1 of Sch. 4 to the regulations for pharmaceutical services; under reg. 26 of the regulations it is not a price for the medicine or drugs that he is being paid, but a sum calculated, true by reference to the basic price of the medicine or drugs, but only calculated thereon, and being such as will be remuneration for his general services. Indeed, reg. 31 to which I have already referred, dealing with overpayments, refers again to remuneration.

In my judgment, the contract embraced in the statutory scheme between the council and chemists was a contract for services, and what was being paid was remuneration for the services; it was in no sense a contract to pay the price of goods plus certain outside services. That being so, as it seems to me, the transaction does not fall within s. 2 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, and the justices were right in dismissing this information. I agree with them, and I would dismiss this appeal.

---

(2) Pfizer Corp. v. Ministry of Health, [1965] 1 All E.R. 450.

ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

BLAIN, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for F. R. Appleby, Lyndhurst, clerk to New Forest Rural District Council (for the appellant); Lamartine, Yates & Lacey (for the respondent).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. HASTINGS LICENSING JUSTICES, Ex parte
JOHN LOVIBOND & SONS, LTD. AND OTHERS.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Blain, JJ.),
March 19, 1968.]

Certiorari—Costs—Party not appearing—Matter litigated until after applicants' briefs delivered—Costs awarded against respondents, who did not appear on motion, up to date of notifying that they no longer contested the matter.

Licensing—Jurisdiction—Consent to alteration of premises—Old building, an hotel, completely demolished at time of application—Proposed replacement by a supermarket—"Premises" referred only to buildings—No jurisdiction to grant consent under Licensing Act 1964 (c. 26) s. 20.

At a time when application was made by site-owners for the transfer of a justices' licence for a hotel and for consent to carrying out alterations to the hotel, the site-owners had demolished the hotel with a view to building a supermarket on the site. On application for certiorari to quash the justices' order giving consent, pursuant to s. 20* of the Licensing Act 1964, to carrying out alterations to the hotel,

Held: the consent that justices could give under s. 20 was a consent to the alteration of premises, and, as the term "premises" in the context clearly referred to buildings and the buildings had been demolished, there was no power under s. 20 to give consent; accordingly an order of certiorari to quash the consent given would be granted (see p. 272, letters E and F, post).

Per CURIAM: the proper application in the circumstances was one under s. 6 of the Act of 1964 for a provisional grant of a licence in respect of buildings about to be constructed.

[As to consent by justices to alterations to licensed premises, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 547-549, paras. 1085-1087; and as to the issue of prerogative orders to quash justices' decisions, see ibid., p. 613, paras. 1264, 1265; as for cases on the subject of consent, see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 47-48, 356-365; and for cases on granting of orders of certiorari, see ibid., p. 74, 572-574.]

For the Licensing Act 1964, s. 4, s. 6, and s. 20, see 44 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 488, 489, 509.]

Case referred to:

R. v. Birmingham Union Guardians, (1874), 44 L.J.M.C. 48; sub nom. Lullow Union Guardians v. Birmingham Union Guardians, 31 L.T. 587; 16 Digest (Repl.) 391, 1825.

Motion for certiorari.

This was an application by way of motion on behalf of John Lovibond & Sons, Ltd., and others for an order of certiorari to quash an order made by the licensing justices for the licensing district of Hastings on June 13, 1967, by which they had granted consent to alterations of Castle Hotel, Hastings, which were the * Section 20, so far as material, is printed at p. 271, letter I. to p. 272, letter A, post.

A property of Tesco Stores, Ltd., and in respect of which that company then held a justices' on-licence. Application had been made for a protection order under s. 10 of the Licensing Act 1964 and such order had been granted on Mar. 14, 1967, in respect of the hotel and in favour of the nominee of the respondent company, Tesco Stores, Ltd. The proposed demolition of the Castle Hotel had been mentioned in May, 1967, to the licensing justices, before the demolition was completed. The licensing justices on June 13, 1967, heard the application, the Castle Hotel having been demolished prior to that date. At the hearing, according to the affidavit filed in the proceedings for certiorari on behalf of the applicants, their solicitors attempted to intervene, seeking to object to the application on the ground that the building to be altered no longer existed. The chairman of the licensing committee ruled that they had no right to intervene, and the justices then made an order granting their consent to the proposed structural alterations (viz., to build a supermarket on the site of the hotel). The justices then dismissed an application for a new off-licence to be granted in favour of the nominee of the respondent company and in respect of the premises to be built.

K. G. Jupp, Q.C., and F. M. Drake for the applicants.

D The respondents did not appear and were not represented.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: In Hastings there was until recently a large hotel, the Castle Hotel; it was acquired by the respondents, Tesco Stores, Ltd., the well known supermarket company, with a view to demolition and the erection of a supermarket, part of which at the corner was to be an off-licensed shop. With this in view, they applied on June 13, 1967, to the licensing justices for the licensing district of Hastings for three things: first, for the transfer to their nominee, Mr. Charles William Wales, of the full licence then in the name of the nominee of the Castle Hotel; secondly, they asked for consent under s. 20 of the Licensing Act 1964 to certain alterations, the so-called alterations being set out on a plan which disclosed the building of a supermarket; thirdly, they applied for a new off-licence in respect of what was to be the corner shop. By doing that, they put themselves in a very strong position to meet all eventualities. It appears that probably what they hoped for was to get the transfer, to get consent to alterations, and then if they got the off-licence, they would surrender the licence that they had obtained by transfer. On the other hand, if they were refused the off-licence, they had, for what it was worth, the transfer of the licence and the consent to the alterations.

G In fact, at the time when this application was made, on June 13, 1967, not only had demolition of the Castle Hotel commenced, but it had been completed, and what was there was a bare site. It is in those circumstances that counsel for the applicants now moves on behalf of three well known off-licensees in Hastings for an order of certiorari to quash that part of the decision of the justices given on June 13, as gave liberty to Charles William Wales on behalf of the respondents, to carry out alterations to the Castle Hotel.

H Two things are said: it is said in the first instance that there were no premises capable of being altered, because it was a bare site; and secondly, and in any event, that the so-called alterations could not properly be called alterations in that they amounted to the complete replacement by a building of a wholly different character, a supermarket, as opposed to an hotel. In my judgment I it is inevitable that an order of certiorari should go to quash that consent. It seems to me that it is quite clear that where "premises" is used in the Act of 1964, though it is not defined, it clearly refers to "buildings". Section 20 (1) itself provides:

"No alteration shall be made to premises for which a justices' on-licence is in force if the alteration—(a) gives increased facilities for drinking in a public or common part of the premises; or (b) conceals from observation a public or common part of the premises used for drinking; or (c) affects the communication between the public part of the premises where intoxicating liquor is sold and the remainder of the premises or any street or other public way; . . .”

If it is not made clear by the section itself, it seems to me it is made abundantly clear by s. 4 (2), which provides that:

“ . . . licensing justices shall not grant a new justices’ on-licence for premises unless the premises are in their opinion structurally adapted to the class of licence required.”

Finally s. 6 (1) provides that:

“ Where licensing justices are satisfied, on application made by a person interested in any premises which are—(a) about to be constructed or in the course of construction for the purpose of being used as a house for the sale of intoxicating liquor (whether for consumption on or off the premises); or (b) about to be altered or extended or in the course of alteration or extension for that purpose (whether or not they are already used for that purpose); that the premises, if completed in accordance with plans deposited under this Act, would be such that they would have granted a justices’ on-licence or a justices’ off-licence for the premises, they may make a provisional grant of such a licence for those premises.”

That again makes it clear that “ premises ” is referring to buildings, and secondly it shows what the proper application by the respondents was in this case, namely what they did do by their third application, to apply under s. 6 for a provisional grant of a licence in respect of buildings which had then not been completed, and were about to be constructed. That being so, it seems to me perfectly clear that the justices, in giving their consent to the so-called alterations, exceeded their jurisdiction, and that part of their order must be quashed.

ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

BLAIN, J.: I agree.

Order of certiorari granted.

Jupp, Q.C.: I ask for costs in this court. I refer to 11 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) at p. 80 and R. v. Birmingham Union Guardians (1). The matter was litigated by the respondents until Dec. 14, 1967, when they stated by letter that they were taking no further part. Leave to move for certiorari was obtained on Aug. 29, 1967. At the hearing before the licensing justices the respondents gave no assistance to my clients when attempt was made on their behalf to intervene and thus we had to come to this court; by the time that the letter of Dec. 14 was received, our briefs had been delivered.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: It is very rare that this court makes any award in regard to costs on an application for one of the prerogative orders, unless the party has appeared and contested the application. Counsel for the applicants has, however, pointed out in the present case that the respondents, no doubt under a bona fide misconception as to their rights under the licensing Acts, succeeded in persuading the magistrates to adopt the same misconception and have fought this case, as it were, up to Dec. 14 when they wrote saying they were no longer contesting the application. There is a precedent for making an award of costs in such a case: see R. v. Birmingham Union Guardians (1). In those circumstances the court feels that the proper order to make is that the respondents, Tesco Stores, Ltd., do pay the applicants’ costs up to Dec. 14.

Order of certiorari granted.

Solicitors: Martineau & Reid, agents for Wood, McLellan & Williams, Chatham (for the applicants).

[Reported by OM. P. MIDHA, Barrister-at-Law.]

A

R. v. TRENT RIVER AUTHORITY AND ANOTHER,
Ex parte NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Blain, J.J.), March 21, 22, 1968.]

B

*Land Drainage—Drainage rates—Underground land—Application for determination that no rate should be levied in respect of land more than seven* hundred feet below surface—Whether a horizontal section of underground land could be a portion of the district within the Land Drainage Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5 c. 44), s. 24 (7).*

C

Application was made for a determination that no drainage rate should be levied in respect of an underground section of land lying some five hundred feet below the surface of a portion of the district of an internal drainage board*. On application for certiorari to quash a decision of the river authority, on appeal to them, rejecting the application on the ground that s. 24 (7)† of the Land Drainage Act, 1930, did not confer jurisdiction to make such a determination,

D

Held: the words "any portion of the district" in s. 24 (7) of the Act of 1930 referred only to a definable portion of surface land within the district together with all that was above or below that portion of surface land; accordingly the river authority's decision contained no error in law, and certiorari would not be granted (see p. 275, letter H, post).

E

[As to exemption from drainage rates, see 39 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 708, para. 1026.

For the Land Drainage Act, 1930, s. 24, see 13 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 574.]

Motion for certiorari.

F

This was an application by way of motion by notice dated Nov. 10, 1967, on behalf of the National Coal Board to remove into the High Court and quash a decision given by the first respondents, the Trent River Authority, on June 27, 1967, whereby the first respondents dismissed the appeal of the applicant against the refusal of the second respondents, the Newark Area Internal Drainage Board, to make an order under s. 24 (7) of the Land Drainage Act, 1930, exempting from drainage rates a portion of the second respondents' district comprising land situated more than five hundred feet below the surface, and containing certain underground coal workings of the applicant's. The relevant part of the decision of the river authority is set out at p. 274, letter H, to p. 275, letter C, post. The second respondents had demanded the drainage rates from the applicant in an amount of £1,388 19s. 2d. in respect of the year ending Mar. 31, 1964, and in respect of the applicant's underground coal workings within the area of the second respondents. The substantial question before the court was whether a horizontal section of land below the surface could constitute a portion of a drainage district for the purposes of s. 24 (7) of the Land Drainage Act, 1930.

G

H

The case noted below‡ was cited during the argument.

D. G. Widdicombe, Q.C., and M. F. C. Fitzgerald for the applicant, the National Coal Board.

I

Hugh Forbes, Q.C., and Michael Mann for the first respondents, the Trent River Authority.

* The application specified five hundred feet. The underground workings of the National Coal Board were one thousand feet below the surface. They derived no benefit from the land drainage to provide which rates were leviable. On appeal to the river authority the depth of the horizontal section of underground land for which the applicant claimed exemption was seven hundred feet below the surface, or six hundred feet below Ordnance datum.

† Section 24 (7) is set out at p. 274, letter C, post.

‡ Tiverton and North Devon Ry. Co. v. Loosemore, (1884), 9 App. Cas. 480.

W. J. C. Tonge for the second respondents, the Newark Area Internal Drainage Board. A

BLAIN, J., delivered the first judgment at the invitation of LORD PARKER, C.J.: The application for certiorari is made on the footing that the decision of the first respondents shows an error of law on the face of it, but before reading that decision itself, it may be helpful to look at the very few statutory provisions which give rise to it, and to this motion. B

First of all, s. 24 (3) of the Land Drainage Act, 1930, which I need not read, confers powers on the drainage boards to assess and levy drainage rates on occupiers of hereditaments within the boards' drainage districts (1). Section 24 (7), which is the subsection that falls to be construed, reads thus as enacted:

"A drainage board, after consultation in the case of an internal drainage board with the catchment board, may by order determine that no rates shall be levied by them on the occupiers of hereditaments in any portion of the district which, in their opinion, either by reason of its height above sea level or for any other reason, ought to be exempted wholly from rating." C

For the words "catchment board" one must now read "river authority" as the result of subsequent statutory transfers of functions (2). That alteration is not a matter which is in issue, merely the authority with whom consultation should be held before any determination is made. The words which fall to be construed are the words "any portion of the district". D

The applicant applied to the second respondents under s. 24 (7) of the Act of 1930 for an order determining that no rates should be levied on the occupiers of hereditaments in a portion of the second respondents' district comprising subterranean land wholly lying more than some specified depth (a matter of some hundreds of feet) below the surface. This, of course, is land which includes the applicant's workings. That application was refused by the second respondents. When such a request is refused by an internal drainage board, s. 27 of the Land Drainage Act, 1961, provides a right of appeal to the river board (as it then was), the river authority as it now is. So the applicant appealed to the first respondents, being the relevant river authority in that part of the country, and the appeal was heard on Feb. 27, 1967, by a sub-committee of that authority duly appointed for the purpose. The sub-committee's report was adopted by the first respondents and the appeal was dismissed. E

In that report, adopted by the first respondents, reasons for the decision were very properly given, and a speaking record was thus created, the document which counsel for the applicant contends shows an error or errors of law on the face of it. The speaking part of that record reads as follows: F

"The appeal is made by the [applicant] against the refusal of the [second respondents] to make an order under s. 24 (7) of the Land Drainage Act, 1930, determining that no rates shall be levied by them on the occupiers of hereditaments in a specific section of underground land in the district. The order which the [applicant] now seeks relates to all land within the Dover Beck 'arm' of the drainage district lying more than seven hundred feet below the surface or, alternatively, lying more than six hundred feet below ordnance datum. The appeal raises, apparently for the first time, a point of law of some importance—namely, whether a section of land below, and not including, the surface can be considered to be a portion of a drainage district for the purposes of s. 24 (7) of the Act of 1930. We were greatly assisted in reaching our decision on this matter by the arguments put forward G

(1) See 13 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 574. The basis of assessment for drainage rates was modified by s. 22 of the Land Drainage Act, 1961; 41 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 671. H

(2) River boards were established by the River Boards Act, 1948, s. 1; and the Water Resources Act 1963, s. 3 and s. 5 provided for the establishment of river authorities and the transfer to them of the functions of river boards. I

- A by counsel appearing for the [applicant] and by the clerk of the [second respondents]. We have had regard to the words used in the subsection and also to the tenor of the Act as whole and of the land drainage statutes generally. In reaching our conclusion on this aspect of the appeal we have been influenced by the fact that drainage areas in general are defined only by reference to the surface of the land although there is no doubt that the surface carries with it everything that is above and below. The example cited in s. 24 (7)—namely, height above sea level—can, in our view, relate only to the surface of land and our conclusion is that any order sought under the section must relate to an area of surface land. We hold, therefore, that the order sought by the [applicant] cannot properly be made and the appeal accordingly fails.”
- C The point at issue falls within a very small compass, and may perhaps be summarised thus. First, the area administered by a drainage board is defined and delineated by reference to surface boundaries. Secondly, internal drainage districts, that is to say districts administered for drainage purposes by internal drainage boards, are also defined and delineated by reference to surface boundaries. Under s. 24 (7) of the Act of 1930, as I have recited, a drainage board may determine not to levy rates on the occupiers of hereditaments in “any portion of the district”—I emphasise those words—which in the opinion of the drainage board ought to be exempted from rating. The applicant contended that a section of land below and not including the surface can be considered by the internal drainage board, and on appeal by the river board, to be a portion of a drainage district for the purposes of s. 24 (7).
- E The second respondents contended, and the first respondents found, that drainage districts are defined by reference to the surface of land, albeit they include also all that is above and below such surface areas. Therefore, said the second respondents, the phrase “portion of the district” in the subsection refers necessarily to a portion of the surface area of the district, together with all that is above and below that portion. For my part I cannot escape the fact that
- F Parliament in the subsection has empowered the making of an order not for the exemption from rating of hereditaments as such, were that in consequence, but for exemption of occupiers of hereditaments in any portion of the district which, in the opinion of the first respondents, ought to be exempted. The word “which” refers back not to the noun “hereditaments” but to the noun “portion”. Thus it is the portion of the district which may be exempted, the prohibition on
- G lifting of rates on occupiers of hereditaments within that portion, being consequential, whether they be above or below ground.
- In my view a drainage district comprises an area of land delineated by surface boundaries, and comprising that surface land within those boundaries together with all that is above and below. It follows that a portion of such a drainage district comprises a definable portion of such surface land together again with all that is above and below that portion. Assuming this view to be correct, the river authority’s decision contained no error of law on the face of it or at all, and indeed is correct in law, in holding that the order sought by the applicant could not have been made, and in dismissing the appeal from the decision of the second respondents. I would reject the motion and refuse to make the order which is prayed.

I ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: I also agree.

Application refused.

Solicitors: Donald H. Haslem, agent for Laurence C. Jenkins, Arnold, Notts. (for the applicant); Ian Drummond, Nottingham (for the first respondents); Hancock & Willis, agents for Tallents, Newark (for the second respondents).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BANFIELD (deceased). LLOYDS BANK, LTD.
v. SMITH AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Goff, J.), October 24, 25, November 21, 1967.]

Charity—Religion—Residuary bequest to a community house—Gift for the furtherance of the work and purposes of the community—Community of persons leading simple pious lives—Object to do the will of God by practical Christianity—Community open to persons of any creed or who had none—Help given to any member of the public in need—Whether valid charitable gift for advancement of religion—Whether valid charitable gift for purpose beneficial to the public.

By a residuary gift in a testatrix' will, dated Aug. 24, 1959, she gave half of the residue of her estate to the Pilsdon Community House. There was no trust deed or other written instrument establishing or regulating the Pilsdon Community House. A pamphlet and various letters written by the first defendant from time to time showed that the object and purpose was to found a community where persons could lead a simple pious life together. The court found that the community was a religious community existing to do the will of God in practical Christianity. The community was open to persons of all creeds and to those who had none. It received and tended the needs of those members of the public who needed help for a variety of reasons, e.g., drug addiction, drink, having been in prison, or loneliness; and members went out to offer help where required.

Held: the gift in favour of Pilsdon Community House was in law a valid charitable gift for the following reasons—

(i) because it was a gift for the furtherance of the work and purposes of the community, not a gift to the community itself, and the purposes of the community were in law charitable purposes, as being for the advancement of religion, and as having the requisite public element (see p. 278, letter C, p. 279, letter I, to p. 280, letter A, and p. 281, letter F, post).

Re Thackrah ([1939] 2 All E.R. 4) distinguished.

Re Wedgwood ([1914] 2 Ch. 245) applied.

Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Baddeley ([1955] 1 All E.R. 525) distinguished.

Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden ([1961] 3 All E.R. 769) considered.

(ii) even if the purposes of the community were not for the advancement of religion, they were charitable purposes as being within the fourth class of the classification in Pemsel's case, viz., other purposes beneficial to the community (see p. 280, letter D, post).

Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel ([1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 28) and Re Chaplin ([1933] Ch. 115) applied.

[As to gifts for religious purposes being charitable, see 4 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 221, 222, para. 501; and for cases on the subject, see 8 DIGEST (Repl.) 331, 332, 127-131, 334, 148-156, 340, 341, 226-234.]

As to the requisite public element in charitable gifts, see 4 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.), para. 488.

As to other purposes beneficial to the community being charitable, see 4 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 226, 227, para. 506; and for cases on the subject, see 8 DIGEST (Repl.) 342-345, 253-263, 355-357, 342-365.]

Cases referred to:

Chaplin, Re, Neame v. A.-G., [1933] Ch. 115; 102 L.J.Ch. 56; 148 L.T. 190; 8 Digest (Repl.) 324, 83.

Cocks v. Manners, (1871), L.R. 12 Eq. 574; 40 L.J.Ch. 640; 24 L.T. 869; 36 J.P. 244; 8 Digest (Repl.) 325, 86.

Estlin, Re, Pritchard v. Thomas, (1903), 72 L.J.Ch. 687; 89 L.T. 88; 8 Digest (Repl.) 323, 77.

- A Gilmour v. Coats, [1949] 1 All E.R. 848; [1949] A.C. 426; [1949] L.J.R. 1034; 8 Digest (Repl.) 325, 87.
Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel, [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 28; [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 8 Digest (Repl.) 312, 1.
- B Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Baddeley, [1955] 1 All E.R. 525; [1955] A.C. 572; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 552; 39 Digest (Repl.) 334, 726.
James, Re, Grenfell v. Hamilton, [1932] All E.R. Rep. 452; [1932] 2 Ch. 25; 101 L.J.Ch. 265; 146 L.T. 528; 8 Digest (Repl.) 324, 82.
Mann, Re, Hardy v. A.-G., [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 93; [1903] 1 Ch. 232; 72 L.J.Ch. 150; 87 L.T. 734; 8 Digest (Repl.) 344, 257.
- C Marchant, Re, Weaver v. Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, (1910), 54 Sol. Jo. 425; 8 Digest (Repl.) 414, 1074.
Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden, [1961] 3 All E.R. 769; [1962] Ch. 832; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 999; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 95, 212a.
Oxford Group v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1949] 2 All E.R. 537; 31 Tax Cas. 221; 28 Digest (Repl.) 316, 1386.
- D Thackrah, Re, Thackrah v. Wilson, [1939] 2 All E.R. 4; 8 Digest (Repl.) 341, 231.
Warre's Will Trusts, Re, Wort v. Salisbury Diocesan Board of Finance, [1953] 2 All E.R. 99; 8 Digest (Repl.) 332, 131.
Webster, Re, Pearson v. Webster, [1912] 1 Ch. 106; 81 L.J.Ch. 79; 105 L.T. 815; 8 Digest (Repl.) 418, 1097.
- E Wedgwood, Re, Sweet v. Cotton, [1914] 2 Ch. 245; 83 L.J.Ch. 731; 111 L.T. 436; 8 Digest (Repl.) 414, 1071.
Williams Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1947] 1 All E.R. 513; [1947] A.C. 447; [1948] L.J.R. 644; 176 L.T. 462; 28 Digest (Repl.) 14, 49.

Adjourned Summons.

- By an originating summons, issued on Mar. 8, 1966, the plaintiffs, Lloyds Bank, Ltd., executors of the will of the testatrix, Violet Lucy Banfield deceased, sought the determination by the court of the following questions. 1. Whether on the true construction of the will and in the events which had happened the gift of one half of the residuary estate of the testatrix to Pilsdon (in the will called "Pilson") Community House, c/o Rev. C. Percy Smith (the first defendant herein) was a valid charitable gift. 2. (a) If question 1 were answered in the affirmative, whether the first defendant or some other person, and if so who, could give a valid receipt for the gift; and (b) if question 1 were answered in the negative, whether the testatrix died intestate in respect of the property comprised in the gift or how otherwise the same ought to be applied.

- The first defendant was the Reverend Charles Percy Smith, Warden of the Pilsdon Community House; the second defendant was Mary Kathleen Frances Chaplin, one of the next of kin of the testatrix. The third defendant was Her Majesty's Attorney-General. By the order, dated Nov. 21, 1967, made on the summons the second defendant was appointed to represent the testatrix' next of kin for the purposes of this application.

- I W. G. H. Cook for the plaintiffs.
J. H. Hames for the first defendant.
L. J. Bromley for the second defendant (representing the next of kin).
N. C. H. Browne-Wilkinson for the Attorney-General.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 21. GOFF, J., read the following judgment: the principal question raised by this originating summons is whether a gift of half of the residuary estate of the testatrix to the Pilsdon Community House is a valid charitable gift. The residuary gift is very short and consists of no more than:

"The residue to be equally divided between The Pilson Community House, care of Rev. C. Percy Smith of Pilsdon House, Bridport, Dorset, and the United Nations Refugee Fund."

In that quotation "Pilson" is obviously a mistake for "Pilsdon". The Rev. C. Percy Smith is the first defendant. The second defendant is a representative of the class of next of kin, and the third defendant is Her Majesty's Attorney-General, representing charity generally. There is no trust deed or other instrument or writing of any kind establishing or regulating the Pilsdon Community House, and the next of kin say that this gift fails in any event as being a gift to a body which does not exist, in support of which they cite the first of the Oxford Group cases, Re Thackrah, Thackrah v. Wilson (1). In my judgment, however, that case is clearly distinguishable, since in my view this is a purpose gift. It is a gift for furthering the work and purposes of the community and not a gift to the community as such. This conclusion is amply supported by the review of the cases which BENNETT, J., made in the Thackrah case (2) itself, where he said: "On the language of this will, there is no trust for anybody. It is a gift to the society." In Re Mann, Hardy v. A.-G. (3), it was plainly a gift made by the testatrix for a purpose, the purpose being the benefit of a village institute. That was a good charitable purpose, and there was no difficulty in holding, as FARWELL, J., did hold, that that was a gift for a charitable purpose, and one to which effect could and ought to be given. The language of the will used by the testatrix in that case is poles asunder from the language that the testatrix has used in the will that I have to consider here. The second case relied on and referred to is Re Webster, Pearson v. Webster (4), where the terms of the gift were as follows:

"I give and bequeath unto the Ormond Home for Nurses any money that comes to me now from my father and will come from my mother also the furniture—my relations having taken out anything they may wish to have. Arrangements must also be made to carry on the home for the next few months with Mrs. Bell in charge. The money that comes in from the district goes towards the expenses of the upkeep and debts not paid by me must be paid. If necessary a committee might be formed of Dr. Hall Walker and several local Chelsea doctors."

On that language, of course, it not being possible to make a bequest to such a thing as a home—to bricks and mortar—JOYCE, J., had no difficulty in concluding, and it is the basis of his decision, that what the testatrix intended to do was to devote her property to certain purposes which were charitable. The language of the will was such that, on its fair construction, the gift was to her trustee for charitable purposes. The third case, Re Wedgwood, Sweet v. Cotton (5), also before JOYCE, J., was a case of a testatrix giving a legacy of £1,000 to "Saint Mary's Home for Women and Children, of 15, Wellington Street, Chelsea". Again, one cannot give a sum of money to a home. A home is bricks and mortar. On that language, JOYCE, J., was able to hold, and he did hold, that the gift was for the purpose of the work carried on at the nursing-home, and so, those purposes being charitable, he was able to give effect to them by means of a scheme.

This being so, the absence of any written constitution becomes irrelevant (see Re Marchant, Weaver v. Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (6)). Even so, the gift must still fail for perpetuity or uncertainty unless the work and purposes of the community are charitable in the legal sense. The next of kin say that they are not. They submit that the evidence, which consists of a letter dated Mar. 1, 1965, from the first defendant's solicitors, in which they purport to set out the objects of the community, an open Christmas

(1) [1939] 2 All E.R. 4.

(2) [1939] 2 All E.R. at p. 7, letter G.

(3) [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 93; [1903] 1 Ch. 232.

(4) [1912] 1 Ch. 106.

(5) [1914] 2 Ch. 245.

(6) (1910), 54 Sol. Jo. 425.

A letter, written by the first defendant in December, 1964, and a pamphlet, being mainly other letters written by him at various times, show that the object and purpose was to found a community where persons could lead a simple pious life together. They say further that such a community is not charitable, either as not being within the spirit and intendment of the Statute of Elizabeth, or as not having a sufficient element of benefit to the public.

B In my judgment, however, that submission cannot be accepted. It is true that in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Baddeley (7) VISCOUNT SIMONDS said:

“... its purpose is to establish what is well enough called a community centre in which social intercourse and discreet festivity may go hand in hand with religious observance and instruction. No one will gainsay that this is a worthy object of benevolence, but it is another question whether it is a legal charity, and it appears to me that authority which is binding on your lordships puts it beyond doubt that it is not.”

I think that that is a reference to Williams' Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (8). Further, in Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden (9), CROSS, J., said:

“In Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Baddeley (10), on the other hand, no one sought to argue—indeed it was manifestly impossible to argue—that the trust was for the advancement of religion. No doubt it had a religious flavour in that the beneficiaries were confined to Methodists or persons likely to become Methodists, and the premises and the activities in which the beneficiaries were to engage were to be under the control of the leaders of a Methodist Mission. Nevertheless the activities in themselves were directed predominantly to the social and not to the religious well-being of the beneficiaries.”

In that case, however, the activities in themselves were directed predominantly to the social and not to the religious well-being of the beneficiaries. Here the purpose appears to me to be religious; the social side is merely ancillary.

F The Pilsdon Community, as I see it, is much more than a place where social intercourse and discreet festivity, if festivity there be, go hand in hand with religious observance and instruction. It exists to dedicate everything to God, even the most humble workaday tasks, and to do the will of God in practical Christianity. This is reiterated repeatedly in the pamphlet; for example, on p. 9:

G “Pilsdon is a religious community concerned primarily with discovering what is meant by the will of God and trying to do it,” and p. 16:

“Principally we are a religious community of men and women who have taken no specific vows, but who have agreed that prayer and work and practical charity should be our supreme purpose.”

H Again, the time-table on p. 7 shows that the whole of every day is geared to a programme of worship and prayer.

A religious body may, and usually does, engage in a number of subsidiary activities which are not purely religious, but it does not thereby lose its religious character, and a trust in favour of such a body simpliciter is a good charitable trust, but the income can only be applied to those activities of the body which are purely religious (see per TUCKER, L.J., in Oxford Group v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (11)).

I In those circumstances, in my judgment, despite the fact that it opens its doors to all creeds and to those who have none, the purpose of the community,

(7) [1955] 1 All E.R. 525 at p. 530; [1955] A.C. 572 at p. 586.

(8) [1947] 1 All E.R. 513; [1947] A.C. 447.

(9) [1961] 3 All E.R. 769 at p. 780; [1962] Ch. 832 at p. 852.

(10) [1955] 1 All E.R. 525; [1955] A.C. 572.

(11) [1949] 2 All E.R. 537 at p. 539.

and therefore, the purpose of this gift, is a valid charity for the advancement of religion provided it be sufficiently public. At that stage the next of kin craved in aid Cocks v. Manners (12) and Gilmour v. Coats (13), but those dealt with cloistered nuns whose community was essentially introspective and existed for the purpose of sanctifying the souls of the members, and had no impact on the public save the benefit of the example of the pious life and the benefit of intercessory prayer, which were too intangible to be recognised and evaluated by a court of law.

The present case, however, is quite different. If the first hurdle of spirit and intendment can be surmounted, I see no difficulty in the second. This community is by means closed. It receives and tends the needs of those members of the public who need help for divers reasons, such as drug addiction, or drink, or having been in prison, or even loneliness or mere failure to stand up to the strains of life. This is succinctly stated in the letter of Mar. 1, 1965, and whilst that was written after the question had been raised, and to support a claim, and therefore it must be approached with some caution, it appears to me to be fully borne out by the pamphlet. Moreover, the members go out to offer help where required, for example, the distraught widow (mentioned on p. 17) and the work of restoring the church (see p. 28).

If, however, I am wrong in the view that this is a religious charity it is still, in my judgment, valid as a public purpose charity within the fourth class of LORD MACNAGHTEN'S classification in Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel (14).

For the reasons which I have already given the work is clearly, I think, of general public benefit, but that alone is not enough for it must still be shown to be within the spirit and intendment of the Statute of Elizabeth (see Williams' Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs (15)). In my judgment, however, providing a temporary home of rest and the comfort of friendship to those who need it is a charitable purpose; see Re James, Grenfell v. Hamilton (16) and in particular Re Chaplin, Neame v. A.-G. (17), where the words of the gift were:

"To provide a home of rest that shall afford the means of physical and/or mental recuperation to persons in need of rest by reason of the stress and strain caused or partly caused by the conditions in which they ordinarily live and/or work."

MAUGHAM, J., said (18):

"It must, I think, be admitted that in the present case the testator's object is not merely to provide for the relief of poverty, and I think the same was true in Re James (19). Accordingly, the objects, if they are to be held charitable, must be justified on grounds other than the relief of poverty. In Re James (19) the trust was for the establishment of a home of rest for the sisters of a community, the clergy of the diocese of Truro, and such persons as the Mother Superior of the community should nominate and appoint; and the testatrix bequeathed money, the interest of which was to be applied to repair the house and maintain and support the inmates. FARWELL, J., following Re Estlin, Pritchard v. Thomas (20) said (21): '... prima facie in my judgment the words "home of rest" themselves indicate something in the nature of a hospital, although not strictly a hospital—

(12) (1871), L.R. 12 Eq. 574.

(13) [1949] 1 All E.R. 848; [1949] A.C. 426.

(14) [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 28 at p. 55; [1891] A.C. 531 at p. 583.

(15) [1947] 1 All E.R. 513 at p. 518; [1947] A.C. 447 at p. 455.

(16) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 452 at p. 454; [1932] 2 Ch. 25 at p. 30.

(17) [1933] Ch. 115.

(18) [1933] Ch. at pp. 117, 118.

(19) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 452; [1932] 2 Ch. 25.

(20) (1903), 72 L.J.Ch. 687.

(21) [1932] All E.R. Rep. at p. 454; [1932] 2 Ch. at p. 31.

- A that is to say, a home which is to provide relief for those who are in need of it, not by means of medicine or medical attendance, but by providing them with the means and possibility of rest. That, in my view, is in a true sense providing for the impotent, and accordingly to provide a home of rest is prima facie a good charitable object.' In the case before me I have stronger reasons than had FARWELL, J., for coming to the same conclusion.
- B In the will with which he had to deal it was only by reasonable implication that it could be shown that the home intended was something in the nature of a hospital. In the present case the object of the home is to 'afford the means of physical and/or mental recuperation' to persons whose need is a real need of rest. Following FARWELL, J., I come to the conclusions that the home contemplated by the testator is a home such as is described in the judgment in Re James (22), and I accordingly decide that the trusts are valid charitable trusts."
- C

The next of kin say that the lonely and the wayfarers are not objects of charity, but in my judgment they cannot be considered in isolation. The work must be looked at as a whole, and so regarded it seems to me fairly and squarely within the principle of the cases I have just mentioned.

- D The next of kin also relied on the decision of HARMAN, J., in Re Warre's Will Trusts, Wort v. Salisbury Diocesan Board of Finance (23) that a retreat house is not a charity. His lordship there referred to the functions of such a place as religious activity or inactivity, and that is the crux of the matter. Such a house exists for private meditation and improvement only, and is therefore lacking in the necessary public element. Pilsdon is quite different, as it opens out to reach the public. No doubt the retreat is practised on particular occasions as part of the religious discipline of the community (see the reference to the quiet day from Maundy Thursday evening to Good Friday evening on p. 21 of the pamphlet) but that is not the be all and end all of the establishment, which has what the home in HARMAN, J.'s case had not, a strong public element.
- E

- F In my judgment, therefore, this half of the residue is given on a valid charitable trust.

Declaration accordingly.

- [Counsel having intimated, on the subsidiary question whether a good receipt for the gift could be given by the first defendant, that the first defendant wished to transfer the legal title to the property and all other assets of the community to the diocesan board or other trustees, HIS LORDSHIP ordered by way of scheme that if on or before May 21, 1968 (or such longer period not exceeding a further six months as the Attorney-General might agree) the property of Pilsdon community were transferred to trustees and a declaration of trust were executed declaring charitable trusts for the purposes of the community (which were acceptable to the Attorney-General) the one half of the residuary estate be paid to such trustees to hold on the trusts declared by the declaration of trust. AND if the scheme thus directed should not be effective within the time limited that a scheme for the application of the one half of the residuary estate should be settled by the judge, such scheme to be brought in by the plaintiffs.]
- G
- H

- I Solicitors: Sole, Sawbridge & Co., agents for Bone & Pilcher, Bournemouth (for the plaintiffs); Lovell, Son & Pitfield, agents for Scott Rowe, Axminster (for the first defendant); Warren Murton & Co. (for the second defendant); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by R. W. FARRIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

(22) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 452; [1932] 2 Ch. 25.

(23) [1953] 2 All E.R. 99.

A

R. v. PRICE.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Sachs, L.J., Fenton Atkinson and Cusack, JJ.), March 21, 1968.]

Criminal Law—Abortion—Corroboration—Direction to jury—Need for precise and clear direction—Issue whether doctor believed that patient was pregnant—Patient believing that she was pregnant with a child whom she did not wish to have.

B

A married woman ("the patient"), who believed herself to be 3½ months' pregnant with a child whom she did not wish to have, went on Mar. 28, 1967, with a friend to consult the appellant, a doctor who was a stranger to the patient. On leaving, the patient told her friend that the appellant did not think that she was pregnant, and that she was to have a contraceptive device (a Gynokoil) fitted. On Mar. 30 the patient again visited the appellant and the device was inserted. On Mar. 31 the patient went to a police surgeon, who concluded that she was pregnant and would have a miscarriage. At the appellant's trial on a charge of using an instrument with intent to procure miscarriage the issue was what the appellant had believed, and there was conflict of evidence between the appellant and the patient. In summing-up the trial judge warned the jury that they ought to view the evidence of an accomplice (viz., the patient) with particular care and look to see whether there was other, and separate, evidence implicating the accused; but that, having had that warning, they might accept the evidence of an accomplice even without corroboration if they thought it right. The trial judge referred to three matters as possibly constituting corroboration, viz., (a) to the patient's having gone to the appellant in order to have an abortion performed and apparently having obtained something for which she had not asked, namely, a contraceptive device; (b) to a point on which the direction was conceded, on appeal, to have been insufficiently clear and (c) to an alleged lie by the appellant to the police, in regard to which the direction to the jury had not indicated clearly to them, so it was submitted on appeal, how that matter could be corroboration. The trial judge did not mention, as corroboration, evidence that on Mar. 31 a competent medical witness had found the patient's pregnancy to be manifest. On appeal against conviction,

C

D

E

F

G

Held: the conviction would be quashed because—

(i) the warning of the need for corroboration was in the circumstances not sufficiently precise, in that it failed, e.g., to refer to the danger of convicting on the evidence of an accomplice and to make it clear that the jury should not act on the patient's uncorroborated evidence unless convinced that she was speaking the truth (see p. 285, letters C and H, post).

H

Davies v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1954] 1 All E.R. 507) applied.

(ii) there had been misdirection in relation to what constituted corroboration (see p. 285, letter H, post).

Per CURIAM: (i) in so far as the matters to which direction (a) above referred were matters which were common ground they could have amounted to corroboration (see p. 285, letter E, post).

I

(ii) the statement of the medical witness on Mar. 31 that the patient's pregnancy was manifest was potent corroboration (see p. 285, letter G, post).

Appeal allowed.

[Editorial Note. The Abortion Act 1967 (c. 87), which came into force on Apr. 27, 1968, legalises the medical termination of a pregnancy in specified circumstances, which are not such as those that appear to have existed in the

A present case. The importance of the present decision, to which the court referred at letter G, infra, is thus not necessarily diminished by the Act of 1967.

As to the offence of procuring abortion, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 731, para. 1402.

B As to corroboration, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 458-462, paras. 843 to 848; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 527, 528, 5108-5116; 534-537, 5182-5217.

As to medical termination of pregnancy, see CURRENT SERVICE to 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.), para. 1404A.]

Cases referred to:

C Davies v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1954] 1 All E.R. 507; [1954] A.C. 378; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 343; 118 J.P. 222; 38 Cr. App. Rep. 11; 14 Digest (Repl.) 527, 5108.

R. v. Baskerville, [1916-17] All E.R. Rep. 38; [1916] 2 K.B. 658; 86 L.J.K.B. 28; 115 L.T. 453; 80 J.P. 446; 12 Cr. App. Rep. 81; 14 Digest (Repl.) 536, 5214.

Appeal.

D The appellant appealed against his conviction on Oct. 13, 1967, at Berkshire Assizes before WALLER, J., and a jury on a charge of using an instrument with intent to procure a miscarriage contrary to s. 58 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court.

*J. B. R. Hazan** for the appellant.

E Douglas Draycott, Q.C., and M. T. B. Underhill for the Crown.

F SACHS, L.J., delivered the following judgment of the court: At Berkshire Assizes on Oct. 13, 1967, the appellant, an experienced medical practitioner, was convicted of using an instrument with intent to procure miscarriage. On that conviction he was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment. The conviction was at the end of a trial that commenced on Oct. 10, a Tuesday, and ended on a Friday, Oct. 13, and it appears from material before this court that the jury first retired at 3.05 p.m. and came back at 5.35 to ask whether there could be some additional evidence; retired at 5.40 and came back at 6.10 p.m., asking for certain further directions as to certain evidence; and finally, having retired at 6.15 p.m., came back at 6.50 p.m. and returned a verdict by a majority of ten to two.

G The case was one of no little importance in this respect; on the one hand, there was an experienced medical practitioner whose reputation was at stake; on the other hand it was what might be called a Gynecoil case and it has become evident at assizes that the use of a Gynecoil as an instrument has afforded considerable difficulties in the class of case under consideration. The alleged offence was said to have been committed on a Mrs. S. ("the patient").

H The appellant admittedly fitted her with this contraceptive Gynecoil device with the aid of an insertion tube and that action did in fact induce, shortly afterwards, a miscarriage. The essential issue for the jury was, did the appellant at the time that he inserted the Gynecoil with the insertion tube know or believe that the patient was pregnant and, accordingly, introduce the instrument with intent to produce a miscarriage, or did he, as it was his case for the defence,

I think that she was not pregnant and introduce it for the purpose of allaying anxieties on her behalf as regards the future.

The main dates to be considered are these: Mar. 28, a Tuesday, when the patient and a Mrs. Barnes visited the appellant for the first time; Mar. 30, a Thursday, when the coil was inserted; Mar. 31, when the patient was seen by another doctor who stated in evidence that it was manifestly clear that she was pregnant, and Apr. 1, when in fact the miscarriage occurred because of the introduction of the Gynecoil and the tube on Mar. 30. A

* Counsel appearing for the appellant did not appear on his behalf at Berkshire Assizes.

As regards Mar. 28, the patient, who was pregnant with a child whom she desired not to have, went with a friend, a Mrs. Barnes, to consult the appellant, who was a stranger to the former. It is common ground that on this first visit the appellant was told by the patient that she thought that she was pregnant—indeed she thought she was 3½ months pregnant—and that she desired not to have the child. It is also common ground that on that occasion there was talk of going to Harley Street in certain contingencies. Without going into further details, it is to be observed that apparently the patient exhibited most of the classic symptoms of being pregnant. It also appears that when she left the appellant's premises she was told, according to what she passed on to her friend, Mrs. Barnes, that the appellant did not think she was pregnant and that she was going to be fitted with this contraceptive device for which she had not asked. It was in issue whether those statements of the doctor were or were not part of a camouflage for the purpose which he intended to pursue shortly afterwards. B C

Next one comes to Mar. 30 when the patient had in fact secured a loan of seven guineas from her mother, which was the standard price for fitting this particular contraceptive. On that date occurred the insertion of the tube. There was a complete conflict of evidence between the appellant and the patient whether just previously there had been a certain type of examination and whether there had been, prior to that examination, any bleeding. The next morning, Mar. 31, the patient went to the surgeon for the Reading borough police, Dr. Hardy, who, as already indicated, had no difficulty in concluding that she was pregnant and would shortly miscarry. She did in fact miscarry on the next day and, according to the evidence, which was to some extent in dispute but was nonetheless somewhat cogent, the foetus was a ten weeks foetus. D E

In those circumstances, the issue being as to what the appellant believed, and there being very considerable conflict on certain vital points between the appellant and the patient, it became the duty of the trial judge to inform the jury that the patient was an accomplice and to give the jury an appropriate warning. The attention of this court has once more been drawn to the case of Davies v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1), and in particular to the speech of LORD SIMONDS, L.C., in that case (2) in which he approved of the line that the Court of Criminal Appeal had taken in the R. v. Baskerville (3) case and emphasized very strongly that it was a matter of law that a jury should be warned of the risks of acting on an accomplice's evidence which was not corroborated and the importance of this question of corroboration. At the trial the learned judge dealt with the matter in this way. After stating that the patient was in the position of an accomplice, he went on thus: F G

“And the courts have always warned juries over the years that when they have to take the evidence of an accomplice they ought to view it with particular care and they ought to look to see whether there is other evidence separate from that accomplice which implicates the accused in a material particular. Having said that juries have been told that, having had that warning they may accept the evidence of the accomplice even without corroboration if they think it right...” H

Counsel for the appellant in his helpful submissions has pointed out that that particular passage does not refer in so many words to the dangers of convicting on the evidence of an accomplice, and has further criticised the absence, in those phrases in relation to the patient's evidence, of words making it clear that I

(1) [1954] 1 All E.R. 507; [1954] A.C. 378.

(2) [1954] 1 All E.R. at pp. 511-513; [1954] A.C. at pp. 396-401.

(3) [1916-17] All E.R. Rep. 38; [1916] 2 K.B. 658.

A they should only act on her uncorroborated evidence if fully convinced that the patient was speaking the truth. This court has examined the above passage with anxious care and wishes it first of all to be made clear that there is no magic formula which has to be used with regard to any warning which is given to juries, nor is there such a formula as regards the circumstances in which, despite the absence of corroboration, they can act on the evidence of an accomplice. Nor does this court wish in any way to suggest that it is not open to a judge to indicate in his summing-up that the degree of danger or risk in relying on an accomplice's evidence may not vary considerably according to the circumstances of the particular case. Having said that, however, this court, having regard also to certain matters which are about to be mentioned in relation to the particular directions on items alleged to be corroboration, finds it necessary to say that this particular direction as given by the judge was not on this occasion sufficiently precise and clear on these important issues.

C The next complaint that was made on behalf of the appellant was that the learned trial judge referred to three pieces of evidence as being potential corroboration. Counsel for the appellant attacked each of these pieces in turn as not being capable of being corroboration. As regards the first, it is sufficient to say that in the view of this court it could have amounted to corroboration, for it is stated:

E "... the first thing you may think was the rather unusual picture of her going on the one hand saying that she was pregnant and she went in order to have an abortion performed and coming out from the [appellant's] consulting room in the end with something which she said she did not want and which everybody agrees she did not ask for, namely a contraceptive device."

Insofar as those words referred to matters which were common ground, these matters could, in the view of this court, have amounted to corroboration.

F There then came a second point, on which it had to be conceded on behalf of the prosecution in the course of this argument, that the direction given was not sufficiently clear and might have to some extent misled the jury as to what exactly it meant. Then there was a third point which related to an alleged lie of the appellant to the police who were asking him questions. It is said, and there is something of substance in it, that on that occasion there was not a sufficient indication to the jury as to why or how they could take that matter into account as corroboration. (It is, however, also to be noted that there was one most potent piece of corroboration that was not mentioned to the jury, and that is the evidence that in fact on the day after Mar. 30 a competent medical witness had said that the pregnancy of this woman was something which was manifest.)

H In those circumstances this court has to come to a conclusion whether there was a misdirection in relation to corroboration on one or both of the points which have been raised by counsel for the appellant; first, the question of the warning to be given to a jury in relation to the evidence of an accomplice, and secondly, as regards the individual items which he criticised in relation to the pieces of evidence to which reference has already been made. This court has come to the conclusion that the appellant has established his case on those points and in those circumstances the next matter to be considered is whether there should be an application of the proviso (4). Suffice it to say that in this particular case, having regard to the nature of the issue and having regard to the length of time which the jury took to reach their verdict, this court does not consider that there could be room for the application of the proviso even

---

(4) Viz., the proviso to s. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, as amended by s. 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1966; 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 929 and 46 ibid., 55.

if it granted an adjournment to investigate the matter further. In those circumstances, the conviction is quashed. A

Appeal allowed. Conviction quashed.

Solicitors: Registrar of Criminal Appeals (for the appellant); Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] B

BURNSIDE v. HARRISON MARKS PRODUCTIONS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning, M.R., Russell, L.J., and Cumming-Bruce, J.), March 11, 1968.] C

Practice—Parties—Joinder of parties—Joint contractors—One joint contractor suing alone—Other joint contractor unwilling to sue—No offer of indemnity for costs made by plaintiff to his joint contractor—Joint contractor did not object to being added as defendant, but defendants objected—Absence of offer by plaintiff of indemnity for costs to his joint contractor did not constitute a ground on which defendants could maintain their objection. D

The defendants engaged the plaintiff and T. jointly to write a script for a film and agreed to pay to them £1,000. The script was delivered, but the defendants refused to pay the agreed price on the ground that the script was not good enough for them. The plaintiff sued the defendants. The defendants objected that T. was not co-plaintiff. T. declined to join as plaintiff, and the defendants objected to his being joined as defendant on the grounds (i) that the plaintiff had not offered T. an indemnity for costs, and (ii) that the defendants would be prejudiced because they had a counter claim against both the plaintiff and T. E

Held: leave would be given to add T. as defendant because— F

(i) the rule that one joint contractor could not add the other joint contractor as a party to an action without offering him an indemnity for costs did not give the party contracting with the joint contractors the right to object to the joinder unless such an offer was made (see p. 287, letter E, post).

Johnson v. Stephens and Carter, Ltd. ([1923] All E.R. Rep. 701) distinguished. G

(ii) the defendants would not be prejudiced by T.'s being joined as defendant, because they could counterclaim against the plaintiff and against T. by making him party to the counterclaim (see p. 287, letter G, post).

Appeal allowed.

[As to joint promisees suing, see 8 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 61, para. 101, and 30 ibid., 313, para. 571 text and note (k); and for cases on the subject, see 12 DIGEST (Repl.) 37-39, 137-157.] H

As to the effect of non-joinder of parties, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 394, 395, para. 735.

For R.S.C., Ord. 15, r. 4 (2), see SUPREME COURT PRACTICE, 1967, p. 149.]

Case referred to:

Johnson v. Stephens and Carter, Ltd. [1923] All E.R. Rep. 701; [1923] 2 K.B. 857; 92 L.J.K.B. 1048; 130 L.T. 106; 50 Digest (Repl.) 455, 1506. I

Interlocutory Appeal.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff, with the leave of the Court of Appeal, from an order of CUSACK, J., refusing the plaintiff leave to join one Templeton, a joint contractor with the plaintiff, as a defendant in the action on the ground that he had not been offered by the plaintiff an indemnity for costs.

F. S. Bresler for the plaintiff.

Alexander Irving for the defendant company.

A LORD DENNING, M.R.: We give leave to appeal in this case.

There was an agreement in writing on Nov. 10, 1965, whereby the defendants a film-producing company, Harrison Marks Productions, Ltd., engaged the plaintiff Mr. Burnside and a Mr. Templeton to write the script for a film which they proposed to call "Double Shadow". The defendants agreed to pay the sum of £1,000 to Mr. Burnside and Mr. Templeton jointly. When the script was delivered, the film company said that it was not good enough for them, and refused to pay the £1,000. Thereupon the plaintiff brought an action alone, by himself, against the defendant. He put in a statement of claim on his own behalf; But the defendants objected. They said that it was a joint contract. They relied on the rule that where a promise is made to two persons jointly, they should both be before the court. The plaintiff's solicitors tried to get Mr. Templeton to join as a co-plaintiff. They wrote to him for his consent. He lives in Virginia. He said: "after having seen the statement of claim, I see no reason to associate myself with this action against the defendants." So his consent was not forthcoming. Thereupon the plaintiff sought to join Mr. Templeton as a defendant. Mr. Templeton did not himself object to being joined as a defendant; but the film company objected. They said that the joinder ought not to be allowed. Their reason was that the plaintiff had not offered Mr. Templeton an indemnity against costs. They relied on the case of Johnson v. Stephens and Carter, Ltd., (1). The judge upheld their objection and refused to allow Mr. Templeton to be joined as a defendant.

I think that the judge's decision proceeds on a misunderstanding of Johnson v. Stephens and Carter, Ltd., (1). That case shows that, when a promise is made to two persons jointly, then one of them cannot ordinarily require the other to join as plaintiff, and cannot add him as a defendant, unless he offers him an indemnity against costs. This, however, is a rule made for the protection of the joint contractor whom it is sought to add as plaintiff or defendant. It is not made for the benefit of the other contracting party who is the defendant to the action. He cannot insist on the indemnity or the offer of it: for it is no concern of his. All that he can require is that both the persons, with whom he made his contract, are before the court. So long as they are both there, even if one is a defendant, he cannot complain; and they are both present in this case, Mr. Burnside as plaintiff and Mr. Templeton as a defendant.

The defendant company suggested that they might be prejudiced because they had a counterclaim against the two of them: and that they should both be plaintiffs for that purpose. I do not think that that is necessary. They can make their counterclaim against Mr. Burnside as plaintiff, and against Mr. Templeton by making him a party to it. The very object of making Mr. Templeton a party is to ensure that all matters arising out of the joint contract can be dealt with once and for all.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and give leave for Mr. Templeton to be added as a defendant; I would also give leave for the consequential amendments, shown in red on the statement of claim to be made.

RUSSELL, L.J.: I agree.

CUMMING-BRUCE, J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed.

I Solicitors: M. A. Jacobs & Sons (for the plaintiff); Berger, Oliver & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CHATSWORTH INVESTMENTS, LTD. v. AMOCO (U.K.), LTD. AND OTHERS.

(MEYERS BROS. PARKING SYSTEM (LANCASHIRE), LTD. and MEYERS BROS. PARKING SYSTEM, LTD. Third Parties).

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Cross, J.), February 20, March 12, 25, 1968.]

Practice—Third party procedure—Notice—Setting aside—Specific performance action on agreement for sub-lease for twenty-one years of part of land on which plaintiffs were erecting multi-storey car park and filling station—Subsequent agreement by defendants for underlease to third parties of multi-storey car park—Defendants issued third party notice for specific performance of agreement for underlease to third parties—Whether relief claimed against third parties substantially the same as relief claimed by plaintiffs against the defendants—Whether third party notice should be set aside—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1 (1) (b).

In 1963 the plaintiffs, who were negotiating the grant to themselves of a ninety-nine year building lease at Blackpool, entered into an agreement with the defendants for a sub-lease to them of part of the land to be comprised in the building lease, the part being that on which the plaintiffs were building a multi-storey car park and filling station. The date for commencement of the sub-lease was left blank in this agreement, and no such date was entered therein subsequently. In November, 1964, the premises having been erected, the defendants took possession of the land. By an agreement made in March, 1965, the defendants agreed with the third parties that they would operate the car park and would take an underlease thereof for twenty-one years less the last three days. The date for commencement of this underlease was not specified, save as being a day in 1965. The third parties took possession of the car park under this agreement. In June, 1966, the lease that the plaintiffs had been negotiating was granted to them; the land demised included the car park and filling station. The plaintiffs tendered a draft sub-lease to the defendants; in this the date of commencement of the term was specified as Feb. 22, 1965. The defendants having refused to execute it, the plaintiffs in 1967 sued them for specific performance, alternatively for a declaration that the defendants were tenants from year to year. The defendants pleaded that no date for commencement of the sub-lease had been agreed. They issued a third party notice claiming specific performance of the agreement of March, 1965, by the third parties, who were unwilling to take an underlease of the car park; the defendants alleged that the date of commencement of the underlease to the third parties was the date of the commencement of the sub-lease to the defendants, the third parties having been aware (so it was alleged) of the terms of the agreement of July, 1963. On application by the plaintiffs to strike out the third party notice, the third parties supporting the application and undertaking not to challenge in any subsequent proceedings against them by the defendants for specific performance of the agreement of March, 1965, any decision given in the plaintiffs' action on the enforceability of the agreement of July, 1963,

Held: assuming that the relief claimed by the defendants against the third parties was connected with the subject-matter of the plaintiff's action, for the purposes of r. 1 (1) (b) of R.S.C., Ord. 16*, yet in the present case the * R.S.C., Ord. 16, so far as material, provides:

"1 (1) Where in any action a defendant who has entered an appearance—(a) claims against a person not already a party to the action any contribution or indemnity; or (b) claims against such a person any relief or remedy relating to or connected with the original subject-matter of the action and substantially the same as some relief or remedy claimed by the plaintiff; or (c) requires that any question or issue relating to or connected with the original subject-matter of the

- A relief claimed against the third parties was not substantially the same as that claimed by the plaintiffs against the defendants and accordingly the third party proceedings were not justified under r. 1 (1) (b); moreover, even if the third party proceedings had been maintainable under r. 1 (1) (b) the court would not, as a matter of discretion, have allowed the question of the enforceability of the agreement of March, 1965, to be tried in the plaintiff's action which related to the agreement of July 1963 (see p. 295, letters D and G, and p. 295, letter I, to p. 296, letter A, post).

Re Burford ([1932] 2 Ch. 122) applied.

Standard Securities, Ltd. v. Hubbard ([1967] 2 All E.R. 622) distinguished.

[As to claims against a third party, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 445, para. 838; and for cases on the subject, see 50 DIGEST (Repl.) 515, 516, 1869, 1870.]

Cases referred to:

Burford, Re, Burford v. Clifford, [1932] 2 Ch. 122; 101 L.J.Ch. 321; 147 L.T. 185; 50 Digest (Repl.) 524, 1944.

Standard Securities, Ltd. v. Hubbard, [1967] 2 All E.R. 622; [1967] Ch. 1056; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 214.

D Procedure Summons.

This was an application in an action begun by writ issued on Nov. 8, 1967, by the plaintiffs, Chatsworth Investments, Ltd., against the defendants, Amoco (U.K.), Ltd., by which the plaintiffs claimed specific performance of an agreement under seal made on July 4, 1963, and damages in lieu of or in addition to specific performance; or, alternatively, a declaration that the defendants were tenants to the plaintiffs of the plot of land referred to in the agreement under a tenancy from year to year at a yearly rent of £17,500 which tenancy had not been determined. The application, which is the subject of this report, was made by the plaintiffs by summons dated Jan. 18, 1968, for an order that a third party notice dated Dec. 4, 1967, should be set aside. The third party notice was issued by the defendants claiming against the third parties that, by an agreement dated Mar. 24, 1965, between three parties, of whom the defendants were the first parties and the third parties (Meyers Bros. Parking System (Lancashire), Ltd.)

[Continued from foot of p. 288.]

action should be determined not only as between the plaintiff and the defendant but also as between either or both of them and a person not already a party to the action; then, subject to para. (2), the defendant may issue a notice... (in this order referred to as a third party notice), containing a statement of the nature of the claim made against him and, as the case may be, either of the nature and grounds of the claim made by him or of the question or issue required to be determined...

"4 (1) If the third party enters an appearance, the defendant who issued the third party notice must, by summons to be served on all the other parties to the action, apply to the court for directions... (3) On an application for directions under this rule the court may—(a) if the liability of the third party to the defendant who issued the third party notice is established on the hearing, order such judgment as the nature of the case may require to be entered against the third party in favour of the defendant; or (b) order any claim, question or issue stated in the third party notice to be tried in such manner as the court may direct; or (c) dismiss the application and terminate the proceedings on the third party notice; and may do so either before or after any judgment in the action has been signed by the plaintiff against the defendant. (4) On an application for directions under this rule the court may give the third party leave to defend the action, either alone or jointly with any defendant, upon such terms as may be just, or to appear at the trial and to take such part therein as may be just, and generally may make such orders and give such directions as appear to the court proper for having the rights and liabilities of the parties most conveniently determined and enforced and as to the extent to which the third party is to be bound by any judgment or decision in the action..."

"6 Proceedings on a third party notice may, at any stage of the proceedings be set aside by the court."

were parties of the second part, the defendants had agreed to grant and the the third parties had agreed to take a lease of a car park on the plot of land. The second company named as third parties in the title of this report, Meyers Bros. Parking System, Ltd., were sureties under the agreement of Mar. 24, 1965. The following statement of fact is summarised from the judgment of Cross, J.

In 1963 the plaintiffs were negotiating with Blackpool Corporation for the grant of a building lease for ninety-nine years of certain land in the borough. On July 4, 1963, before the building lease was granted, an agreement under seal was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants providing for the grant by the plaintiffs to the defendants of a lease for twenty-one years of part of the land in question on which the plaintiffs were erecting a multi-storey car park and a filling station. Clause 1 of this agreement provided that the plaintiffs should on the plot of land situate at the junction of Rigby Road and Central Drive, Blackpool, erect premises comprising a multi-storey car park, showrooms and petrol filling and service station in manner mentioned in cl. 1 and cl. 2 thereof. Clause 3 provided that the erection and completion of the premises and the grant of the underlease thereafter referred to should be conditional on the plaintiffs having first obtained all necessary permissions consents licences and approvals and all labour and materials to enable the plaintiffs lawfully so to do.

Clause 4 provided that as from the date on which the plaintiffs' architects should certify to the defendants that the premises had been erected and completed in accordance with the plans referred to in cl. 2 thereof and until the underlease thereafter referred to should be actually granted and taken up in accordance with cl. 5 thereof (which said interim period was thereafter called "the licence period") the defendants should be at liberty to enter on the said premises but as licensees only and whether or not the defendants so entered the said premises the defendants should be liable as from the commencement of the licence period to the end of the licence period for the payment to the plaintiffs of a licence rent equal in the aggregate to and payable in the same manner as the rents reserved by the underlease; that such occupation by the defendants as licensees should be deemed to be subject to the same exceptions and reservations covenants and conditions and other provisions as were contained in the form of underlease annexed thereto so far as they were applicable thereto and not inconsistent therewith so that the plaintiffs should have all the remedies which would be incident to the relationship of landlord and tenant but nothing in this clause contained should vary or affect the application of cl. 5 and cl. 9 thereof respectively; that any money paid for licence rent aforesaid should be reckoned as part payment of any rent that would otherwise be due under the said underlease in respect of the same period. Clause 5 provided that consequent on the issue of the plaintiffs' architects' completion certificate the plaintiffs would grant or cause to be executed an underlease (and the defendants would accept the same and execute a counterpart thereof) of the premises. Clause 6 provided that the underlease should be for a term "commencing on the . . . day of . . . 196- . . ." and should run for twenty-one years and should be in the form annexed thereto with such modification (if any) as any variations in the stages of the plaintiffs' development plans or the interest of the parties thereto or other circumstances might render necessary and agreed to between the parties thereto. No actual date of commencement of the said term of twenty-one years was inserted in the space provided for in cl. 6. In the habendum of the form of draft underlease referred to in cl. 6 of the said agreement space was provided for the date of commencement of the term to be inserted, but no actual date therefor was inserted therein. On July 4, 1963, in a letter accompanying the said agreement, the plaintiffs' solicitors wrote to the defendants' solicitors saying that they would let the defendants' solicitors know, in due course, the date to be inserted in cl. 6. The defendants' solicitors replied acknowledging receipt and saying that they awaited hearing further in due course.

- A On or before Nov. 22, 1964, the premises were erected and completed in accordance with the plans referred to in cl. 2 of the said agreement and on or before that date the defendants took possession of the plot of land and of the said premises and from the said date the defendants began to pay and the plaintiffs to accept annual payments of licence rent at the rate of £17,500 as provided for in cl. 4 of the agreement.
- B The defendants alleged that by an agreement in writing dated Mar. 24, 1965, and made between the defendants of the first part, the third parties of the second part and the other company, Meyers Bros. Parking System, Ltd., of the third part, after reciting (a) that the defendants held the plot of land under the agreement of July 4, 1963, (b) that a multi-storey car park and petrol filling and service station and other buildings had been or were in the course of being erected on the said plot of land and (c) that the defendants had agreed to grant and the third parties had agreed to take a lease of certain premises on the plot, viz., the car park (hereinafter called "the premises") being more particularly described in the form of lease attached thereto on the terms and conditions hereinafter and in the lease appearing, the defendants and the third parties agreed as follows. By cl. 1 that the third parties should as soon as reasonably possible after the date thereof enter into the premises with full vacant possession and commence to carry on the business of multi-storey car park operators in a satisfactory and efficient manner. By cl. 2 thereof that until the lease should have been granted or was due to be granted the third parties should be deemed to be licensees of the defendants and that until the lease was actually granted and taken up should be liable for the payment to the defendants in advance of a licence rent equivalent to the rents reserved by the lease and that any money paid for licence rent should be reckoned as part payment of any rent that would otherwise be due under the said lease in respect of the same period. By cl. 3 that the defendants should grant and that the third parties should accept and execute and that Meyers Bros. Parking System, Ltd. should execute a counterpart of the lease of the premises within one month of the date on which the lease referred to in the agreement dated July 4, 1963, should have been granted by the plaintiffs to the defendants. By cl. 5 Meyers Bros. Parking System, Ltd. in consideration of the defendants entering into that agreement thereby covenanted undertook and agreed with the defendants that the third parties should duly perform and observe all the covenants stipulations and agreements on the part of the tenant thereinbefore contained and that in case of default in performance or observance of the covenants stipulations and agreements or any of them as aforesaid Meyers Bros. Parking System, Ltd. should pay and make good to the defendants on demand all losses damages costs and expenses thereby arising or incurred by the defendants.
- C
- D
- E
- F
- G

- The draft lease referred to in cl. 3 of the agreement of Mar. 24, 1965, provided as follows. In cl. 1 (2) that the term "the head leases" should mean the lease granted by the lord mayor, aldermen and burgesses of the borough of Blackpool to the plaintiffs and the lease granted by the plaintiffs to the defendants. In cl. 2 that the defendants should demise to the third parties all that multi-storey car park on the upper floors of the building situate at the junction of Rigby Road with Central Drive, Blackpool, for the term of twenty-one years less the last three days thereof commencing on a day in 1965 which was not specified at
- H
- I the rents therein provided.

On or about Mar. 24, 1965, the third parties took possession of the premises.

By a lease under seal made June 24, 1966, between the corporation of Blackpool of the one part and the plaintiffs of the other part certain property, including the plot of land and the premises, the subject of the agreement of July 4, 1963, was demised to the plaintiffs by the corporation of Blackpool for the term of ninety-nine years beginning on Jan. 18, 1965, at the rents and subject to the covenants therein mentioned. On or about June 28, 1966, the plaintiffs' solicitors delivered to the defendants' solicitors a further draft underlease for approval by the defendants' solicitors. In the habendum in the draft the term was expressed to be a term of twenty-one years commencing on Feb. 22, 1965. A

The plaintiffs alleged that their solicitors and the solicitors for the defendants agreed the terms of the underlease with the commencing date of Feb. 22, 1965, but that the defendants refused to execute it, the reason being that the third parties found it unremunerative and were unwilling on their part to take up the sub-lease. There would have been no difficulty about a petrol station, which was a remunerative operation. B

On Nov. 8, 1967, the writ in this action was issued by the plaintiffs and the statement of claim was delivered on Nov. 21, 1967. It included, among other paragraphs, the following:

" 10. The effect of the [agreement of July 4, 1963], having regard so far as may be necessary to the circumstances particulars whereof are given in para. 11 hereof and taken altogether with or as varied by or having regard to the letters, events and matters referred to in paras. 3 to 9 hereof and to all the correspondence and drafts passing between the plaintiffs' solicitors and the defendants' solicitors from Apr. 25, 1963, until Nov. 23, 1966, was that the plaintiffs and the defendants were bound respectively to grant and to accept and execute a counterpart of an underlease of the plot of land and the premises in the form of underlease and counterpart engrossed by the plaintiffs' solicitors as mentioned in para. 9 hereof, that is to say, for a term of twenty-one years commencing on Feb. 22, 1965. C

" 11. The circumstances referred to in para. 10 hereof were (i) The plaintiffs and the defendants at all material times on and prior to July 4, 1963, knew: (a) that the plaintiffs were in negotiation with the [borough council] for the grant to the plaintiffs of a head lease of land and premises comprising the plot of land and the premises; (b) that the date of commencement of the term proposed to be granted by the said proposed head lease had not been agreed between the plaintiffs and the [borough council]; (c) that any modifications in the form of the proposed head lease would have to be reflected in the draft underlease submitted to the defendants' solicitors by the plaintiffs' solicitors under cover of their letter dated Apr. 25, 1963 [and the plaintiffs said that they would refer at the trial to the relevant letters and draft]. D

" (2) In the draft agreement for lease submitted to the defendants' solicitors by the plaintiffs' solicitors under cover of their [ . . . letter] the words ' same date as head lease ' appeared in the left-hand margin against the first line of para. 7 (re-numbered 6 in green ink) of the said draft. E

" 12. The plaintiffs have at all times since June 24, 1966, been ready, willing and able and hereby offer to grant to the defendants an underlease of the plot of land and the premises for a term of twenty-one years computed as commencing on Feb. 22, 1965, and further upon the terms and conditions of the engrossment referred to in para. 9 hereof but the defendants wrongly refuse to accept the same and execute a counterpart thereof. F

" 14. If notwithstanding the plaintiffs' contentions the defendants are not bound to accept and execute a counterpart of an underlease in manner in para. 10 hereof mentioned or at all the defendants are by virtue of the matters alleged in para. 5 hereof tenants to the plaintiffs of the plot of land and the premises under a tenancy from year to year at the yearly rent of £17,500 which said tenancy has not been determined." G

The plaintiffs claimed relief as summarised at p. 289, letter E, ante. H

On Dec. 4, 1967, the defendants issued a third party notice against the third parties* and the other company, Meyers Bros. Parking System, Ltd., the sureties I * Under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1, for which see footnote * p. 288, letter I, and p. 289, letter G, ante. The third party notice was issued before serving defence, so leave was not necessary (r. 1 (2)).

A in the agreement of Mar. 24, 1965. By that notice the defendants claimed against the third parties and sureties specific performance of the agreement of Mar. 24, 1965; and the defendants claimed also damages, further or other relief and costs.

By their defence served on Dec. 5, 1967, the defendants pleaded (by para. 5)—

B “The defendants will say that the alleged agreement on the part of the plaintiffs to grant and on the part of the defendants to accept an underlease is void by reason of the absence of any agreement either express or implied as to the commencement date of the said underlease.”

On Jan. 2, 1968, the defendants issued a summons for third party directions. On Jan. 18, 1968, the plaintiffs issued a counter-summons asking for an order* that the third party notice of Dec. 4, 1967, and all proceedings therein be set aside and terminated and that the application of the defendants for third party directions be dismissed; this is the summons raising the question here reported.

C In compliance with third party directions given on Jan. 30, 1968, by Master NEAVE the defendants, on Feb. 1, 1968, delivered the statement of claim against the third parties and sureties, which, among other matters alleged:

D “7. The third parties were at all material times aware of the agreement dated July 4, 1963, referred to in para. 1 of the plaintiffs’ statement of claim herein and the terms of the draft lease annexed thereto.

“8. Upon the true construction of the [agreement dated Mar. 24, 1965] and in the foregoing circumstances the date of commencement of the lease therein referred to is the date of commencement of the lease to be granted by the plaintiffs to the defendants of the plot of land.

E “9. The defendants have at all times been ready, willing and able to complete such last-mentioned agreement but the third parties have refused to complete the same.

“10. By reason of such refusal the defendants have suffered damage.”

F By para. 11 the defendants put forward an alternative claim that the third parties were tenants under a tenancy from year to year.

The plaintiffs’ summons for dismissal of the third party notice was adjourned to CROSS, J.

The cases noted below† were cited during the argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment.

G V. G. Wellings for the plaintiffs.

Charles Sparrow, Q.C., and Gavin Lightman for the defendants.

E. A. Machin for the third parties.

H CROSS, J., having referred to the facts, to the agreements of July 4, 1963, and Mar. 24, 1965, to the lease of June 24, 1966, to the pleadings and the third party notice, and to R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1, continued: The first question which I have to decide is whether this case falls within R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1 (1) (b), (1). The original subject matter of this action is, plainly, the construction and effect of the agreement of July 4, 1963, between the plaintiffs and the defendants. Is the relief claimed by the defendants against the third parties, namely, specific performance of the agreement between them of Mar. 24, 1965, (a) connected with or related to the agreement of July 4, 1963, and (b) is that relief substantially

I the same as the relief claimed by the plaintiffs, that is, specific performance of the earlier agreement?

I find it difficult to say that the relief claimed by the defendants against the * Viz., an order under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 6, for which see footnote *, p. 289, ante.

† Benecke v. Frost, (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 419; Swansea Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Duncan, (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 644; Schneider v. Batt & Co., (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 701; Baxter v. France (No. 2), [1895] 1 Q.B. 591; Barclays Bank v. Tom, [1922] All E.R. Rep. 279; [1923] 1 K.B. 221.

(1) For R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1 (1) (b), see footnote *, p. 288, ante.

third parties is not connected with or related to the relief claimed by the plaintiffs against the defendants, because it is a precondition of the success of the claim of the defendants against the third parties that the plaintiffs' claim against them should succeed. I think that this conclusion is supported by the judgment of PENNYCUICK, J., in Standard Securities, Ltd. v. Hubbard (2). In that case by an agreement dated Jan. 24, 1957 ("the 1957 agreement"), the third party, Telesurance, Ltd., agreed to sell 35 and 37, Fitzroy Street, St. Pancras, London, to the defendants, Lafayette Ronald Hubbard and Sidney John Parkhouse. By a subsequent agreement dated May 29, 1963 ("the 1963 agreement"), the defendants agreed to sell the same property to Rathbone Holdings, Ltd., the agreement providing that the sale and purchase should be completed on May 29, 1966, time being of the essence of the contract. On Feb. 7, 1964, Rathbone Holdings, Ltd. assigned all its rights and interests under the 1963 agreement to the plaintiffs, Standard Securities, Ltd. The 1963 agreement not having been completed by the stipulated date, the plaintiffs issued a writ on July 4, 1966, claiming specific performance. The 1957 agreement remained uncompleted and on Sept. 21, 1966, the defendant Hubbard issued a third party notice, pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1 (1), addressed to the third party claiming specific performance of the 1957 agreement. PENNYCUICK, J., said (3):

"The question then is, are the claims for relief or remedy, claimed against the third party, related to or connected with the agreement dated May 29, 1963? The relief or remedy claimed against the third party is specific performance of the agreement dated Jan. 24, 1957, for the sale of the same premises, that agreement being still uncompleted. Now is that relief or remedy connected with the agreement of May 29, 1963? It seems to me that on any ordinary use of language it is so related and connected. In the first place, the defendants will be able to perform the agreement of May 29, 1963, only if they are first able to obtain the relief or remedy which they seek against the third party, viz., performance of the agreement dated Jan. 24, 1957. In the second place, in the ordinary course of conveyancing the two agreements for sale will be completed by a single instrument, in which the three parties concerned will join and the execution of that instrument will be one of the matters which will be secured by the order for specific performance in the present action. It is, of course, possible to complete the two agreements by separate conveyances, but that would be contrary to conveyancing practice; it would also involve payment of double stamp duty. In those circumstances, I find it impossible to say that the relief or remedy against the third party does not relate to or is not connected with the subject-matter of the present action."

It is true that in that case the plaintiff was himself interested in the relief claimed by the defendant against the third party, because unless the defendant was entitled to specific performance against the third party he could not get specific performance against the defendant. Here, on the other hand, the plaintiffs are not in the least interested in the rights of the defendants against the third parties. The exact parallel to that case would be if the third parties here were suing the defendants for specific performance of the agreement of Mar. 24, 1965, and the defendants were seeking to bring in the plaintiffs as third parties to obtain specific performance of the earlier agreement of July 4, 1963. But it would, to my mind, be very odd if a claim for specific performance of the earlier agreement would be related to or connected with the question of the enforceability of the later agreement while a claim for specific performance of the later agreement was not related to or connected with the question of the enforceability of the earlier agreement.

Assuming that be so, however, can it be said that the relief claimed by the

(2) [1967] 2 All E.R. 622; [1967] Ch. 1056.

(3) [1967] 2 All E.R. at p. 624; [1967] Ch. at p. 1060.

A defendants against the third parties is substantially the same as the relief claimed by the plaintiffs against the defendants? It cannot be enough that the same sort of relief, for example, specific performance, is being claimed in both cases. Something more than that must be required.

B Re Burford, Burford v. Clifford (4) which was a decision of the Court of Appeal, indicates to my mind that what is envisaged by this rule is a case where substantially the same facts will have to be gone over in order to ascertain both liabilities and where the success or failure of the plaintiff against the defendant will be substantially decisive of the claim by the defendant against the third party. I think that emerges from passages in the judgment of LORD HANWORTH, M.R. (5), and LAWRENCE, L.J. (6) and ROMER, L.J. (7). If that be the right way to look at it, it does not appear to me that the relief claimed by the C defendants against the third parties is substantially the same as the relief claimed by the plaintiffs against the defendants. It is true that they are both claims for specific performance of agreements for leases; it is also true that the premises comprised in the later agreement are part of the premises comprised in the former agreement: and it is also true, as I have held, that the two claims are connected, because it is a precondition of the defendants' success in their D claim against the third parties that the plaintiffs' claim against them succeeds. The third parties, however, had nothing to do with the making of the earlier agreement, or the plaintiffs with the making of the later agreement; and the success of the plaintiffs against the defendants will not necessarily entail the consequence that the defendants succeed against the third parties.

E It may, perhaps, be said that this conclusion runs counter to something else that PENNYCUICK, J. said in a later passage in his judgment in Standard Securities, Ltd. v. Hubbard (8). After holding that the relief claimed by the third parties was connected with the original subject matter of the action, he went on to say:

F "It has not been suggested that the relief or remedy sought by the third party proceedings is not substantially the same in any relevant sense as the relief or remedy claimed by the plaintiff against the defendants. In each case the party concerned is claiming specific performance of a contract for the sale of this property."

G In that connexion, there are three matters to be borne in mind. In the first place, the report of the case gives a very inadequate account of the facts. Secondly, that particular point was not argued. Thirdly, Re Burford (4) was not cited. So, without suggesting that the actual decision in that case was wrong, I feel entitled to hold that in this case the relief claimed against the third party was not substantially the same as the relief claimed against the defendants.

H Turning now to R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1 (1) (c), the defendants did not in fact ask in their notice as an alternative that the question of the enforceability of the earlier agreement should be determined not only as between themselves and the plaintiffs but also as between themselves and the third parties. The third parties have said, however, that they will undertake not to challenge in any proceedings brought against them by the defendants for specific performance of the later agreement any decision given in the existing action as to the enforceability of the earlier agreement as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, even I though they were not parties and were not brought in as parties to the original action.

Finally, looking at this case from the broader standpoint of the exercise of discretion, I think that even if, contrary to my opinion, it falls within the wording of R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 1 (1) (b) it would not be right to allow the question of the enforceability of the later agreement to be tried in the same

(4) [1932] 2 Ch. 122.

(5) [1932] 2 Ch. at p. 138.

(6) [1932] 2 Ch. at pp. 140, 141.

(7) [1932] 2 Ch. at pp. 142, 143.

(8) [1967] 2 All E.R. at p. 624; [1967] Ch. at p. 1060.

action as the question of the enforceability of the earlier agreement. To do so would be a hardship to the plaintiffs and the third parties, since it might add considerably to the costs and the time spent and there would not, as far as I can see, be any compensating advantage. The third parties know nothing of the circumstances in which the earlier agreement was entered into and if they give the undertaking to which I have referred, that is all that the defendants can reasonably require. It is true that any separate action brought by the defendants against the third parties for specific performance of the later agreement could not be consolidated with the existing action because the plaintiffs would be different. The third parties, stated, however, through counsel, that they would be prepared to agree that the second action should be listed immediately after the first and be brought on before the same judge if the defendants should so desire.

Third party notice set aside.

Solicitors: Lawrence Jones & Co. agents for Maughan & Hall, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, (for the plaintiffs); Ashurst Morris, Crisp & Co. (for the defendants); Charles Caplin & Co. (for the third parties).

[Reported by JACQUELINE METCALFE, Barrister-at-law.]

R. v. WALLETT.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Winn, L.J., and Ashworth, J.), March 11, 1968.]

Criminal Law—Intention—Proof—Subjective test—Inference from evidence—Summing-up containing passages reminiscent of objective test—Conviction of murder—Substitution of conviction of manslaughter—Criminal Justice Act 1967 (c. 80), s. 8.

The applicant, aged sixteen, was charged with murder of a girl of about the same age. Her death resulted from pressure of the applicant's left arm on her throat as he approached her with sexual intent. The summing-up at the trial contained passages which correctly put to the jury the subjective question of intent in accordance with s. 8* of the Criminal Justice Act 1967, but other passages tended to re-state the objective test in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith†. The final direction in particular put to the jury the question of intent on the part of the applicant to kill or to do grievous bodily harm "knowing quite well" that he "was doing something which any ordinary person like himself would know" would do the girl serious bodily harm. On application for leave to appeal against conviction of murder,

Held: the conviction could not be allowed to stand, and there would be substituted a conviction of manslaughter on the basis that the applicant must have appreciated that some risk of harm to the girl was involved in what he did but without imputing to him intent to do her grievous bodily harm (see p. 299, letters F and G, post).

Appeal allowed.

[Editorial Note. Section 8 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967, which came into operation on Oct. 1, 1967, follows a draft suggested by the Law Commission in 1967, in their report on Imputed Criminal Intent, made after examination of the legal position consequent on the decision in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith ([1960] 3 All E.R. 161). In considering the present decision regard should be had not only to the exclusion by s. 8 (a) of what has been called the objective test of criminal intent, but also, and perhaps particularly, to the final words of para. (b) "drawing such inferences from the evidence as appear proper

* Section 8 is set out at p. 297, letter I, post.

† [1960] 3 All E.R. 161.

A in the circumstances". The question remains open, therefore, what inferences are proper to be drawn; and of this the present decision affords an illustration.

As to the proof or disproof, of mens rea, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 282, 283, paras. 522, 524; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 32, 33, 40-47, 500-503, 4819-4852.

B As to the crime of manslaughter, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 715, para. 1371; and as to the jurisdiction to convict of manslaughter on indictment for murder, see ibid., 726, para. 1391, and see also now s. 6 (2) of the Criminal Law Act 1967, operative as from Jan. 1, 1968, in respect of arraignments on or after that day (s. 12 (1)).]

Case referred to:

C Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith, [1960] 3 All E.R. 161; [1961] A.C. 290; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 546; 124 J.P. 473; 44 Cr. App. Rep. 261; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 428, 1245a.

Application for leave to appeal.

D This was an application by David Wallett by notice dated Nov. 23, 1967, for leave to appeal against his conviction on a charge of murder. The appellant was convicted at his trial on Oct. 27, 1967, at the Hallamshire Autumn Assize held at Sheffield before THESIGER, J., and a jury, and he was sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure in such place and for such period as the Secretary of State might direct. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court.

P. M. Taylor, Q.C., and M. Walker for the applicant.

C. R. Dean, Q.C., and R. A. R. Stroyan for the Crown.

E WINN, L.J., delivered the following judgment of the court: The applicant was convicted on Oct. 27, 1967, at Sheffield Assizes of murder and sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure, as directed by the Secretary of State. He is only sixteen years of age, and the girl whom he admittedly killed, that fact not being in dispute at the trial, was about the same age. They met at a dance, and after becoming friendly they went ultimately into a field, where, F they having been seen lying side by side, the girl's body was later found.

It is unnecessary to go into the sad and rather shocking details of the incident, but it is necessary to say this much about it. The girl died not because she had been manually strangled by deliberate pressure by one or two hands on her throat, but because, on the medical evidence, she had received a constricting force on the front of her throat for a minimum period of twenty-five seconds G which as the result of the pressure applied on the spine and the nervous system had caused her heart to stop and indeed caused a haemorrhage which revealed itself by blood coming from her mouth. The other necessary factual details to be mentioned are that the girl was at the time of the incident in the field menstruating; she was wearing a sanitary towel, and when her body was found that sanitary towel was detached from and separated from her body. The H back crutch of her panties and the front crutch of another garment were both damaged, and there was evidence that considerable force must have been applied to produce the damage which those garments had suffered.

The trial took place on Oct. 27, 1967. On Oct. 1 the Criminal Justice Act 1967 had become law. Section 8 of that Act provides that:

I "A court or jury, in determining whether a person has committed an offence, (a) shall not be bound in law to infer that he intended or foresaw a result of his actions by reason only of its being a natural and probable consequence of those actions; but (b) shall decide whether he did intend or foresee that result by reference to all the evidence, drawing such inferences from the evidence as appear proper in the circumstances."

It is quite clear that the learned trial judge had the provisions of that section in mind, since his summing-up did not follow the pattern which would have been revealed had he been directing the jury as to the law pronounced by their lordships' house in the case of Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith (1). He did not speak of presumptions; he did not speak of the only test being what is sometimes called the objective test; but regrettably, as the court thinks, there were more than a few traces of that former law still revealed in what the learned judge did say to the jury on the one essential issue for their decision, namely, whether the prosecution had made the jury feel sure that the applicant actually himself intended to cause death or grievous bodily harm to this girl.

It is really not necessary to go through all the passages or refer to all the passages in which the judge referred to the decision which the jury must make as to intent for that purpose. In some passages the judge put the points quite impeccably, and no doubt as to their meaning could have been left in the jury's mind. For example he said:

"It is for you to make up your minds what is the true conclusion as to his intent to be drawn from the evidence. It is your responsibility, not mine."

That is directly in accordance with the provisions of the section to which I have referred.

Previously the learned judge had stressed actual intent; and there are other passages. On those I shall not dwell beyond saying that the first of the references would seem on the wording rather to be reminiscent of and to reproduce the law altered by the Act of 1967 than the law since that Act was passed, for the learned judge said:

"The [applicant] is guilty of murder if he did on purpose what he, as an ordinary young fellow, stupid though he may be, dull he may be at scholastic things, but as an ordinary young fellow of sixteen must have known was likely to do really serious bodily harm."

A little later he came very much nearer to the 1967 law and to the subjective test which Parliament has now prescribed, because he was directing that the jury should give consideration to a number of matters such as conduct before, conduct afterwards, statements before, statements afterwards, demeanour in the witness box, all of which were logically relevant to the issue whether the applicant himself, judging him as the jury saw him, summing him up as the jury must sum him up from the point of view of stupidity, backwardness, inability to appreciate what others of his age would appreciate, in the jury's judgment intend to do serious bodily harm. For example the judge said: "If you feel sure that a man meant to do something that he must have known" and so on, that is murder; the emphasis in that passage is the correct emphasis.

Unfortunately, however, the point was not fully understood by the jury. How that came about it is impossible to know, but the fact is that after listening to the summing-up, which for the most part concentrated on this question of intent, the jury retired for thirty-eight minutes, and then they came back and said: "Could we have a directive on what constitutes murder and what constitutes manslaughter?" The learned judge proceeded to endeavour to help them with that difficulty, which was of course the essential difficulty, the essential problem in this case. I do not propose to read in extenso, but, having referred to the hypothetical case of running someone down or shaking someone off a motor car, the judge said:

"Provided the jury find [that an accused is] certain to realise [that he] is bound to do really serious bodily harm by that conduct", then that constitutes the proof of intent. He proceeded to go from that to the more specifically relevant question of what the jury had to say to themselves in the instant case. He used these expressions "I leave out part in order that the meaning may be clearer—

(1) [1960] 3 All E.R. 161; [1961] A.C. 290.

A "The position is if you did find [the applicant] intended either to kill . . . or, as the prosecution suggest, really to do serious bodily harm."

If the learned judge had paused there, that would have been a very helpful direction at the crucial point of time just before the jury were to retire again and continue their deliberations, but having said that much he added:

B "Knowing quite well at the time that he was doing something [which] any ordinary person like himself would know was doing her really serious bodily harm."

The question is: do those words of surplus usage blur, confuse or render inept the earlier correct direction, so as to make this court feel that it would be unsatisfactory and unsafe to allow this verdict of guilty of murder to stand? As I have made, I trust, clear, the learned judge in those last words, which are the last words that he spoke to the jury, was still at least leaving within their mental contemplation the idea that one applied the test of what an ordinary person of sane mind would foresee or know was likely to be the result of an action, when approaching, for final decision, the vital question: what did this particular man at the time in fact intend? The jury went out again for another fifty-seven

D minutes, almost an hour, and when they came back they were still not in agreement, so the question arose of the acceptance of a majority verdict. Rightly enough the learned judge was not prepared to take a majority verdict at that time, so he sent them away again over the midday adjournment, having provided for them to be refreshed, and told them that he would take their verdict on his return to the court after that adjournment. When it was taken, it was a verdict of guilty of murder by eleven votes to one, a majority verdict. That, of course, is a factor which this court can properly have in mind when deciding what the result of this appeal should be.

The court has come to the conclusion that it would not be satisfactory or safe to allow this verdict to stand. On the other hand, it was never disputed at the trial by counsel for the defence, nor by counsel for the applicant before this court, who has been helpful and frank as always, that a proper verdict would be a verdict of manslaughter. It would not be of the type of manslaughter which the learned judge defined to the jury, when dealing with the topic of manslaughter—it is unnecessary to say anything about that definition—but manslaughter of the comparatively straightforward kind, which this obviously was, of applying pressure without intending to do grievous bodily harm, but in circumstances in which it should have been appreciated by an ordinary person, and by the applicant, that some risk of harm was involved in what he did, and that that was the cause of death through his left arm being laid across and pressed on the girl's throat, as he was approaching her with sexual intent.

G Leave to appeal granted. Conviction of murder quashed. Conviction of manslaughter substituted (2).

H Solicitors: Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills, agents for Frank Allen & Co., Doncaster (for the applicant); Director of Public Prosecutions.

[Reported by NAEEM BUTT, Barrister-at-Law.]

I

(2) Sentence to detention for life in such place and on such conditions as the Secretary of State should direct was imposed; see Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act 1965 s. 1 (5) substituting a new sub-s. (1) in s. 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR DEFENCE v. WARN.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Reid, Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest, Lord Hodson, Lord Upjohn and Lord Wilberforce), April 4, May 2, 1968.]

Court-Martial—Civil offence—Consent of Director of Public Prosecutions required for institution of proceedings—Gross indecency between males one of whom under twenty-one years of age—“Proceedings”—Consent of Director of Public Prosecutions not obtained—Whether naval court-martial a nullity—Sexual Offences Act, 1956 (3 & 4 Eliz. 2 c. 69), s. 13—Naval Discipline Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2 c. 53), s. 42—Sexual Offences Act 1967 (c. 60), s. 8, s. 10 (2).

Court-Martial—Civil offence—Time limit—Sexual offences between males—Limitation of time under s. 7 of Act of 1967 applicable to proceedings under Naval Discipline Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2 c. 53), s. 42—Sexual Offences Act 1967 (c. 60), s. 7 (2).

By s. 8* of the Sexual Offences Act 1967, which received the royal assent and came into force on July 27, 1967, no “proceedings” were to be instituted, except by or with the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions, against any man for the offence of gross indecency with another man, if either of the men at the time of the commission of the offence was under the age of twenty-one. By letter dated July 31, 1967, a naval court-martial was convened for the trial of the respondent and another man on a charge under s. 42† of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957, and s. 13‡ of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956, of committing on July 15, 1967, an act of gross indecency with another man. The consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions was not obtained. The respondent was twenty-five years of age and the other man concerned was eighteen. On appeal from an order quashing the conviction of the respondent,

Held: the conviction had been rightly quashed because—

(i) s. 8 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 applied to proceedings by court-martial (see p. 301, letter I, and p. 302, letter H, post), and

(ii) the proceedings under s. 42 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957, were for the offence of gross indecency, viz., for the acts in respect of which the offence was charged, not for the commission of the civil offence as a matter distinct from those acts (see p. 303, letter C, post), and

(iii) the requirement of consent enacted by s. 8 of the Act of 1967 was for the protection of an accused person under the age of twenty-one, and the fact that it was procedural in nature did not prevent it being mandatory and did not entitle the court-martial to proceed when it was not observed (see p. 303, letter E, post).

R. v. Jennings ([1956] 3 All E.R. 429) not applied.

Per CURIAM: s. 7 (2) of the Act of 1967, which limits the time within which proceedings may be taken to twelve months from the offence, applies notwithstanding the longer period of three years provided by s. 52 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957 (see p. 303, letter H, and p. 304, letter A, post).

Decision of the COURTS-MARTIAL APPEAL COURT (sub nom. R. v. Warn, ([1968] 1 All E.R. 339) affirmed.

[As to the liability of a person subject to naval discipline for civil offences, see 33 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 947, para. 1586; and for the comparable liability of persons subject to military or air force law, see ibid., 1026, para. 1711, text and note (r).

For the Sexual Offences Act, 1956, s. 13, see 36 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 223.

* Section 8, so far as material, is set out at p. 301, letter I, post.

† Section 42 (1), so far as material, is set out at p. 302, letter C, post.

‡ Section 13 is set out at p. 302, letter B, post.

A For the Naval Discipline Act, 1957, s. 42, s. 52, see 37 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 970, 979.]

Cases referred to:

Cox v. Army Council, [1962] 1 All E.R. 880; [1963] A.C. 48; [1962] 2 W.L.R. 950; 46 Cr. App. Rep. 258; 39 Digest (Repl.) 411, 294.

B R. v. Jennings, [1956] 3 All E.R. 429; [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1497; 40 Cr. App. Rep. 147; 39 Digest (Repl.) 425, 358.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by leave from a judgment of the Courts-Martial Appeal Court (WINN, L.J., FENTON ATKINSON and BROWNE, JJ.) given on Nov. 20, 1967, and reported [1968] 1 All E.R. 339, allowing an appeal by the respondent, Peter John Warn, a naval rating, in respect of his conviction by a naval court-martial on Aug. 15, 1967, on two charges that on July 15, 1967, he committed an act of gross indecency with one Mullin, a man. The charges were laid under s. 42 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957 and s. 13 of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956. Mullin was eighteen years old at the time of the alleged offence and the respondent was twenty-five. The proceedings were instituted without the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions, which, however, was required by s. 8 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 (which came into force on July 27, 1967) since Mullin was under the age of twenty-one years.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Arthur Irvine, Q.C.) and A. F. Waley for the Crown.

J. B. R. Hazan and A. C. L. Lewisohn for the respondent.

Their lordships took time for consideration.

E May 2. The following opinions were delivered.

LORD REID: My Lords, for the reasons given by my noble and learned friend, LORD HODSON, I would dismiss this appeal.

LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST: My Lords, I am in agreement with the opinion of my noble and learned friend, LORD HODSON, and, for the reasons he gives, I would dismiss this appeal.

LORD HODSON: My Lords, this is an appeal from the Courts-Martial Appeal Court (1) which quashed a conviction by Naval Court-Martial sitting at the Naval Barracks at Portsmouth on Aug. 15, 1967. The respondent (2) was convicted on two charges of gross indecency with another male and sentenced to be dismissed from Her Majesty's service, to be kept in detention for the term of six calendar months and to suffer the consequential penalties involved. The other male person concerned, who was serving with the respondent, was under the age of twenty-one years. The question involved in the appeal is whether the leave of the Director of Public Prosecutions is necessary to institute proceedings for gross indecency contrary to s. 42 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957, and s. 13 of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956, at the trial by court-martial when one of the men was at the time of the commission of the offences under the age of twenty-one. The court-martial was convened by circumstantial letter dated July 31, 1967, and was held on Aug. 15, 1967. On July 27, 1967, the Sexual Offences Act 1967 had come into force. Section 8 of this Act provides:

I "No proceedings shall be instituted except by or with the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions against any man for the offence of . . . gross indecency with another man, . . . where either of those men was at the time of its commission under the age of twenty-one . . ."

No consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions was ever obtained.

There is no apparent reason to restrict the meaning of the word "proceedings" to proceedings taken in the civil courts of this country. The word "proceedings" is applicable to courts-martial, as is shown by the Naval Discipline

(1) [1968] 1 All E.R. 339.

(2) I.e., the respondent to the appeal, Peter John Warn.

Act, 1957; see s. 48 and the succeeding sections of that Act which deal expressly with courts-martial and with "Proceedings of courts-martial". This is the title which embraces s. 58 to s. 66 (inclusive) of the Act of 1937, a group of sections which deals with the procedure and practice of courts-martial. The charges, as has been stated, were laid against the respondent under s. 42 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957, and s. 13 of the Sexual Offences Act, 1956. The latter section (s. 13 of the Act of 1956) provides:

"It is an offence for a man to commit an act of gross indecency with another man, whether in public or private, or to be a party to the commission by a man of an act of gross indecency with another man, or to procure the commission by a man of an act of gross indecency with another man."

Section 42 (1) of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957, so far as material provides:

"Every person subject to this Act who is guilty of any civil offence (that is to say any act or omission which is punishable by the law of England or would be so punishable if committed in England) shall be liable on conviction under this Act . . . (c) (i) to such punishment (being a punishment authorised by this Act) as could be imposed on the offender on conviction before a civil court of the like offence committed in England, or (ii) to dismissal with disgrace from Her Majesty's Service or any less punishment authorised by this Act."

When one turns to the Sexual Offences Act 1967 itself, there are clear indications that court-martial proceedings were contemplated thereby. Section 1 of the Act of 1967 amends the law relating to homosexual acts in private declaring that there shall be no offence provided that the parties consent thereto and have attained the age of twenty-one years. Section 1 (5) provides, so far as material:

"Subsection (1) of this section shall not prevent an act from being an offence (other than a civil offence) under any provision of . . . the Naval Discipline Act, 1957."

This reference presumes the liability to dismissal with disgrace from Her Majesty's Service or any less punishment authorised by the Naval Discipline Act, 1957, in the case of every person who is guilty of any disgraceful conduct of an indecent kind.

There is an express reference to a court-martial in s. 10 (2) of the Sexual Offences Act 1967, which deals with past offences. This subsection provides:

"Except as provided by the next following subsection, this Act shall not have effect in relation to any act which is, or apart from this Act would be, an offence where the defendant to an indictment for that offence has been committed for trial before the passing of this Act or, as the case may be, a court-martial for the trial of that offence has been ordered or convened before the passing of this Act."

These statutory references are sufficient to negative such a narrow construction of s. 8 as to exclude proceedings by court-martial from the scope of s. 8 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967. If proceedings did not include trial by court-martial, it is difficult to see the purpose of any reference to courts-martial in the Act of 1967.

Accepting the difficulty presented by the statutory provisions to which I have referred, the main argument presented by the Solicitor-General was to the following effect. Section 42 of the Act of 1957 being an offence-creating section, one has to examine with care the wording of that section so as to ascertain what its subject-matter truly is. The offence against naval discipline is the offence of "committing a civil offence" not the civil offence itself. If this is the correct construction then the offence against naval discipline is not caught by the language of s. 8 of the Act of 1967, which accordingly has no application. This argument is not supported by reference to other sections of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957, where the word "offence" is plainly used to denote the act in respect

A of which the person is charged as an offence in itself apart from naval discipline. See, for example, s. 48 (1) of the Act of 1957 which deals with the trial and punishment by court-martial of any offence under Part 1 of the Act of 1957; see also s. 129 (1) which debars civil courts from retrying persons acquitted or convicted of an offence for the same offence.

B Applying the language of s. 8 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967, it is for the offence of gross indecency that the proceedings can only be taken with the consent of the Director when either of the men concerned is under twenty-one and it was for that offence that the court-martial proceedings were taken. The words of LORD RADCLIFFE in Cox v. Army Council (3) (also a court-martial case) are of assistance. He said: "The occurrence that is said to constitute the offence is always the actual occurrence itself . . ." These words are, I think, of general application and are certainly applicable here, for I can see no justification for distinguishing an offence from the commission of the offence in any of the sections to which attention has been drawn.

I should mention an argument which was not pressed strongly although not, I think, abandoned by the Solicitor-General. It was said that s. 8 of the Act of 1967 is a procedural section and consequently, in spite of the fact that the procedure provided by that section was not carried out, the court-martial was entitled to act. This proposition depends on the authority of the case of R. v. Jennings (4), a decision of the Courts-Martial Appeal Court, which has found its place as an authority for the proposition stated above in manuals of service law (5). It was on the authority of that decision that the judge advocate in this case advised the court-martial to overrule the objection made on behalf of the respondent and to proceed with the trial. In my opinion, the proposition is too widely stated. Procedural sections are usually mandatory and there is nothing which points to the contrary in this case. Procedural provisions are, as here, often inserted for the protection of accused persons. There may, for example, be doubt as to the age of one of the men concerned, and it is wrong to brush the condition precedent on one side on the bare ground that it is procedural in its nature. I think that it is right to express the opinion, therefore, that R. v. Jennings (4), in so far as it rests on the ground stated above, ought not to be supported. It is right to say, however, that the decision itself may be supported on other grounds, for the provision of notice as required by the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 21 could not be complied with in Germany where the offence was committed and the considerations which arose in the case of Cox v. Army Council (6) are relevant. Difficult situations arise where English law is translated so to speak for the purpose of fitting into occurrences which take place outside the jurisdiction. These considerations do not arise here and I have only mentioned R. v. Jennings (4) in order, if possible, to avoid misunderstanding in the future.

It is, I think, necessary to add, although it is a question that does not affect your lordships' decision, that it appears clear for the reasons which have already been given as to the general application of the Sexual Offences Act 1967, that s. 7 (2) of that Act (7), which appoints a time limit of twelve months from the date of the offence beyond which no proceedings may be taken, applies notwithstanding the

(3) [1962] 1 All E.R. 880 at p. 884; [1963] A.C. 48 at p. 71.

(4) [1956] 3 All E.R. 429.

I (5) See MANUAL OF MILITARY LAW, Part 1 (11th Edn. 1965), p. 356, note (c); and MANUAL OF AIR FORCE LAW (4th Edn. 1964), Vol. 1, p. 376, note 9.

(6) [1962] 1 All E.R. 880; [1963] A.C. 48.

(7) Section 7 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 provides: "(1) No proceedings for an offence to which this section applies shall be commenced after the expiration of twelve months from the date on which that offence was committed. (2) This section applies to—(a) any offence under s. 13 of the Act of 1956 (gross indecency between men); (b) any offence under s. 32 of that Act (soliciting and importuning by men for immoral purposes) where the immoral purpose is the commission of a homosexual act; (c) any offence of buggery by a man with another man not amounting to an assault on that other man and not being an offence by a man with a boy under the age of sixteen."

longer period of three years provided by s. 52 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1957. A
For these reasons I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD UPJOHN: My Lords, I agree with the opinion already expressed by my noble and learned friend, LORD HODSON, and for the reasons that he gives would dismiss the appeal.

LORD WILBERFORCE: My Lords, for the reasons given by my noble and learned friend, LORD HODSON, I would dismiss this appeal. B

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor; V. J. Lissack (for the respondent).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] C

---

NOTE. D

CONWAY v. RIMMER AND ANOTHER.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Reid, Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest, Lord Hodson, Lord Pearce and Lord Upjohn), May 2, 1968.] E

Discovery—Production of documents—Privilege—Crown privilege—Documents produced for the inspection of the court—Documents to be made available in the litigation.

Further consideration.

Consequent on the decision reported at [1968] 1 All E.R. 874 the documents ordered to be produced were produced to the House of Lords for inspection. F

LORD REID: My Lords, I have examined the five documents with which this case is concerned. I can find nothing in any of them the disclosure of which would, in my view, be in any way prejudicial to the proper administration of the Cheshire Constabulary or to the general public interest. I am therefore of the opinion that they must be made available in this litigation. G

Paragraph 3 of the order of Mr. Registrar CUNLIFFE, dated Nov. 24, 1966, restored (1).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] H

---

(1) This was an order that the five documents should be produced for inspection to the plaintiff. I

BANDAR PROPERTY HOLDINGS, LTD.
v. J. S. DARWEN (SUCCESSORS), LTD.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Roskill, J.), February 6, 1968.]

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Covenant—Insurance—Repayment by lessee of amount of fire insurance premiums paid by lessor—Lessor to insure with reputable insurers—Whether implied term against lessor imposing unnecessarily heavy burden on lessees in respect of premium.

By the terms of a twenty-year underlease, the lessors agreed to keep the demised premises insured at "some insurance office or offices of repute, or at Lloyds", and the lessees agreed to repay to the lessors the amount of the premiums involved in such insurance. The lessors, through a firm of Lloyds' brokers, placed the cover with two companies for a total premium for twelve months of £1,134 14s. 2d. Two months later the lessees obtained through another firm of Lloyds' brokers a quotation for identical cover at Lloyds at a premium of £946 6s. 6d.

Held: a term that the lessors should place the insurance so as not to impose an unnecessarily heavy burden on the lessees would not be implied, and accordingly the lessors were entitled to recover the whole of the amount paid by them by way of premium to the two companies for the insurance arranged by the first Lloyds' brokers (see p. 309, letter A, post).

Leather Cloth Co. v. Brassey ((1862), 3 Giff. 474) considered.

[As to covenants in leases to insure, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 617-620, para. 1315-1319; and for cases on the subject, see 31 DIGEST (Repl.) 400-406, 5295-5353.]

Case referred to:

Leather Cloth Co. v. Brassey, (1862), 3 Giff. 474; 6 L.T. 63; 66 E.R. 496; 30 Digest (Repl.) 519, 1594.

Action.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs, Bandar Property Holdings, Ltd., entitled to the reversion on an underlease of Red Star Wharf, Bethnal Green, for the recovery from the defendants, J. S. Darwen (Successors), Ltd., the underlessees, money alleged to be due to the plaintiffs by way of reimbursement of insurance premiums paid by the plaintiffs as underlessors, such liability being alleged to arise under a covenant for repayment in the underlease.

E. J. Prince for the plaintiffs, the lessors.

R. J. Southan for the defendants, the lessees.

ROSKILL, J.: By an underlease dated Feb. 9, 1965, the lessors there mentioned, a company called Industrial and Commercial Properties, Ltd., leased to the lessees, a company called S. Guiterman & Co., Ltd., certain property known as Red Star Wharf in Red Star Wharf Road, Bethnal Green, for a period of twenty years beginning on June 24, 1964, at an annual rental of £10,500. The lessors' reversion on the underlease has devolved on the present plaintiffs, Bandar Property Holdings, Ltd., and the lessees' title to the underlease has devolved on the present defendants, J. S. Darwen (Successors), Ltd. The matter comes before the court for the determination of a very short question—namely, the extent of the lessees' liability to indemnify the lessors in respect of certain insurance premiums paid by the lessors in accordance with certain provisions in that underlease.

I can, I think, go straight to the relevant clauses in the underlease. The first is cl. 2 (1) (b), which provides that the lessee will "repay to the lessor such sum as the lessor shall from time to time pay or be called on to pay by way of premium or premiums for insuring the demised premises in accordance with the provisions of cl. 3 (1) hereof and against such other risks in respect of the demised premises as the lessor may from time to time require and payment of such sums shall be made on the quarter day for payment of rent next following the date on which each such premium becomes payable by the lessor and the proportion of the current premium to the next renewal date shall be paid on the quarter day next following the date hereof."

The next relevant provision is in cl. 2 (6), which, so far as is relevant, contains the following provision:

"The lessee will at the lessee's own cost put and from time to time and at all times during the said term keep in good and substantial repair and condition and cleanse maintain and amend the whole of the demised premises including but without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing the fixtures and fittings therein."

Then follows reference to certain other things that have got to be kept in good repair. The covenant ends thus:

"(excepting such damage by fire or in peacetime by aircraft or articles dropped therefrom the reinstatement whereof is covered by the insurance referred to in cl. 3 (1) hereof)."

I turn next to cl. 3 (1), which reads thus:

"The lessor hereby covenants with the lessee as follows: (1) that the lessor will at all times during the said term (unless such insurance shall be vitiated by any act neglect default or omission of the lessee) insure and keep insured the demised premises against loss or damage by fire and in peacetime by aircraft and articles dropped therefrom in some insurance office or offices of repute or at Lloyds in the full reinstatement cost thereof including insurance to cover architects' surveyors' and legal fees and two years' loss of rent the provisions of the policy to be such as the insurers shall require and will whenever reasonably required produce to the lessee a certificate from the insurers stating for what sums the demised premises are insured and to what date the premium has been paid and in case of destruction or damage by fire or in peacetime by aircraft or articles dropped therefrom the lessor will as soon as practicable cause all money received in respect of such insurance (other than in respect of rent and fees) to be forthwith laid out in reinstating the demised premises."

What happened was this. On Mar. 25, 1966, a well known firm of Lloyd's brokers, Messrs. Halford, Henry and Montefiore placed the cover as to fifty per cent. with the Yorkshire Insurance Co., Ltd., and as to fifty per cent. with the Sun Insurance Office, Ltd., for £200,000 on building, £20,000 on architects' and surveyors' fees, that being ten per cent. of the sum insured on the building, and £21,000 for two years' rent, the total sum insured being £241,000. The cover there arranged by those Lloyds' brokers was expressed in the cover note to be for twelve months from 4 p.m. on Dec. 31, 1965. The premium appears on the second page of that cover note. The total premium was £1,134 14s. 2d. That, in passing I would mention, was the sum claimed by the lessors in this action against the lessees. It seems that the lessors shortly afterwards changed their insurance brokers; but nothing turns on that. On May 26, 1966, that is some two months after the cover effected through Messrs. Halford, Henry & Montefiore, the lessees consulted other Lloyds' brokers and obtained a quotation for what would appear to have been an identical, or virtually identical, cover at Lloyds at a premium of £946 6s. 6d., instead of the premium to which I have just referred, of £1,134 14s. 2d. The difference between the two is £188 7s. 8d.

The lessees for some time declined to pay any part of the premium for the cover arranged through Messrs. Halford, Henry & Montefiore; but ultimately liability was accepted except for the sum now nominally in dispute in this action which is that difference; for the lessees now contend that it is unjust and wrong on the true

A construction of the underlease that they should be called on to pay to the lessors the whole amount which the former as lessors have disbursed over the relevant period for insurance premiums, when an identical cover could have been obtained at Lloyds for nearly £200 less.

The question which I have to decide is whether, on the true construction of the covenants which I have read, the lessors are right in their contention that the whole amount is recoverable, or the lessees are right in their contention that an implication of a restrictive nature has to be made into the relevant covenants which, in effect, obliges the lessees to pay no more to the lessors in respect of insurance premiums than the sum for which the lessors could have obtained the requisite cover at Lloyds. I said a moment ago that the sum of £188 7s. 8d. was the sum nominally involved. The underlease, as I have already stated was for a period of twenty years; and therefore the sum in fact involved under the underlease is twenty times the figure which I have just mentioned. There is, however, a more substantial sum of money at stake, inasmuch as I was told by counsel that the total period involved is about forty years and not twenty years, a further and consecutive underlease having been executed. In reality, there is a substantial sum involved in this dispute between the parties, which I have been told is a friendly dispute, both parties wanting the true position determined by the court in view of the fact that the current lease and the later lease have nearly forty years to run.

As I have already indicated, the defence is that the lessors are not entitled to the larger sum which they claim, and the ground on which the lessees rely is pleaded, with admirable succinctness, if I may say so, in para. 6 of the defence, in these terms:

"The [lessees] admit that the [lessors] have arranged insurance for the said premises at a premium of £1,134 14s. 2d. but will contend that on the true construction of the said underlease there is to be implied a duty on the party of the lessor to act reasonably in placing such insurance so as not to impose an unnecessarily heavy burden on the [lessees]."

F The question for determination is, on the true construction of cl. 3 (1) has any restrictive implication of that nature to be made? If it has, then the lessees are right; if it has not, then the lessors are right.

The principles on which the courts have proceeded for at least the last seventy-five years in determining whether or not terms which have not been expressed in contracts are to be implied therein, have been stated again and again in cases of the highest authority. I do not propose to refer to those cases, all of which are well-known. It is axiomatic that a court will not imply a term which has not been expressed merely because, had the parties thought of the possibility of expressing that term it would have been reasonable for them to have done so. Before a term which has not been expressed can be implied it has got to be shown not only that it would be reasonable to make that implication, but that it is necessary in order to make the contract work that such a term should be implied. It has sometimes been expressed as "necessary for the business efficacy of the contract"; and it is against that well-known and established principle that I approach the determination of the crucial question in this case.

I As a matter of language, at least, there is no restriction on the lessors' freedom of choice; indeed, the covenant in cl. 3 (1) provides in terms that they shall insure and keep insured the premises "in some insurance office or offices of repute or at Lloyds in the full reinstatement cost". At first sight, at least, those words "in some insurance office or offices of repute or at Lloyds" would seem to give to the lessors a wholly unfettered option which means of effecting the insurance they adopt. Shall they go to one insurance office? Shall they go to more than one insurance office? Or shall they go to Lloyds? Moreover, the parties have not seen fit expressly to fetter that option which the covenant gives to the lessors. It has been stressed—and it is, of course, right—that the lessees have to pay; and it is urged on me that, because the lessees have to pay, it is quite unreasonable to read this covenant as free from all restrictions in favour of the lessees. It is said that this covenant, by necessary implication, obliges the lessors to avoid imposing what the learned pleader has expressed as an "unnecessarily heavy burden on the lessee". It was not suggested that the whole test here was financial; it was not suggested that the lessor was bound of necessity to obtain the cheapest rate. It was suggested, however, that he had to look at all the circumstances and determine which course he was going to pursue in the light of that which would avoid an "unnecessarily heavy burden upon the lessee", and therefore could be argued to be the most reasonable for him to adopt.

I said a moment ago that the question: "what is reasonable?" is not the test. It has to be necessary to make the contract work as well as reasonable before the court will make any implication of the kind contended for on behalf of the lessees. Reliance was placed by counsel for the lessees on a decision of SIR JOHN STUART, V.-C., in Leather Cloth Co. v. Bressey (1). The facts of this case were unusual and intensely complicated, and the report is of some length. What appears to have happened, taking the matter as briefly as I can, was this. The plaintiffs, the Leather Cloth Co., were seeking to restrain a man named Bressey before SIR JOHN STUART, V.-C., from pursuing an action brought by Bressey on a covenant to which the plaintiffs, the Leather Cloth Co., were a party, under which Bressey claimed that the Leather Cloth Co. were liable to repay to Bressey certain sums disbursed by Bressey in respect of fire insurance premiums. Bressey had acquired his title by way of an underlease made in 1855, the headlease having been granted some five years earlier, in 1850. The Leather Cloth Co. came into the picture in 1857 when they, by an assignment from Bressey and others, acquired the benefit of the underlease which was entered into in 1855. Both the head lease and the underlease contained certain covenants requiring the head lessee in the one case, and the lessor in the other, to effect certain insurances and to keep those insurances in being. A man named Pratt failed for some time to effect the insurances which were necessary to comply with the provisions of the leases; but subsequently it seems that he disbursed a sum of money of no less than £528 in respect of an insurance which did not comply with his or the lessee's contractual obligation, and then sought through Bressey to recover that amount from the Leather Cloth Co.

SIR JOHN STUART, V.-C., restraining Bressey from pursuing his action at common law, said in a passage relied on by counsel for the lessees (2):

"But it is said that, according to the terms of the contract in that part of the lease in which the plaintiffs bind themselves to pay the expense of insurance, the words are large and general, and are words which import an obligation upon the plaintiffs to repay any sums which may be paid by the defendant. Pratt, in respect of insurance, whether unnecessarily paid or not; and it is sought to read these words as an absolute covenant, and without reference to other parts of the deed in which insurance is referred to. That is a mode of construction which it is impossible for the court to adopt. The instrument must be looked at as a whole, and it seems to me entirely contrary to the true construction of the words to say that this part of it imposes upon the plaintiffs the obligation to pay any sum that Pratt might choose to pay for insurance, although that insurance might be useless with regard to another covenant in the original deed, which proscribes another mode in which insurance must be effected."

It must be remembered that the words which SIR JOHN STUART, V.-C., used had reference to the particular facts of a particular case, and to a particular covenant. It is true that he did say that the obligation on the Leather Cloth Co. was not an unfettered and unrestricted obligation.

Counsel for the lessees has sought to apply those words to the covenant in the

(1) (1862), 3 Giff. 474.

(2) (1862), 3 Giff. at pp. 493, 494.

A present case; but with respect, I do not get any help from that decision. The question which I have to decide turns on the construction of this covenant in this particular underlease; and, for the reasons which I have endeavoured to give, and applying very well established legal principles, I can see no justification for making the implication sought, since no implication is necessary and the bargain between the parties works perfectly sensibly without making any implication.

B In the result, therefore, the defence fails, and there must be judgment for the lessors.

Judgment accordingly (3).

Solicitors: Fremont & Co. (for the lessors): Forsythe, Kerman & Phillips (for the lessees).

[Reported by MARY COLTON, Barrister-at-Law.]

ZIMMER ORTHOPAEDIC, LTD. v. ZIMMER MANUFACTURING CO.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Cross, J.), February 27, March 25, 1968.]

Practice—Want of prosecution—Dismissal of action—Delay—Inordinate delay without excuse—Plaintiffs in default in not proceeding with action—Counterclaim by defendants—Defendants took no step to secure that counterclaim should be heard—No statutory time bar applicable—Defendants put on terms of abandoning counterclaim if they were to obtain order dismissing plaintiffs' action—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 1 (4).

The plaintiffs began an action against the defendants, an American company, in January, 1961, claiming injunctions to restrain alleged infringement of the plaintiffs' trade mark and alleged passing-off, and other relief. A statement of claim was delivered in November, 1961, the defence and counterclaim was delivered in March, 1962. The plaintiffs were a company formed after the defendants' goods had been sold in England by (as the defendants alleged) an agent of the defendants, and by their counterclaim the defendants alleged, in effect, that the plaintiffs' trade mark was registered improperly or held on trust for the defendants. Pleadings were amended in 1962, and a reply and defence to counterclaim was delivered in April, 1963, in which month the plaintiffs also requested further particulars of the defendants' counterclaim. No summons for directions was taken out. On Jan. 1, 1964, a new R.S.C., Ord. 24, r. 2 (1) came into force, requiring litigants to make discovery by exchanging lists of documents within fourteen days after pleadings were closed. No list of documents was served by either party. In January, 1968, the defendants applied for an order that the action be dismissed, and on Jan. 30, 1968, the plaintiffs applied for an order that the counterclaim be dismissed. There had been negotiations for a settlement, but it was conceded that there had been inordinate delay for which the plaintiffs advanced no excuse; and the defendants had done nothing to secure that the counterclaim should be heard as soon as possible.

Held: in the circumstances, having regard to the existence of the counterclaim, to the nature of the issues and to the factors that each party had, in the view of the other, been acting unlawfully for twelve years and that no statutory time bar was applicable, the defendants would be granted an order dismissing the plaintiffs' action only on terms of submitting to a similar order dismissing their counterclaim (see p. 312, letter I, post).

Allen v. Sir Alfred McAlpine & Sons, Ltd. ([1968] 1 All E.R. 543) considered.

[As to the dismissal of actions for want of prosecution, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 410, 411, para. 771; and for cases concerning the taking out

(3) Having regard to payment having been made into court on leave to defend being granted, and to an agreed set-off, the order made was for payment of £784 14s. 2d. out of court to the plaintiff lessors.

of summons for directions and its purpose, see DIGEST (PRACTICE) (Repl.) 604, 605, 2256-2262, and for a case on the imposition of terms on an application for leave to discontinue an action see ibid., 572, 2058.]

Case referred to:

Allen v. Sir Alfred McAlpine & Sons, Ltd., [1968] 1 All E.R. 543; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 366.

Procedure Summonses.

These were applications by the defendants, Zimmer Manufacturing Co., an American company, by a summons dated Jan. 11, 1968, under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 1 (4) for an order that the plaintiffs' statement of claim in the action should be dismissed for failure to take out the summons for directions, and a cross-summons, issued on Jan. 30, 1968, by the plaintiffs, Zimmer Orthopaedic, Ltd., for a like order that the defendants' counterclaim be dismissed on the ground that they had taken no step in the counterclaim since 1962. The case noted below* was cited in argument in addition to the one referred to in the judgment.

S. Gratwick for the defendants.

W. Aldous for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

Mar. 25. CROSS, J., read the following judgment: By their writ in this action issued on Jan. 10, 1961, and amended on Oct. 2, 1962, the plaintiffs, Zimmer Orthopaedic, Ltd., an English company, claim against the defendants, Zimmer Manufacturing Company, an American company, first, injunctions to restrain the defendants from infringing their trade mark No. 674,834, registered in November, 1948, in respect of orthopaedic goods and from advertising, offering for sale or selling under the trade mark or under the name "Zimmer" orthopaedic goods not of the plaintiffs' manufacture; secondly, damages or an account of profits; and, thirdly, delivery up of all infringing material or all material calculated to lead to passing-off. The statement of claim was delivered on Nov. 14, 1961, and amended on Oct. 8, 1962, a defence and counterclaim were delivered on Mar. 21, 1962, and amended on Dec. 12, 1962, and a reply and defence to counterclaim were delivered on Apr. 27, 1963.

The pleadings are somewhat complicated. Stated in its barest essentials, the position which they disclose is this. The defendants were founded as long ago as 1927 by one Justin O. Zimmer, from whom they take their name, and for some years at least before 1940 one Franklin Isaac Saemann acted as their agent or distributor over here for the sale of orthopaedic appliances made by them and imported into this country under the name "Zimmer". In 1947 Saemann formed the plaintiffs, Zimmer Orthopaedic, Ltd., and on Nov. 24, 1948, the plaintiffs obtained registration of the trade mark "Zimmer" in respect of orthopaedic appliances.

There is an acute conflict between the parties as to the relations which obtained between the defendants and Saemann between 1940 and 1947. The plaintiffs contend that during that period Saemann obtained from the defendants the exclusive right to sell orthopaedic goods in this country on his own account under the name "Zimmer", that he was entitled to cause the plaintiffs to be registered as proprietors of the trade mark "Zimmer", and that the defendants, by selling orthopaedic goods under that name in this country, are guilty of infringement of trade mark and passing-off. The defendants, on the other hand, say that Saemann never acquired any right to trade on his own account under the name "Zimmer", and that the plaintiffs' trade mark was either registered improperly or alternatively held by the plaintiffs as trustees for the defendants. The counterclaim claims relief to give effect to their contentions. The resolution of the dispute will turn in part on the construction of an agreement made on Aug. 31, 1946, between the defendants and Saemann, but I understand that there may be oral evidence as well.

* Fitzpatrick v. Batger & Co., Ltd., [1967] 2 All E.R. 657.

A I now resume the history of this action. On Apr. 27, 1963, the plaintiffs delivered a request for some further and better particulars of the amended defence and counterclaim which the defendants did not supply. Order 30, r. 1 (1) of the Rules of the Supreme Court then in force provided that a plaintiff should within seven days of the close of pleadings take out a summons for directions; but no summons for directions has ever been taken out by the plaintiffs in this action. On Jan. 1, 1964, new rules of the Supreme Court came into force in place of the existing rules without any transitional provisions applicable to pending actions. Order 24, r. 2 (1), now provides that the parties to an action between whom pleadings are closed must make discovery by exchanging lists of documents and accordingly each party must, within fourteen days after the pleadings in the action are deemed to be closed as between him and any other party, make and serve on that party a list of the documents which are or may have been in his possession, custody or power relating to any matter in question between them in the action. Order 25, which replaces the old Ord. 30, extends this time in which the plaintiffs must take out a summons for directions to one month from the close of the pleadings. In this action, neither party has served a list of documents on the other.

D On Jan. 11, 1968, the defendants took out a summons under Ord. 25, r. 1 (4), asking for an order that the statement of claim be struck out and the action dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to take out a summons for directions and on Jan. 30, 1968, the plaintiffs took out a summons for an order that the counterclaim be dismissed on the ground that the defendants had taken no step in the counterclaim since its delivery with the defence on Dec. 12, 1962.

E Both summonses are before me. I was told that in the summer of 1967 there were negotiations for a settlement which led to nothing, but, apart from this, so far as I know, the parties did not communicate with each other in any way from Apr. 27, 1963, when the plaintiffs delivered their request for particulars, until the defendants issued their summons on Jan. 11, 1968, nearly five years later.

F In the cases reported as Allen v. Sir Alfred McAlpine & Sons, Ltd. (1) the Court of Appeal has recently given some guidance to judges of first instance as to the principles on which the discretion to dismiss an action for want of prosecution should be exercised. In those cases, it was in fact the plaintiffs' solicitors and not the plaintiffs themselves who were to blame for the delays which had occurred, whilst in this case, so far as I know, it was the plaintiffs themselves who allowed the action to go to sleep. But what was said by the Court of Appeal is just as applicable to a case where a party himself is to blame as to a case where the fault lies with his solicitor. The essence of the matter, as I understand it, is this. It is for the plaintiff and his legal advisers to get on with the action and to see that it is brought to trial with reasonable despatch. The defendant is normally under no duty to stimulate him into action, and the plaintiff cannot complain that he gave him no warning before applying to have the action dismissed for want of prosecution. But the court will not take the drastic step of dismissing the action unless (a) the delay has been inordinate, (b) there was no excuse for it, and (c) the defendant is likely to be seriously prejudiced by it if the action is allowed to go on.

I In this case it is conceded that the delay has been inordinate and the plaintiffs have put forward no excuse for it. They submit, however, that the position of the defendants is altogether different in this case from that of the defendants in the cases with which the Court of Appeal was concerned. This action certainly has some unusual features which distinguish it from the ordinary run of actions. In the first place, the events in dispute occurred between 1940 and 1947, that is to say, from twenty to thirteen years before the writ was issued. In the second place, the dispute between the parties is not simply whether, as a result of those events, the defendants were entitled to go on selling the goods in question here after 1947 under the name "Zimmer". The question also arises whether the plaintiffs themselves ever became entitled to use the name "Zimmer" for their own account, hence the counterclaim, which is a true cross-action, alleging that, so far from the defendants being in the wrong, it is the plaintiffs who are at fault. Thirdly, having regard to the fact that each side allowed the other to go on acting, as each says that the other did, unlawfully for at least a dozen years makes it possible that the result of the proceedings may be that both the action and the counterclaim will fail and the parties will be left in the position that each can go on trading as it has been trading, however inconvenient that may be to the other.

These peculiar features of this action have to my mind a considerable bearing on the exercise of the discretion whether to dismiss the action. First, even if the action had come on when, but for the plaintiffs' negligence, it would have come on, say in 1964, there might even then have been great difficulty in arriving at the truth so far as it depended on oral as opposed to documentary evidence. It is to my mind doubtful whether the difficulty will be any greater if the action is tried in 1969 than it would have been if it had been tried in 1964, and so it is doubtful whether the defendants will suffer by the action not being dismissed. Secondly, the position of a defendant who is simply defending a claim made against him is, to my mind, very different from that of a defendant who has a cross-claim against the plaintiff arising out of the same events as are to be investigated in the action. If such a defendant really wants his view of the legal position to be established and does not regard his counterclaim simply as a factor which may give the plaintiff pause in deciding whether to press on with the action, then I think that he ought to take active steps to ensure that the case is brought on.

This leads me to consider the cross-summons for dismissal of the counterclaim. Counsel for the plaintiffs relied to some extent in this connexion on the fact that after the new rules came into operation on Jan. 1, 1964, the defendants themselves came to be in default because they did not serve on the plaintiffs a list of relevant documents. I cannot regard that argument as of any weight. The plaintiffs were equally at fault in this respect and—both defaults were—in the circumstances, rather technical since both sides might quite excusably have overlooked the change in the rules. This does not in any way absolve the plaintiffs from their primary obligations to get on with the action by issuing a summons for directions; but, although the plaintiffs are in default and the defendants have not done or failed to do anything which disentitles them to ask to have the action dismissed, the fact that the defendants did nothing to secure that the counterclaim should be heard as soon as possible disentitles them in my judgment from asking for the action to be dismissed and the counterclaim to be left on foot. I am confirmed in this view by the reflection that there is no period of limitation applicable to proceedings of this sort, apart from the period in respect of which damages can be recovered. So that if I dismissed this action and the defendants decided to go on with the counterclaim, the plaintiffs could, so far as I can see, start a fresh action for infringement and passing-off and ask for it to be consolidated with the defendants' action.

All these considerations lead me to think that the defendants in this case are only entitled to an order dismissing the plaintiffs' action for want of prosecution, if they submit to a similar order dismissing the counterclaim. If they wish to press the counterclaim, then they must allow the plaintiffs to proceed with the action, provided, of course, that they now at long last bestir themselves.

Order that defendants not entitled to have action dismissed unless they have their counterclaim dismissed.

Solicitors: Bird & Bird (for the defendants); Woodham Smith, Borradaile & Martin (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by JACQUELINE METCALFE, Barrister-at-Law.]

A METROPOLITAN PROPERTIES CO., LTD.
v. NOBLE AND OTHERS.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Blain, J.J.), March 19, 20, 1968.]

B Rent Restriction—Rent—Determination of fair rent—Cost of services—Management charge in respect of services—Selective employment tax in respect of staff—Rentals of residential staff's flats—Cost of central heating—Whether such management charge and S.E.T. allowable in calculating cost of services—Whether amount allowable in respect of rent of staff flats and of cost of central heating may be reduced below figure of actual cost, if smaller amount appropriate—Whether rent assessment committee bound to inspect staff flats—Rent Act 1965 (c. 95), s. 27, Sch. 3, para. 12.

C A rent assessment committee determined the fair rent of four flats in a block, for which services were provided by residential staff. For this purpose the committee calculated the cost of the services. In computing this cost the committee did not allow a management charge of ten per cent., claimed by the landlords, on the total cost of providing services, which cost amounted, according to the landlords, to £20,243 annually*. The committee also disallowed in their calculation the amount of selective employment tax in respect of the staff providing the services. In computing the amount allowable in respect of rental cost of residential staff flats (the house-keeper's and the engineer's flats) the committee did not allow the actual amount of rent claimed by the landlord (£1,775 per annum) but a smaller amount which they thought appropriate (£1,275 per annum). The committee considered that the central heating provided by the landlords for the tenants' flats was inefficient and that the charge was too high for the service given; they allowed only fifty per cent. of the charge claimed by the landlords. On appeal,

D Held: (i) the committee were wrong in law in holding that nothing should be allowed by way of management charge in respect of services and that selective employment tax was not chargeable to the tenants; accordingly the cases would be remitted to the committee for determination in the light of the following opinions of the court that—

E (a) something by way of management charge was allowable in law in respect of services, though it could be allowed either by percentage or by lump sum (see p. 317, letter I, p. 318, letters B and D, and p. 319, letter A, post).

G Metropolitan Properties Co. (F.G.C.), Ltd. v. Lannon ([1968] 1 All E.R. 354) applied.

(b) selective employment tax should be included in the cost of providing services (see p. 318, letter I, and p. 319, letter A, post).

H (ii) in calculating what, in respect of the cost of the residential staff's flats, should be allowed in the cost of services to be included in assessing the fair rent of tenants, the committee were entitled to allow only such rentals for the residential staff flats as they considered appropriate, though less than the landlords' assessed actual cost of the staff flats; moreover the committee were not bound for this purpose first to inspect the staff flats (see p. 316, letters E and F, post).

I (iii) the committee were entitled to make a deduction from the actual cost of the central heating in view of inefficiency of the heating provided and on the basis that the charge was too high (see p. 316, letter H, post).

Appeal allowed in part.

[As to determinations by rent assessment committees, see SUPPLEMENT to 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) para. 1571b, 5; and for a case on the subject, see 31 DIGEST (Repl.) 676, 7702.

* The items are stated at p. 316, letter I, post.

For the Rent Act 1965, s. 27, s. 28 and Sch. 3, para. 12, see 45 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 843, 844, 866.] A

Cases referred to:

Crofton Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Greater London Rent Assessment Committee, [1967] 2 All E.R. 1103; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 256.

Metropolitan Properties Co. (F.G.C.), Ltd. v. Lannon, [1968] 1 All E.R. 354. B

Appeals.

These were four appeals by the landlords, Metropolitan Properties Co., Ltd. on points of law from the determination by the rent assessment committee on Oct. 11, 1967, of the fair rents for four flats, Nos. 6E, 6G, 8M and 14A, Hyde Park Mansions, Marylebone Road, N.W.1.

The grounds of appeal stated in the notice of appeal in respect of flat No. 6E were that the committee, in assessing the element of rent attributable to services, erred in point of law in that (a) there was no evidence to support their reduction of the cost of central heating by fifty per cent.; (b) they failed to include the cost of selective employment tax in the cost of portage services; (c) they made an arbitrary assessment of the cost of flats provided for the head porter, the resident engineer and the housekeepers instead of assessing a fair rent in respect of each flat and did so without inspecting the flats*, except that of the head porter; and (d) they refused to include a charge for management in the cost of services to the landlords. C

E. A. Bramall for the landlords.

P. A. W. Merriton for the tenants.

A. E. Holdsworth as amicus curiae. D

LORD PARKER, C.J.: These are four appeals on points of law from a decision of a rent assessment committee given on Oct. 11, 1967, in respect of four flats, Nos. 6E, 6G, 8M and 14A, Hyde Park Mansions, Marylebone Road, N.W.1. E

Before dealing with the facts of this case, it is convenient to remind oneself of the legislation and the principles involved. Under the Rent Act 1965, the determination of the fair rent is dealt with in s. 27 (1) which provides: F

"In determining for the purposes of this Act what rent is or would be a fair rent under a regulated tenancy of a dwelling-house regard shall be had, subject to the following provisions of this section, to all the circumstances (other than personal circumstances), and in particular to the age, character and locality of the dwelling-house and to its state of repair." G

Subsections (2) and (3) do not matter for the purposes of this appeal; but s. 28 (1) provides:

"The amount to be registered as the rent of any dwelling-house shall include any sums payable by the tenant to the landlord for the use of furniture or for services, whether or not those sums are separate from the sums payable for the occupation of the dwelling-house or are payable under separate agreements." H

Accordingly, pausing there, there is no statutory obligation on the tribunal to determine the element in the fair rent which is properly included for the use of furniture or services. Having said that, however, it is quite clear that it will be an important ingredient in the fair rent, and is something which the assessment committee should consider. In Metropolitan Properties Co. (F.G.C.), Ltd. v. Lannon (1), WIDGERY, J., in giving what in effect was the judgment of the court, referred to this. He said: I

"Accordingly, I would put it as a very strong recommendation to rent assessment committees, if no higher, that, when the rent is concerned with

* There were five of these flats.

(1) [1968] 1 All E.R. 354 at p. 364.

- A the provision of services, they should endeavour always to give in brief form a statement of the principle on which they have acted. If the landlord, as he usually does, calls evidence of the cost of providing the services, the committee need not adopt that approach, but they must listen to the evidence, and, if they choose not to adopt that approach, it is of the greatest possible value in considering the correctness of their decision if they say
- B why they have not adopted that approach . . .”

I mention that at this stage because the rent assessment committee with which we are concerned, although making their decision before that case of Lannon (2) was reported, have very properly done the very thing which WIDGERY, J., was advocating.

- C Lastly on this matter I would refer to Sch. 3, para. 12 to the Act of 1965, which provides:

“The committee shall make such inquiry, if any, as they think fit and consider any information supplied or representation made to them in pursuance of para. 10 or para. 11 of this schedule and—(a) if it appears to them that the rent registered or confirmed by the rent officer is a fair rent, they shall confirm that rent; (b) if it does not appear to them that that rent is a fair rent, they shall determine a fair rent for the dwelling-house.”

- D Accordingly, it is for the committee to listen to the evidence, to give such weight to it as they think fit, to make such inquiry as they think fit, and finally, as was stated in the case of Crofton Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Greater London Rent Assessment Committee (3), they were entitled to arrive at a conclusion on their own knowledge and experience. It is unnecessary to refer to that case in any detail; it applied to the procedure of rent assessment committees what LORD GODDARD, C.J., had said (4) earlier in respect of furnished rent tribunals.

- E With those preliminary observations, one comes to the facts of this case. Quite generally, the rent assessment committee's approach was in this case to look first at the cost of services. They had before them expert evidence on behalf of the landlords and on behalf of the tenants in regard to the cost of these services. They also had before them a schedule prepared by the landlords purporting to be the actual costs of individual items in those services. That matter was considered in the first instance by the tribunal, and they arrived at definite figures as representing the proper costs of the services in respect of each flat. They then went on to consider fair rent, in the light of those figures for services which they had arrived at. Taking into consideration comparables, and all the circumstances of the case and scarcity value, they came to certain figures which were expressed in this form: flat 6E £570 including £168 for services; flat 6G £650 including £195 for services; flat 8M £690 including £210 for services; and finally flat 14A £390 including £126 for services.

- G The appeals in the present case, which are appeals by the landlords against those determinations to which I have referred, relate to the way in which the assessment committee dealt with the costs of services. Four points are taken and it is convenient in the first instance to deal with the two minor ones raised by the landlords. The first of these minor points concerns the way in which the tribunal dealt with the flats which were occupied by certain members of the resident staff. The schedule that the landlords had prepared provided in respect of a Mr. and Mrs. Robinson, Mr. Robinson being the head porter, a total cost of £1,176 15s. In commenting on that, the tribunal said:

“Though this figure includes the wages, national health and pensions contributions and S.E.T. for the head porter and his wife, an estimated rental of the flat occupied by them (which is not in Hyde Park Mansions) at £650

(2) [1968] 1 All E.R. 354.

(3) [1967] 2 All E.R. 1103.

(4) In R. v. Brighton and Area Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Marine Parade Estate (1936), Ltd., [1950] 2 K.B. 410 at pp. 420, 421.

per annum, rates, gas and electricity, the committee consider that the rental for an appropriate flat for a head porter should be £325."

They accordingly made the appropriate deduction from the figure put forward by the landlords in their schedules. That deduction forms part of the grounds of appeal, but counsel for the landlords quite rightly has in effect discarded this item because it certainly looks as worded as if the tribunal were saying it was unnecessary for the head porter to have a flat worth £650; that the appropriate rental for a head porter's flat would be £325; and as the committee in fact inspected the flat occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Robinson and saw that it was, as it undoubtedly was, a very big one, and also bearing in mind that the tribunal are entitled to exercise their own knowledge and experience, he does not challenge that they were entitled to say that the appropriate rental for a head porter's flat was £325.

There was, however, another item dealing with flats of resident staff in the landlords' schedule, and that was No. 9, housekeeper's and engineer's flats, £2,441 9s. 8d. The committee dealt with that in this way. They said:

"This total is made up of a rent as fixed by the landlord for each of the five flats concerned together with rates, electricity and gas. The rents totalled £1,775 but the committee consider that appropriate rentals should not exceed £1,275", and accordingly they deducted £500.

The way counsel for the landlords puts his point on this matter is: that the tribunal clearly did not accept the witness for the landlords, which, he says, they are of course entitled to do, but, he says, if they are going to fix appropriate rents for these flats by reference to their own knowledge and experience, then they ought to have inspected them and they never did. The answer, as it seems to me, is that they were not the flats which were the subject of the appeal; they were only flats which came into the calculation of the cost of services; there was no obligation on the committee physically to inspect them, and without going through the voluminous evidence in this case, it is quite clear that they had from that evidence a very considerable amount of knowledge of these facts. I am quite unable to say that they were wrong in law in arriving at a figure for the appropriate rentals of the housekeeper's and engineer's flats, saying that they should not exceed a total of £1,275.

The second minor item concerned the cost of central heating. In regard to that, the committee say that they accept the figures put forward by the landlords as the actual cost of the central heating; but they say:

"The committee, however, considered the charge for central heating high in relation to the service provided, and accordingly propose to deduct fifty per cent."

Again, without going through the evidence at the hearing, it is clear to my mind that there was evidence before the committee that whatever the cost of providing this central heating, which incidentally varied from flat to flat, because there were different forms of heating, oil, coke and gas, but whatever the cost, it provided a very inefficient amount of heat for these flats; in some flats there were only two radiators, one of which was in the kitchen, and as it seems to me the committee, assisted by the valuer member and with their knowledge and experience, were fully entitled to make that deduction.

The first of the important points concerned the management charge in respect of the services provided. The landlords' schedule set out a number of items, wages, insurance, staircase lighting, porters' expenses, uniforms, window-cleaning, fire extinguishing, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson, to whom I have already referred, and the housekeeper's and engineer's flats, and the total of those items in the landlords' schedule was some £20,243. The landlords in their schedule then added ten per cent. management charge, that is in respect of the supply

A of those services, some £2,024. The committee, when they came to deal with that, said this: "The committee do not regard a management charge on items 1-9 [that is, in the schedule] as properly chargeable to the tenants"—pausing there, as it seems to me, it is saying quite clearly that any management charge, let alone the ten per cent., or ten per cent., on items 1-9, was not properly chargeable to the tenants.

B This question of management charges in respect of services arose in the earlier case to which I have referred of Lannon (5). WIDGERY, J., in dealing with this point, said this (6):

C "Finally, it is said that [the committee] failed to take into account a material consideration, namely, management charges. To understand this point, one must again go back to Mr. Weaver's original schedule of the cost of services [that, as here, was the landlords' schedule] which included among other items 'ten per cent. for management of services, and administration £4,627'. It will be remembered that the committee, when dealing with this point, had dismissed management charges in a somewhat summary way, including them with such things as fire extinguisher rental and saying: '... we do not accept that any of these are services supplied to or for the benefit of the tenants...' If that meant that the committee were saying to themselves—'We direct ourselves as a matter of law that management charges are an inadmissible factor when assessing the cost of services'—I would have thought that they were clearly wrong, because there is plenty of authority for the proposition that management costs, and indeed in appropriate circumstances management profit, may properly be admitted."

E Counsel for the landlords says that having regard to the passage that I have read, where the committee say that the management charge on services is not properly chargeable, they have misdirected themselves in law. The matter, however, does not end there, because having used those words, they add this: "But they have allowed a management charge in their estimation of a fair rent." At the end of their decision before giving the figures, they say:

F "In arriving at a fair rent the committee have taken into account all the matters referred to above and in particular the situation, character and age of the building. They have also had regard to the cost of repairs as given in evidence, and to the normal cost of management."

G It has been urged on this court that while they have not accepted ten per cent. of items 1-9 in the schedule as a management charge in respect of services, yet this shows that they have added something, and what that something is, is clearly for the committee; they have added something in the fair rent. In my judgment that really is, on the wording of this decision, an impossible contention, if only for this reason, that the figures in the fair rent include the figures for services from which a management charge in regard to services had been deleted, therefore if there is any management charge in respect of services, it must be in the figure of basic rent, that is fair rent less services, and if there is any element of management charge in the basic rent, it is clearly and could only be in respect of the building as opposed to the services. That, as I understand, is what the tribunal meant when they said: "They have also had regard to the cost of repairs", this is to the building, "and to the normal cost of management."

I Accordingly, as it seems to me, the tribunal have misdirected themselves in holding that they should not properly allow anything by way of management charge in respect of services.

What is said on behalf of the tenants is this, as I understand it. They are saying: be that as it may, assume, without conceding, that the committee have misdirected themselves, yet it cannot be said that in the final result the committee were wrong, because what they are arriving at is a fair rent; they are not arriving at a cost of services. Secondly, the tenants say: anyhow, the committee were not bound to adopt the method of arriving at the cost of services which they did, namely by working on the admitted figures of cost in the landlords' schedule. It is said that they might have arrived at the same conclusion by considering the evidence of the expert witnesses. In my judgment, it is no answer to say that the committee might have arrived at the same final figure if they had adopted some other method; nobody could tell. What this court is concerned with is to see the method which they did adopt, and whether in adopting that method they went wrong in law. In my judgment they did so in regard to this management charge in respect of services. A

B

Counsel for the landlords has invited this court not to send the case back to the committee, but by reference to a schedule which he has prepared to add on to the rent of each of these tenants the appropriate figure in respect of management charges. I think that that is quite an impossible contention, if only for this reason: while the committee, I think, ought to have allowed something for management charge in respect of services, it does not follow that they were bound to allow ten per cent. or any percentage. It does not follow that they were bound to allow ten per cent. or any percentage on items 1-9 in the schedule. It would be open to them indeed to allow not a percentage at all, but a lump sum, if they thought it right by way of a management charge in respect of services. C
D

Accordingly, the proper course is for the court in respect of this item to remit the case to the committee for determination in the light of the opinion of this court.

The last item concerns selective employment tax. The landlords' schedule of actual costs included a large item: wages for resident and non-resident staff of £14,249; that included not only, as one would expect, national insurance and pensions, but also S.E.T. The cost of Mr. and Mrs. Robinson's wages also included S.E.T., and the committee in deducting S.E.T. in all those cases, said this: E
F

"The committee deducted S.E.T. as they were not satisfied that this tax is properly chargeable to the tenants. They distinguish national insurance and pensions since these enure to the benefit of the employees engaged in the provision of services."

It is conceded that the reason given, namely that it can be distinguished from national insurance and pensions since those enure to the benefit of the employees, is really not sustainable because what the tenants can properly be called on to pay cannot be affected by how far the employees providing the services themselves get a benefit. The sole question is whether S.E.T. is properly chargeable to the tenants. G

For my part I find it very difficult to see how it could be said to be properly deductible and not properly chargeable. It is an inescapable cost of providing the service. This is not a case where the landlords could conceivably recover under the Selective Employment Payments Act 1966 the tax paid with or without premium; it is something which the landlords have to pay in providing those services, just indeed as any shopkeeper has to pay it in respect of his shop assistants. It is, as it seems to me, something which is properly included in the cost of providing services. It may be that it does not amount in the result to more than a few pounds in respect of the rent of each of these flats, but the case in my judgment must be remitted anyhow on management charges, and I would remit this point also to the committee to consider. H
I

Finally, I should say this, that there is apparently an arithmetical error in the calculations of the cost of services properly allocated to flat 14A, and when the case is remitted to the committee they should correct that error.

A ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

BLAIN, J.: I also agree.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Grangewood, Allen & Co. (for the landlords); Douglas-Mann & Co. (for the tenants); Solicitor, Ministry of Housing and Local Government.

B [Reported by NAEEM BUTT, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMMISSIONER,
Ex parte BLACKBURN (No. 2).

C [COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning, M.R., Salmon and Edmund Davies, L.J.J.), February 26, 1968.]

Contempt of Court—Publications concerning legal proceedings—Criticism of administration of justice—Court of Appeal—Judgment regarding non-enforcement of gaming laws criticised—Error of fact in matter published—Right of fair comment on matters of public importance.

D Criticism, however vigorous, of a judgment or a decision of a court will not constitute contempt of court, if it is made in good faith and is reasonable, even though it contains error; but it is desirable that criticism should be accurate and fair, bearing in mind that the judiciary cannot enter into public controversy and thus cannot reply to criticism (see p. 320, letter G, and p. 321, letters A and F, post).

E Dictum of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., in R. v. Gray ([1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 59 at p. 62) applied.

[Editorial Note. While the decision in the present case shows that the courts are open to criticism by reasonable comment on, or protest at, a judicial act as being contrary to law or to the public good, yet the liberty of the press in this matter is no greater and no less than the liberty of every subject of the Queen. Personal scurrilous abuse of a judge as a judge, for example, is and has always been contempt of court (compare per LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., in R. v. Gray ([1900-03] All E.R. Rep. at p. 62, letters E, F); so also are publications of matter that are calculated to interfere with the administration of justice.

As to contempt of court by criticism of the administration of justice or by attack on judges, see 8 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 7, paras. 8, 9; and for cases, see 16 DIGEST (Repl.) 22-24, 159-179.]

G Case referred to:

R. v. Gray, [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 59; [1900] 2 Q.B. 36; 69 L.J.Q.B. 502; 82 L.T. 534; 64 J.P. 484; 16 Digest (Repl.) 23, 176.

Motion.

H This was a motion by the applicant, Albert Raymond Blackburn, by notice dated Feb. 21, 1968, to the Court of Appeal for an order that the Right Honourable Quintin Hogg, P.C., Q.C., M.P., was guilty of contempt of court in that he published in the issue of "Punch" dated Feb. 14, 1968, an article which brought or sought to bring the Court of Appeal into ridicule or contempt or to lower its authority. The facts are set out in the judgment of LORD DENNING, M.R.

I The case noted below* was cited during the argument in addition to the one referred to in the judgment of EDMUND DAVIES, L.J.

The applicant appeared in person.

Sir Peter Rawlinson, Q.C., and J. P. Harris for the respondent.

LORD DENNING, M.R.: Some few days ago (1) we had before us an application by Mr. Albert Raymond Blackburn, seeking an order of mandamus against the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. After that case was reported, the respondent, Mr. Quintin Hogg, wrote an article in "Punch" A dated Feb. 14, 1968, under the heading "Political Parley". Mr. Blackburn today moves the court saying that Mr. Quintin Hogg, by this article, has been guilty of contempt.

* Ambard v. A.-G. of Trinidad and Tobago, [1936] 1 All E.R. 704; [1936] A.C. 322. (1) [1968] 1 All E.R. 763.

Let me read the salient passages in the article. It starts:

"The recent judgment of the Court of Appeal is a strange example of the blindness which sometimes descends on the best of judges. The legislation B of 1960 and thereafter has been rendered virtually unworkable by the unrealistic, contradictory and, in the leading case, erroneous, decisions of the courts, including the Court of Appeal. So what do they do? Apologise for the expense and trouble they have put the police to? Not a bit of it. Lambaste the police for not enforcing the law which they themselves had rendered unworkable and which is now the subject of a Bill, the manifest C purpose of which is to alter it. Pronounce an impending dies irae on a series of parties not before them, whose crime it has been to take advantage of the weaknesses in the decisions of their own court. Criticise the lawyers, who have advised their clients. Blame Parliament for passing Acts which they have interpreted so strangely. Everyone, it seems, is out of step, except the courts... The House of Lords overruled the Court of Appeal D ... it is to be hoped that the courts will remember the golden rule for judges in the matter of obiter dicta. Silence is always an option."

That article is certainly critical of this court. In so far as it referred to the Court of Appeal, it is admittedly erroneous. This court did not in the gaming cases give any decision which was erroneous, nor one which was overruled by the House of Lords. Is the article, however, a contempt of court? E

This is the first case, so far as I know, where this court has been called on to consider an allegation of contempt against itself. It is a jurisdiction which undoubtedly belongs to us, but which we will most sparingly exercise: more particularly as we ourselves have an interest in the matter. Let me say at once that we will never use this jurisdiction as a means to uphold our own dignity. That must rest on surer foundations. Nor will we use it to suppress those who F speak against us. We do not fear criticism, nor do we resent it. For there is something far more important at stake. It is no less than freedom of speech itself. It is the right of every man, in Parliament or out of it, in the Press or over the broadcast, to make fair comment, even outspoken comment, on matters of public interest. Those who comment can deal faithfully with all that is done in a court of justice. They can say that we are mistaken, and our decisions G erroneous, whether they are subject to appeal or not. All we would ask is that those who criticise us will remember that, from the nature of our office, we cannot reply to their criticisms. We cannot enter into public controversy. Still less into political controversy. We must rely on our conduct itself to be its own vindication. Exposed as we are to the winds of criticism, nothing which H is said by this person or that, nothing which is written by this pen or that, will deter us from doing what we believe is right: nor, I would add, from saying what the occasion requires, provided that it is pertinent to the matter in hand. Silence is not an option when things are ill done.

So it comes to this. Mr. Quintin Hogg has criticised the court, but in so doing he is exercising his undoubted right. The article contains an error, no doubt, but errors do not make it a contempt of court. We must uphold his right to I the uttermost.

I hold this not to be a contempt of court, and would dismiss the application.

SALMON, L.J.: The authority and reputation of our courts are not so frail that their judgments need to be shielded from criticism, even from the criticism of Mr. Quintin Hogg. Their judgments, which can, I think, safely be left to take care of themselves, are often of considerable public importance. It is the inalienable right of everyone to comment fairly on any matter of public

A importance. This right is one of the pillars of individual liberty—freedom of speech, which our courts have always unfailingly upheld. It follows that no criticism of a judgment, however vigorous, can amount to contempt of court, providing it keeps within the limits of reasonable courtesy and good faith. The criticism here complained of, however rumbustious, however wide of the mark, whether expressed in good taste or in bad taste, seems to me to be well within those limits.

B LORD DENNING, M.R., pointed out on Mr. Blackburn's application for an order of mandamus that there had been decisions of the courts, one recently overruled in the House of Lords, which had introduced doubts into one corner of the field of the gaming law (2). Incidentally, those decisions were not decisions of the Court of Appeal, as Mr. Hogg stated, but that is of little consequence. C They, however, hardly excuse the inertia which allowed large gambling empires to be built up before they were delivered.

The purpose of the legislation of 1960 was plain: to do away with the legal taboos on gaming and at the same time to prevent its commercial exploitation. The provisions of the Act of 1960 were clear and effective to achieve the purpose of Parliament—which is more than can be said for some modern legislation. D They failed to do so and gambling empires flourished, not because of any fault in the provisions of the Act but for lack of sufficiently energetic action to enforce them.

No one could doubt Mr. Hogg's good faith. I, of course, entirely accept that he had no intention of holding this court up to contempt; nor did he do so. Mr. Blackburn complains that Mr. Hogg has not apologised. There was no reason why he should apologise, for he owes no apology, save, perhaps, to the readers of "Punch" for some of the inaccuracies and inconsistencies which his article contains. E I agree that this application should be dismissed.

EDMUND DAVIES, L.J.: The right to fair criticism is part of the birth-right of all subjects of Her Majesty. Though it has its boundaries, that right covers a wide expanse and its curtailment must be jealously guarded against. F It applies to the judgments of the courts as to all other topics of public importance. Doubtless it is desirable that critics should, first, be accurate and, secondly, be fair, and that they should particularly remember and be alive to that desirability if those whom they would attack have, in the ordinary course, no means of defending themselves.

In R. v. Gray (3), LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., said:

G "Judges and Courts are alike open to criticism, and if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, no court could or would treat that as contempt of court."

Whether, despite his great learning and his distinction as a Queen's Counsel, Mr. Hogg paid proper respect to the standards of accuracy, fairness and good taste when he was composing his "Punch" article may, unhappily, be open to H doubt. But whether his article amounted to contempt involves different and graver considerations. For my part also, inaccurate though the article is now acknowledged to be in a material respect, I have no doubt that contempt has not been established, and I would accordingly refuse this application.

I My conclusions regarding the fairness and good taste of the article in question are immaterial, and I, therefore, refrain from revealing them. To that extent, and that extent only, I propose to observe what Mr. Hogg, in his article, described as "the golden rule" for judges in relation to obiter dicta, namely that "Silence is always an option".

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Bull & Bull (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

(2) See [1968] 1 All E.R. 767.

(3) [1900] 2 Q.B. 36 at p. 40; [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 59 at p. 62.

GALLIE v. LEE AND ANOTHER.

A

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Stamp, J.), February 9, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, March 29, 1968.]

Mistake—Nature of document—Assignment on sale—Deed assigning leasehold term to L. executed by assignor in belief that it was a deed of gift to her nephew, P.—Assignor a widow aged seventy-eight who did not read the document—Signature obtained by fraud—Assignment and deed delivered to L., who mortgaged the property to a building society—Action by widow raising non est factum—Whether assignment void against L.—Whether building society could maintain estoppel against widow.

B

In or about June, 1962, the plaintiff, who was a widow and seventy-eight years of age, executed a deed which purported to be an assignment on the sale by her of her leasehold interest in her house for £3,000 to L., and the deeds were delivered to L. She did not read the document. Her signature was obtained by fraud. She believed the deed to be a deed of gift to her nephew P., which L. represented to her that it was. She would not have executed an assignment on sale to L. The plaintiff was prepared to give an interest in her house to her nephew in order that he should be able to raise money on it. L., having obtained the assignment, mortgaged the house to a building society. In an action by the plaintiff against L. and the building society claiming that the assignment was void and delivery up of the deeds,

C

Held: the assignment was void and the building society would be ordered to deliver the deeds to the plaintiff, because—

D

(i) the assignment was a deed of a totally different description, of a different character or class and of a different nature, from what L. represented to the plaintiff that it was; accordingly the assignment was not, as between the plaintiff and L., the plaintiff's deed and did not confer title to the property on L. as against the plaintiff (see p. 327, letter E, and p. 329, letter C, post).

F

Dictum of WARRINGTON, J., in Howatson v. Webb ([1907] 1 Ch. at p. 549) not followed.

National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Jackson ((1886), 33 Ch.D. 1) considered.

(ii) the plaintiff was not estopped, although she had carelessly allowed herself to be misled as to the character of the assignment, from maintaining as against the building society that the assignment was not her deed, for she owed no duty to the building society, nor was her carelessness a proximate cause of the building society's lending money to L. (see p. 331, letter C, and p. 332, letters A and B, post).

G

Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg ([1911] 1 K.B. 489) applied.

[As to when a plea of non est factum is available, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 361, 362, para. 588; and for cases on non est factum, see 17 DIGEST (Repl.) 247, 248, 508-511.]

H

Cases referred to:

Blay v. Pollard and Morris, [1930] All E.R. Rep. 609; [1930] 1 K.B. 628; 99 L.J.K.B. 421; 143 L.T. 92; 35 Digest (Repl.) 123, 212.

Brocklesbury v. Temperance Building Society, [1895] A.C. 173; 64 L.J.Ch. 433; 72 L.T. 477; 59 J.P. 676; 35 Digest (Repl.) 431, 1235.

I

Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg, [1911] 1 K.B. 489; 80 L.J.K.B. 472; 104 L.T. 121; 17 Digest (Repl.) 248, 510.

Cundy v. Lindsay, [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 1149; (1878), 3 App. Cas. 459; 47 L.J.Q.B. 481; 38 L.T. 573; 42 J.P. 483; 39 Digest (Repl.) 653, 1571.

Foster v. Mackinnon, (1869), L.R. 4 C.P. 704; 38 L.J.C.P. 310; 20 L.T. 887; 17 Digest (Repl.) 242, 457.

- A Howatson v. Webb, [1907] 1 Ch. 537; 76 L.J.Ch. 346; 97 L.T. 730; affd., C.A., [1908] 1 Ch. 1; 77 L.J.Ch. 32; 17 Digest (Repl.) 247, 509.
- Hunter v. Walters, Curling v. Walters, Darnell v. Hunter*, (1871), 7 Ch. App. 75; 41 L.J.Ch. 175; 25 L.T. 765; 35 Digest (Repl.) 76, 695.
- Jones (R. E.), Ltd. v. Waring and Gillow, Ltd.*, [1926] All E.R. Rep. 36; [1926] A.C. 670; 95 L.J.K.B. 913; 135 L.T. 548; 35 Digest (Repl.) 161, 492.
- B King v. Smith, [1900] 2 Ch. 425; 69 L.J.Ch. 598; 82 L.T. 815; 40 Digest (Repl.) 320, 2632.
- Leighton's Conveyance, Re*, [1936] 1 All E.R. 667; on appeal, C.A., [1936] 3 All E.R. 1033; 38 Digest (Repl.) 900, 949.
- Lickbarrow v. Mason*, [1775-1802] All E.R. Rep. 1; (1787), 2 Term Rep. 63; 100 E.R. 35; on appeal, Ex. Ch., (1790), 1 Hy. Bl. 357; on appeal, H.L., (1793), 4 Bro. Parl. Cas. 57; 39 Digest (Repl.) 750, 2279.
- C Muskham Finance, Ltd. v. Howard, [1963] 1 All E.R. 81; [1963] 1 Q.B. 904; [1963] 2 W.L.R. 87; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 472, 510a
- National Provincial Bank of England v. Jackson*, (1886), 33 Ch.D. 1; 55 L.T. 458; 17 Digest (Repl.) 215, 136.
- Swan v. North British Australasian Co., Ltd.*, (1862), 7 H. & N. 603; on appeal, (1863), 2 H. & C. 175; 159 E.R. 73; 9 Digest (Repl.) 220, 1405.
- D Wilson & Meeson v. Pickering, [1946] 1 All E.R. 394; [1946] K.B. 422; [1947] L.J.R. 18; 175 L.T. 65; 6 Digest (Repl.) 70, 612.

Action.

In this action the plaintiff, Rose Maud Gallie, by her statement of claim, re-served as amended on Dec. 8, 1965, claimed against the defendants, William

- E Robert Lee and Anglia Building Society (formerly Northampton Town and County Building Society), a declaration that a purported assignment on sale being an assignment dated June 15, 1962, by the plaintiff to the first defendant, Mr. Lee, of the residue of the term of 999 years granted in 1899 in a property, 12, Dunkeld Road, Ilford, for the sum of £3,000, was void, and delivery to the plaintiff of the title deeds.

- F The house, 12 Dunkeld Road, had been subject to a mortgage which had been repaid by Sept. 8, 1961, the last payment being made by the plaintiff's nephew, Mr. Parkin. When the deeds were received from the mortgagee on redemption the plaintiff handed them to Mr. Parkin. It was common ground that the plaintiff intended by so doing to make a gift to Mr. Parkin to take effect immediately, though she had not made a legally effective gift. The plaintiff knew that her nephew needed money for his business. He carried on the business of repairing motor vehicles at a small garage. The plaintiff was acquainted with the first defendant, Mr. Lee, who had come to her house on occasions before the deed was executed; and she knew that he would be concerned with raising the money. One day Mr. Lee and Mr. Parkin came to the plaintiff's house. Mr. Parkin opened the front door with his key and they walked in.

- H According to the plaintiff's evidence before an examiner Mr. Lee asked her to sign a paper, which he had in his hand, and she asked what it was for, and Mr. Lee said that it was to do with the gift of the house by deed to Mr. Parkin. On the evidence concerning this occasion HIS LORDSHIP (STAMP, J.) found as facts that the plaintiff did not read the document which she signed (viz., the deed of June 15, 1962), that Mr. Lee represented it to be a deed of gift to Mr. Parkin, and that the plaintiff executed it in the belief that that was what it was. Further, that the plaintiff had no idea that the document took the form of a conveyance on sale from her to Mr. Lee, and that a sale or gift to him was something which she did not and would not for one moment have contemplated. In her evidence the plaintiff had said that she told Mr. Lee, when he asked her to sign, that she had broken her glasses and could not see. HIS LORDSHIP found that it was not necessary to decide whether Mr. Parkin knew the contents of the document signed on this occasion, which was the purported assignment dated June 15, 1962. If it were necessary, then HIS LORDSHIP held that by the time when the mortgage to the building society was executed Mr. Parkin had become aware that Mr. Lee had, or claimed to have, the ownership of the property, and that Mr. Parkin was expecting to receive from Mr. Lee, by monthly instalments of £25, the £2,500 (which sum, according to Mr. Parkin's evidence was agreed between him and Mr. Lee as the price that Mr. Lee would pay for buying the house from Mr. Parkin) which, however, Mr. Lee did not intend to pay. Mr. Parkin, so HIS LORDSHIP found, was the victim of a confidence trick.

Michael Albery, Q.C., and A. E. Holdsworth for the plaintiff.

J. E. S. Ricardo for the first defendant.

P. R. Oliver, Q.C., and H. F. J. Teague for the second defendants, the building society.

STAMP, J.: About the month of June, 1962, the plaintiff, Mrs. Rose Maud Gallie, a widow then aged seventy-eight, executed an instrument which bears the date June 15, 1962. It was on the face of it an assignment on sale expressed to be made between the plaintiff, called "the vendor", of the first part and the first defendant, William Robert Lee, called "the purchaser" of the other part. The instrument recited that the property, 12, Dunkeld Road, Ilford, was vested in the plaintiff for the residue of a term of 999 years granted in 1899 at a ground rent of £5 14s. per annum; it recited an agreement for sale for the sum of £3,000 and by it, in pursuance of the agreement and in consideration of the sum of £3,000 expressed to be then paid by the purchaser to the vendor, the receipt whereof the vendor was expressed to acknowledge, the vendor as beneficial owner assigned unto the purchaser all the premises to which I have referred, to hold the same unto the purchase for all the residue of the term under which the premises were held, subject to the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants on the part of the lessee, contained in the lease.

In fact the plaintiff had not agreed to sell 12, Dunkeld Road, which was her home and at which she carried on the boarding house from which she derived her livelihood, nor had she received the sum of £3,000, nor any sum from Mr. Lee, nor from any other person. The instrument was false in every particular.

Following the execution of the document Mr. Lee sent or took it to his solicitors, Messrs. Lincoln & Lincoln (1). Mr. Lee was in financial difficulties, he had hanging over him a petition in bankruptcy, there were unsatisfied judgments against him and his bank account was in debit in that month of June in a sum of about £1,400. He was in arrear in respect of rent to one Royce the landlord of premises which were let to him at a rent of £50 per month. He had before ever the document of June 15 was executed made arrangements with Messrs. Lincoln & Lincoln for them to negotiate a mortgage of the premises. This they did and on or about Aug. 10, 1962, a sum of £2,000 was advanced on the security of a first mortgage of 12, Dunkeld Road, dated Aug. 10, 1962, and made between Mr. Lee of the one part and the second defendants (2) (then the Northampton Town and County Building Society) of the other part. In order that the mortgage could be obtained, Messrs. Lincoln & Lincoln (1) falsely put forward the instrument of June 15, 1962, as a genuine document giving effect to a genuine sale. In the document which he had to sign leading to the mortgage, Mr. Lee, with the connivance of one Hall, the conveyancing clerk then in the employ of Messrs. Lincoln & Lincoln, made a number of statements to the building society which were false and known by him to be false.

The advance of £2,000 less £19 10s. on account of costs was paid to Messrs. Lincoln & Lincoln. From it Messrs. Lincoln & Lincoln deducted two sums, namely, £92 17s. 6d. in respect of their own costs, charges and disbursements including an item described as professional charges in acting "on the purchase of the above property from Mrs. Gallie" and £205 17s. which they paid in connexion with a judgment obtained against Mr. Lee in certain other proceedings.

(1) This firm of solicitors ceased to exist in August, 1966, and has no connection with any other firm of similar name.

(2) The Anglia Building Society.

A The balance of £1.681 odd, together with another small sum, was paid into Mr. Lee's bank account then in debit in the sum of £1,310. In the result that account was on Aug. 17 in credit in the sum of £385. By the end of the month the account was again in debit in an amount of about £150, having been reduced by substantial payment to one Royce in respect of arrears of rent and other payments made for Mr. Lee's benefit. Mr. Lee's bank account was not disclosed on discovery, so I understand; and if it had been, much time would have been saved at the trial.

The mortgage is still outstanding and the plaintiff claims against both defendants a declaration that the assignment is void and for delivery of the title deeds of the property or their value £4,500, and damages for their detention and further or alternatively, against the defendant Mr. Lee for fraudulent misrepresentation.

C [HIS LORDSHIP then reviewed the evidence concerning the circumstances in which the assignment came to be executed and the deeds to be delivered to Mr. Lee. The plaintiff's evidence was taken before an examiner in 1966, and the witnesses at the trial before HIS LORDSHIP included her nephew, Mr. Parkin, the defendant Mr. Lee and a Mr. Hall, who had been conveyancing clerk at the time in the employ of the firm of solicitors who then, but not at the time of the trial, (3), were carrying on their profession under the firm name of Lincoln & Lincoln. In the course of reviewing the evidence HIS LORDSHIP made findings as set out at p. 323, letter I, ante. In regard to the witnesses HIS LORDSHIP found that Mr. Lee was fraudulent and that Mr. Hall made the transaction possible by preparing what he knew to be a false document and representing to the building society that it was a true one. HIS LORDSHIP found that it was Mr. Lee's purpose throughout to get hold of the plaintiff's house without paying for it and to raise money on it so as to pay his creditors. HIS LORDSHIP continued:] The plaintiff, Mrs. Gallie, claims that neither the first defendant, Mr. Lee, nor the second defendants, the building society, became entitled to the property at law, it being claimed that it is still vested in Mrs. Gallie because the assignment was not Mrs. Gallie's deed; the plea of non est factum. I have heard much argument and a considerable number of authorities has been cited on the question whether the plea of non est factum is available to Mrs. Gallie in this case. I will endeavour to state the principles which in my judgment are to be extracted from the authorities and which I ought to apply.

F In the first place it is, I think, clear that where a man executes a deed without knowing or enquiring as to its contents then, whatever remedy he may have against him who procured the execution of the deed, it cannot be said that his mind did not go with his act. The fraud of the person who obtains the instrument and uses it for a purpose different from that which the author intended does not affect the deed. A very good example of such a case is to be found in King v. Smith (4), where a man was accustomed to signing documents tendered to him by his solicitor without enquiring as to character; and see also, in more recent times, Re Leighton's Conveyance (5).

H Secondly, the rule is the same where a representation is made as to the character of a deed, and that representation is not untrue. Where a man, being told that the deed deals with his estate, is content to execute the deed, without reading it and it does deal with his estate, it cannot then be said that it is not his deed and it is as if he had made no enquiry and there had been no representation.

I "When a man knows that he is conveying or doing something with his estate, but does not ask what is the precise effect of the deed, because he is told it is a mere form, and has such confidence in his solicitor as to execute the deed in ignorance, then, in my opinion, a deed so executed, although it may be voidable upon the ground of fraud, is not a void deed."

(3) This firm ceased to exist in August 1966, and has no connection with any other firm of similar name.

(4) [1900] 2 Ch. 425.

(5) [1936] 1 All E.R. 667.

(See per MELLISH, L.J., in Hunter v. Walters (6).)

Howatson v. Webb (7), despite the first paragraph in the headnote, was in my judgment such a case. The facts as stated in the headnote were these:

"The defendant, who was formerly the managing clerk to one H., a solicitor, acted as his nominee in a building speculation relating to the E. property, of which H. was owner. Shortly after leaving H.'s employment he was requested by H. to execute certain deeds, and on asking what those deeds were he was told by H., in whom he had complete confidence, that they were deeds transferring the E. property. The defendant thereupon signed them. One of the deeds so signed was a mortgage between the defendant, as mortgagor, of the one part and W. of the other part, and contained the usual covenant by the mortgagor for payment of principal and interest. In an action by the transferee of the mortgage for payment of the principal debt and interest, the defendant pleaded that the deed was not his deed, but was signed by him in consequence of a misrepresentation by H. as to its contents."

WARRINGTON, J., whose judgment was affirmed and approved in the Court of Appeal (8), said this of the plea non est factum (9):

"What does the evidence in the present case show? I may go so far in the defendant's favour as to say that Webb, having regard to his knowledge of Hooper, when Hooper said that the deeds were 'deeds for transferring the Edmonton property', was justified in believing that they were deeds such as a nominee could be called upon to execute either in favour of a new nominee or for the purpose of putting an end to his own position of nominee, and certainly not a deed creating a mortgage to another person. But in my opinion that is not enough. He was told that they were deeds relating to the property to which they did in fact relate. His mind was therefore applied to the question of dealing with that property. The deeds did deal with that property. The misrepresentation was as to the contents of the deed, and not as to the character and class of the deed. He knew he was dealing with the class of deed with which in fact he was dealing, but did not ascertain its contents."

Counsel for the building society has submitted that Howatson v. Webb (7) was a case where there was a misrepresentation as to the identity of the transferee. Having given that case the best consideration I can, I conclude that that was not so. Webb in his evidence had said that before he signed the deeds in question he asked what they were and was told "they are just deeds transferring the property", and he added in his evidence that his impression was that Hooper said "They are just deeds transferring that property to me". As I understand WARRINGTON, J.'s findings of fact he refused to accept the latter part of Webb's evidence as proving the fact that Hooper used the words "to me". Howatson v. Webb (7) is not in my judgment authority for the proposition that, if a man executes a conveyance on the faith of a representation that the transferee is "A" when in fact he is "B", that is not such a misrepresentation as to the character or class of the document as to come within the plea non est factum. The mistake by Webb was in not ascertaining in what way the deed transferred the property; he did not enquire sufficiently as to the character of the deed.

This brings me to the third proposition namely that if a man executes a deed on the faith of misrepresentations as to the character and class of the deed, it is non est factum. The rule was stated by COTTON, L.J., in National Provincial Bank of England v. Jackson (10), as follows:

(6) (1871), 7 Ch. App. 75 at p. 88.

(8) [1908] 1 Ch. 1.

(7) [1907] 1 Ch. 537.

(9) [1907] 1 Ch. at p. 549.

(10) (1886), 33 Ch.D. 1 at p. 10.

A "Now the rule of law is that if a person who seals and delivers a deed is misled by the mis-statements or misrepresentations of the persons procuring the execution of the deeds, so that he does not know what is the instrument to which he puts his hand, the deed is not his deed at all, because he was neither minded nor intended to sign a document of that character or class, as, for instance, a release while intending to execute a lease. Such a deed is void."

B DONOVAN, L.J., quite recently in Muskham Finance, Ltd. v. Howard (11) stated the rule in similar terms with the warning that the plea of non est factum is to be kept within narrow limits; but I do not understand him as defining those limits in any narrower terms than those which I have stated.

C The rule has sometimes been put slightly differently but without, I think, altering its substance. For example, SLESSER, L.J., in Blay v. Pollard and Morris (12), referring to the defence of non est factum, said that that defence might be raised where the deed signed is of a nature different from what it is represented to be so that it is of an entirely different legal category.

D The question which I, therefore, have to pose and answer is whether the assignment which Mrs. Gallie signed was of a different character or class of a totally different description or of an entirely different legal category to that which it was represented to be.

E In this case Mrs. Gallie signed the assignment on the faith of a representation that it was a deed of gift of the property to Mr. Parkin whereas in truth it was a conveyance of the property to Mr. Lee expressed to be an assignment on sale. The assignment was in my judgment of a totally different description, of a nature different, of a different character and class from that which it was represented to be and from that which Mrs. Gallie intended to execute. In the absence of authority constraining me to take the contrary view, I cannot hold that a deed of a gift to A is, in a sense relevant to the question which falls to be decided—"was this the deed of Mrs. Gallie"—of the same character or class or of the same nature as a deed of gift to B?: and even less so is it of the same

F nature or character or class as a conveyance expressed to be on sale to B. There is a passage in Howatson v. Webb (13) in which WARRINGTON, J., referring to National Provincial Bank of England v. Jackson (14), said that it seemed to him that the Court of Appeal came to the conclusion that although a man might be misled as to the nature of the deed, yet if he knew it related to his property he could not succeed on a plea of non est factum. That passage in the judgment

G of WARRINGTON, J., is, for the reason which I indicated earlier in this judgment, not part of the ratio decidendi of his own decision; nor are the words of a judge in an extempore judgment to be read or construed as if they were contained in a statute; and having given the judgments of the Court of Appeal in National Provincial Bank of England v. Jackson (14) the best consideration that I can, I am unable to conclude that they are authority for the wide statement made by

H WARRINGTON, J. Applied literally one would conclude from that statement that if a solicitor said "this is a deed conveying your estate to A and B as trustees on trust for yourself and your wife in equal shares", whereas in fact it was a conveyance to the solicitor expressed to be for value, the plea of non est factum would not be available. I cannot accept the view that the Court of Appeal in National Provincial Bank of England v. Jackson (14) (one of whose

I members, namely, LINDLEY, L.J., thought that case very near the line) would have accepted that view. COTTON, L.J., who delivered the leading judgment, proceeded on the view that nothing was said in that case to mislead the defendants as to the nature of the instrument, that it was doubtful how far they had understood the nature of the deeds but that they knew that the deeds dealt in

(11) [1963] 1 All E.R. 81; [1963] 1 Q.B. 904.

(12) [1930] All E.R. Rep. 609 at p. 616; [1930] 1 K.B. 628 at p. 641.

(13) [1907] 1 Ch. at p. 549.

(14) (1886), 33 Ch.D. 1.

some way with the houses. I cannot draw from that case the conclusion that, if a man knows that a deed deals in some way with his property and in fact it does so; then it matters not that he has been misled as to the way in which it does so; whether by mortgage, conveyance on sale, deed of gift, lease or release or whether in favour of A, B, C or D. Neither in National Provincial Bank of England v. Jackson (15) nor in Howatson v. Webb (16) had there been any such misrepresentation. To hold that a man who executes a release which has been misrepresented to him as a lease is not bound because he was neither minded nor intended to sign a document of that character or class, but that a man who executes a voluntary conveyance to his solicitor which has been represented as a lease for seven years at a rack-rent to a third party is bound to the conveyance because those deeds relate to his property, and therefore are of the same character or class, would in my judgment be anomalous and would confine the doctrine of non est factum more narrowly than the cases warrant. The identity of the parties to a deed is in my judgment one of the factors which must be taken into account in ascertaining its character or description and will be more or less significant for that purpose according to the other features of the deed. Where the deed intended to be executed is a deed of gift to A, then in my judgment its essential character is that of a gift to A. If on the other hand the deed is understood to be a conveyance to A and B merely as trustees, it may be that a conveyance on trust to A and C as trustees to hold on the trusts contemplated is not of a different character or class.

In coming to the conclusion which I have reached on this part of the case I derive some comfort from the cases under the law of contract such as Cundy v. Lindsay (17), where the identity of a contracting party being vital to the contract a misrepresentation as to identity has been held to result in there being no contract.

Counsel for Mr. Lee submitted that Mrs. Gallie was most anxious to get rid of her house, that it made no difference to her whether it was transferred to Mr. Parkin and then sold by him to Mr. Lee or whether the transaction was dressed up as a sale by Mrs. Gallie to Mr. Lee. It was, he submitted, a sensible arrangement to make. Whether the adjective "sensible" was intended to embrace the insertion in the assignment of a fictitious consideration and an untrue receipt, or merely to be descriptive of a device designed to procure the loan from the building society notwithstanding s. 42 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, is not clear to me. I say no more about that submission.

It was submitted on behalf of the building society that Mrs. Gallie knew that the instrument which she was signing was an instrument dealing with her property and that her intention was so to deal with it that a mortgage could be obtained on it, that she wanted Mr. Parkin to have the property so that he could get money on its security and that she knew Mr. Parkin and Mr. Lee were working together in the matter. I accept these submissions; but this is only part of the story and the factual analysis, so far as it is directed to showing that Mrs. Gallie's mind went with her pen, in my view confuses what she intended to do with her object in doing it. What she intended to do was to put the property into the hands of Mr. Parkin. True it is that her object was to enable Mr. Parkin to raise money on its security; but her object was to make the house available to Mr. Parkin not to Mr. Lee and to enable Mr. Parkin, not Mr. Lee, to raise money on it. If her object is relevant—I think it is not—then her object was to provide money for Mr. Parkin's business and that object was fairly defeated by the assignment to Mr. Lee. The submissions on this part of the case advanced on behalf of the defendants are dangerously like a submission that it made no difference to her whether her signature was obtained by a trick or whether, Mr. Parkin having obtained a deed of gift, was subsequently tricked by Mr. Lee. Moreover, although

(15) (1886), 33 Ch.D. 1.

(16) [1907] 1 Ch. 537.

(17) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 1149; (1878), 3 App. Cas. 459.

A it is no doubt true that had Mrs. Gallie made a voluntary disposition in favour of Mr. Parkin and had Mr. Parkin then sold to Mr. Lee the result from Mrs. Gallie's point of view would have been the same, I cannot assume that that would have happened. In the first place even Mr. Hall, though willing to prepare a document recording a fictitious sale of Mrs. Gallie's house, might have jibbed at preparing a deed of gift from Mrs. Gallie to Mr. Parkin without seeing that she was separately

B advised; and if he had been willing to prepare the deed of gift he was, I think, sufficiently alive to reality to have advised his client Mr. Lee not to purchase property depending on a gift known not to have been the subject of independent advice. Nor would the building society in those circumstances have advanced the money. The transaction would have been a different transaction and would probably have had different consequences.

C I hold that as between the plaintiff, Mrs. Gallie, and the first defendant, Mr. Lee, the deed which Mrs. Gallie signed was not her deed; and since one cannot give a better title to property than one has oneself that would, if there was no question of estoppel, be the end of the matter.

It is, however, submitted on behalf of the second defendants, the building society, who advanced money to Mr. Lee on the security of the property in the belief that Mr. Lee was the beneficial owner of it, that Mrs. Gallie cannot as

D between herself and the building society be heard to say that the assignment was not her deed. Reliance is placed on the fact that Mrs. Gallie gave the deeds to Mr. Parkin with a view to his raising money on their security but more particularly on the very fact that she put her hand to the assignment without reading it. It was, it is urged, precisely in order to enable money to be raised from a mortgagee

E that Mrs. Gallie did what she did and she therefore ought not now to be allowed to set up her own title against that of the building society, who did what she intended it should do. If this submission stood alone it would, I think, have to be rejected because it is less than the truth to say that Mrs. Gallie did what she did in order that money should be raised; she did what she did in order that Mr. Parkin should have the property so that he, not Mr. Lee, might raise money on it.

F The submission, however, goes wider than this, for it is contended that the owner of property who purports to execute a deed knowing that it transfers his property owes a duty to all persons who may be induced on the faith of the transfer to pay money for the property or advance money on its security, and that, if he goes through the motions of executing such a transfer, he is estopped as against a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the circumstances from the plea

G that the transfer is not his deed.

The question whether such a principle ought to be applied—a question which did not arise because the court held that the case was not one of non est factum—is almost precisely that touched on by MELLISH, L.J., in Hunter v. Walters (18), when he remarked:

H “Now, in my opinion, it is still a doubtful question at law, on which I do not wish to give any decisive opinion, whether, if there be a false representation respecting the contents of a deed, a person who is an educated person, and who might, by very simple means, have satisfied himself as to what the contents of the deed really were, may not, by executing it negligently be estopped as between himself and a person who innocently acts upon the faith of the deed being valid, and who accepts an estate under it. I do not

I think that the case of Swan v. North British Australasian Co. (19)—a decision of which the learned Vice-Chancellor disapproves—is really a direct authority upon that question, because in that case a transfer of shares had been executed in blank; the person who executed it owned shares in two companies, and gave authority to the broker to fill them up with shares in one company, and the broker filled them up with shares in another company, which were afterwards transferred to an innocent person.”

In connexion with this plea of estoppel I have been presented with a wealth of authority. It was stated by ASHURST, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason (20), that whenever one of two innocent parties must suffer by the acts of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it. Where, as here, the failure of Mrs. Gallie to be careful not to sign a document without ensuring that it was of the character which it was represented to be has led, whether directly or indirectly, to the building society advancing money on a security which, if Mrs. Gallie is right, is worthless to that society, I would not have been reluctant to apply the principle so broadly stated in Lickbarrow v. Mason (20). Nevertheless LORD GREENE, M.R., in Wilson & Messon v. Pickering (21), doubted whether there was any general proposition in the books which required so much qualification as the observation of ASHURST, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason (20) to which I have referred; and on the authority of Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg (22), I have come to the conclusion that the question which I have to determine must be answered in favour of Mrs. Gallie.

The facts of that case are in my judgment correctly set out in the headnote which reads as follows (22):

"The defendant signed a document, which purported to be a continuing guarantee by him, up to a certain amount, of the payment by R. of any sum which might at any time thereafter be or become due from R. to the plaintiffs, a banking company, on the general balance of his banking account with them. In fact the defendant had been induced by the fraud of R. to sign the document, without reading it, and not knowing that it was a guarantee, but supposing it to be a document of a different character. Subsequently to the signature of the document by the defendant, R. forged the signature of an attesting witness to it, and handed it to the plaintiffs. The jury, in answer to a question put to them by the judge, found that the defendant was negligent in signing the document . . ."

The case was thus one of non est factum and was so treated by the Court of Appeal. Nevertheless, and notwithstanding the finding of the jury that the defendant was negligent in signing the document, the court held, affirming the decision of the judge in the court below

"that in an action on the supposed guarantee the defendant was not estopped from denying that he had contracted to guarantee the debt of R., inasmuch as he was under no duty to the plaintiffs in the matter, and the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' loss was the fraudulent action of R. and not the defendant's supposed negligence."

In the course of his judgment VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said this (23):

"The jury were asked: 'Was the defendant induced to sign the guarantee by the fraud of Rigg?' They answered that he was. They then were asked: 'Did the defendant know that the document which he signed was a guarantee?' They answered in the negative. It seems to me that on those findings alone the defendant would be entitled to say in respect of this guarantee that it was not, in contemplation of law, signed by him. His signature was obtained by fraud, and it is manifest, on the evidence and the findings of the jury, that he was not intending to sign any such document. What he was intending to sign was some document with reference to insurance. It appears to me that under the circumstances of this case the mere fact that the jury have found that there was negligence on the part of the defendant does not raise such an estoppel as prevents the defendant from setting up the defence that he never signed the guarantee and that his signature to the document was obtained from him by fraud; that he did not know of its nature, or intend to sign a document of that description. If the document

(20) [1775-1802] All E.R. Rep. 1 at p. 3; (1787), 2 Term Rep. 63.

(21) [1946] 1 All E.R. 394 at p. 395; [1946] K.B. 422 at p. 425.

(22) [1911] 1 K.B. 489.

(23) [1911] 1 K.B. at pp. 493, 494.

- A in question had been not a guarantee, but a bill of exchange, and the question had arisen what was the position of a holder for value without notice of the fraud, the matter might have been different, because the law merchant, and now the statute law, puts persons who in such circumstances take bills of exchange and such like instruments in the position that they have to prove that they gave value for the bill or other like instrument honestly, but, if
- B they prove that, it does not matter that it was originally procured by fraud."

That, in my view, is a clear expression of opinion that, since the deed was non est factum, the fact that the defendant signed the deed negligently relying on what he was told and without reading it did not estop him from pleading it was not his deed. These passages, in my judgment, form part of the ratio decidendi

- C of that decision which I must follow by holding that the fact that Mrs. Gallie carelessly allowed herself to be misled as to the character of the deed did not constitute a breach of duty to the building society. BUCKLEY, L.J., in that case held that the defendant did not owe a duty to the plaintiff which appears to me to be tantamount to holding that when a man signs a document, other than a document which happens to be a bill of exchange or other like instrument, he
- D does not owe a duty to a person into whose hands the document may come. There is in other words no more a duty to the world or to a person into whose hands the document may come not to execute an instrument without ascertaining its character and class than there is a duty to a person into whose hands goods may come not to leave your goods where thieves may break in and steal.

- E VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., continuing the passage that I have already quoted. said this (24):

- "The only other thing which I wish to say is on the question of negligence. I do not know whether the jury understood that there could be no material negligence unless there was a duty on the defendant towards the plaintiffs. Even if they did understand that, in my opinion, in the case of this instrument, the signature to which was obtained by fraud, and which was not a
- F negotiable instrument, PICKFORD, J., was right in saying that the finding of negligence was immaterial. I wish to add for myself that in my judgment there is no evidence whatsoever to show that the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' advancing money on this document was the mere signature of it by the defendant. In my opinion, the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' making the advance was that Rigg fraudulently took the document to the bank, hav-
- G ing fraudulently altered it by adding the forged signature of an attesting witness, and but for Rigg having done those things the plaintiffs would never have advanced the money at all."

BUCKLEY, L.J., also thought that the act of the defendant was not the act which involved the plaintiff in the loss. He said (25):

- "What involved the plaintiffs in loss was the act of Rigg a rogue, who obtained from the defendant his signature to an instrument which he never intended to sign, and, having thus defrauded the defendant, proceeded to do another act which was what caused the plaintiffs' loss. He took the document thus fraudulently obtained, and pretended to the plaintiffs that it was a genuine guarantee given by the defendant. In point of fact it was not."

- I KENNEDY, L.J., came to the same conclusion (25) on the same two grounds.

The present case is of course not on all fours with Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg (26), and in particular because there the defendant was being sued on a document which it was held was not the defendant's deed, where as here Mrs. Gallie is seeking to recover her property from the building society who, partly by her carelessness, has been induced to advance money on the security of the property. The decision of the Court of Appeal in that case, however, appears to me to be a clear one and I ought not, I think to do otherwise than apply it. If a man owes no duty to a party into whose hands a document that he does not read may come, then it seems to me to follow that Mrs. Gallie in executing the assignment in this case without ascertaining its character and class, owed no duty to the building society. Nor if the act of the defendant in Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg (27) was not the proximate cause of the loss to the building society could I hold that Mrs. Gallie's neglect of any duty she owed to the building society was the proximate cause of the building society lending the money to Mr. Lee. Here the proximate cause of the building society making the advance to Mr. Lee was that Mr. Lee fraudulently through his solicitors represented the assignment to be that which it was not.

Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg (27) has been the subject of criticism on the ground that it was, so it is said, based on a misunderstanding of the decision in Foster v. Mackinnon (28); see CHESHIRE AND FIFOOT ON THE LAW OF CONTRACT (6th Edn.) pp. 222 et seq., where in the course of an examination of those two cases it is suggested that it is illogical that knowingly to sign a blank deed does not have the same effect as knowingly to sign a blank negotiable instrument. In point of fact in neither of the two cases had the party signed a blank document and so authorised another party to complete it. In both cases the party signed the instrument without reading it or ascertaining its true character. In Foster v. Mackinnon (28) the instrument was a bill of exchange and the case was sent for a new trial on the question of whether the defendant had been negligent, and in Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg (27) the finding of negligence by the jury was held irrelevant or wrong. The difference between the two cases and the justification of any such illogicality as that found by the editors of CHESHIRE AND FIFOOT is perhaps explained in the earlier judgment of BYLES, J., in Swan v. North British Australasian Co. (29) (to which he was referred in argument in Foster v. Mackinnon (28)) where he said:

"The object of the law-merchant, as to bills and notes made or to become payable to bearer, is to secure their circulation as money; therefore honest acquisition confers title. To this despotic but necessary principle the ordinary rules of the common law are made to bend."

I am content to leave the matter there, for I must follow Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg (27) and not equate an assignment or conveyance of immovables with instruments to which the law merchant is applicable.

It was urged on behalf of the building society that this case fell within the principle of the decision of the House of Lords in Brocklesbury v. Temperance Building Society (30). What was there in question, however, was I think another kind of estoppel, and in reference to that case I simply echo the remark of LORD SUMNER in R. E. Jones, Ltd. v. Waring and Gillow, Ltd. (31) that that case is inapplicable since Mr. Lee was in no sense the agent for Mrs. Gallie and she never knowingly held him out as authorised to deal with her property to the slightest extent.

The plaintiff, Mrs. Gallie, is in my judgment entitled to succeed against both defendants.

Declaration that the assignment was void, as against both defendants; inquiry as to damages against Mr. Lee; order for delivery of the deeds by the building society.

Solicitors: Hunt & Hunt (for the plaintiff); Gerald Black & Co. (for the first defendant); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Shoosmiths & Harrison, Northampton (for the second defendants).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

(27) [1911] 1 K.B. 489.

(28) (1869), L.R. 4 C.P. 704.

(29) (1863), 2 H. & C. 175 at pp. 184, 185.

(30) [1895] A.C. 173.

(31) [1926] All E.R. Rep. 36 at p. 47; [1926] A.C. 670 at p. 695.

A

BELL v. INGHAM.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Milmo, J.J.), March 18, 1968.]

Road Traffic—Driving licence—Endorsement—Common law misdemeanour—

B

Attempt to commit offence of taking and driving away motor vehicle without consent of owner or other lawful authority—No power to order endorsement of offender's driving licence—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. 2 c. 16), s. 217—Road Traffic Act, 1962 (10 & 11 Eliz. 2 c. 59), s. 7—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2 c. 55), s. 19 (9).

C

The appellant pleaded guilty to an information that he had attempted to take and drive away a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner thereof or other lawful authority contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1960, s. 217 (1)* and "against the peace of Our Sovereign Lady the Queen, Her Crown and Dignity". The justices fined him £10 and ordered that particulars of the conviction should be endorsed on any driving licence held by or issued to him. The appellant appealed against the order for endorsement.

D

Held: the common law misdemeanour of attempting to commit the offence enacted by s. 217 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, was not an offence specified in Part 2 of Sch. 1 to the Road Traffic Act, 1962, which specified the offence under s. 217 (1) but not the attempt, and as s. 7† of the Act of 1962 empowered or required endorsement of a licence only on conviction of an offence specified in Sch. 1, the justices had no jurisdiction to order endorsement in the present case, and thus the endorsement should be removed (see p. 335, letter H, p. 336, letter E, and p. 337, letter B, post).

E

Per CURIAM: endorsement on a driving licence is a penalty (see p. 336, letters D and E, and p. 337, letter B, post).

Observations on the construction of s. 19 (9)‡ of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (see p. 337, letter B, post).

F

Appeal allowed.

[As to the endorsement of driving licences, see 33 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 643, para. 1087; and for a case on endorsement, see DIGEST (Cont. Vol. B) 678, 413a.

As to the offence of attempting to commit a crime, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 306-308, para. 567.

G

For the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, s. 19, see 32 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 438.

For the Road Traffic Act, 1960, s. 217, see 40 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 898; and for the Road Traffic Act, 1962, s. 5, s. 7, Sch. 1, see 42 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 891, 894, 923.]

Case referred to:

H

R. v. Pearce, [1952] 2 All E.R. 718; [1953] 1 Q.B. 30; 116 J.P. 575; 36 Cr. App. Rep. 149; 14 Digest (Repl.) 564, 5631.

Case Stated.

This was a Case Stated by justices for the borough of Scarborough in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court sitting at Scarborough in the North Riding of the county of York. On May 10, 1967, an information was preferred by the respondent, James Nettleton Ingham, against the appellant, Leslie Thomas Bell, that the appellant on Apr. 22, 1967, at Scarborough, together with Peter Anthony Frankish, did attempt to take and drive away a certain motor vehicle, namely a motor van, without having either the consent of the owner thereof or other lawful authority, contrary to s. 217 of the Road Traffic

I

* Section 217, so far as material, is set out at p. 334, letter I, to p. 335, letter A, post.

† Section 7, so far as material, is set out at p. 335, letter D, post.

‡ Section 19 (9), so far as material, is set out at p. 336, letter I, post.

Act, 1960, and against the peace of Our Sovereign Lady the Queen, Her Crown and Dignity. The justices heard the information on June 7, 1967, when the appellant entered a plea of guilty to the offence alleged against him. No evidence was received. In addition to imposing a fine of £10 on the appellant the justices ordered that particulars of the conviction be endorsed on any driving licence held by or issued to the appellant. It was in respect of the order for endorsement of any driving licence that the justices were requested to state a Case. The justices set out their reasons at length. In the course of them they stated, not only the matters appearing at p. 336, letters F to H, post, but also that endorsement of licence was not a punishment. A

The question stated for the opinion of the High Court was whether or not there was power to order endorsement of a driving licence and disqualification for holding or obtaining a driving licence on an offender being found guilty of an offence of attempting to take and drive away a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner or other lawful authority. B

D. E. Hill-Smith for the appellant.

N. A. Medawar for the respondent. C

ASHWORTH, J.: This is an appeal by way of Case Stated from a decision of justices sitting for the borough of Scarborough in the following circumstances: an information was preferred by the respondent against the appellant that he, the appellant, did attempt to take and drive away a certain motor vehicle, namely a motor van, without having either the consent of the owner thereof or other lawful authority; contrary to s. 217 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, and against the peace of Our Sovereign Lady the Queen, Her Crown and Dignity. The reason why I mention those matters is, as will appear, that s. 217 of the Act of 1960 does not itself provide for the offence of attempting to take and drive away. D

When the information was heard, a plea of guilty was entered by the appellant: no evidence was received, but the facts were recited to the justices and are in a very short compass. Apparently on a Saturday evening a police officer in Scarborough saw the appellant and another youth getting into a motor van. The time was a quarter of an hour before midnight, and some six minutes later, as the result of information which he had received, the police officer stopped the appellant when he was leaving the area. The appellant was taken to the police office, and eventually admitted that he and his companion were going to drive round the coach park. He said: E

"I don't think we would have gone on to the main road. A man passed and Pete got out. I lifted the engine cover, but that was all. All I can say is that I've had some beer and maybe that caused it, but I wouldn't have taken it far." F

He was thereupon fined £10 and there was no quarrel with that financial penalty: but the justices also ordered that the particulars of the conviction should be endorsed on any driving licence held by or issued to the appellant, and it is in respect of that order for endorsement of the driving licence that the appellant comes before this court. G

The justices evidently considered the matter with considerable care, and have set out their reasons for coming to the view that they could order the endorsement to be placed on the licence at some length. For my part I would prefer at this stage, at any rate, to consider for a moment the relevant statutory provisions. Section 217 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, provides (1) that: H

"A person who takes and drives away a motor vehicle without having either the consent of the owner thereof or other lawful authority or knowing that a motor vehicle has been so taken, drives it or allows himself to be I

- A carried in or on it without such consent or authority shall (subject to the next following subsection) be liable (a) on conviction on indictment, to a fine not exceeding £100 ... (b) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £50 ..."

There are also provisions for imprisonment. It will be noted that that section does not in terms provide for the offence of attempting to take and drive away without lawful authority, though it is also to be noted that in sub-s. (4) a police officer is given express authority to arrest without a warrant a person reasonably suspected by him of attempting to commit an offence under that section. Nonetheless, it is quite plain that there is such an offence as attempting to take and drive away without lawful authority, and indeed the matter came before the Court of Criminal Appeal, as it then was known in R. v. Pearce (2), where LORD GODDARD, C.J., giving judgment, said (3): "As the defendant attempted to commit the offence... he was guilty of a common law misdemeanour...", and that indeed was the offence of which the defendant was guilty. In 1962 the Road Traffic Act, 1962, provided in s. 7 for endorsement of licences and it states:

- D "(1) Subject to sub-s. (2) of this section, where a person is convicted of an offence specified in Pt. 1 or Pt. 2 of Sch. 1 to this Act, the court shall order that particulars of the conviction, and, if the court orders him to be disqualified, particulars of the disqualification, shall be endorsed on any licence held by him ...

- E "(2) If the court does not order the said person to be disqualified, the court need not order particulars of the conviction to be endorsed as aforesaid if for special reasons it thinks fit not to do so."

The offences referred to in s. 7 are those set out in Pt. 1 and Pt. 2 of Sch. 1 to the Act of 1962. Part 1 consists of six offences, and the heading is: "Offences involving obligatory disqualification". Part 2, which contains a much longer list of offences, is headed: "Offences involving discretionary disqualification."

- F Item 24 in Pt. 2 of that schedule is in these words:

"An offence under s. 217 (1) of the principal Act (taking, etc., motor vehicle without authority)."

That, therefore, is the offence in question specified in Pt. 2 of Sch. 1 to the Act of 1962.

- G Returning, therefore, to the wording of s. 7 of the Act of 1962, it is to be noted that the opening words refer to a person being convicted of an offence specified in Pt. 1 or Pt. 2 of Sch. 1, and one asks: was the offence of attempting to take and drive away a motor vehicle without authority so specified? To that, there can be only one answer, namely: no. In my judgment, on that short ground, though there are others, this action by the justices in endorsing the appellant's
- H licence, purporting to act under s. 7 was misconceived.

It does not, however, stop there, because, as counsel for the appellant has pointed out, s. 5 is dealing with disqualification (4), and sub-s. (6) provides:

- I "The foregoing provisions of this section shall apply in relation to a conviction of an offence committed by aiding, abetting, counselling or procuring, or inciting to the commission of an offence specified in Pt. 1 of Sch. 1 to this Act as if the offence was specified in Pt. 2 of that schedule."

(2) [1952] 2 All E.R. 718; [1953] 1 Q.B. 30.

(3) [1952] 2 All E.R. at p. 719; [1953] 1 Q.B. at p. 31.

(4) Section 5, so far as material, provides: "(1) Where a person is convicted of an offence specified in Pt. 1 of Sch. 1 to this Act the court shall order him to be disqualified ... (2) Where a person is convicted of an offence specified in Pt. 2 of Sch. 1 to this Act the court may order him to be disqualified for such period as the court thinks fit."

The effect of this subsection is that when a person is convicted of aiding and abetting one of the offences specified in Pt. 1 of Sch. 1, he is to be treated for the purposes of disqualification and endorsement as if he had committed an offence specified in Pt. 2. There is, however, no corresponding provision in respect of aiding and abetting an offence specified in Pt. 2, much less any provision dealing with an attempt. A

In addition, s. 6 of the Act of 1960 deals with a person driving or attempting to drive a motor vehicle on a road when unfit through drinks or drugs. This provision expressly includes a case of attempting to drive, and when that is related to Sch. 1, one finds that an offence under s. 6 (1) of the principal Act, driving under the influence of drink, is an offence involving obligatory disqualification, and so is attempting in that instance, but there is no room, in my judgment, for importing attempts into the specified offences in the way that it was done in this case. B

The justices said that nowadays an endorsement is not a penalty. For my part I am inclined to think counsel for the appellant is right, that whatever may have been the position before the recent legislation, the presence of an endorsement on a licence now is something that any motor driver would seek to avoid, and as it comes as the result of an offence by him, it is in my judgment truly described as part of the penalty. In my judgment, therefore, the justices were wrong in ordering that this appellant's licence should be endorsed, and I would allow this appeal, and order the endorsement to be removed. C

MILMO, J.: I agree. I would add only one word, about the construction that the justices in this case have placed on s. 19 (9) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, because I think it is quite clear that they have read something into that section that is not there, and have in consequence misdirected themselves. D

One observes from para. 3 of the Case Stated that the justices state this: E

"Such offence [that is the offence of attempting to take and drive away] is a hybrid offence in that it is triable on indictment or summarily at the prosecutor's election. An attempt to commit such an offence is an indictable misdemeanour at common law triable summarily with the accused's consent pursuant to s. 19 of and Sch. 1 to the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 [then follows the important passage] If it were not for s. 19 (9) of the Magistrates Courts Act, 1952, a person attempting to take and drive away a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner or other authority, tried summarily, would be liable to a greater penalty than would a person completing such offence." F

That may well be so, but the justices go on G

"This subsection enacts that the person attempting the offence shall not be liable to greater punishment than the person completing such offence on summary trial. Parliament intended that the punishments should equate." H

There is nothing whatever in the Act of 1952 to support that statement. Later on the justices state: I

"It seems strange that Parliament should be at pains to ensure that the penalties should equate but not the consequences."

When one looks at s. 19 (9), it provides that:

"Where a person is convicted under this section of attempting to commit an offence that is both an indictable offence and a summary offence, he shall not be liable to any greater penalty than he would be liable to on being summarily convicted of the completed offence."

A The justices have read into that section something which just is not there, because they are reading that section as meaning: he shall be liable to the same penalties as he would have been liable to had he been convicted summarily of the completed offence. In my judgment there is no justification for saying that it was the purpose of the legislature to equate the penalties; it was not, the purpose was to ensure that the attempt should not be punished by a greater penalty

B than the substantive offence. I agree that this appeal must be allowed.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: I agree with both judgments.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Herbert Smith & Co., agents for Pearsons & Ward, Scarborough (for the appellant); Thorpe & Co., Scarborough (for the respondent).

[Reported by ELLEN B. SOLOMONS, Barrister-at-Law.]

D SWEET v. PARSLEY.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Blain, JJ.), March 22, April 4, 23, May 13, 1968.]

Drugs—Dangerous drugs—Cannabis—Tenant of house—No knowledge that cannabis being smoked on premises—Rooms in house sub-let and in fact used for smoking cannabis—Whether tenant concerned in the management of premises used for smoking of cannabis—Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 (c. 15), s. 5 (b).

The appellant was tenant of a farmhouse in Oxfordshire. She herself let rooms in the farmhouse at £5 to £6 a month, each so-called sub-tenant having the use of a bedroom and a right in common with everyone else in the house to the use of the kitchen. The appellant retained a bedroom in the farmhouse for her own use, though when she was away she allowed others to use it. Early in 1967 she had to move into Oxford, and thereafter only visited the farmhouse occasionally to collect rent, etc. On June 16, 1967, the police searched the farmhouse and garden and found small quantities of drugs. The appellant was charged with being concerned in the management of premises which were used for the purpose of smoking cannabis or cannabis resin contrary to s. 5 (b)* of the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965. It was not in dispute that the premises had been used for the purpose of smoking cannabis resin and that the appellant herself had no knowledge whatever that the house was being used for that purpose. On appeal against conviction,

Held: though the fact that the appellant was tenant of the farmhouse and thus responsible for its rent and maintenance did not of itself establish that she was concerned in the management of the premises, which was a question of fact depending on the exact circumstances of the case, yet in the present case the justices were fully entitled to hold that the appellant was concerned in the management of the premises (see p. 340, letter B, post).

Yeandel v. Fisher ([1965] 3 All E.R. 158) considered.
Appeal dismissed.

[As to offences under the Dangerous Drugs Acts, see 26 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 215, para. 487; and as to offences concerning the smoking of cannabis, see SUPPLEMENT thereto.]

For the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965, s. 5, see 45 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 895.]

* Section 5, so far as material, is set out at p. 339, letter E, post.

Case referred to:

Yeandel v. Fisher, [1965] 3 All E.R. 158; [1966] 1 Q.B. 440; [1965] 3 W.L.R. 1002; 129 J.P. 546; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 151, 57a.

Case Stated.

This was a Case Stated by justices for the county of Oxford in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court sitting at Woodstock on Sept. 14, 1967.

On July 21, 1967, a charge was made by the respondent Edmund Raymond Parsley, a sergeant of the Oxfordshire Constabulary, against the appellant, Stephanie Lavinia Sweet, charging that she on June 16, 1967, was concerned in the management of certain premises situate at Fries Farm in the parish of Gosford and Watereaton in the county of Oxford which were used for the purpose of smoking cannabis or cannabis resin contrary to s. 5 (b) of the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965. The facts are summarised in the judgment of LORD PARKER, C.J.

Before the justices the appellant conceded, and the justices found, that the premises at Fries Farm were used for the purpose of smoking cannabis resin. It was contended on behalf of the appellant before the justices that the phrase "concerned in the management of the premises" could not properly be applied to a landlord letting rooms to tenants; that the Act was designed to impose a responsibility on those in charge of premises to which members of the public had access, e.g., a public house or dance hall; that it could not be the intention of the legislature to impose on a landlord the responsibility of seeing that drugs were not being smoked behind the doors of rooms let to tenants; and that in no sense could a landlord of such premises be termed "a manager". It was further contended on behalf of the appellant that the law drew a distinction between persons who were "on the spot" and concerned with the management of premises and an occupier who might be an absent occupier and not on the premises at all. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that to all intents and purposes she was not "on the spot" but could be more properly termed an absent occupier. The fact that she had a room at the premises was not significant as she did not occupy that room except very occasionally and she was in the same position as a landlord who visited premises periodically to collect rents who would be termed an absent occupier.

It was contended by the respondents before the justices that by accepting responsibility to her landlord to pay rent and to maintain the premises the appellant could be said to be "concerned in the management of the premises" and that on the facts proved in evidence before us she was so concerned in the management of premises as to have committed an offence within s. 5 (b) of the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965.

The justices were of opinion that the appellant was concerned in the management of the premises at Fries Farm which were used for the purpose of smoking cannabis resin and they accordingly convicted her and imposed a fine of £25 on her and ordered her to pay £12 18s. costs. The appellant appealed.

Leo Clark for the appellant.

R. M. A. C. Talbot for the respondent.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: On the evening of June 16, 1967, police constables went to this farm with a search warrant, and there they found what I would call odds and ends of various drugs. They found underneath a stone behind the boundary wall two bottles of tablets which turned out to be amphetamine sulphate; they found a polythene bag with tablets, a silver match box which showed traces of cannabis resin; in the garden they found a blue envelope containing what turned out to be L.S.D., and in the kitchen they found three home-made cigarette ends and an ash tray which again disclosed cannabis resin. Mr. Cook is the tenant of Fries Farm who on Oct. 1, 1966, sub-let the farmhouse to this appellant under an agreement for a term of nine months

- A certain and so on for three months and three months at a rent of £28 per four weeks payable in advance. Accordingly, the appellant became sub-tenant of these premises. The appellant herself from 1963 to 1966 was an undergraduate at Oxford, and in October, 1966, she became a teacher at a school in Oxford where she taught Spanish, English and mathematics. When she became sub-tenant of these premises on Oct. 1, 1966, she had intended to go and live there
- B with another girl and motor into Oxford every day, but she found that the rent was too much for her and so she decided to sub-let rooms in the farmhouse. In fact she let rooms out at £5 to £6 per month, each so-called tenant having the use of the bedroom and a right in common with everybody else in the house to use the kitchen, the appellant herself retaining her own bedroom in the farmhouse for her own use, though when she went away she allowed others to use it.
- C On Jan. 1, 1967, her car broke down, she could not afford to have it repaired, and, therefore, she had to move into Oxford, and from then on she only visited the farmhouse occasionally, as she put it, to collect letters, to collect any rent, and to see that the place had not been burned down and that everything was all right. That was the position, and two things at the trial were really conceded: one was that the premises had been used for the purpose of smoking cannabis
- D resin, but also it was conceded that the appellant herself had no knowledge whatever that the house was being used for that purpose. It was in those circumstances that she was charged with being concerned in the management of the premises.

Section 5 of the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 provides that:

- E “If a person (a) being the occupier of any premises, permits those premises to be used [inter alia] for the purpose of smoking cannabis or . . . (b) is concerned in the management of any premises used for any such purpose . . . he shall be guilty of an offence.”

In the case of Yeandel v. Fisher (1), this court had occasion to consider this section, and the court noted the difference between para. (a) and para. (b).

- F If somebody is a mere occupier he can only be guilty of an offence if it is proved that he permitted, which as we all know involves some knowledge or constructive knowledge. By contrast, para. (b) in dealing with somebody concerned with the management of premises where cannabis is smoked contains an absolute liability; it does not depend on knowledge at all.

- G In this appeal counsel for the appellant really puts the matter, as I understand it, in two ways. He says in the first place that this appellant was an occupier, she was in occupation of her bedroom, she was the sub-tenant, she was in occupation presumably of the garden, and herself would have a right in common with others to use the kitchen. He says that being an occupier she can only be liable under the section if she permits, and it is agreed she did not permit. In my judgment there is a fallacy in that argument, in that para. (a) and para. (b) in the subsection are not mutually exclusive. A person can be an occupier and
- H may also be concerned in management.

The second way in which he puts it is this, that on the facts here it is impossible in law to say that this appellant was concerned in the management of the premises. It is to be observed that the contention put forward by the respondent before the justices was in this form, that by accepting responsibility to her landlord to

I pay rent and to maintain the premises, the appellant could be said to be concerned in the management of the premises. In my judgment that is too wide, and one can conceive many cases when a landlord has let either the whole of the premises or parts of the premises, where it could not properly be said that he was concerned in the management of the premises.

In my judgment there is no single test to be applied in order to decide whether someone is concerned with the management of premises; it is a question in all cases of fact depending on the exact circumstances, and there is no test which alone is applicable. It is quite true in this case, as counsel for the appellant has pointed out, that this appellant would be unable properly to enter rooms that she had let, that she would be unable to refuse entry to guests of persons to whom she had let rooms, and that she may have been unable to expel, as it were, anybody who was doing anything wrong. At the same time, however, if one thinks of these premises with a number of rooms let off in this way for short periods, with the common use of the kitchen, in any ordinary sense of the word a person would say she was managing the properties; she was in a position to choose her tenants; she could put them under as long or as short a tenancy as she desired; and she could make it a term of any letting that smoking of cannabis was not to take place. It seems to me that on the facts of this case the justices were fully entitled to hold that she was concerned in the management of the premises. Accordingly, I would dismiss this appeal.

ASHWORTH, J.: I agree.

BLAIN, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal refused.

May 13. On renewal of the application for leave to appeal, which had been refused on Apr. 4, but had been renewed on Apr. 23 and then had been adjourned pending the decision of the appeal in Warner v. Metropolitan Police Comr. (2), and now again came before LORD PARKER, C.J., and BLAIN, J.:—

Rose Heilbron, Q.C., and I. Brownlie, for the applicant, referred to Warner's case (2) and submitted that comparison of the opinions of their lordships in the House of Lords in that case indicated the need for further consideration of the section under which the present applicant had been convicted.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: We have been in communication with ASHWORTH, J., since the decision of the appeal in Warner's case (2), and we think that the applicant should have leave to appeal. We have drafted certain points on which we are prepared to certify under s. 1 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, that points of law of general public importance are involved. These points are—(i) whether s. 5 (b) of the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 creates an absolute offence; and (ii) what, if any, mental element is involved in the offence. Those are the points of law of general public importance. Having given leave to appeal on those, it seems right to add a third, so as to make certain that their lordships have jurisdiction over the whole of the case, viz.—(iii) whether, on the facts found, a reasonable bench of magistrates, properly directing their minds on the law, would have convicted the applicant.

Leave to appeal granted accordingly.

Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard, agents for Harry F. Galpin & Co., Oxford (for the appellant); Cunliffe & Mossman, agents for County Prosecuting Solicitor, Bristol (for the respondent).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. MARSDEN.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CRIMINAL DIVISION (Sachs, L.J., Cantley and Cusack, J.J.), March 25, 1968.]

Criminal Law—Sentence—Hospital order—Hospital order may be made for admission to a hospital in any part of the country where a vacancy exists—Mental Health Act, 1959 (7 & 8 Eliz. 2 c. 72), s. 60.

An order under s. 60* of the Mental Health Act, 1959, may authorise the offender's admission to, and detention in, a hospital in any part of the country (see p. 342, letter F, post).

PER CURIAM: once such an order is made it is competent for the appropriate authorities to arrange later a transfer to a hospital in an area closer to the patient's family (see p. 342, letter G, post).

[As to hospital orders under the Mental Health Act, 1959, see 29 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 524, 525, para. 985.

For the Mental Health Act, 1959, s. 60, see 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1013.]

Appeal.

This was an appeal by June Marsden against a sentence of borstal training imposed on her by the recorder (SIR JOSEPH MOLONY, Q.C.) at Bristol Quarter Sessions on Sept. 28, 1967, to which court she had been committed for sentence under s. 29 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, after pleading guilty at Bristol Magistrates' Court on Sept. 13, 1967, to stealing 2s. 6d. Leave to appeal against sentence was granted by JAMES, J., in order that the court might look at the sentence in the light of the facts of the offence and the antecedents of the offender.

C. F. Sara for the appellant.

J. H. R. Newey for the Ministry of Health and the Home Office.

SACHS, L.J., delivered the following judgment of the court: On Sept. 13, 1967, at Bristol magistrates' court the appellant, aged seventeen, pleaded guilty to a very petty larceny and was committed for sentence under s. 29 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, to Bristol quarter sessions. At those sessions on Sept. 28 she was sentenced to borstal training. Now by leave she appeals against the sentence and the real objective of the appeal, as stated by counsel on her behalf, is to obtain instead of an order for borstal training a hospital order under s. 60 of the Mental Health Act, 1959.

Leave to appeal was given in October, 1967, and it is as well to state that the lapse of time before the matter has come before this court has been entirely due to the very great care that has been taken to obtain various medical reports and to ensure that the best thing that can be done will be done for the appellant. She is someone who has had a sad past: as a result she was placed in the care of the local authority already at the age of ten months and she has, indeed, been in the charge of the Cardiff children's department for a great part of her life. Whilst she was under that care she absconded from the hostel, "slept rough", went to the house of a boy friend whose mother let her stay there and there committed the larceny of a very small sum of money which brought her again before the courts.

* Section 60, so far as material, provides: "Where . . . (a) the court is satisfied, on the written or oral evidence of two medical practitioners (complying with the provisions of s. 62 of this Act),—(i) that the offender is suffering from . . . psychopathic disorder . . . ; and (ii) that the mental disorder is of a nature or degree which warrants the detention of the patient in a hospital for medical treatment . . . ; and (b) the court is of opinion having regard to all the circumstances including the nature of the offence and the character and antecedents of the offender, and to other available methods of dealing with him, that the most suitable method of disposing of the case is by means of an order under this section, the court may by order authorise his admission to and detention in such hospital as may be specified in the order . . ."

When the matter came before quarter sessions there were great difficulties as to the way in which the court should proceed. It had become very clear that the normal avenues a court would like to pursue were in this case closed. The parent's home was unsuitable. An offer from a certain quarter of a home turned out also to be an offer of a type which no court could reasonably accept. A probation hostel had been tried, had failed, and was thus no good. It was in those circumstances that the court had to come to a conclusion on what could be done, and borstal training was ordered because there was no other available way of dealing with the appellant at that stage.

The unfortunate fact, however, is, as appears from later reports, that by reason of the appellant's limited intelligence and personality she has no adequacy to cope with and would derive no benefit from borstal training, whilst on the other hand she is unfitted to lead an unsupervised life in the community at large. Moreover, later it became clear that there were questions both of subnormality and of a psychopathic disorder, and this court has accordingly made a great many efforts to obtain the best medical reports that could be procured on the subject. By the time when the matter came before the court on the last occasion it had become clear that the proper order would be one under s. 60 of the Mental Health Act, 1959, but the obstacle to the court's acting on that occasion arose out of certain passages in the report of a very experienced prison medical officer. According to that officer the only place to which it was permissible for the appellant to be sent would for some reason be one administered by the Welsh Regional Board: and it was also stated to this court that there was no vacancy in any of the institutions administered by that board. This information naturally caused considerable concern to the court, for if it had been accurate it would mean that the administration of justice would be liable to be impeded by the absence of a vacancy in an institution in a particular region, and it would not be open to this court to take advantage of the existence of vacancies in other institutions in other regions. Had that been so it would have been a matter of lamentable red tape.

This court, however, has now been informed by counsel, who came here to put forward all available information from both the Ministry of Health and the Home Office, that the apprehensions of the court were unfounded. It is perhaps of some importance that it should be known generally that there is neither any statutory rule or order, nor is there any administrative rule or order, nor according to counsel is there any administrative way of thinking which precludes somebody, in respect of whom a s. 60 order ought to be made, going to whatever vacancy may be existing at the time in any institution in any part of the country. Once that order has been made it is quite competent for the appropriate authorities later on to arrange a transfer to an institution in an area closer to the patient's family, etc. (1).

Having thus been able, with the aid of counsel to make the position crystal clear in the future, the question now comes back as to what is the appropriate order in this particular case. The court has before it two reports from qualified practitioners within the meaning of the Mental Health Act, 1959 (2). Both of them state that in their opinion the appellant is suffering from a psychopathic disorder within the meaning of the Mental Health Act, 1959 (3). Both of them state that that disorder is in the nature or degree which warrants her detention in a hospital for medical treatment, and both of them make it clear that now, as opposed to on the last occasion, there is a vacancy at the Mid-Wales Hospital, Talgarth, Breconshire. In those circumstances the court, which is much concerned for the welfare of the appellant and is of the opinion that it is unfortunately necessary that she be within such an institution for quite a considerable time, makes the order under s. 60 that she go to the particular hospital which

(1) See Mental Health Act, 1959, s. 63 (3), s. 41, and Sch. 3; 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1017, 997, 1087.

(2) As required under s. 60 of the Act of 1959, see footnote *, p. 341, ante.

(3) Psychopathic disorder is defined in s. 4 (4) of the Act of 1959; 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 967.

A has just been named, and expresses thanks to both counsel for their efforts which have brought about the state of affairs on which an appropriate order can be made.

Appeal allowed. Sentence varied.

Solicitors: Kingsley Napley & Co. (for the appellant); Solicitor, Ministry of Health.

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

LITTLER v. LIVERPOOL CORPORATION.

[LIVERPOOL ASSIZES (Cumming-Bruce, J.), February 2, 1968.]

C Highway—Maintenance—Standard of repair—Flagstone defective—Small triangular gap at corner, making a possible tripping point one half-inch in depth—Defect not a reasonably foreseeable cause of danger in a pavement in public use—Unevenness in pavement insufficient to give rise to cause of action in negligence or for breach of statutory duty—Highways Act, 1959 (7 & 8 Eliz. 2 c. 25), s. 44 (1).

D [Editorial Note. Section 44 (1) of the Highways Act, 1959, imposes on a highway authority a duty to maintain a highway repairable at the public expense, and by s. 295 (1) "maintain" includes "repair". The words of earlier legislation either imposed duty to "repair and keep in repair" or to "maintain and repair"; see generally 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 115, 116, para. 173, and for cases on the standard of repair of highways repairable at the public expense, see 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 382-384, 913-927.

E For the Highways Act, 1959, s. 44, s. 295 (1), see 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 461, 708.]

Cases referred to:

Griffiths v. Liverpool Corpn., [1966] 2 All E.R. 1015; [1967] 1 Q.B. 374; [1966] 3 W.L.R. 467; 130 J.P. 376; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 329, 1278a.

F Grundy v. Liverpool Corpn., (Liverpool Assizes, June 27, 1966) unreported. Meggs v. Liverpool Corpn., [1968] 1 All E.R. 1137.

Action.

By writ issued on Oct. 21, 1966, the plaintiff, Thomas Littler, an infant suing by his father and next friend, claimed from the Corporation of the City of Liverpool damages for personal injuries sustained by alleged breach of statutory duty and negligence. The plaintiff by his statement of claim delivered on Oct. 26, 1966, gave the following particulars of the alleged breach of statutory duty and negligence—(i) failure to maintain a highway (viz., Queens Road in the city of Liverpool) contrary to s. 44 of the Highways Act, 1959; (ii) failure to keep and maintain the highway in safe condition; (iii) failure to enclose or rope off or give any or adequate warning of the defective condition of the highway, and (iv) failure to take all reasonable precautions to avoid the accident. The plaintiff further pleaded in the alternative that the highway constituted a nuisance in its then condition and that the plaintiff suffered injury thereby. The defendants denied the alleged breach of statutory duty, negligence and nuisance. They pleaded further (among other alternative defences) that if the plaintiff suffered the alleged or any injuries, the same were caused solely or alternatively were contributed to by the plaintiff's own negligence in failing to keep a proper look-out. The trial judge (CUMMING-BRUCE, J.) intimated that the alleged breach of duty at common law did not add, having regard to the facts in the present case, to the alleged breach of statutory obligation. The following statement of fact is summarised from the judgment.

I The plaintiff, who was nineteen years of age, lived in Aubrey Street in the city of Liverpool. On the day of the accident he left home with two lemonade bottles, which were empty, to go to a shop at the corner of Queens Road and Tegid Street to get new bottles of lemonade. In the course of going there he stumbled and fell; the glass in his hand smashed and he was injured. The plaintiff had the handicap of constitutional backwardness. At the time when he fell he was running. On the evidence the trial judge decided that he was running from the shop towards home. The plaintiff alleged that the reason for his fall was that he caught the toe of his shoe on a lip of pavement sticking up above the level of the pavement from which he was coming. Thus his evidence was that he tripped, not that he slipped. The pavement was made of York stone flags about eighty years old. There was some unevenness of the surface; there were some cracks, other than the defect which was the alleged cause of the accident. There was, however, nothing likely to cause anyone to trip or stumble other than the one defect which was the alleged cause of the accident. The relevant facts, as found by the trial judge with regard to the pavement and the plaintiff's fall were accordingly that the plaintiff fell because he tripped by catching his toe in a half-inch triangular depression, three inches long on its longest side, while he was running on the pavement. There was no material source for complaint about the rest of the pavement, save that there was some irregularity of surface as a result of the wear of the York stone, but such irregularity would not present any danger of slipping. The pavement was constantly and had long been constantly in use by men, women and children.

The evidence which the trial judge accepted about the imperfection or defect in the pavement was that a small part of a corner of a flagstone had flaked away. The resulting defect in level at this point was in the shape of a right-angled triangle with a hypotenuse three inches in length and of a depth of half-an-inch. The effect of the flaking away of the flagstone was that one's foot would meet a half-inch ledge if one were going from Aubrey Street to Tegid Street. If one were going the other way, one could catch one's toe in the little cavity. After representatives of the highway authority had examined the pavement instructions were given to fill up the little gap with asphalt and to cover adjacent flags, and this was duly done.

H. L. Lachs for the plaintiff.

I. H. M. Jones for the defendants.

CUMMING-BRUCE, J., having stated the nature of the action and reviewed the facts and evidence concerning the accident and the state of the pavement in question, continued: The statutory duty of the defendants is to maintain the highway. A person who has suffered damage by reason of non-repair of a highway has a cause of action against the highway authority for breach of the duty to maintain, but what standard is a highway authority under a duty to maintain? The right of the subject is a right of passage along the highway. If the state of the highway is such that a subject is impeded or obstructed in his passage and he suffers damage other than personal injury thereby, it may be that he can establish a prima facie case without showing that the highway was dangerous: but where the cause of action of the plaintiff is that the plaintiff suffered personal injury by reason of the failure to maintain the highway, the plaintiff must make out a case that the highway was not reasonably safe, that is, was dangerous to the relevant traffic. This has now been settled by the Court of Appeal in Mcggs v. Liverpool Corpn. (1). Earlier uncertainty about the law illustrated in certain passages of PAUL, J.'s judgment in Grundy v. Liverpool Corpn. (2) is now removed.

(1) [1968] 1 All E.R. 1137.

(2) (Liverpool Assizes, June 27, 1966) unreported. The plaintiff, Mrs. Grundy, who was seventy-eight years of age, sustained an accident on Feb. 22, 1963, at about 3.15 p.m. She was walking home, after shopping, along the pavement. She heard a loud knocking; she turned her head to see the cause, and at this moment caught her foot in an upstanding edge of a paving stone and fell. The paving stone was cracked, and had sunk in the centre. At the point where the plaintiff tripped there was a ledge at which she tripped. The ledge was measured the same day by the plaintiff's daughter who found it to be three-quarters of an inch: the plan referred to at the trial showed it to measure half-an-inch. The action was founded on the Highways Act, 1959, particularly s. 44. The plaintiff was awarded £750 general damages.

A What, then, is the test of "dangerous" in this context? Once more, it is no longer necessary to rely on the persuasiveness of judgments at first instance or on my own undisciplined opinion. The approach foreshadowed obiter in the speeches in the Court of Appeal in Griffiths v. Liverpool Corpn. (3) has now become part of the law by the decision in Meggs' case. It is implicit in the words of LORD DENNING, M.R., where he says (4):

B "I must say I cannot go with that argument. It seems to me, using ordinary knowledge of pavements, that everyone must take account of the fact that there may be unevenness here and there, there may be a ridge of half-an-inch or three-quarters of an inch occasionally, but that is not the sort of thing which makes it dangerous or not reasonably safe."

C That passage occurs in a case in which the facts were that the plaintiff tripped and hurt herself because certain flagstones were uneven so that one of them had sunk about three-quarters of an inch.

The test in relation to a length of pavement is reasonable foreseeability of danger. A length of pavement is only dangerous if, in the ordinary course of human affairs, danger may reasonably be anticipated from its continued use by the public who usually pass over it. It is a mistake to isolate and emphasise a particular difference in levels between flagstones unless that difference is such that a reasonable person who noticed and considered it would regard it as presenting a real source of danger. Uneven surfaces and differences in level between flagstones of about an inch may cause a pedestrian temporarily off balance to trip and stumble, but such characteristics have to be accepted. A highway is not to be criticised by the standards of a bowling green.

E In the present case the only significant defect in the pavement was the small triangular gap which at its deepest presented a trip of half-an-inch. This is the kind of imperfection which has to be accepted in a pavement used by children and adults. Its presence would not make a reasonable person who considered the length of old pavement in Queens Road between Aubrey Street and Tegid Street think injury would ensue unless it was repaired. I say this although after the accident had happened Mr. Latham (5) was sensible in having it filled up.

I would add this: the sooner that the importance of the decision in Meggs' case (6) is appreciated in Liverpool by the profession and, in particular, those sitting on legal aid committees the better. There was room for doubt as to the ingredients of a prima facie case before Meggs' case (6) was decided. The Court of Appeal has resolved that doubt and it is important that all concerned in litigation should realise that there is not a cause of action whenever someone trips over an uneven pavement or as a result of a fractional difference in levels between flagstones.

Judgment for the defendants.

H Solicitors: Silverman, Livermore & Co., Liverpool (for the plaintiff); T. Alker, Town Clerk, Liverpool (for the defendants).

[Reported by K. B. EDWARDS, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

I

(3) [1966] 2 All E.R. 1015; [1967] 1 Q.B. 374.

(4) Meggs v. Liverpool Corpn., [1968] 1 All E.R. at p. 1139, letter I.

(5) Mr. Latham gave instructions on behalf of the highway authority, the defendants, that the small cavity should be filled in.

(6) [1968] 1 All E.R. 1137.

DEOKINANAN v. REGINAM.

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Viscount Dilhorne, Lord Hodson, Lord Upjohn), January 30, 31, February 1, 1968.]

Privy Council—Guyana—Criminal law—Evidence—Confession—Inducement—Person in authority—Statement to friend put in same lock-up as appellant by police—Whether person in authority.

It remains the law, after the decision in Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Harz ([1967] 1 All E.R. 177), that for a confession to be rendered inadmissible in evidence by being induced by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage, the inducement must be by a person in authority (see p. 350, letter H, post); and the mere fact that, at the time when a confession is made, the person to whom it is made is a possible witness for the prosecution does not make him a person in authority (see p. 349, letter G, post).

Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Harz ([1967] 1 All E.R. 177) considered.

The appellant with M. and two other persons had gone in a launch up river to buy timber, for which M. was given money. The appellant returned alone and said that the launch had met with an accident. He gave different stories to various people. Later the bodies of the three men were found in the river with wounds caused by a sharp cutting instrument and the stomachs of M. and another man were cut open. The boat was found sunk with the sea cork removed. The appellant was arrested. A few days later, B., whom the appellant regarded as his friend, was placed by the police in a lock-up in the hope that he would get information from the appellant, who was then brought to the lock-up. While in the lock-up the appellant asked B. to get money from Powis Island, to keep part himself and to give the rest to the appellant's father-in-law. B. asked how the money got missing and the bodies chopped up. The appellant, in the course of replying, said that in the launch he chopped M. in his neck, and that he and another man, D., decided to burst the belly of M. and another, and to sink their bodies with the boat anchor. The money was found subsequently at the exact spot which the appellant had described to B. At the trial of the appellant for murder of M., objection was taken to the admission of the statement made by the appellant to B. in the lock-up on the ground that it was induced by hope of advantage held out with the knowledge and consent of the police and was not voluntary. The objection was overruled. On appeal against conviction,

Held: on the evidence the appellant did not regard B. as a person in authority, but as a friend, and in accordance with the principle stated at letter B, above, the statement by the appellant to B. was not made to a person in authority, was voluntary and had been rightly admitted in evidence (see p. 349, letter I, and p. 350, letter I, post).

R. v. Wilson, R. v. Marshall-Graham ([1967] 1 All E.R. 797) considered. Appeal dismissed.

[As to who are persons in authority in relation to inducements to make confessions, see 10 HALSBUURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 469, 470, para. 861; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 468, 469, 4508-4522.]

Cases referred to:

Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Harz, [1967] 1 All E.R. 177; [1967] 1 A.C. 760; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 297; Digest (Repl.) Supp.

R. v. Gibbons, (1823), 1 C. & P. 97; 14 Digest (Repl.) 487, 4658.

R. v. Moore, (1852), 3 Car. & Kir. 153; 2 Den. 522; 21 L.J.M.C. 199; 16 J.P. 744; 14 Digest (Repl.) 488, 4694.

R. v. Row, (1809), Russ. & Ry. 153; 14 Digest (Repl.) 487, 4656.

R. v. Thompson, [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 376; [1893] 2 Q.B. 12; 62 L.J.M.C. 93; 69 L.T. 22; 57 J.P. 312; 14 Digest (Repl.) 468, 4521.

- A R. v. Todd, (1901), 13 Man. L.R. 364; 14 Digest (Repl.) 486, *3208.
R. v. Wilson, R. v. Marshall-Graham, [1967] 1 All E.R. 797; [1967] 2 Q.B. 406; [1967] 2 W.L.R. 1094; Digest (Repl.) Supp.

Appeal.

B This was an appeal by special leave from the judgment of the Court of Appeal of Guyana (STOBY, C., and LUCKHOO, A.J.; CUMMINGS, J.A. (Ag.), dissenting) given on Dec. 20, 1966, dismissing an appeal by the appellant against his conviction on Nov. 23, 1965, at his trial before the Supreme Court of British Guyana, when he was convicted of the murder of one Motie Singh and sentenced to death. On Oct. 15 and Oct. 22, 1963, one Raghubar had given money to Motie Singh to buy timber for Raghubar's sawmill, which was at Crabwood Creek at the mouth of the river. The appellant, with Motie Singh and two other men, Heera and Dindial, had gone up river in a launch to buy the timber. On Oct. 24, 1963, the appellant returned alone to a camp and got a lift downstream. He reported to Raghubar at Crabwood Creek. He said that the launch had met with an accident and that he found himself in the water near Maam Island. He gave various accounts to different people. C He was taken to the police station. On Oct. 25, 1963, the appellant, being with two policemen and Raghubar near Maam Island, pointed to a place in the river and said "This is the spot". Nothing was found there. On Oct. 26, the body of Dindial was found floating in the river near Ann's Creek about twenty-five miles up river from Maam Island; and the bodies of Heera and Motie Singh were found floating in the river about five miles from Ann's Creek. All three had wounds caused by a sharp cutting instrument. Motie Singh had a severe wound E in his neck, and he and Heera had had their stomachs cut open. On Oct. 28 the launch was found, sunk near Powis Island. It was brought to the surface, There was no sign of collision. Cutlasses which had been on board were missing, and so were the anchor and chain. The sea cork had been taken out. The launch had been deliberately sunk. The appellant was arrested and taken to F prison.

Balchand (who said that in 1963 he was a great friend of the appellant) went to the prison to see the appellant on Nov. 6. Balchand's account of what happened was as follows—

G "Accused said to me, 'Bal man, ah glad you come, I want to see you very important'. I asked him what was it all about so important. He said that he wanted me to help him because he knew I had an engine and a boat. I asked him what I could do to help him. He said that he got the money in Powis Island, and he wanted me to go to the island.

"The prison officer was patrolling behind the accused and he changed the conversation. In the presence of the accused, the prison officer said that the time was up. I then left the prison."

H Balchand said that on this occasion he had told the appellant that he would try his best to help by going for the money; it was Balchand's intention, so he said, to tell the police any information which he got from the appellant. It was not contended for the appellant that what was said to Balchand on this occasion was inadmissible in evidence.

I On Nov. 12, 1963, Balchand went to Whim Police Station. After speaking to one Sergeant Barker, he was placed in the lock-up, though not charged with any offence. He was put there in the hope that he would get information from the appellant and communicate it to the police. At about 1 p.m. the appellant was placed in the cell with Balchand. They were alone together for about an hour. Balchand's account of what happened included a statement that the appellant had given him directions where to find the money on Powis Island and that he was to take one thousand dollars for himself and to give to the appellant's father-in-law the balance. Balchand's account continued:

"I asked him how the money got missing. He said whilst they were coming on the river, 'We slipped out the money and hide it in the launch'. I asked him how the bodies got chopped. He told me that Dindial caused the whole trouble. He said that while they were coming, Motie Singh and Heera wanted to go to the Dutch police station to report the loss of the money; that Heera and Dindial had an argument, and Dindial told Heera to stop the launch; that Heera said 'No man, abee a go report the matter at the Dutch police station'. The while arguing Dindial picked up a cutlass, gave Heera several chops. He said that Motie Singh went to assist Heera, and he (the accused) picked up his cutlass and chopped Motie Singh on his neck; and the two of them decide to burst the belly of the men, to tie them and sink them with the boat anchor.

"I told the accused that I would try and assist to get the money."

After leaving the lock-up Balchand went with police officers to Powis Island where the money was found hidden exactly as the appellant had said.

At the trial objection was taken on behalf of the appellant to the admission in evidence of the statements made by the appellant to Balchand at Whim Police Station on the ground that they were induced by a promise to help the accused held out by a witness with the knowledge and consent of a person in authority, viz., Sergeant Barker, and were not made voluntarily. The trial judge ruled that the evidence was admissible. His LORDSHIP (VISCOUNT DILHORNE) said that the question to be decided on the appeal to the Judicial Committee was whether the judge's ruling was right. The appeal is reported only on the question whether, if inducement was offered, it was offered by a person in authority.

T. O. Kellock, Q.C., and L. J. Blom-Cooper for the appellant.

J. G. Le Quesne, Q.C., and S. G. Davies for the Crown.

VISCOUNT DILHORNE, having stated the facts relevant to the appeal, having reviewed Balchand's account of the appellant's statements to him and the circumstances in which they were made, and having referred to three cases (1) on the law concerning the admissibility of confessions, continued: In the light of what has been said in the cases referred to, the question for decision in this case is whether the prosecution established at the trial that the appellant's confession was free and voluntary and that he was not induced to confess by any promise or hope of advantage held out to him by a person in authority.

The appellant did not give evidence at the trial. Balchand's evidence as to the conversation at Whim Police Station was not contradicted nor was it challenged in cross-examination. At their meeting on Nov. 6, 1963, Balchand told the appellant that he would try to help him by going for the money. That promise was not conditional on the appellant telling Balchand what had happened. Balchand went to the prison to see the appellant at the request of the appellant's brother. The appellant said that he was glad Balchand had come as he thought Balchand was a friend on whom he could rely to assist him. At Whim police station Balchand repeated the promise he had already given and he was told by the appellant what to do with the money when he had found it. As LUCKHOO, A.J., said, in his careful and thorough judgment, nothing had happened to make Balchand appear to the appellant in a different light to that in which he had appeared on Nov. 6. LUCKHOO, A.J., rightly said:

"The very first words spoken by the appellant, who was the first to speak, would indicate that the same atmosphere and relationship which obtained at 'the prison conversation' prevailed. His words were 'What you doing here, Bal, you got the money?' 'Bal' was still his trusted friend; the recovery of 'the money' was still his earnest desire."

(1) Ibrahim v. Regem, [1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 874 at p. 877, letter H; [1914] A.C. 599 at p. 609; R. v. Thompson, [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 376 at p. 378, letter E, lines 5, 6, per CAVE, J.; [1893] 2 Q.B. 12 at p. 15; and Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Harz, [1967] 1 All E.R. 177; [1967] A.C. 760.

A LUCKHOO, A.J., held that the two questions which Balchand asked "were not tied to or hinged on any promises. They were independent of any promise to assist . . ." He went on to say "If he" (the appellant) "did not care to satisfy Balchand's curiosity and tell of 'How the money got missing?' and 'How the bodies got chopped?' there was no compulsion. Balchand had never promised (nor was it suggested that he did so) to assist only if he was told".

B Their lordships entirely agree with these observations. On the evidence given by Balchand, the appellant cannot have thought that his confession was the price he had to pay for Balchand's help. In their lordships' opinion it was established that the confession was not induced by any promise or hope of advantage held out to the appellant and was free and voluntary.

C Further even if a promise by Balchand had induced the confession, Balchand was not and could not in their lordships' opinion have been regarded by the appellant as a person in authority. It has long been established that a confession must be induced by a person in authority to be inadmissible in evidence (see R. v. Row (2); R. v. Gibbons (3); R. v. Moore (4)). In R. v. Wilson, R. v. Marshall-Graham (5) LORD PARKER, C.J., said:

D "The first question that arises is whether Captain Birkbeck was a person in authority. There is no authority, so far as this court knows, which clearly defines who does and who does not come within that category. It is unnecessary to go through all the cases; it is clear, however in R. v. Thompson (6) that the chairman of a company whose money was said to have been embezzled by the prisoner was held to be a person in authority. It is also clear that in some cases it has been held that the prosecutor's wife is a person in authority, and in one case that the mother-in-law of a person whose house had been destroyed by arson was said to be a person in authority vis-a-vis a young girl employed by the owner of the house; in other words she was looked upon as a person in authority in relation to that girl. Counsel for the appellant Marshall-Graham in the course of the argument sought to put forward the principle that a person in authority is anyone who can reasonably be considered to be concerned or connected with the prosecution, whether as initiator, conductor or witness. The court find it unnecessary to accept or reject the definition, save to say that they think that the extension to a witness is going very much too far."

E

F

G In the present case at the time of the confession Balchand was no more than a possible witness for the prosecution and their lordships agree that the mere fact that a person may be a witness for the prosecution does not make him a person in authority.

H STOBY, C., based his judgment in the Court of Appeal primarily on the ground, that Balchand was not and could not have appeared to the appellant to be a person in authority. CUMMINGS, J.A., in his dissenting judgment, said that Balchand must have appeared to the appellant from the part he played in the search to have been "close to the police" and "someone who perhaps in the mind of the accused could influence the course of investigation by virtue of his position". He thought that Balchand "could reasonably in the mind of the accused have been regarded as a person in authority".

I Their lordships do not agree. In their opinion the evidence shows clearly that the appellant did not so regard him. He thought that Balchand was his friend. If he had not thought that and had thought that Balchand was "close to the police", it is not likely that he would have asked Balchand to become in effect an accessory after the fact. He cannot have thought that Balchand when he met him in the lock-up at Whim was a person in authority.

(2) (1809), Russ. & Ry. 153.

(3) (1823), 1 C. & P. 97.

(4) (1852), 2 Den. 522.

(5) [1967] 1 All E.R. 797 at p. 801; [1967] 2 Q.B. 406 at p. 415.

(6) [1891-94] All E.R. Rep. 376; [1893] 2 Q.B. 12.

Counsel for the appellant argued that a person in authority meant a person who could fulfil the promise made and that as Balchand could have done what he promised, he was a person in authority. He contended that in the cases where confessions induced by promises made by persons in authority had been excluded, the promisor always had power to fulfil the promise. If this be the case, it does not follow that that is the meaning to be given to the words "person in authority". The fact that a person could have kept his promise may show the reality of the promise and that it was a real inducement, but it is not a definition of those words. Counsel for the appellant was unable to cite any case in support of his contention. In their lordships' opinion his contention cannot be sustained. Counsel also argued that it was to be inferred from the decision in Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Harz (7) that it was no longer necessary and part of the law that to be inadmissible a confession has to be induced by a person in authority. He submitted that it is illogical that a confession should not be regarded as inadmissible if the inducement came from someone without authority and yet a confession brought about by the same inducement is inadmissible if induced by a person in authority. Although the inducement is the same in one case the confession is regarded as free and voluntary and in the other it is not. This question was not considered in Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Harz (7) and it cannot be concluded that the decision in that case inferentially declared what has long been regarded as part of the law, was not the law.

In R. v. Todd (8) the accused was induced to confess by two detectives who were not peace officers, representing that they were members of an organised gang of criminals and that to gain admission to the gang he had to satisfy them that he had committed a crime of a serious nature. DUBUC, J., held that the promise was not made by a person in authority and consequently the confession was admissible. BAIN, J., who was of the same opinion (9) said:

"A person in authority means, generally speaking, anyone who has authority or control over the accused or over the proceedings or the prosecution against him. And the reason that it is a rule of law that confessions made as the result of inducements held out by persons in authority are inadmissible is clearly this, that the authority that the accused knows such persons to possess may well be supposed in the majority of instances both to animate his hopes of favour on the one hand and on the other to inspire him with awe,..."

The fact that an inducement is made by a person in authority may make it more likely to operate on the accused's mind and lead him to confess. If the ground on which confessions induced by promises held out by persons in authority are held to be inadmissible is that they may not be true, then it may be that there is a similar risk that in some circumstances the confession may not be true if induced by a promise held out by a person not in authority, for instance if such a person offers a bribe in return for a confession. There is, however, in their lordships' opinion, no doubt that the law as it is at present only excludes confessions induced by promises when those promises are made by persons in authority.

For the reasons stated, their lordships humbly advised Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Leman Harrison & Flegg (for the appellant); Charles Russell & Co. (for the Crown).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

(7) [1967] 1 All E.R. 177; [1967] 1 A.C. 760.

(8) (1901), 13 Man. L.R. 364.

(9) (1901), 13 Man. L.R. at p. 376.

A

R. v. LEICESTER LICENSING JUSTICES, Ex parte BISSON.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Milmo, J.J.), March 18, 1968.]

B

Licensing—Licence—Renewal Off-licence Original licence for sale of beer only—Amendment of law to reduce forms of off-licence to two only—One form was for intoxicating liquor of all descriptions, the other was for sale of beer, cider and wine only—Renewal to be for licence of type nearest to the previously existing licence, viz., for sale of beer, cider and wine—Such licence similar to previously existing licence within s. 3 (3) (a) of Licensing Act 1964—Licensing Act 1964 (c. 26), s. 1 (3) (as amended by Finance Act 1967 (c. 54), s. 5 (1) (c), Sch. 7, para. 1 (b) (ii)), s. 3 (3) (a).

C

B. had for over seven years held an off-licence limited to the sale of beer only. In February, 1968, he applied to the justices for its renewal. By that time the Finance Act 1967 had come into force and had reduced the types of off-licence to two, viz., an off-licence authorising the sale either of intoxicating liquor of all descriptions or of beer, cider and wine only (see s. 5 (1) (c)* of and Sch. 7, para. 1 (b) (ii)† of the Act of 1967, amending s. 1 (3)‡ of the Licensing Act 1964). The justices granted renewal of the off-licence for beer only, but to include cider also since that was formerly within the licence by virtue of s. 149 (3)§ of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952. On application for mandamus that the justices should renew the off-licence in due form having regard to the Act of 1967,

D

E

Held: the proper course on the application for the renewal was to grant such form of licence authorised by the Finance Act 1967 as was the nearest to the previously existing licence, viz., the form of off-licence for beer, cider and wine, which form was to be regarded as “similar” for the purposes of s. 3 (3) (a) of the Licensing Act 1964 to the previously existing off-licence; accordingly mandamus would issue (see p. 354, letter G, and p. 355, letters B and H, post).

F

Marwick v. Codlin ((1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 509) explained and distinguished.

Per CURIAM: it would be wrong to exact an undertaking on the renewal of a beer off-licence that the applicant would not sell, e.g., wine (see p. 354, letter A, post).

G

[As to renewal of justices' licences, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 549, para. 1088; and for cases on the subject, see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 37, 38, 287, 288, 293, 298-299.

For the Licensing Act 1964 s. 1, s. 3, see 44 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 483, 486.]

Case referred to:

H

Marwick v. Codlin, (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 509; 43 L.J.M.C. 169; 30 L.T. 719; 38 J.P. 518; 30 Digest (Repl.) 37, 287.

Motion for mandamus.

I

This was an application by way of motion on notice dated Feb. 19, 1968, by Edward Frank Bisson for an order of mandamus directed to the licensing justices for the city of Leicester to hear and determine an application for a grant by way of renewal of a justices' off-licence in due form to the applicant. The applicant had attended on Feb. 8, 1968, the annual licensing meeting for the city of Leicester

* Section 5 (1), so far as material, is set out at p. 353, letter B, post.

† Schedule 7, para. 1, so far as material, is set out at p. 353, letter C, post.

‡ Section 1 (3), is set out at p. 352, letter F, post.

§ Section 149 (3), so far as material, provided: “A person holding any licence under this section in respect of beer . . . may without taking out any further licence sell by retail at his licensed premises the following liquors respectively, that is to say—(a) cider as well as beer . . .” Section 149 was repealed by the Finance Act 1967, s. 5 (1) (a), s. 45 (8) and Sch. 16, Pt. 1.

to ask for a grant by way of renewal of an off-licence in respect of 130, Catherine Street, Leicester, premises owned by Ind Coope, Ltd. In evidence before the justices the applicant stated that he had held a justices' off-licence limited to beer only for seven years past, and asked for the grant by way of renewal of licence in the form of a licence to authorise the sale of beer, cider and wine only in the form provided by s. 1 (3) (b) (ii) of the Licensing Act 1964 as amended by the Finance Act 1967. The grounds of the application for mandamus were that (1) the justices were wrong in holding that they had no jurisdiction to renew the said licence in the form provided for in Sch. 7, para. 1 (b) (ii) to the Finance Act 1967, which amended s. 1 (3) of the Licensing Act 1964; and (2) that the licence which the justices did purport to grant was not a lawful licence.

The authorities and case noted below* were cited in argument in addition to the case referred to in the judgment.

D. W. T. Price for the applicant.

S. J. Waldman for the respondents.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: In order to understand the point involved in this case, it is necessary to refer to some of the legislation. The Licensing Act 1964 deals in s. 1 with justices' licences. That section provides:

"(1) In this Act and the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, 'justices' licence' means a licence under this Part of this Act authorising the holder to hold an excise licence for the sale by retail of intoxicating liquor (and also, in the case of a licence granted to a club for club premises, for its supply to or to the order of members otherwise than by way of sale). (2) In this Act... 'justices' off-licence' mean respectively—(a) a justices' licence authorising the holding of a retailer's on-licence (within the meaning of the said Act of 1952) that is to say, a licence authorising sale for consumption either on or off the premises for which the licence is granted; and (b) a justices' licence authorising the holding of a retailer's off-licence (within the meaning of that Act) that is to say, a licence authorising sale for consumption off those premises only. (3) A justices' licence shall be in such form as the Secretary of State may prescribe and may authorise the person to whom it is granted to hold as many excise licences as the justices' licence may specify."

Pausing there, it is clear, in my judgment, that a justices' licence, whether on-licence or off-licence, is a licence which authorises the holder to apply for and hold one or more excise licences as specified in the justices' licence. Excise licences were dealt with in the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, and, in particular, s. 149. It is unnecessary to read any part of that Act or that section; it is enough to say that thereunder numbers of excise licences were provided for, both in respect of on-licences and off-licences. There might be an excise licence for all descriptions of intoxicating liquor or for beer which, by reason of s. 149 (3) of the Act of 1952 included power to sell cider; an excise licence for cider only; for wine only; for spirits only; and for any combination of such intoxicating liquors.

Section 3 of the Licensing Act 1964 deals with the grant of justices' licences, and provides:

"(1) Licensing justices may grant a justices' licence to any such person, not disqualified under this or any other Act for holding a justices' licence, as they think fit and proper. (2) A justices' licence may be granted as a new licence or by way of renewal, transfer or, subject to s. 93 (4) of this Act, removal. (3) In this Act—(a) renewing a justices' licence means granting a justices' licence for any premises to the holder of a similar licence in force for those premises..."

* OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY, Vol. 9, Pt. 1, p. 59 "Similar"; PATERSON'S LICENSING ACTS (76th Edn., 1968), pp. 476, 777, 780, 1260, 1273; R. v. Crewkerne Licensing Justices, (1888), 4 Q.B.D. 85.

- A It may well be, though for my part I feel it unnecessary to decide the matter, that the renewal of a justices' licence could only take the form of renewing the licence that the licensee then held, limited as it was to a particular form of liquor. In other words, if a licensee held an off-licence for beer only, he could only get a renewal in the form of a licence for beer only, and not for beer plus some other form of intoxicating liquor. In 1967, however, by the Finance Act
- B 1967, retailers' excise licences were abolished; that was done by s. 5 of the Act of 1967, which provides:

"(1) As from Oct. 1, 1967, an excise licence shall not be required for the sale by retail of intoxicating liquor . . . the Licensing Act 1964 shall have effect subject to the provisions of Sch. 7 to this Act."

- C Schedule 7, para. 1 provides that:

"In s. 1 (3) [of the Act of 1964] for the words from 'and' onwards there shall be substituted the words 'and . . . (b) in the case of a justices' off-licence, may authorise the sale—(i) of intoxicating liquor of all descriptions; or (ii) of beer, cider and wine only'."

- D Reading that amendment, therefore, into the Act of 1964, one finds that sub-s. (3) now reads:

"A justices' licence shall be in such form as the Secretary of State may prescribe and . . . (b) in the case of a justices' off-licence, may authorise the sale—(i) of intoxicating liquor of all descriptions; or (ii) of beer, cider and wine only."

- E To return to the facts, the applicant had for a number of years held an off-licence limited to beer only in respect of premises at 130, Catherine Street, in the city of Leicester. On Feb. 8, 1958, that is to say after the amendment provided by the Finance Act 1967 had come into force, he applied for renewal of that off-licence. He claimed that since the effect of that amendment was that a licence for beer only could no longer be granted to him by way of renewal, he was entitled
- F to the nearer of the two types of licence provided for, namely that under the amended s. 1 (3) (b) (ii) of beer, cider and wine only. The justices, who went into this matter with the very greatest care, and have set out the matters which affected their minds in an affidavit to this court, came to the conclusion that what they ought to do was to renew the licence that he in fact had for beer only; but since under s. 149 (3) of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, he would have been
- G authorised as part and parcel of that licence to sell cider, they added the words in brackets "or cider".

- Despite the fact that the justices went into this with such care, I have come to the conclusion that what they did here was really the one thing which they had no power to do; and indeed counsel for the respondents, appearing in this court, has not sought to uphold that decision. I say it was the one thing that they could not
- H do because by reason of the amendment, the licence granted has to be not only in a form prescribed by the Secretary of State, but also has to be either for intoxicating liquor of all descriptions, or for beer, cider and wine only. It appears that this amendment has given rise to considerable trouble all over the country before licensing justices when renewals of the old licences come up. We have been told that some justices grant a beer, cider and wine only licence in every case,
- I even when the existing licence is limited, say, to beer or to wine; other justices, we are told, attempt to get over the difficulty by exacting undertakings, for instance that if the original licence was for beer only, the applicant for renewal would get the full licence for beer, cider and wine if he undertook not to sell cider and wine; and others have taken the view that it is impossible to deal with these licences by way of renewal and that the proper course is for the existing licensee to apply for a new licence, in which case if the licensing justices decide to grant it, it will be in the form prescribed under the amendment, of beer, cider and wine only. Limiting the possibilities here, it seems to me that any question of exacting an undertaking would be utterly wrong; if Parliament say that the form of the licence is to be for beer, cider and wine only, it would be doing exactly what the Act of 1964 says cannot be done, for the justices to exact undertakings limiting the sale to beer only. Accordingly, the only two alternatives, it seems to me, are for the justices on an application for renewal to grant the nearest to the existing licence, which in this case would not be for intoxicating liquor of all descriptions, but for beer, cider and wine only; or, to say that they cannot renew the licence in any form, and the existing licensee must apply for a new one. A

B

For my part I find it very difficult to think that by this amendment Parliament ever intended to deprive existing licensees of the privileges attached to their licences in regard to renewals. If a new licence has to be applied for, a different form of procedure has to be adopted in the way of inviting objections; and the justices at the end, even if there are no objections, have a discretion in the matter, and accordingly, on this view, Parliament's intention must have been to deprive people of the benefits attached to their existing licences, and to put them in jeopardy of getting nothing at all. It seems to me that the proper view here is that Parliament must have intended that in interpreting the Act of 1964, the provisions should be read in such a way as to enable the licensing justices not to deprive existing licensees of the benefits and privileges attached to their licences, but to do in effect the best possible in the circumstances. The difficulty of course arises by reason of the words in s. 3 (3) (a), that: C
D

"renewing a justices' licence means granting a justices' licence for any premises to the holder of a similar licence in force for those premises."

It can of course be said that to grant a licence as provided under the amendment for beer, cider and wine only would be to grant something different, not similar, to the licence already existing, namely for beer only. At the same time I am impressed by the view that the amending statute, the Finance Act 1967, by s. 5 (1) (c) has specifically provided that the Licensing Act 1964 shall have effect, subject to any amendment in the schedule. From that I deduce, in the absence of express words to the contrary, that the Licensing Act 1964 and in particular s. 3, dealing with renewals, shall take effect so as to enable justices to grant renewals. Looked at in that way, it seems to me that it would be perfectly right to give a wide meaning to the word "similar", a word which anyhow does not mean identical, and that it is possible to read that word "similar" as covering the grant of the nearest licence to the existing licence, namely in this case a licence for beer, cider and wine. Accordingly, I would hold that the proper course here for the justices was to grant such a licence. E
F
G

I would only add two points. One is that the justices were afraid that if they did that, they would be opening the door on the next renewal to the applicant saying that he wanted a full licence for all intoxicating liquor. The argument would be that if he is entitled by way of renewal on the first occasion to, as it were, add cider and wine, what is there to prevent him on the next occasion from adding "all other liquors" so that he has a licence for intoxicating liquors of all descriptions. For my part I think that there is no danger of that; an applicant for renewal could not go from one category to another category; he could not go from beer, cider and wine, which is one category, into the separate category of intoxicating liquor of all descriptions. Secondly, the justices felt somewhat constrained by the decision in 1874 of Marwick v. Codlin (1). It is unnecessary to go through the facts of that case, but SIR ALEXANDER COCKBURN, C.J., in dealing with the question whether a particular licence was a new licence or a renewal, said this (2): H
I

"This is either a new licence or a renewal of an old one. It is plainly not the latter. A renewal of a licence is a repetition of an old one, and cannot include anything not contained in the old one."

(1) (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 509.

(2) (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. at p. 516.

A That case, however, was on completely different statutes; in particular the renewal of a licence was not confined in any way to anything "similar". It provided that the renewal of a licence means a licence granted at a general annual licensing meeting by way of renewal. It seems to me that, whatever the position may have been under those statutes, under the Act of 1964, now that it has been amended in the way which I have described, the word "similar" in

B s. 3 (3) of the Act of 1964 should be given a wide meaning in order to enable people to get renewals of their existing licences in the form nearest to the licence they now hold.

Accordingly, I would issue in this case an order of mandamus to the justices to hear and determine this matter according to law in the light of the opinion of this court.

C ASHWORTH, J.: I agree. After the Licensing Act 1964, it seems to me that a licensee holding an off-licence for beer only who sought to apply for renewal and obtain a licence which covered him for beer, cider and wine would be in considerable difficulty, and his position may be contrasted with that of the holder of an on-licence in a similar case, because s. 37 of the Act of 1964 contained

D express power to extend an existing on-licence to additional types of liquor. It seems to me that the absence of any corresponding provision in regard to the holders of off-licences tells largely against any view that on the alteration of a licence from one for beer only to one for beer, cider and wine in respect of an off-licence holder, it would not be "similar" at all. That was the situation in 1965, and there is this further to be said. At that time the language, so to speak, of

E licences and the forms of licences which justices could give to the particular holders of off-licences were very wide. There has been supplied to this court a list of no less than fifteen different types of off-licences which justices could grant. In such circumstances, it may be that the task of deciding whether the new licence sought by renewal was similar to the old was one which could be carried out having careful regard to that list. When, however, the Finance Act, 1967 was passed, that range was cut down, and cut down, as LORD PARKER,

F C.J., has said, to two possible types. In my judgment the effect of that cutting down was incidentally, and I think directly, to give much greater scope to the word "similar" where it appears in s. 3 (3) of the Act of 1964. Any other construction of these two statutes would indeed lead to the result that the holder of an off-licence which did not happen to be an off-licence either for liquor of all descriptions or for beer, cider and wine only, would be quite unable to obtain a

G renewal of that licence. It seems to me that when one looks at the new range of licences and asks the question whether the old licence was similar to either of those, the answer plainly is: yes, the range has been reduced, but the similarity becomes more pronounced. I agree with the order proposed by LORD PARKER, C.J.

H MILMO, J.: I agree with both the judgments that have just been given and there is nothing which I can usefully add.

Order of mandamus granted.

Solicitors: Godden, Holme & Co., agents for Owston & Co., Leicester (for the applicant); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WARNER v. METROPOLITAN POLICE COMMISSIONER.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Reid, Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest, Lord Guest, Lord Pearce and Lord Wilberforce), February 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, May 2, 1968.]

Drugs—Dangerous drugs—“Possession”—Unauthorised possession—Alleged lack of knowledge of contents of parcel containing prohibited drugs—Mental element in statutory offence—Whether absolute offence—Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 (c. 64), s. 1 (1).

Where the words of an enactment creating a statutory offence, being the offence of possession of a prohibited article or substance, do not expressly predicate or exclude mens rea as an element of the offence, it is wrong to impute to Parliament, even if the enactment is directed against a grave social evil, an intention to deprive an innocent accused of all right to show by way of defence that he had no knowledge, or reason to suspect, that the prohibited article or substance was in his possession or in a container that was in his possession (per LORD REID, LORD PEARCE and LORD WILBERFORCE; see p. 367, letters C and G, p. 388, letter F, p. 391, letter H, p. 394, letter G, post; cf., p. 376, letter I, to p. 377, letter A, and p. 384, letter B, post). “Possession” of an article may, however, be satisfied by knowledge of the existence of the thing itself in the control of the possessor, but without his knowledge of its qualities (see p. 369, letter H, p. 375, letter C, p. 376, letter B, p. 384, letter A, p. 385, letter F, p. 388, letter H, and p. 393, letter D, post).

The appellant, who was a floor-layer by occupation, sold scent as a sideline. On Nov. 18, 1966, he went to a café, where on inquiry whether anything had been left for him the proprietor told him that there was something for him under the counter. The appellant found two boxes there which, according to his evidence, he took without looking inside the smaller box, assuming that it also contained scent. A police officer stopped the appellant when driving his mini-van. In the smaller of two boxes were found twenty thousand tablets containing amphetamine sulphate, a prohibited drug specified in the schedule to the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964. The larger box contained scent. The appellant was charged with having in his possession drugs contrary to s. 1* of the Act of 1964. The jury were directed that absence of knowledge on the part of the appellant of what the smaller box contained went only to mitigation. The appellant was found guilty. On appeal to the House of Lords on the question whether for the purposes of s. 1 a defendant was deemed to be in possession of a prohibited substance when to his knowledge he was in physical possession of the substance but was unaware of its true nature,

Held: (i) although there had been misdirection of the jury in the present case (or, per LORD MORRIS, the summing-up was inadequate on possession) and the appellant had thereby been deprived of putting before the jury a defence that should have been open to him, yet no reasonable jury would on the evidence have accepted the appellant’s story; accordingly the proviso† should be applied (see p. 369, letter I, p. 370, letter A, p. 375, letter F, p. 391, letter A, p. 395, letter A, post; cf., p. 381, letter G, and p. 385, letter I, post).

(ii) (per LORD REID, LORD PEARCE and LORD WILBERFORCE)‡ the strong inference that possession of a package by an accused was possession of its contents could be rebutted by raising real doubt either

(a) whether the accused (if a servant or bailee) had both no right to open

* Section 1, so far as material, is set out at p. 370, letters E and F, post.

† I.e., the proviso to s. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, as amended by s. 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1966.

‡ The formulation of the proposition is that of LORD PEARCE; LORD MORRIS and LORD GUEST substantially dissent from (ii) above.

A the package and no reason to suspect that the contents of the package were illicit, or

(b) that (if the accused were the owner of the package) he had no knowledge of, or was genuinely mistaken as to, the actual contents or their illicit nature and received them innocently, and also that he had no reasonable opportunity since receiving the package to acquaint himself with its contents (see p. 389, letters A and B, p. 394, letter A, p. 369, letter I, and p. 368, letter B, post).

B Dictum of LORD PARKER, C.J., in Lockyer v. Gibb ([1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 655, letter F) approved, but dictum at p. 656, letter E, both approved and criticised.

Beaver v. Reginam ([1957] S.C.R. 531) considered and applied.

C Chajutin v. Whitehead ([1938] 1 All E.R. 159) considered.

Per LORD REID (LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST and LORD GUEST dissenting): the offence with which the appellant was charged was not an absolute offence, and it was necessary for the prosecution to prove facts from which it could probably be inferred that the appellant knew that he had a prohibited drug in his possession (see p. 368, letter A, and p. 367, letter F, post).

D Per LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST and LORD GUEST: the appellant being, on the evidence, in physical control of the package and its contents either (per LORD MORRIS) with his consent thereto knowing that it had contents, or (per LORD GUEST) with knowledge that the package was in his control, his possession of the tablets was established for the purposes of s. 1 of the Act of 1964, whether or not the appellant realised that he was in possession of a prohibited drug (see p. 375, letter I, p. 380, letter H, p. 381, letter C, and p. 385, letter F, post).

E Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL (sub nom. R. v. Warner, [1967] 3 All E.R. 93) affirmed but by the majority on a different ground.

F [Editorial Note. There should not be attributed to Parliament the view that an offence could be enacted as an absolute offence on the basis that it would be left to the discretion of the police not to prosecute, or that justice would be served by imposing only a nominal penalty, in cases where the act in question was in fact innocently done, see per LORD REID (p. 366, letter B, post).

G As to mens rea in statutory offences, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 273, 274, para. 508; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 35-40, 48-95.

For the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964, s. 1, see 44 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 734.]

Cases referred to:

H A.-G. v. Lockwood, (1842), 9 M. & W. 378; affd. sub nom. Lockwood v. A.-G., (1842), 10 M. & W. 464; 152 E.R. 552; 39 Digest (Repl.) 270, 116.

Bank of New South Wales v. Piper, [1897] A.C. 383; 66 L.J.P.C. 73; 76 L.T. 572; 61 J.P. 660; 14 Digest (Repl.) 32, 40.

Beaver v. Reginam, [1957] S.C.R. 531; 33 Digest (Repl.) 557 *353.

Beswick v. Beswick, [1967] 2 All E.R. 1197; [1968] A.C. 58; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 932; Digest (Repl.) Supp.

I Blaker v. Tillstone, [1894] 1 Q.B. 345; 63 L.J.M.C. 72; 70 L.T. 31; 58 J.P. 184; 14 Digest (Repl.) 37, 70.

Brend v. Wood, (1946), 175 L.T. 306; 110 J.P. 317; 17 Digest (Repl.) 460, 194.

Bridges v. Hawkesworth, [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 122; (1851), 21 L.J.Q.B. 75; 18 L.T.O.S. 154; 3 Digest (Repl.) 68, 85.

Cartwright v. Green, (1803), 2 Leach 952; 32 E.R. 412; 15 Digest (Repl.) 1049, 10,330.

Chajutin v. Whitehead, [1938] 1 All E.R. 159; [1938] 1 K.B. 506; 107 L.J.K.B. 270; 158 L.T. 277; 102 J.P. 117; 14 Digest (Repl.) 139, 94.

- Cundy v. Le Cocq*, [1881-85] All E.R. Rep. 412; (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 207; 53 A L.J.M.C. 125; 51 L.T. 265; 48 J.P. 599; 30 Digest (Repl.) 96, 719.
- Davies v. Harvey*, (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 433; 43 L.J.M.C. 121; 30 L.T. 629;
38 J.P. 661; 14 Digest (Repl.) 42, 100.
- Gaumont British Distributors, Ltd. v. Henry*, [1939] 2 All E.R. 808; [1939]
2 K.B. 711; 108 L.J.K.B. 675; 160 L.T. 646; 103 J.P. 256; 13 Digest
(Repl.) 139, 822. B
- Harding v. Price*, [1948] 1 All E.R. 283; [1948] 1 K.B. 695; [1948] L.J.R.
1624; 112 J.P. 189; 45 Digest (Repl.) 48, 160.
- Hibbert v. McKiernan*, [1948] 1 All E.R. 860; [1948] 2 K.B. 142; [1948]
L.J.R. 1521; 112 J.P. 287; 15 Digest (Repl.) 1086, 10,752.
- Hobbs v. Winchester Corpn.*, [1910] 2 K.B. 471; 79 L.J.K.B. 1123; 102 L.T.
841; 74 J.P. 413; 14 Digest (Repl.) 37, 71. C
- Lim Chin Aik v. Reginam*, [1963] 1 All E.R. 223; [1963] A.C. 160; [1963] 2
W.L.R. 42; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 23, *166a.
- Lockyer v. Gibb*, [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243; [1966] 3 W.L.R.
84; 130 J.P. 306; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 522, 243b.
- Merry v. Green*, (1841), 7 M. & W. 623; 10 L.J.M.C. 154; 151 E.R. 916;
15 Digest (Repl.) 1048, 10,323. D
- Nichols v. Hall*, (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 322; 42 L.J.M.C. 105; 28 L.T. 473; 37
J.P. 424; 14 Digest (Repl.) 37, 66.
- Oliver v. Goodger*, [1944] 2 All E.R. 481; 109 J.P. 48; 25 Digest (Repl.) 148, 616.
- Pearks, Gunston and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward, Hennen v. Southern Counties Dairies Co.*, [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 228; [1902] 2 K.B. 1; 71 L.J.K.B. 656; 87
L.T. 51; 66 J.P. 774; 14 Digest (Repl.) 43, 115. E
- R. v. Ashwell*, (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 190; 55 L.J.M.C. 65; 53 L.T. 773; 50 J.P.
181, 198; 15 Digest (Repl.) 1048, 10,325.
- R. v. Bishop*, (1880), L.R. 5 Q.B.D. 259; 49 L.J.M.C. 45; 42 L.T. 240; 44
J.P. 330; 14 Digest (Repl.) 37, 77.
- R. v. Carpenter*, [1960] Crim. L.R. 633.
- R. v. Cohen*, (1858), 8 Cox, C.C. 41; 14 Digest (Repl.) 37, 74. F
- R. v. Gould*, [1968] 1 All E.R. 849; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 643.
- R. v. Hallam*, [1957] 1 All E.R. 665; [1957] 1 Q.B. 569; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 521;
121 J.P. 254; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 450, 12,403a.
- R. v. Hehir*, [1895] 2 I.R. 709; 29 I.L.T. 119; 15 Digest (Repl.) 1049, *6418.
- R. v. Hudson*, [1943] 1 All E.R. 642; [1943] K.B. 458; 112 L.J.K.B. 332;
169 L.T. 46; 107 J.P. 134; 15 Digest (Repl.) 1049, 10,329. G
- R. v. Jacobs*, (1908), 1 Cr. App. Rep. 215; 12 Cox, C.C. 151; 14 Digest (Repl.) 533, 5180.
- R. v. Langa*, [1936] S.A.L.R. (C.P. Div.) 158.
- R. v. Leinster (Duke of)*, [1923] All E.R. Rep. 187; 17 Cr. App. Rep. 176;
14 Digest (Repl.) 181, 1475.
- R. v. Prince*, [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 881; (1875), L.R. 2 C.C.R. 154; 44
L.J.M.C. 122; 32 L.T. 700; 39 J.P. 676; 14 Digest (Repl.) 52, 181. H
- R. v. St. Margaret's Trust, Ltd.*, [1958] 2 All E.R. 289; [1958] 1 W.L.R. 522;
112 J.P. 312; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 327, 95a.
- R. v. Sleep*, [1861-73] All E.R. Rep. 248; (1861), Le. & Ca. 44; 30 L.J.M.C.
170; 4 L.T. 525; 25 J.P. 532; 14 Digest (Repl.) 32, 35.
- R. v. Tolson*, [1886-90] All E.R. Rep. 26; (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 168; 58 L.J.M.C.
97; 60 L.T. 899; 54 J.P. 4, 20; 15 Digest (Repl.) 890, 8578. I
- R. v. Wheat, R. v. Stocks*, [1921] All E.R. Rep. 602; [1921] 2 K.B. 119; 90
L.J.K.B. 583; 124 L.T. 830; 85 J.P. 203; 15 Digest (Repl.) 891, 8591.
- R. v. Wilmetts*, (1848), 11 L.T.O.S. 495; 3 Cox, C.C. 281; 15 Digest (Repl.) 863, 8293.
- R. v. Woodrow*, (1846), 15 M. & W. 404; 16 L.J.M.C. 122; 105 J.P. 791;
153 E.R. 907; 14 Digest (Repl.) 36, 57.

- A Reynolds v. G. H. Austin & Sons, Ltd., [1951] 1 All E.R. 606; [1951] 2 K.B. 135; 115 J.P. 192; 14 Digest (Repl.) 39, 95.
Roper v. Taylor's Central Garages (Exeter), Ltd., (1951), 2 T.L.R. 284; 45 Digest (Repl.) 134, 494.
Sambasivam v. Public Prosecutor, Federation of Malaya, [1950] A.C. 458; 15 Digest (Repl.) 784, *4912.
- B Sherras v. de Rutzen, [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 1167; [1895] 1 Q.B. 918; 64 L.J.M.C. 218; 72 L.T. 839; 59 J.P. 440; 14 Digest (Repl.) 39, 90.
South Staffordshire Water Co. v. Sharman, [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 259; [1896] 2 Q.B. 44; 65 L.J.Q.B. 460; 74 L.T. 761; 37 Digest (Repl.) 171, 38.
Thomas v. Regem, (1937), 59 C.L.R. 279.
Towers & Co., Ltd. v. Gray, [1961] 2 All E.R. 68; [1961] 2 Q.B. 351; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 553; 125 J.P. 391; 46 Digest (Repl.) 167, 1115.
- C United States of America v. Dollfus Mieg et Compagnie S.A., [1952] 1 All E.R. 572; [1952] A.C. 582; 1 Digest (Repl.) 58, 433.
Webb v. Baker, [1916] 2 K.B. 753; 86 L.J.K.B. 36; 115 L.T. 630; 80 J.P. 449; 25 Digest (Repl.) 119, 405.
- D Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1935] 1 All E.R. 1; [1935] A.C. 462; 104 L.J.K.B. 433; 153 L.T. 232; 14 Digest (Repl.) 493, 4768.
Yeandel v. Fisher, [1965] 3 All E.R. 158; [1966] 1 Q.B. 440; [1965] 3 W.L.R. 1002; 129 J.P. 546; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 151, 57a.

Appeal.

- This was an appeal by leave from the judgment of the Court of Appeal, Criminal Division (DIPLOCK, L.J., BRABIN and WALLER, J.J.) dated June 30, 1967, and reported [1967] 3 All E.R. 93, dismissing the appeal by the appellant Reginald Charles Warner, against his conviction at Inner London Quarter Sessions before the chairman (R. E. SEATON, Esq.) and a jury on Feb. 3, 1967, on a charge that on Nov. 18, 1966, not being authorised he had in his possession twenty thousand tablets containing amphetamine sulphate tablets specified in the Schedule to the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964. The point of law certified for the determination of the House of Lords was whether for the purposes of s. 1 of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 the appellant was deemed to be in possession of a prohibited substance, i.e., amphetamine sulphate, when to his knowledge he was in physical possession of the substance but was unaware of its true nature.

- G W. M. Howard, Q.C., and J. G. Boal for the appellant.
J. B. R. Hazan and A. C. L. Lewisohn for the Crown.

Their lordships took time for consideration.

May 2. The following opinions were delivered.

- LORD REID: My Lords, the appellant was tried at Inner London Quarter Sessions on Feb. 3, 1967, on a charge that on Nov. 18, 1966, he had in his possession a substance specified in the Schedule to the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 namely twenty thousand tablets containing amphetamine sulphate. When stopped by the police he had in his car inter alia two packages. His defence was that he believed both packages contained scent. In fact when they were opened in his presence one was found to contain scent and the other to contain these tablets. I shall not deal further with the facts at this point.
- I His defence may not have been credible. It may be that no reasonable jury would have believed it. But the learned chairman directed the jury that this was no defence. He said that those tablets were under the control of the appellant, that "possession" meant that he had control, and the statute says you must not have such drugs in your possession in any circumstances whatever—there is absolute prohibition in law unless you have lawful authority. The jury returned a verdict of guilty after three minutes and the appellant was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. The Court of Appeal (1) dismissed his appeal on the authority of Lockyer v. Gibb (2), holding that this was an absolute offence for which mens rea was not necessary. A

I understand that this is the first case in which this House has had to consider whether a statutory offence is an absolute offence in the sense that the belief, intention, or state of mind of the accused is immaterial and irrelevant. It appears from the authorities that the law on this matter is in some confusion, there being at least two schools of thought. So I think it necessary to begin by making some observations of a general character. B

There is no doubt that for centuries mens rea has been an essential element in every common law crime or offence. Equally there is no doubt that Parliament, being sovereign, can create absolute offences if so minded; but we were referred to no instance where Parliament in giving statutory form to an old common law crime has or has been held to have excluded the necessity to prove mens rea. C There is a number of statutes going back for over a century where Parliament in creating a new offence has transferred the onus of proof so that, once the facts necessary to constitute the crime have been proved, the accused will be held to be guilty unless he can prove that he had no mens rea. We were not referred, however, to any except quite recent cases in which it was held that it was no defence to a charge of a serious and truly criminal statutory offence to D prove absence of mens rea.

On the other hand there is a long line of cases in which it has been held with regard to less serious offences that absence of mens rea was no defence. Typical examples are offences under public health, licensing and industrial legislation. If a person sets up as say a butcher, a publican, or a manufacturer and exposes unsound meat for sale, or sells drink to a drunk man or certain parts of his factory are unsafe, it is no defence that he could not by the exercise of reasonable care have known or discovered that the meat was unsound, or that the man was drunk or that his premises were unsafe. He must take the risk and when it is found that the statutory prohibition or requirement has been infringed he must pay the penalty. This may well seem unjust, but it is a comparatively minor injustice and there is good reason for it as affording some protection to his customers or servants or to the public at large. Although this man might be able to show that he did his best, a more skilful or diligent man in his position might have done better, and when we are dealing with minor penalties which do not involve the disgrace of criminality it may be in the public interest to have a hard and fast rule. Strictly speaking there ought perhaps to be a defence that the defect was truly latent so that no one could have discovered it; but the law has not developed in that way, and one can see the difficulty if such a defence were allowed in a summary prosecution. These are only quasi-criminal offences and it does not really offend the ordinary man's sense of justice that moral guilt is not of the essence of the offence. E F G

R. v. Woodrow (3) was an early case. A statute provided that "every . . . retailer of tobacco who shall receive or take into or have in his possession" any adulterated tobacco shall forfeit £200. The accused had fifty-four pounds of tobacco in his possession which had been adulterated by the manufacturer, but he did not know that. He had bought it as genuine tobacco believing it to be such and he had no reason to suspect that it was not: but he had to pay the penalty. ROLFE, B., pointed out (4) in the course of the argument that another section empowered the Commissioners of Excise to forbear to prosecute if satisfied that a penalty was incurred "without any intention of fraud or of offending against this Act". The commissioners, however, did prosecute. POLLOCK, C.B., said (5): H I

" . . . it is not necessary that he should know that the tobacco was

(2) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243.

(4) (1846), 15 M. & W. at p. 413.

(3) (1846), 15 M. & W. 404.

(5) (1846), 15 M. & W. at p. 415.

A adulterated; for reasons probably very sound, and not applicable to this case only, but to many other branches of the law, persons who deal in an article are made responsible for its being of a certain quality.”

And later he said (6):

B “In reality, a prudent man who conducts this business, will take care to guard against the injury he complains of . . . If he examines the article he may reject it, and not keep it in his possession; or if he is incompetent to do that, he may take a guarantee that shall render the person with whom he is dealing responsible for all the consequences of a prosecution.”

I need not deal with other early cases because the whole question was dealt with by WRIGHT, J., in a judgment in Sherras v. de Rutzen (7) which has frequently
C been approved—in particular by the Privy Council in Lim Chin Aik v. Reginam (8). WRIGHT, J., said (9):

D “The presumption is, that mens rea, an evil intention or a knowledge of the wrongfulness of the act, is an essential ingredient in every offence; but that presumption is liable to be displaced either by the words of the statute creating the offence or by the subject-matter with which it deals, and both must be considered . . .”

Then he mentioned two cases and continued (9):

E “Apart from isolated and extreme cases of this kind, the principal classes of exceptions may perhaps be reduced to three. One is a class of acts which, in the language of LUSH, J., in Davies v. Harvey (10), are not criminal in any real sense, but are acts which in the public interest are prohibited under a penalty.”

Then he gave examples and continued (11):

F “Another class comprehends some, and perhaps all, public nuisances. . . . There may be cases where, although the proceedings may be criminal in form, they are really only a summary mode of enforcing a civil right . . .”

Down to that time there appears to have been no case of an absolute offence where the punishment could be imprisonment or the offence was truly of a criminal character.

G One of the “isolated and extreme cases” mentioned by WRIGHT, J., was R. v. Prince (12). The offence was taking an unmarried girl, being under the age of sixteen, out of the possession of her father. The accused did knowingly take a girl out of the possession of her father but the jury found that he believed that she was eighteen and that his belief was reasonable. That was held not to be a defence. BLACKBURN, J., with whom nine judges concurred dealt with the matter briefly. He said (13):

H “. . . we are of opinion that the intention of the legislature sufficiently appears to have been to punish the abductor, unless the girl, in fact, was of such an age as to make her consent an excuse . . .”

BRAMWELL, B., with whom seven judges concurred dealt with the point at greater length. He said (14):

I “The act forbidden is wrong in itself, if without lawful cause; I do not say illegal, but wrong . . . (15). The legislature has enacted that if anyone

(6) (1846), 15 M. & W. at p. 416.

(7) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 1167; [1895] 1 Q.B. 918.

(8) [1963] 1 All E.R. 223 at p. 228; [1963] A.C. 160 at p. 173.

(9) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. at p. 169; [1895] 1 Q.B. at p. 921.

(10) (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 433.

(11) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. at p. 1170; [1895] 1 Q.B. at p. 922.

(12) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 881; (1875), L.R. 2 C.C.R. 154.

(13) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. at p. 886; (1875), L.R. 2 C.C.R. at p. 171.

(14) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. at p. 884; (1875), L.R. 2 C.C.R. at p. 174.

(15) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. at p. 884; (1875), L.R. 2 C.C.R. at p. 175.

does this wrong act he does it at the risk of the girl turning out to be under sixteen. This opinion gives full scope to the doctrine of mens rea. If the taker believed he had the father's consent, though wrongly, he would have no mens rea. So if he did not know she was in anyone's possession . . . In those cases he would not know he was doing the act forbidden by the statute . . . (16). The same principle applies in other cases . . . a man was held liable for assaulting a police officer in the execution of his duty, though he did not know he was a police officer. Why? Because the act was wrong in itself."

A

B

That case is no authority for construing a statute so that a member of the public who genuinely believes that he is doing something lawful and innocent can be found guilty of a criminal offence.

The other extreme case was bigamy, but there the law has been altered and mens rea is now of the essence of the offence. In a very recent case R. v. Gould (17) the Court of Appeal refused to follow R. v. Wheat, R. v. Stocks (18), and, in my view rightly, cited with approval a judgment (19) of DIXON, J., than whom there is no greater authority on questions of legal principle:

C

"The truth appears to be that a reluctance on the part of courts has repeatedly appeared to allow a prisoner to avail himself of a defence depending simply on his own state of knowledge and belief. The reluctance is due in great measure, if not entirely, to a mistrust of the tribunal of fact—the jury. Through a feeling that, if the law allows such a defence to be submitted to the jury, prisoners may too readily escape by deposing to conditions of mind and describing sources of information, matters upon which their evidence cannot be adequately tested and contradicted, judges have been misled into a failure steadily to adhere to principle. It is not difficult to understand such tendencies, but a lack of confidence in the ability of a tribunal correctly to estimate evidence of states of mind and the like can never be sufficient ground for excluding from inquiry the most fundamental element in a rational and humane criminal code."

D

E

Before coming to the more recent cases I must examine Hobbs v. Winchester Corpn. (20), because the judgment of KENNEDY, L.J., has been much relied on. It was held that a butcher sold unsound meat at his peril. KENNEDY, L.J., said (21):

F

"I think there is a clear balance of authority that in construing a modern statute this presumption as to mens rea does not exist. I think with great respect to my brother CHANNELL that he has applied to the construction of this modern statute a maxim which is recognised as applicable to offences at common law, and it may be, as STEPHEN, J., suggests in Cundy v. Le Cocq (22), also to offences under the earlier statutes which are to be treated on the same basis as offences under the common law."

G

I do not think that the distinction depends on the date of the statute; it depends on the nature of the offence. KENNEDY, L.J., said later (23):

H

"I think that the policy of the Act is this: that if a man chooses for profit to engage in a business which involves the offering for sale of that which may be deadly or injurious to health he must take that risk . . . He has chosen to engage in that which on the face of it may be a dangerous business and he must do so at his own risk."

I

The judge's words were very wide, but again they must be read in their context.

(16) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. at p. 885; (1875), L.R. 2 C.C.R. at p. 176.

(17) [1968] 1 All E.R. 849.

(18) [1921] All E.R. Rep. 602; [1921] 2 K.B. 119.

(19) Thomas v. Regem, (1937), 59 C.L.R. 279; the passage quoted above is at p. 309.

(20) [1910] 2 K.B. 471.

(21) [1910] 2 K.B. at p. 483.

(22) [1881-85] All E.R. Rep. 412; (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 207.

(23) [1910] 2 K.B. at pp. 484, 485.

- A No instance is given of any truly criminal offence under any statute where absence of mens rea was not a defence; and that is not surprising because, when counsel for the Crown in this case was invited in the course of his able argument to cite any Act of or before that period which made a truly criminal offence an absolute offence though the accused had done what he reasonably believed was innocent and lawful, he was unable to cite any, with the possible exception
- B of a bankrupt obtaining credit without informing the creditor of his bankruptcy (R. v. Duke of Leinster (24)).

A valuable discussion of the matter is to be found in the judgment of WILLS, J., in R. v. Tolson (25), where he refers to numerous cases where similar language in two statutes has led to different results. He says (26):

- C “there is nothing in the mere form of words used in the enactment now under consideration to prevent the application of what is certainly the normal rule of construction in the case of a statute constituting an offence entailing severe and degrading punishment. If the words are not conclusive in themselves, the reasonableness or otherwise of the construction contended for has always been recognised as a matter fairly to be taken into account.”
- D Next I must refer to Chajutin v. Whitehead (27), where the appellant had been convicted of having in his possession an altered passport, was fined £40 and recommended for deportation, although it was found as a fact that he did not know that it had been altered and honestly believed on reasonable grounds that it had been issued to him in the ordinary course by the proper authority in Budapest. The offence was not against an Act of Parliament but against an
- E Order—The Aliens Order, 1920. I would have thought that the first question ought to have been whether the terms of the Act of Parliament were such as to authorise the Secretary of State to create an absolute offence but that point was not taken. If Parliament chooses to create an absolute offence it can do so, but I would be very hesitant to hold that a general authority to make regulations or orders entitles a Minister to do that. In the vast majority of cases he could
- F without hampering enforcement make it a defence for the accused to prove that he did not know and had no reasonable grounds for suspecting that the document had been altered—or whatever the offence might be. It is one thing to say that Parliament has been in the habit of making persons who engage in trades absolutely liable for certain offences. It seems to me to be quite another thing to say that Parliament has intended to authorise a Minister to deprive an ordinary
- G member of the public of such a defence whenever he may think that desirable. The next important case is Harding v. Price (28). There a trailer attached to a lorry had damaged a stationary vehicle when passing it and the driver was charged with failing to stop or report the accident. He was acquitted because it was held that he did not know there had been an accident. The words of the Act were clear and imperative—the driver of a motor vehicle shall stop, and
- H he shall report the accident. There was no question of this being in the class of serious crimes and a more alert driver would almost certainly have realised that there had been an accident; but LORD GODDARD, C.J., however, thought it proper to say (29):

- I “The general rule applicable to criminal cases is actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea, and I venture to repeat what I said in Brend v. Wood (30): ‘It is of the utmost importance for the protection of the liberty of the subject that a court should always bear in mind that, unless a statute, either clearly or by necessary implication, rules out mens rea as a constituent (24) [1923] All E.R. Rep. 187; 17 Cr. App. Rep. 176.

(25) [1886-90] All E.R. Rep. 26; (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 168.

(26) [1886-90] All E.R. Rep. at p. 30; (1889), 23 Q.B.D. at p. 175.

(27) [1938] 1 All E.R. 159; [1938] 1 K.B. 506.

(28) [1948] 1 All E.R. 283; [1948] 1 K.B. 695.

(29) [1948] 1 All E.R. at p. 284; [1948] 1 K.B. at p. 700.

(30) (1946), 175 L.T. 306 at p. 307.

part of a crime, the court should not find a man guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has a guilty mind.' In these days when offences are multiplied by various regulations and orders to an extent which makes it difficult for the most law-abiding subjects in some way or at some time to avoid offending against the law, it is more important than ever to adhere to this principle."

Then LORD GODDARD, however, went on to say that (31):

"... there is all the difference between prohibiting an act and imposing a duty to do something on the happening of a certain event. Unless a man knows that the event has happened, how can he carry out the duty imposed?"

I am bound to say that I find that distinction very unsatisfactory. Take the passport case Chaputin v. Whitehead (32). So far as the man knew or could know, he was doing something perfectly innocent which many people constantly do—carrying a proper and valid passport. A passage often quoted from the judgment of the Privy Council in Bank of New South Wales v. Piper (33) is that "... the absence of mens rea really consists in an honest and reasonable belief entertained by the accused of the existence of facts which, if true, would make the act charged against him innocent."

I can see no real difference between the lorry driver who does not know there has been an accident and the carrier of the passport who does not know there is anything wrong with it. Neither has any mens rea as explained in the above quotation. Both in ignorance do something which is forbidden—the one carries an altered passport, the other drives on after an accident—but for some reason which escapes me every man who carries a passport acts at his peril, though the man who drives on does not. Both do forbidden acts but one is guilty and the other is not. We seem to be in a very technical region far removed from the principle stated by LORD GODDARD or from anything that any reasonable Parliament could possibly be supposed to have intended. I think that the explanation of this case must be that the court, disliking some of the older authorities but being unable to overrule them, seized on an insubstantial distinction to prevent any extension of the doctrine of absolute liability. I observe the same tendency in the next case Reynolds v. G. H. Austin & Sons, Ltd. (34). There it was a condition of a licence to carry a party of people that the journey "must be made without previous advertisement to the public"; but some of the passengers did make a previous advertisement without the knowledge of the coach owner. He was prosecuted, but held to be not guilty. It was argued that this was an absolute prohibition but LORD GODDARD, C.J., said (35):

"Unless compelled by the words of the statute so to hold no court shall give effect to a proposition which is so repugnant to all the principles of criminal law in this kingdom."

DEVLIN, J., in a long judgment dealt with the question of principle. He quoted from DEAN ROSCOE POUND (36) who said with regard to statutes creating absolute liability (37):

"Such statutes are not meant to punish the vicious will but to put pressure upon the thoughtless and inefficient to do their whole duty in the interest of public health or safety or morals."

Then he said (38):

(31) [1948] 1 All E.R. at p. 285; [1948] 1 K.B. at p. 701.

(32) [1938] 1 All E.R. 159; [1938] 1 K.B. 506.

(33) [1897] A.C. 383 at pp. 389, 390.

(34) [1951] 1 All E.R. 606; [1951] 2 K.B. 135.

(35) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 609; [1951] 2 K.B. at p. 144.

(36) THE SPIRIT OF THE COMMON LAW. See L.Q.R. Vol. 64, p. 176.

(37) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 611; [1951] 2 K.B. at p. 149.

(38) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 612; [1951] 2 K.B. at p. 149.

A "I am not willing to conclude that Parliament can intend what would seem to the ordinary man (as plainly it seemed to the justices in this case) to be the useless and unjust infliction of a penalty."

In Sambasivam v. Public Prosecutor, Federation of Malaya (39) the Privy Council had to deal with emergency regulations (40) "a drastic code designed to meet a state of grave disorder". The words were that "any person who carries . . . any firearm not being a firearm which he is duly licensed to carry . . . shall be guilty of an offence". LORD MACDERMOTT said (41):

B "It was conceded on behalf of the Crown—and rightly in their lordships' opinion—that 'carries' here means 'carries to his knowledge', and that the carrying of a firearm by a person who did not know what he carried would not constitute an offence under this provision."

C No doubt this expression of opinion by the Board was obiter but, it is significant that even in an enactment dealing with so grave a menace to public safety the Board did not think that words which apparently created an absolute offence ought to be so interpreted. No doubt one reason was the drastic penalty. It is much easier to infer an intention to exclude mens rea when the penalty is only pecuniary. I would also refer to a passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in Lim Chin Aik v. Regina (42):

E "But it is not enough in their lordships' opinion merely to label the statute as one dealing with a grave social evil and from that to infer that strict liability was intended. It is pertinent also to inquire whether putting the defendant under strict liability will assist in the enforcement of the regulations. That means that there must be something he can do, directly or indirectly, by supervision or inspection, by improvement of his business methods or by exhorting those whom he may be expected to influence or control, which will promote the observance of the regulations. Unless this is so, there is no reason in penalising him, and it cannot be inferred that the legislature imposed strict liability merely in order to find a luckless victim."

F In Yeandel v. Fisher (43) an innkeeper and his wife were charged that they were persons concerned in the management of premises—the inn—used for the purposes of smoking and dealing in cannabis. It was not proved that they knew that this was being done on the premises but an appeal against their conviction was dismissed. This case falls within the well established class of case where persons who carry on some particular activity must do or refrain from doing a particular thing at their peril, if, but only if, this is limited to persons engaged in the day-to-day management; then it is reasonable to suppose that if they were alert they would at least notice something suspicious. LORD PARKER, C.J., pointed out the difference between this provision and that which makes the occupier liable if he "permits" these things. He may well have no knowledge of what is going on, but someone who is or ought to be there constantly ought to be aware of it.

H The only thing that makes me hesitate about this case is the severity of the penalty and the fact that this would be regarded as a truly criminal and disgraceful offence, so that a stigma would attach to a person convicted of it. Applicants for employment, permits or other advantages are often asked whether they have been convicted of any offence. Admission of a conviction of an ordinary offence of this class ought not to be too seriously regarded—and the conviction might be of the man's company and not of the man himself. A man who had, however, to admit a conviction with regard to dangerous drugs might be at a grave disadvantage, and this might not be removed by an explanation that he had only suffered a small penalty. He might even be dismissed by his employer. This

(39) [1950] A.C. 458.

(40) [1950] A.C. at p. 470.

(41) [1950] A.C. at p. 469. (42) [1963] 1 All E.R. at p. 228; [1963] A.C. at p. 174.

(43) [1965] 3 All E.R. 158; [1966] 1 Q.B. 440.

makes me hesitate to impute to Parliament an intention to deprive persons accused of these offences of the defence that they had no mens rea. I would think it difficult to convince Parliament that there was any real need to convict a man who could prove that he had neither knowledge of what was being done nor any grounds for suspecting that there was anything wrong. A

I dissent emphatically from the view that Parliament can be supposed to have been of the opinion that it could be left to the discretion of the police not to prosecute, or that if there was a prosecution justice would be served by only a nominal penalty being imposed. B

I agree with the view of the Privy Council in Lim Chin Aik v. Reginum (44) where their lordships disapproved

“... the alternative view that strict liability follows simply from the nature of the subject-matter and that person whose conduct is beyond any sort of criticism can be dealt with by the imposition of a nominal penalty. The latter view can perhaps be supported to some extent by the dicta of KENNEDY, L.J., in Hobbs v. Winchester Corpn. (45) and of DONOVAN, J., in R. v. St. Margaret's Trust, Ltd. (46). But though a nominal penalty may be appropriate in an individual case where exceptional lenience is called for, the lordships cannot, with respect, suppose that it is envisaged by the legislature as a way of dealing with offenders generally. Where it can be shown that the imposition of strict liability would result in the prosecution and conviction of a class of persons whose conduct could not in any way affect the observance of the law, their lordships consider that, even where the statute is dealing with a grave social evil, strict liability is not likely to be intended.” C

One or other House of Parliament has been asked on more than one occasion in recent years to approve of some change in the law which would increase the chance of convicting offenders, but has refused because it would or might also imperil the innocent. Although I would not entirely agree, I think that the general view still is that it is better that ten guilty men should escape than that one innocent man should be convicted. D

I shall deal more fully later with the decision in Lockyer v. Gibb (47) because the main point seems to me to have been what is meant by “possession”. LORD PARKER, C.J., did regard the case as analogous to Yeandel v. Fisher (48); but I do not think it is. Yeandel v. Fisher (48) was a case where a person engaged in a certain occupation—being concerned in the management of premises—was held to do so at his peril. There is, however, no limitation of the class of persons to whom regulations made under the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 may apply. These regulations purport to make any ordinary member of the public guilty of a very serious offence if a drug within the meaning of the Act is “in his actual custody”. Any person may, and most people do, from time to time take into their custody an apparently innocent package without ascertaining what it contains, without having the slightest reason to suspect that it may contain anything out of the ordinary, and indeed without having any right to open the package and see what is in it. If every person who takes such a package into his custody must do so at his peril, then this goes immensely farther than any enactment imposing absolute liability has yet been held to go, and I refuse to believe that Parliament can ever have intended such an oppressive result. E

Normally the plain ordinary grammatical meaning of the words of an enactment affords the best guide. But in cases of this kind the question is not what the words mean but whether there are sufficient grounds for inferring that Parliament intended to exclude the general rule that mens rea is an essential element in every F

(44) [1963] 1 All E.R. at pp. 228, 229; [1963] A.C. at pp. 174, 175.

(45) [1910] 2 K.B. at p. 485.

(46) [1958] 2 All E.R. 289 at p. 293.

(47) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243.

(48) [1965] 3 All E.R. 158; [1966] 1 Q.B. 440. G

- A offence; and the authorities show that it is generally necessary to go behind the words of the enactment and take other factors into consideration. That being so the layman may well wonder why we do not consult the Parliamentary debates for we are much more likely to find the intention of Parliament there than anywhere else. The rule is firmly established that we may not look at HANSARD, and in general I agree with it for reasons which I gave last year in Beswick v. Beswick (49). This is not a suitable case in which to reopen the matter, but I am bound to say that this case seems to show that there is room for an exception where examining the proceedings in Parliament would almost certainly settle the matter immediately one way or the other. Members of both Houses are particularly interested in the liberty of the subject, and if it were intended by those promoting a Bill to extend the old but limited class of cases in which absence of mens rea is no defence I would certainly expect Parliament to be so informed. Then, if Parliament acquiesced, those who dislike this kind of legislation would know whom to blame. If, however, the words of the Act are not crystal clear and Parliament has not been told of this intention, I would hold without hesitation that it would be wrong to impute to Parliament an intention to depart from its known desire to prevent innocent persons from being convicted.
- D As things are we must do our best with the material available to us. The object of this legislation is to penalise possession of certain drugs. So if mens rea has not been excluded what would be required would be the knowledge of the accused that he had prohibited drugs in his possession. It would be no defence, though it would be a mitigation, that he did not intend that they should be used improperly. And it is a commonplace that, if the accused had a suspicion but deliberately shut his eyes, the court or jury is well entitled to hold him guilty. Further, it would be pedantic to hold that it must be shown that the accused knew precisely which drug he had in his possession. Ignorance of the law is no defence and in fact virtually everyone knows that there are prohibited drugs. So it would be quite sufficient to prove facts from which it could properly be inferred that the accused knew that he had a prohibited drug in his possession. That would not lead to an unreasonable result. In a case like this Parliament, if consulted, might think it right to transfer the onus of proof so that an accused would have to prove that he neither knew nor had any reason to suspect that he had a prohibited drug in his possession; I am unable to find sufficient grounds for imputing to Parliament an intention to deprive the accused of all rights to show that he had no knowledge or reason to suspect that any prohibited drug was on his premises or in a container which was in his possession.

- It was suggested in argument that it may always be a defence, even to an absolute offence, to prove absence of mens rea. There are some dicta to that effect, but I do not think that your lordships could introduce such a far reaching doctrine without statutory authority. When we are dealing with the original type of absolute offence—a person engaging in a business where he does certain things at the peril of a pecuniary penalty—it is clearly established that absence of mens rea is no defence. And a right to prove absence of mens rea would sometimes go too far. Mens rea or its absence is a subjective test, and any attempt to substitute an objective test for serious crime has been successfully resisted. If, however, there is to be a halfway house between the common law doctrine and absolute liability, there could be an objective test: not whether the accused knew, but whether a reasonable man in his shoes would have known or have had reason to suspect that there was something wrong. I would not support an objective test where the ordinary member of the public is concerned, but it is not unreasonable to say that if a person engages in some particular business he must behave as, and have the capacity of, the ordinary reasonable man.

LORD PARKER, C.J. referred to a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, Beaver v. Reginam (50), where it was held by a majority that the offence created by legislation against the possession of drugs in terms almost identical with the British Act was not an absolute offence. He said that he preferred the view of the minority. I do not. FAUTEUX, J., for the minority founded on Chajutin v. Whitehead (51); but I have already given my reasons for thinking that this decision is out of line with the other authorities.

It is possible to reach the same result in the present case on a narrower ground. The Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964, s. 1 (1), provides that "it shall not be lawful for a person to have in his possession" any of the specified substances unless in specified circumstances. So we have to determine what is meant by having a thing in one's possession. The problem here is whether the possessor of a house or box or package is necessarily in possession of everything found in it, or, if not, what mental element is necessary before he can be held to be in possession of the contents. This problem has given rise to a great deal of legal discussion and the numerous authorities are not at all easy to reconcile. I shall not attempt that task. I think that the best approach to this case is to suppose that an innkeeper is handed, in ordinary course, a box or package by a guest for safe keeping. He has no right to open the box—it may be locked. If he is told truthfully what is in it, it may be right to say that he is in possession of the contents; but what if he is told nothing, or is told that it contains jewellery and it contains prohibited drugs? It may contain nothing but drugs or it may contain both jewellery and drugs or it may be an antique trinket apparently empty but containing drugs hidden in a small secret recess. It would in my opinion be irrational to draw distinctions and say that in one such case he is in possession of the drugs and therefore guilty of an offence, but not in another. It is for that reason that I cannot agree with the contention that if the possessor of a box genuinely believes that there is nothing in the box then he is not in possession of the contents, but that on the other hand if he knows there is something in it he is in possession of the contents though they may turn out to be something quite unexpected. In any case this contention does not seem to me to take account of the case where the possessor of the box believes that it does contain jewellery and in fact it does contain jewellery but it contains drugs as well. It would, I think, be absurd to say that the innkeeper is not guilty if he genuinely believes that the box is empty and it has some drugs secreted in it, but that he is guilty of an offence under the Act of 1964 if he truly believes that it contains jewellery, though it also contains some drugs secreted in it. If he is not guilty in the case where the box contains jewellery as well as drugs, on what rational ground can he become guilty if there is no jewellery in the box but only drugs?

In considering what is the proper construction of a provision in any Act of Parliament which is ambiguous one ought to reject that construction which leads to an unreasonable result. As a legal term "possession" is ambiguous at least to this extent: there is no clear rule as to the nature of the mental element required. All are agreed that there must be some mental element in possession, but there is no agreement as to what precisely it must be. Indeed the view which prevailed in R. v. Ashwell (52) and was approved in R. v. Hudson (53) went so far that a person who received a sovereign thinking it to be a shilling was held not to possess the sovereign until he discovered the mistake. There it was argued that "possession" in this context should be given a popular and not a legal meaning; but even if that were a legitimate way to construe a well-known legal term, I think that it would lead to the same ambiguity. If the ordinary reasonable man were asked what he thought "possession" meant in this context he would probably say that is a puzzle for the lawyers, and if he ventured his own opinion he might say it meant control; but if asked whether

(50) [1957] S.C.R. 531.

(52) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 190.

(51) [1938] 1 All E.R. 159; [1938] 1 K.B. 506.

(53) [1943] 1 All E.R. 642; [1943] 1 K.B. 458.

A the innkeeper controls the contents of a box handed to him for safekeeping, I think that he would most probably say "No".

Lockyer v. Gibb (54) was relied on by the Court of Appeal (55) as the case most nearly in point. There the accused had been in a café with some people when the police came in. A man, whom apparently she did not know, gave her a bottle containing tablets "to look after for him". She put them at the bottom of her shopping bag and when she went out she was stopped by the police. B She was prosecuted under a regulation made under the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 for being in possession of a scheduled drug. The magistrate held that there was a possibility that she did not know that the tablets contained any of the scheduled drugs. She may have been a very stupid woman, for I would think that any normal person being given a bottle of tablets in such circumstances C would know perfectly well that the tablets must contain prohibited drugs which the man did not want the police to find in his possession. With regard to possession LORD PARKER, C.J., said (56):

"In my judgment, it is quite clear that a person cannot be said to be in possession of some article which he or she does not realise is, or may be, in her handbag, in her room, or in some other place over which she had D control. That, I should have thought, is elementary; if something were slipped into one's basket and one had not the vaguest notion it was there at all, one could not possibly be said to be in possession of it."

I entirely agree; but that destroys any contention that mere physical control or custody without any mental element is sufficient to constitute possession under that enactment. If something is slipped into my bag I have as much E physical control over it as I have over anything else in my bag. I can carry it where I will and I can transfer the whole contents of my bag to some other person without ever realising that this particular thing is included. Then, however, LORD PARKER went on to say (57):

"... in my judgment, under this provision, while it is necessary to show F that the appellant knew she had the articles which turned out to be a drug, it is not necessary that she should know that in fact it was a drug and a drug of a particular character."

With that I cannot agree for reasons which I have already given. I do not think that this distinction will bear critical examination and I do not know what the result would be on this view if, in the present case, both the scent G and the drugs had been in the same parcel. The appellant, if his story were accepted, would have rightly believed that the parcel contained scent, but would have been ignorant of the fact that drugs had been slipped in with the scent. Could it be right that if the appellant had taken possession of the parcel of scent and thereafter the drugs had been slipped in without his knowledge he would be innocent (which is LORD PARKER's view), but that if the drugs had H been slipped in without his knowledge before he took possession then he would be guilty? That seems to me to be quite unreasonable and it seems to me to be equally unreasonable that the fact that there were two parcels and not one should make all the difference between guilt and innocence.

If this case is to be decided on this narrower ground I accept the view of my noble and learned friends, LORD PEARCE and LORD WILBERFORCE. It enables I justice to be done in all cases which resemble this case. But it still leaves subject to injustice persons who in innocent circumstances take into their possession what they genuinely and reasonably believe to be an ordinary medicine, if in fact the substance turns out to be a prohibited drug. Nevertheless this ground is sufficient to show that the learned trial judge must be held to have misdirected the jury in the present case.

(54) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243.

(55) [1967] 3 All E.R. 93.

(56) [1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 655; [1967] 2 Q.B. at p. 248.

(57) [1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 656; [1967] 2 Q.B. at p. 249.

So it remains to consider whether this is a proper case for the application of the proviso as amended by s. 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1966. Taking into account the prevarications of the appellant before he produced his final story and the whole circumstances, I cannot believe that any reasonable jury would accept that story. If they did not, they would be certain to return a verdict of guilty. So in my judgment there has been no miscarriage of justice and I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST My Lords, the charge which was brought against the appellant was that he was in unlawful possession of twenty thousand tablets which, as was proved at the trial, contained amphetamine sulphate. That was a substance specified in the Schedule to the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964. It was not lawful for him to have the tablets in his possession unless he came within one of the groups or classes of people in the case of whom possession is not prohibited. He did not, and there was no suggestion that he did. The charge was laid under s. 1 of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964. That is an Act, as its long title proclaims, "to penalise the possession and restrict the importation of drugs of certain kinds". Section 1 (1) provides that subject to any exemptions for which provision may be made by regulations made by the Secretary of State and to the provisions of the section which follows

"... it shall not be lawful for a person to have in his possession a substance for the time being specified in the Schedule to this Act unless—

- (a) it is in his possession by virtue of the issue of a prescription by a duly qualified medical practitioner or a registered dental practitioner for its administration by way of treatment to him, or to a person under his care; or
- (b) it is in his possession by virtue of the issue of a prescription by a registered veterinary surgeon or a registered veterinary practitioner for its administration by way of treatment to an animal under his care; or
- (c) he is registered in a register kept for the purposes of this paragraph by the Secretary of State as a manufacturer of, or a dealer in bulk in, substances for the time being specified in that Schedule . . ."

A person "who has a substance in his possession in contravention of the provision" is liable to a fine or to imprisonment or to both as set out in the section.

In sub-s. (2) it is provided that sub-s. (1) shall not be taken to prohibit possession by a person of any one of twelve specified "kinds" (such, for example, as a duly qualified medical practitioner or an authorised seller of poisons) provided that it is in his possession for the purpose of his acting in the capacity of a person of that kind. Other exemptions are provided for by the terms of sub-s. (3) and sub-s. (4). Pursuant to the power given him by s. 1 (1) of the Act the Secretary of State on Sept. 17, 1964, made Regulations (the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Exemptions Regulations 1964 (58)) under which the exemptions, subject to stated conditions, were given so that prohibition of possession would not apply (inter alia) to carriers or to those concerned, in the performance of their duty, in the transmission of postal packets by post or in certain specified circumstances to the owner or master of certain ships.

It appears therefore to be clear that unless a person comes within the exclusions and exemptions which are specified and precise it is not lawful for him "to have in his possession" any one of the substances specified in the Schedule to the Act of 1964.

It was for the prosecution to prove that the appellant had the tablets in his possession; if he did so have them then his possession was in contravention of

A s. 1 of the Act of 1964. The appellant was convicted. He appealed to the Court of Appeal (59). One of the grounds of his appeal was that there had been misdirection as to "possession". On June 30, 1967, the Court of Appeal gave judgment dismissing the appeal. On July 28, 1967, the appellant (who was on that occasion unrepresented) applied to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal. The court adjourned the application but said that while in their view there was a point of law of general public importance they did not consider, having regard to the particular facts of the case, that they ought to give leave to appeal. On a renewal of the application on Oct. 9 leave to appeal was refused. On further consideration on Oct. 19 leave was granted. The point of law of general public importance was stated by the Court of Appeal to be:

C "Whether for the purposes of s. 1 of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 a defendant is deemed to be in possession of a prohibited substance when to his knowledge he is in physical possession of the substance but is unaware of its true nature."

It will be seen that there is a certain ambiguity in this formulation.

D Your lordships were not supplied with a transcript of the evidence but were invited to take the facts as recounted or summarised in the summing-up. It appears that on the morning of Nov. 18, 1966, the appellant was driving a mini-van. He was stopped by a police officer. The police officer questioned him as to the contents of his van. In the van there were three cases. Being asked what was in them the appellant said that it was rubbish. Being further asked separately as to each one of the three cases the appellant said that each only contained rubbish which it was his intention to dump. In the words of the summing-up—
E "Eventually there emerged two packages". They were then opened by the police. One contained bottles of scent. The other contained the twenty thousand tablets containing amphetamine sulphate. The evidence as to what was said at the time was conflicting. The appellant said that the police officer did not ask him where he got the pills, but had said that they looked like "pep pills" and that he (the appellant) had said "I don't know how they got there". The police officer said
F that he did ask the appellant where he got the pills and that the appellant's explanation was that they came from his address.

Evidence for the defence was given at the trial by the appellant, by the owner of a certain café and by a friend of the appellant. The effect of this evidence was that the appellant (who is by occupation a floor-layer) had by arrangement with his friend been selling scent as a sideline. The owner of the café sometimes
G allowed customers to leave goods to be called for. The friend called at the café on the morning of Nov. 18 and by permission left a package for the appellant. The café owner put it (one package) under the shelf under the counter. Some ten minutes later the appellant called at the café. He learned that his friend had been but had gone. He enquired whether his friend had left anything for him and was told by the café proprietor: "Yes, it is under the counter." The evidence
H of the appellant, according to the summing-up, was that he then looked under the counter: "there were two boxes; one was the big box which in fact had the scent in it and on top was the smaller box: I didn't look inside it: I assumed it was scent, so I collected it up and I drove off."

I On the state of the evidence as summarised above the question arises as to the extent of the burden of proof which lay on the prosecution. It was for the prosecution to prove that the prohibited substance was in the possession of the appellant. They undoubtedly proved that the tablets which were inside the package which he had were tablets which contained prohibited substances. They had to prove that the appellant had the tablets in his possession. Did this involve that the prosecution had to establish not only that the appellant had the package in question but also had to establish positively that he knew that the contents of his package were tablets containing amphetamine sulphate tablets? Stated otherwise, if the appellant says "I had the package and I knew that it had certain contents but I thought that the contents were bottles of scent", is the onus cast on the prosecution to prove that he knew that the contents were not bottles of scent but were prohibited substances? A

If these burdens rested on the prosecution then the summing-up was defective. The jury were directed in these terms:

"Now then, members of the jury, it was under control because 'possession' means that you have control. [The appellant] quite clearly had, and does not deny he had, control of these pills, and if he had, and it is a matter for you to make up your minds about because you are the judges of fact—if you think the evidence is, he does not dispute it, that he had control of that box which in fact turned out to be full of amphetamine sulphate, that creates the original offence; it is only mitigation that he did not know." B C

The first question which arises relates to the meaning of the words "to have in his possession" in s. 1. Let the case be supposed that in a man's pocket there is to his knowledge a package having contents, which contents are in fact prohibited substances which it is not lawful for him to have in his possession, and that when the package is produced from his pocket he says "I thought they were sweets", is the onus cast on the prosecution to prove that he knew that they were not sweets? It is submitted on behalf of the Crown that if a man chooses to have on him a package with contents he takes the risk, if he has not examined what he has, that he may be in possession of that which it is not lawful for him to have. D

It is submitted that if, in some particular circumstances, it is found that the contents of a package which someone deliberately has in his possession are contents which it is not lawful for him to have, but if it appears that by some series of mischances he was under a complete misapprehension as to what he had, there could be good reasons to invite a court to exercise the ample powers it possesses where mitigating circumstances are compelling. E

As the Drugs (Provention of Misuse) Act 1964, does not contain a definition of the word "possession" it must be given a sensible and reasonable meaning in its context in an Act designed to penalise the possession of drugs. The word "possession" is much to be found in the vocabulary of the law and it cannot always be given the same meaning in all its divers contexts; but the notion of being in possession of drugs is not one which as a rule should present difficulty in comprehending. A useful start in considering an Act of Parliament is to take the plain literal and grammatical meaning of the words used. In A.-G. v. Lockwood (60), ALDERSON, B., said (61): F G

"The rule of law, I take it, upon the construction of all statutes . . . is, whether they be penal or remedial, to construe them according to the plain, literal and grammatical meaning of the words in which they are expressed, unless that construction leads to a plain and clear contradiction of the apparent purpose of the Act, or to some palpable and evident absurdity." H

On this basis I think that the notion of having something in one's possession involves a mental element. It involves in the first place that one knows that one has something in one's possession. It does not, however, involve that one knows precisely what it is that one has got. I agree with what LORD PARKER, C.J., said in Lockyer v. Gibb (62): I

"In my judgment it is quite clear that a person cannot be said to be in possession of some article which he or she does not realise is, or may be, in her handbag, in her room, or in some other place over which she has control. That, I should have thought, is elementary; if something were slipped into

(60) (1842), 9 M. & W. 378.

(61) (1842), 9 M. & W. at p. 398.

(62) [1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 655; [1967] 2 Q.B. at p. 248.

A one's basket and one had not the vaguest notion it was there at all one could not possibly be said to be in possession of it."

In this connexion reference may usefully be made to the case of R. v. Woodrow (63) In that case (in 1846) a dealer in tobacco was held liable to the monetary penalty imposed by s. 3 of 5 & 6 Viet. c. 93. There was a provision "that every . . . dealer in or retailer of tobacco who shall . . . have in his possession" any adulterated tobacco should forfeit £200. The dealer had purchased the tobacco as genuine and had no knowledge or cause to suspect that it was not so. The section did not contain the word "knowingly". POLLOCK, C.B., said that s. 3 applied to the case "whether the party knows it or not". PARKE, B., said (64):

C "With respect to the offence itself, I have not the least doubt that the ordinary grammatical construction of this clause is the true one. It is very true that in particular instances it may produce mischief, because an innocent man may suffer from his want of care in not examining the tobacco he has received, and not taking a warranty; but the public inconvenience would be much greater, if in every case the officers were obliged to prove knowledge. They would be very seldom able to do so. The legislature have made a stringent provision for the purpose of protecting the revenue, and have used very plain words. If a man is in possession of an article as the defendant was in this case, and that article falls within the terms mentioned in the statute, there is no question but that the offence is proved."

ALDERSON, B., said (65):

E "... the words of the Act, though they are no doubt very stringent, are nevertheless very clear, and any retailer of tobacco who has an adulterated article in his possession is liable to the penalty. I cannot say that this man had not the tobacco in his possession, because he clearly knew it. He did not know it was in an adulterated state, but he knew he had it in his possession: and the question of 'knowingly', it appears to me, is involved in the word possession. That is, a man has not in his possession that which he does not know to be about him. I am not in possession of anything which a person has put into my stable without my knowledge. It is clear, therefore, that possession includes a knowledge of the facts as far as the possession of the article is concerned."

G In the present case there is no suggestion that any package got inadvertently or surreptitiously in to the appellant's hands. There may be situations in which on particular facts a jury would have to determine whether some parcel or package was in a man's pocket or bag or house or motor-car without any knowledge on his part that it was there. No such question arises in this case.

H If a package or parcel is in a house which is occupied by several people, then there may be facts calling for the consideration of a jury whether it has been proved that the package or parcel was in the possession of some one person. Whatever view, however, a jury might in the present case have formed as to the origin and movements of the package in which were the twenty thousand tablets, the appellant was in my opinion on his own admissions in possession of those tablets. He expected to receive a package. He says that he found a second package. We were told that the second package, though smaller than the one containing scent, was of the size of about a cubic foot. He took both packages I away. He put them in his van. He intended to exercise complete control over both of them. He could have left the second parcel. Presumably he could have opened it. On his story he assumed that it had been left for him. Though we have not seen the transcript of the evidence, it is to be assumed that his friend said that he only left one package (a package containing scent). Taking the appellant's evidence at its face value, however, if he assumed that his friend had left two

(63) (1846), 15 M. & W. 404.

(64) (1846), 15 M. & W. at p. 417.

(65) (1846), 15 M. & W. at p. 418.

packages for him, and if he assumed that both contained scent, when he took both packages and put them in his van and drove away with them he was taking the packages and their contents in his possession. If, in having the tablets in his possession, he became guilty of an offence under s. 1, then if a court considered that in truth he believed that he had scent and not tablets it would be for the court to decide as to the weight of and the effect to give to such mitigating circumstances.

Reference was made in argument to cases in which the question arose whether, if a man received from another a coin of a different denomination from that which it had been intended to hand over, there could be a conviction of larceny. Thus in R. v. Ashwell (66), A asked K for a loan of one shilling. K by mistake, intending to hand a shilling coin to A, in fact handed him a sovereign. Could A be convicted of larceny of the sovereign? Had K parted with the possession of the sovereign to A so that A was lawfully in possession of it? The case gave rise to considerable divergence of judicial opinion. A somewhat similar question arose in R. v. Jacobs (67), where a half sovereign was by mistake handed over instead of a sixpence. The crime of larceny needed proof of an animus furandi; but it was also necessary to prove that the accused has taken the chattel from the possession of its possessor. Larceny was an offence against possession. If the possessor K had given A possession of the sovereign, then A was not guilty of larceny. If the possessor (K) had handed over the chattel by mistake, did the accused (A) acquire possession? I do not propose to consider these cases or to examine their precise facts for, in my view, they have no bearing on the present problem. There is no suggestion in the present case that the appellant took possession by mistake of the package which contained the tablets. It is difficult to know what are the true facts, but if for present purposes it is assumed that some person (other than one of those who gave evidence) placed a package on the top of the one left by the friend, it would seem likely that possession of that package was not being retained by that person. It would seem probable that the package was left by someone so that the appellant would take it. Conceivably, however, the package could have been left by someone so that someone other than the appellant would take it. Conceivably, also, someone could have just placed the package down while having the intention shortly thereafter himself to take it up again. Even though there are these possibilities, no question of the law of larceny is here involved. It does not seem to me that it can be said that the appellant took the package itself by mistake. He took it quite deliberately. He intended to take it. He did not open it or examine it. He took it away. Acting freely and consciously he intended to take it and its contents away. He placed the package in his van and drove away. If his evidence warranted credence, it would not mean that he took possession by mistake; it would mean that by mischance or lack of care in investigation he found that the contents which he took into his possession were different from what he thought that they were.

Section 1 of the Act of 1964 does not contain any definition of the word "possession". Unless one of the exemptions applies it is not "lawful" for a person "to have in his possession" one of the scheduled substances, and a person who "has a substance in his possession" in contravention of the provision is liable to certain penalties either on summary conviction or on conviction on indictment. The problem presented in this case is, in my view, purely one of construction and interpretation. The intention of Parliament is to be ascertained. Parliament uses words to express its intention. The words that are employed must be considered in their context and in the setting of the purpose which which Parliament has proclaimed. What, then, does "possession" mean? Does "possession" involve that someone must knowingly have control over some thing; does "possession" further involve that there must be knowledge, either in general or with precision, as to what the thing is? In relation to the present case

(66) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 190.

(67) (1908), 1 Cr. App. Rep. 215; 12 Cox, C.C. 151.

A the practical problem that arises is whether it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that the appellant knew that what he had was one of the substances named in the Act of 1964 or at least to prove that he knew that what he had was a parcel of tablets? Though the decision in Lockyer v. Gibb (68) was not a decision in regard to the Act of 1964 but related to the Dangerous Drugs Act 1965 and to a regulation (69) which in defining possession had a "deeming" provision, the question now raised concerns the validity or the applicability of the reasoning which was thus expressed in the judgment in that case (70):

"... while it is necessary to show that the appellant knew she had the articles which turned out to be a drug, it is not necessary that she should know that in fact it was a drug and a drug of a particular character."

C In my view, the approach denoted by those words is applicable in the present case. The question resolves itself into one as to the nature and extent of the mental element which is involved in "possession", as that word is used in the section now being considered. In my view, in order to establish possession the prosecution must prove that an accused was knowingly in control of something in circumstances which showed that he was assenting to being in control of it.

D They need not prove that in fact he had actual knowledge of the nature of that which he had. In Lockyer v. Gibb (68), LORD PARKER, C.J., gave the illustration of something being slipped into a person's basket. While the person was unaware of what had happened there would be no possession. But in such circumstances on becoming aware of the presence of the newly discovered article there would be opportunity to see what the article was: whether the opportunity was availed of or not, if the article was deliberately retained there would be possession of it.

E So also in the illustration given by ALDERSON, B., in 1846 in R. v. Woodrow (71). Something is placed in a man's stable without his knowledge. He is not in possession of it. If he goes to his stable and sees the unexpected presence of the article then, according to the particular circumstances, he might with knowledge so act as to assume control of it. He would then be in possession of the article.

F On the admitted facts in the present case the appellant was, in my view, in possession of the tablets. Though the summing-up was inadequate in its references to the conception of possession, on the admitted facts of this particular case the omissions in the summing-up do not vitiate the conviction. In other cases, however, it would be necessary to give a more complete and careful direction to a jury as to what the prosecution must prove in regard to possession. A jury must not convict unless they are satisfied that possession in an accused has been proved. There can be no rigid formula to be used in directing a jury. Varying sets of facts and circumstances will call for guidance on particular matters. The conception to be explained, however, will be that of being knowingly in control of a thing in circumstances which have involved an opportunity (whether availed of or not) to learn or to discover, at least in a general way, what the thing is.

H The same result might follow if it was a matter of indifference whether there was such opportunity or not. If there is assent to the control of a thing, either after having the means of knowledge of what the thing is or contains or being unmindful whether there are means of knowledge or not, then ordinarily there will be possession. If there is some momentary custody of a thing without any knowledge or means of knowledge of what the thing is or contains - then,

I ordinarily, I would suppose that there would not be possession. If, however, someone deliberately assumes control of some package or container, then I would think that he is in possession of it. If he deliberately so assumes control knowing that it has contents, he would also be in possession of the contents. I cannot think that it would be rational to hold that someone who is in possession

(68) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243.

(69) The Dangerous Drugs (No. 2) Regulations 1964 (S.I. 1964 No. 1811).

(70) [1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 656; [1967] 2 Q.B. at p. 249.

(71) (1846), 15 M. & W. 404.

of a box which he knows to have things in it is in possession of the box but not in possession of the things in it. If he had been misinformed or misled as to the nature of the contents, or if he had made a wrong surmise as to them, it seems to me that he would nevertheless be in possession of them. Similarly, if he wrongly surmised that a box was empty which in fact had things in it possession of the box (if established in the way which I have outlined) would involve possession of the contents. For the purposes of the present Act, however, I do not consider that, in order to prove possession of a prohibited substance, it is necessary to prove knowledge that the thing possessed was in fact a prohibited substance.

It is to be observed that in Lockyer v. Gibb (72) the appellant did not assert that the prosecution had to prove that she knew that she had a particular drug or even a dangerous drug, but it was submitted that at least it had to be proved that she knew that what she had was a drug. In a similar way it has not been contended on behalf of the appellant in the present case that the prosecution had to prove that the appellant knew that the substance which he had was a substance specified in the Schedule to the Act of 1964. What was contended was that the prosecution had to prove that the appellant knew that he had some substance other than scent and that he did not believe that he had lawful authority to have what he had or, stated otherwise, that the prosecution had to prove that the appellant did not believe that he had an innocent purpose in having what he had. My lords, I find this not only vague and imprecise and unworkable but also illogical. Accepting that the words "to have in his possession a substance" carry with them an involvement of knowledge, I could have understood a submission that in a prosecution under s. 1 of the Act of 1964 the prosecution must both prove that someone with knowledge has possession of a thing and also prove that he knew what was the quality of the thing, i.e., that the thing was or contained a substance specified in the Schedule to the Act of 1964. I can, however, see no reason for, and I know of no authority for, the contention advanced on behalf of the appellant.

The present case concerns wording which is different from that which was considered in R. v. Hallam (73). That case required a construction of the words in s. 4 (1) of the Explosive Substances Act, 1883, which were:

"Any person who . . . knowingly has in his possession or under his control any explosive substance, under such circumstances as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion that he . . . does not have it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object, shall, unless he can show that he . . . had it in his possession . . . for a lawful object, be guilty of felony."

LORD GODDARD, C.J., in giving the judgment of the court said that the point raised was purely a matter of construction of the sentence. He said (74):

"The question is whether the word 'knowingly' means that he must know, not only that he has a parcel or a substance in his possession but also that it is an explosive. The words, I repeat, are 'knowingly has in his possession any explosive substance'. Having given the best consideration that we can to this case, we think that the words must mean that he must know that it is an explosive substance."

Inasmuch as this case depends on the interpretation of s. 1 of the Act of 1964 now in question I doubt whether it would be profitable, even if it were practicable, to attempt to refer to, or to review all the very numerous cases in which courts have held that in particular legislation Parliament has used words which exclude wholly or partially the requirement of mens rea. That Parliament may so legislate admits of no doubt.

I think that it is important to recognise and to affirm that it is a general

(72) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1966] 2 Q.B. 243.

(73) [1957] 1 All E.R. 665; [1957] 1 Q.B. 569.

(74) [1957] 1 All E.R. at p. 665; [1957] 1 Q.B. at p. 572.

A principle of our law that to commit an offence a man must have a guilty mind. Generally speaking, a statute will be applied as though that principle was incorporated into the enactment. I think, however, that it may be too sweeping to say that, if Parliament introduces the word "knowingly", it merely states what would be implied. The presence or absence of the word "knowingly" may in some cases be of great importance in construing particular words in a particular enactment.

In R. v. Sleep (75), the accused was charged under a legislative enactment, 9 & 10 Wm. 3 c. 41, which was designed for the protection of government property which would be marked with broad arrows. The accused had despatched certain copper: it was proved that some of the copper had broad arrow marks. The relevant statutory words were: "in whose possession . . . goods . . . marked as aforesaid shall be found". At the trial a question was left to the jury: "Whether the prisoner knew that the copper or any part of it was so marked?". The answer of the jury was: "We have not sufficient evidence before us to show that he knew it." It was held in the Court for Crown Cases Reserved that he ought not to have been convicted. In giving judgment SIR ALEXANDER COCKBURN, C.J. used these words (76):

"It has been contended that mere possession constitutes the offence provided against by the 9 & 10 Wm. 3 c. 41; but I am unable to adopt that view. It is a principle of our law that to constitute an offence there must be a guilty mind; and that principle must be imported into the statute, as has already been laid down in R. v. Cohen (77), although the Act itself does not in terms make a guilty mind necessary to the commission of the offence. Cases of innocent possession might be put in which it would be clear that the possessor had not that guilty mind. The authorities which have been cited may be reconciled in this way, viz., that it is a fair presumption, where a man is found in possession of marked articles, that he knew them to be marked; but that presumption may be rebutted by the circumstances of the case. Here it is manifest, if the prisoner's statement is to be believed, that he was ignorant of the fact that the copper was marked; and the ordinary presumption is rebutted. The jury might, indeed, have come to the opposite conclusion; and in my opinion they ought to have done so. They have not done so: but have taken the prisoner's statement as true."

The decision was in accord with two earlier cases: R. v. Willmet (78) and R. v. Cohen (77). I refer to just a few other cases merely by way of illustration of the problems that have confronted courts in reference to other Acts. I do not think it necessary to venture any opinion as to the correctness or otherwise of these cases. Thus in 1880 in R. v. Bishop (79), the defendant was convicted under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100 s. 44, of receiving two or more lunatics into her house, not being a registered asylum or hospital, or a house licensed under the Act or any previous Act though the jury who convicted found specially that though the persons so received were lunatic, the defendant honestly, and on reasonable grounds, believed that they were not lunatic. It was held by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved that such belief was immaterial and that the conviction was right. In the case of Blaker v. Tillstone (80), there was a summons under s. 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875, charging a person with having had meat in his possession and deposited on his premises for the purpose of preparation for sale and intended for the food of man which meat was unsound and unfit for the food of man. It was held that it was not necessary to show that the accused had personal knowledge of the condition of the meat. LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., said that the decisions under the Act of 9 & 10 Wm. 3 c. 41 (to which I

(75) [1861-73] All E.R. Rep. 248; (1861), Le. & Ca. 44.

(76) (1861), Le. & Ca. at p. 54; [1861-73] All E.R. Rep. at pp. 250, 251.

(77) (1858), 8 Cox, C.C. 41.

(78) (1848), 11 L.T.O.S. 495; 3 Cox, C.C. 281.

(79) (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 259.

(80) [1894] 1 Q.B. 345.

have referred above—see R. v. Sleep (81)) were not in point, being decisions under a statute having a different object—i.e., the protection of the Queen's stores. He said (82):

"The question for us is whether the magistrate is bound to insist on direct proof of knowledge on the part of the seller of the bad condition of the stuff sold. Perhaps it might be an answer to this contention to say that the Act of Parliament would be nugatory if such proof were insisted on, for it would then always be open to the defendant to say that he was not aware of the condition of the article sold, and that it was not his duty under the statute to make any inquiries on the point, with the obvious result that a man might in practice go on selling meat which was positively injurious without the possibility of getting a conviction against him. The Act would thus be made nugatory; but that would be no answer if its meaning were clear, though it would be a reason for holding (if it were open to us to do so) that that could not be the meaning of the Act."

The cases show, in my view, that what always has to be decided is the meaning of the particular statutory enactment. While recognising that mens rea is a pre-requisite of a criminal conviction the question always is whether Parliament in a particular instance has enacted that on proof of certain facts strict or absolute liability is to follow? Whether the subject-matter of the legislation is such that a conviction would be regarded as involving serious stigma, or whether the subject-matter is such that a conviction would be regarded as involving minimal stigma, cannot affect the question as to what Parliament has in fact enacted. It is to the words used by Parliament that attention has to be directed.

Some of the decisions seem to be in conflict with others. Cundy v. Le Cocq (83) was a case under s. 13 of the Licensing Act, 1872. The keeper of licensed premises was held guilty of having sold intoxicating liquor to a drunken person even though the latter had given no indication of intoxication and even though there was no awareness on the part of the publican or his servants. It was held that the prohibition was absolute and that knowledge of the condition of the person served with liquor was not necessary to constitute the offence. STEPHEN, J. said (84):

"I am of opinion that the words of the section amount to an absolute prohibition of the sale of liquor to a drunken person, and that the existence of a bona fide mistake as to the condition of the person served is not an answer to the charge, but is a matter only for mitigation of the penalties that may be imposed. I am led to that conclusion both by the general scope of the Act, which is for the repression of drunkenness, and from a comparison of the various sections under the head 'offences against public order'."

He proceeded to point out that in some sections, but not in the section in question, there was the word "knowingly". In reference to the maxim that in every criminal offence there must be a guilty mind STEPHEN, J. said (85):

"In old time, and as applicable to the common law or to earlier statutes, the maxim may have been of general application; but a difference has arisen owing to the greater precision of modern statutes. It is impossible now, as illustrated by the cases of R. v. Prince (86) and R. v. Bishop (87) to apply the maxim generally to all statutes, and the substance of all the reported cases is that it is necessary to look at the object of each Act that is under consideration to see whether and how far knowledge is of the essence of the offence created."

(81) [1861-73] All E.R. Rep. 248; (1861), L.C. & Ca. 44. (82) [1894] 1 Q.B. at p. 348.

(83) [1881-85] All E.R. Rep. 412; (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 207.

(84) (1884), 13 Q.B.D. at p. 209; [1881-85] All E.R. Rep. at p. 413.

(85) (1884), 13 Q.B.D. at p. 210; [1881-85] All E.R. Rep. at pp. 413, 414.

(86) [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 881; (1875), L.R. 2 C.C.R. 154.

(87) (1880), L.R. 5 Q.B.D. 259.

A In contrast to Cundy v. Le Cocq (88) was the decision in Sherras v. de Rutzen (89) where it was held that s. 16 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1872, which prohibits the supplying by a licensed person of liquor to a constable on duty did not apply where the licensed person bona fide believed that the constable was off duty. WRIGHT, J. said (90):

B “The presumption is, that mens rea, an evil intention, or a knowledge of the wrongfulness of the act, is an essential ingredient in every offence; but that presumption is liable to be displaced either by the words of the statute creating the offence or by the subject-matter with which it deals, and both must be considered: Nichols v. Hall (91).”

C In his judgment WRIGHT, J., noted certain groups or classes of cases which he felt could be regarded as exceptions to the general rule that mens rea is an essential ingredient in an offence.

Cases which have required decisions in regard to particular words in particular enactments may be of value in recording lines of approach. I would cite some words of LORD GODDARD, C.J., when in Brend v. Wood, (92), he said (93):

D “It should first be observed that at English common law there must always be mens rea to constitute a crime; if a person can show that he acted without mens rea that is a defence to a criminal prosecution. There are statutes and regulations in which Parliament has seen fit to create offences and make people responsible before criminal courts although there is an absence of mens rea; but it is certainly not the court’s duty to be acute to find that mens rea is not a constituent part of a crime. It is of the utmost importance for the protection of the liberty of the subject that a court should always bear in mind that, unless a statute either clearly or by necessary implication, rules out mens rea as a constituent part of a crime, the court should not find a man guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has a guilty mind.”

E In Harding v. Price (94) LORD GODDARD, C.J., re-affirmed the principle which he had expressed and pointed to the great importance of adhering to it in days when offences are multiplied to an extent which makes it difficult for the most law-abiding subjects in some way or at some time to avoid offending against the law. He expressed the view (95):

F “If, apart from authority, one seeks to find a principle applicable to this matter it may be thus stated. If a statute contains an absolute prohibition against the doing of some act, as a general rule mens rea is not a constituent of the offence; but there is all the difference between prohibiting an act and imposing a duty to do something on the happening of a certain event. Unless a man knows that the event has happened, how can he carry out the duty imposed?”

G I pass, then, to a consideration of the Act of 1964, with which alone is this case concerned. I proceed on the basis that, unless a statute otherwise provides, there should be no conviction if there is no mens rea. A statute may by express provision enact that in certain circumstances there will be what is often called strict or absolute liability. Parliament may consider that it is so important to prevent some particular act from being committed that it absolutely forbids it to be done (see per CHANNELL, J. in Pearks, Gunston and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward (96)).

I It is important to consider what is meant when it is said that before there can be a conviction under s. 1 of the Act of 1964 there must be “mens rea”.

(88) [1881-85] All E.R. Rep. 412; (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 207.

(89) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 1167; [1895] 1 Q.B. 918.

(90) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. at p. 1169; [1895] 1 Q.B. at p. 921.

(91) (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 322.

(92) (1946), 175 L.T. 306.

(93) (1946), 175 L.T. at p. 307.

(94) [1948] 1 All E.R. 283; [1948] 1 K.B. 695.

(95) [1948] 1 All E.R. at p. 285; [1948] 1 K.B. at p. 701.

(96) [1900-03] All E.R. Rep. 228 at p. 232; [1902] 2 K.B. 1 at p. 11.

When it was enacted that "a person who has a substance in his possession" in contravention of the provision in the early part of s. 1 should be liable to punishment, did Parliament intend that a person should only be so liable if he knowingly had such a substance in his possession and knowingly had it with a guilty mind? The word "knowingly" is not used. Should it be implied as being ordinarily a requirement in a criminal prosecution? Must the prosecution prove that an accused had a guilty mind?

In considering these questions the wording in the Act of 1964 must be regarded. It is a declared purpose of the Act to prevent the misuse of drugs. If actual possession of particular substances which are regarded as potentially damaging is not controlled there will be danger of the misuse of them by those who possess them. They might be harmfully used; they might be sold in most undesirable ways. Parliament set out therefore to "penalise" possession. That was a strong thing to do. Parliament proceeded to define and limit the classes and descriptions of people who alone could possess. All the indications are that save in the case of such persons Parliament decided to forbid possession absolutely.

It might well happen that a police constable acting in the course of his duty would come into possession of a prohibited substance. He might come into possession after being armed with a search warrant to search some premises. He would know what he had but no one could say that he would have a guilty mind. Yet Parliament found it necessary to make express provision to withdraw the prohibition in such a case. It is enacted in s. 1 (4) of the Act of 1964:

"Subsection (1) above shall not be taken to prohibit the possession of a substance by any servant of Her Majesty or constable acting in the course of his duty as such."

Servants of Her Majesty acting in the course of their duty would certainly not have a guilty mind.

If a prohibited substance was put in a sealed package and sent by post the postmen who, in the performance of their duty, handled the package would neither know of the contents of the package nor would they have guilty minds. They are, however, given immunity by the regulation (97) which was made on Sept. 17, 1964, and laid before Parliament on Sept. 24, 1964. In the same way carriers and those employed by carriers when acting as such might be in possession of prohibited substances without having knowledge of what it was they possessed; they would not have guilty minds. They also have the protection given them by the regulation to which I have referred.

In my view, the wording of s. 1 of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 is clear and emphatic. Unless a person has justification as specifically laid down "it shall not be lawful" for him to have a prohibited substance in his possession. For the reasons that I have earlier given I think that, before the prosecution can succeed, they must prove that a person knowingly had in his possession something which in fact was a prohibited substance. In my view, the prosecution has discharged that onus in this case. Was it, however, for the prosecution to prove that the appellant knew the nature and quality of that which he had? In my view, it was not. The evidence proved that what the appellant had in his possession was B-aminopropylbenzine or a salt of that substance. I cannot think, and indeed it could hardly be suggested, that the intention of Parliament as shown by the words of the enactment was that it had to be proved by the prosecution that the appellant, being consciously in possession of something, was in fact consciously in possession of what he knew to be a salt of B-aminopropylbenzine. Though the appellant shrank from asserting that such obligation of proof rested on the prosecution, I find it difficult to see that there is any justification for a suggestion of a sort of half-way obligation on the prosecution, i.e., of proving that the appellant did not believe that he had lawful authority to have what he had.

(97) The Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Exemptions Regulations 1964, S.I. 1964 No. 1528.

- A For the reasons which I have set out I conclude, therefore, that the appellant was shown "to have in his possession a substance for the time being specified in the Schedule" to the Act of 1964. What follows? The words of s. 1 are quite clear. "It shall not be lawful for a person to have in his possession" such a substance. If the appellant did have such possession it was not lawful. The lawfulness or unlawfulness of his possession cannot depend on whether or not he knew the provisions of the Act of 1964. Ignorantia juris non excusat. If he had possession and if none of the exceptions or exemptions or permissions applied, then it was unlawful possession. The Act of 1964 so proclaimed. Unauthorised possession of a scheduled substance is strictly prohibited and is unlawful. It cannot become lawful because a possessor does not know of the Act of Parliament. Nor can it become lawful because the possessor does not know or realise that what he in fact possesses is a scheduled substance. All possession of a scheduled substance is unlawful unless it is authorised possession and "a person who has a substance in his possession in contravention of the foregoing provision shall be liable" to certain penalties.

- The intention of Parliament is revealed by the words used in their context in an Act which, with the object of preventing the misuse of certain drugs, penalises their very possession except in strictly limited and carefully defined cases. If there is possession which is unlawful, there is a liability to certain penalties. No exemptions are made. Once possession is established, with such mental element as is involved in the proof of possession, then (if it is unauthorised) a liability to certain penalties up to certain maxima, according to whether there is a summary conviction or conviction on indictment, inevitably arises.

- E I think that in criminal matters it is important to have clarity and certainty. I have endeavoured to set out my view as to what the Act of 1964 denotes by the words "to have in his possession". So far as a summary is possible my conclusion is that in a prosecution under s. 1 it is for the prosecution to prove (a) that the accused was knowingly in control of some article or thing or substance or package or container in circumstances which had enabled him to know or to discover (or could have enabled him, had he so wished, to know or to discover) what it was that he had before assuming control of it or continuing to be in control of it, and (b) that, whether the accused knew this or not, the article or thing or substance or package or container that he had, consisted of, or contained, a prohibited substance.

I would dismiss the appeal.

- G LORD GUEST: My Lords, the appellant was convicted at the Inner London Quarter Sessions on a charge that he on Nov. 18, 1966, not being authorised, had in his possession a substance specified in the schedule to the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964, namely, twenty thousand tablets containing amphetamine sulphate. He appealed to the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) (98) inter alia on the ground that the learned chairman had misdirected the jury in law. The alleged misdirection was contained in the following passages from the summing-up:

- I "There is absolute prohibition in law unless you have lawful authority, that is to say, a medical prescription or something of the kind; it is absolute prohibition for anybody to have . . . Now you have just listened to an argument going on. There are statutes in law which charge matters relating to possession, but they use the words 'knowingly had in your possession'. This statute does not. This statute says you must not have in your possession in any circumstances whatsoever, unless you have got a lawful excuse . . . Now then, members of the jury, it was under control because 'possession' means that you have control. [The appellant] quite clearly had, and does not deny he had, control of these pills, and if he had, and it is a matter for you to make up your minds about because you are the judges of fact—if you think the evidence is, he does not dispute it, that he had control of that box which in fact turned out to be full of amphetamine sulphate, that creates the original offence; it is only mitigation that he did not know."

His appeal was dismissed, but the court granted him leave to appeal to the House of Lords on the following certificate:

"Whether for the purposes of s. 1 of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964, a defendant is deemed to be in possession of a prohibited substance when to his knowledge he is in physical possession of the substance but is unaware of its true nature."

[HIS LORDSHIP read s. 1 (1) of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964, which is set out at p. 370, letters E and F, ante, and continued:] The facts of the case are not entirely clear and can only be derived from the chairman's summing-up to the jury. On Nov. 18, 1966, the appellant who was driving a mini-van was stopped by a policeman and questioned as to the contents of the van. There were three cases in the van and in answer to the policeman's questions he said it was rubbish which he was intending to dump. The packages were opened by the police; in one of them was scent and in the other a package of twenty thousand tablets of amphetamine sulphate. The accused in evidence gave this description of the origin of the package. He said he was selling the scent as a side line and that he had arranged to meet a friend in a café in Walthamstow. When he went there, the proprietor told him that his friend had been in but had gone away and had left something for him under the counter. The accused looked under the counter and found two boxes, both of which he assumed contained scent. He collected them and drove away. The accused said he took the box containing the pills by accident, that he had no idea what was in the box or how they got there. The proprietor of the café says that a man came in and left one parcel which he, the proprietor, put under the counter. When he put it there, there was only one box. He could give no account of how the second box came to be there.

The first issue which is raised very sharply is whether the court below (99) were correct in their interpretation of s. 1 of the Act of 1964. Is it right to say that the accused is in possession of a prohibited substance when he knows he is physically in possession of the substance but is unaware of its true nature? A great number of authorities were referred to in which the meaning of "possession" has been considered. The burden of these cases is that there must be knowledge before there can be possession. There is no possession by a man until he knows what he has got. This, however, leaves the question of what is meant by "what". In R. v. Ashwell (100) the accused asked for the loan of a shilling. The prosecutor gave him a sovereign, both believing it was a shilling; subsequently the accused discovered that the coin was a sovereign. A court of fourteen judges were equally divided as to whether he was guilty of larceny at common law when he fraudulently appropriated the sovereign to his own use. A much quoted passage is that of CAVE, J. (101):

"If these cases are rightly decided, as I believe them to be, they establish the principle that a man has not possession of that of the existence of which he is unaware. A man cannot without his consent be made to incur the responsibilities towards the real owner which arise even from the simple possession of a chattel without further title, and if a chattel has, without his knowledge, been placed in his custody, his rights and liabilities as a possessor of that chattel do not arise until he is aware of the existence of the chattel, and has assented to the possession of it."

Also by LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., who said (102):

"In good sense it seems to me he did not take it till he knew what he had got; and when he knew what he had got, that same instant he stole it."

(99) [1967] 3 All E.R. 93.

(101) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. at p. 201.

(100) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 190.

(102) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. at p. 225.

A Thereafter the decisions are difficult to reconcile, compare Cundy v. Le Cocq (103) with Sherras v. de Rutzen (104).

While these cases were mainly decided in relation to the crime of larceny, they do illustrate the principle that there must, in relation to possession, be some conscious mental element present. The sleeper who has a packet put into his hand during sleep has not got possession of it during sleep, but if when he wakes up he

B grasps the article, it is then in his possession. If someone surreptitiously puts something into my pocket, I am not in possession of it until I know that it is there. The remarks of ALDERSON, B., in R. v. Woodrow (105) are to this effect (106):

“ . . . the words of the Act, though they are no doubt very stringent, are nevertheless very clear, and any retailer of tobacco who has an adulterated article in his possession is liable to the penalty. I cannot say that this man had not the tobacco in his possession, because he clearly knew it. He did not know it was in an adulterated state, but he knew he had it in his possession; and the question of ‘ knowingly ’, it appears to me, is involved in the word possession. That is, a man has not in his possession that which he does not know to be about him. I am not in possession of anything which a person has put into my stable without my knowledge. It is clear, therefore, that possession includes a knowledge of the facts as far as the possession of the article is concerned.”

D

This would seem to accord with commonsense. In the DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH LAW (EARL JOWITT) 1959 at p. 1367 “ possession ” is defined as follows:

E “ POSSESSION, the visible possibility of exercising physical control over a thing, coupled with the intention of doing so, either against all the world, or against all the world except certain persons. There are, therefore, three requisites of possession. First, there must be actual or potential physical control. Secondly, physical control is not possession, unless accompanied by intention; hence, if a thing is put into the hand of a sleeping person, he has not possession of it. Thirdly, the possibility and intention must be visible or evidenced by external signs, for if the thing shows no signs of being under the control of anyone, it is not possessed; . . . ”

F

In the end of all, however, the meaning of “ possession ” must depend on the context. Lockyer v. Gibb (107) was a case under reg. 9 of the Dangerous Drugs (No. 2) Regulations 1964, which is in similar terms to s. 1 of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964. Regulation 20 defines “ possession ” for the purposes

G of these regulations in the following way:

“ For the purposes of these regulations a person shall be deemed to be in possession of a drug if it is in his actual custody or is held by some other person subject to his control or for him and on his behalf.”

In that case LORD PARKER, C.J., said (108):

H “ In my judgment, before one comes to a consideration of a necessity for mens rea or, as it is sometimes said, a consideration of whether the regulation imposed an absolute liability, it is of course necessary to consider possession itself. In my judgment, it is quite clear that a person cannot be said to be in possession of some article which he or she does not realise is, or may be, in her handbag, in her room, or in some other place over which she had control.

I That, I should have thought is elementary; if something were slipped into one’s basket and one had not the vaguest notion it was there at all, one could not possibly be said to be in possession of it.”

(103) [1881-85] All E.R. Rep. 412; (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 207.

(104) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 1167; [1895] 1 Q.B. 918.

(105) (1846), 15 M. & W. 404.

(106) (1846), 15 M. & W. at p. 418.

(107) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243.

(108) [1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 655; [1967] 2 Q.B. at p. 248.

Later he said (109):

"... in my judgment, under this provision, while it is necessary to show that the appellant knew that she had the articles which turned out to be a drug, it is not necessary that she should know that in fact it was a drug or a drug of a particular character."

In my view this is the correct connotation of "possession" in the context of the Act of 1964.

It is said, however, that to constitute an offence under s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1964, mens rea is necessary. To the extent that there must be knowledge that the accused has possession of the package or bottle which contains the drugs I agree; but the appellant's argument went further, to the extent that this is not an absolute offence but requires knowledge not only of the existence of the package but also of the substance itself, although not of its precise nature. For my part I can see no halfway house between the offence being absolute in the sense that mere possession of the container constitutes the offence and the offence being only constituted by knowledge in the full sense. If knowledge is necessary, this must mean that "knowingly" must precede in s. 1 (1) the words "to have in his possession". Which construction is to be preferred must depend on the language of the section.

In construing the section certain considerations have to be borne in mind. The title of the Act is "Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964" and the long title is "An Act to penalise the possession, and restrict the importation, of drugs of certain kinds". The title thus indicates that the evil is the misuse of drugs and that their possession is to be penalised. The actual words of s. 1 (1) "it shall not be lawful for a person to have in his possession" a prohibited substance could not make it clearer that subject to certain exemptions the possession of prohibited drugs is an offence. With respect to those who hold that this is not an absolute offence I cannot conceive of any words which could make the offence more absolute. It is as absolute as it can be. I am not inclined to place much weight on whether there is or is not a presumption that mens rea is a necessary ingredient in a statutory offence, but if there was, the presumption has to some extent been whittled down in recent years (see Harding v. Price (110)) and in any event the language of s. 1 in my view is sufficient to rebut any such presumption. The very doing of the act, as has been said, imputes mens rea. Other factors which are relevant to be taken into account are the mischief aimed at and the object of the prohibition. The mischief is clearly the unauthorised possession of the drugs which are injurious to health unless administered under prescription. The social evil of the trafficking of drugs is clearly struck at.

Last, but by no means least, there must be consideration of the case of evasion of the offence if mens rea is required. The very nature of the drug, namely, small pills, makes secretion, easy and detection difficult. If the correct interpretation of s. 1 of the Act of 1964 is that the prosecution are required to prove knowledge by the accused of the existence of the substance this will be, in my view, a drug peddler's charter in which a successful prosecution will be well-nigh impossible in the case of the trafficker who conceals the drugs and on questioning remains silent or at any rate refuses to disclose the origin of the drug. If the offence involves knowledge, this knowledge must extend not only to the prohibited act but also the totality of the prohibition (see Gaumont British Distributors v. Henry (111)). If, therefore, this is not an absolute offence the prosecution will, in my view, require to establish knowledge by the accused not only of possession of the actual substance but also of the nature of the substance, namely, that it is a prohibited drug under the Act of 1964. This would, in my view, lead to wide-scale evasion of the Act. The test has sometimes been put as to which interpretation

(109) [1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 656; [1967] 2 Q.B. at p. 249.

(110) [1948] 1 All E.R. at p. 285; [1948] 1 K.B. at p. 701.

(111) [1939] 2 All E.R. 808; [1939] 2 K.B. 711.

- A would best assist in achieving the object of the Act (see Lim Chin Aik v. Reginam (112), per LORD EVERSHED). To this question I unhesitatingly answer that the offence is absolute. In fact I would go further and say that to require mens rea would very largely defeat the purpose and object of the Act of 1964. A further indication that an absolute offence was intended is, in my view, that certain exemptions are provided in the Act and the Secretary of State is empowered to
- B grant further exemptions which he has done in relation to public carriers and the post office (The Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Exemptions Regulations 1964).

The precise question arose in the Canadian case of Beaver v. Reginam (113) where a court of five judges were divided three and two and held that it was not an absolute offence. The arguments pro et con are clearly set out in the judgment of the majority given by CARTWRIGHT, J., and of the minority by FAUTEUX, J.

- C I prefer the minority judgment.

Absolute offences are by no means unknown to our law and have been created inter alia in relation to firearms (Firearms Act, 1937 (114)), and shotguns (Criminal Justice Act 1967, s. 85) which Acts create serious offences. A common feature of these Acts and the Drugs Act is that they all deal with dangerous substances where the object is to prevent unauthorised possession and illegal

- D trafficking in these articles.

In Chajutin v. Whitehead (115) it was an offence under the Aliens Order, 1920, to be in possession of an altered passport without lawful authority. The court held that if a person is in possession of an altered passport, it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove guilty knowledge of the alteration. In the earlier case of R. v. Woodrow (116) a dealer in and retailer of tobacco was convicted of having

E in his possession adulterated tobacco, although he had purchased it as genuine and had no knowledge or cause to suspect that it was not so. These cases bear a strong resemblance to the present.

The argument for the appellant, which has found favour with some of your lordships, is that where knowledge of possession of the article is proved, if there is absence of knowledge of the quality of the article then that is possession under

F the Act; but if there is knowledge of the existence of the package but no knowledge of the contents of the package, that is not possession. With great respect to those who hold this view I am unable to see how, if I know that I have a parcel in my possession I am not also in possession of its contents. The argument seems to be a metaphysical distinction which Parliament could not have intended to enter into the construction of this Act of Parliament, the express purpose of which is to

- G penalise the possession of prohibited drugs. This construction of the Act moreover will not prevent the conviction of a so-called "innocent possessor" of drugs, who knows what they are but has them in his possession for a perfectly legitimate though not authorised purpose. It will, however, assist in the acquittal of the peddler who has drugs concealed in a package. To take a concrete example, however innocent the purpose for which a person has a drug openly in his possession, provided he is not an exempt person he will be guilty, but if he conceals the drug he will not be convicted, unless there are circumstances from which knowledge can be inferred. This construction is to import the element of mens rea into the offence because it requires knowledge of the existence of the very thing or res which is the subject of the charge. I may ask—"Why stop there? Why not require also knowledge of the quality of the substance because it is the possession
- I of the prohibited substance that is the offence under the Act?"

In my opinion, the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) (117) were right and the appeal should be dismissed.

(112) [1963] 1 All E.R. at p. 228; [1963] A.C. at p. 174.

(113) [1957] S.C.R. 531.

(114) Now Firearms Act 1965.

(115) [1938] 1 All E.R. 159; [1938] 1 K.B. 506.

(116) (1846), 15 M. & W. 404.

(117) [1967] 3 All E.R. 93.

LORD PEARCE: My Lords, the illicit drug traffic is a very serious evil. Parliament intended by the Act of 1964 to prevent it so far as possible by penalising the unauthorised possession of certain drugs. There are three methods, broadly speaking, by which Parliament may have intended to achieve its purpose. The first (for which the appellant contends) is this. Parliament, it is said, intended that the word "possession" should connote some knowledge of the thing possessed and of its quality. It also intended that a defendant should only be convicted if he had a guilty mind. The extent of the knowledge and the exact nature of the guilty mind are problems which obviously overlap. The second possible view (for which the Crown contend) is that Parliament intended that the defendant, even if innocent of any knowledge of the nature of the drug or any guilty knowledge, must be convicted when once it was shown that he had to his knowledge physical control of a thing which (whether he knows it or not) is or contains unlawful drug. Thirdly, Parliament may have intended what was described as a "half-way house" in the full and able argument by counsel on both sides. Each acknowledged its possibility and certain obvious advantages, but neither felt able to give it any very solid support. By this method the mere physical possession of drugs would be enough to throw on a defendant the onus of establishing his innocence, and unless he did so (on a balance of probabilities) he would be convicted. The Explosive Substances Act, 1883, produces this fair and sensible result but it does so by express words ("Unless he can show that he had it in his possession for a lawful object"). Support for such a result is to be found in the dictum of DAY, J., in Sherras v. de Rutzen (118) where he founds his view on the absence of the word "knowingly". Again, there is some support for this view in Harding v. Price (119) (see the judgment of SINGLETON, J.). In Roper v. Taylor's Central Garages (Exeter), Ltd. (120), however, DEVLIN, J., puts forward cogent reasons against it. Again in Lim Chin Aik v. Regina (121), the Judicial Committee expresses a view against it. Unfortunately I do not find the half-way house reconcilable with the speech of VISCOUNT SANKEY, L.C., in Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecutions (122). Reluctantly, therefore, I am compelled to the decision that it is not maintainable. Ultimately the burden of proof is always on the prosecution, unless it has been shifted by any statutory provision. If, therefore, there is initially in the crime an element of knowledge or guilty mind, the jury must at the end of the case acquit, if they are left in doubt.

Thus one is left with a choice between two alternatives to each of which there are objections. If this is an absolute offence, without an element of knowledge, people with no intention to break the law may find themselves with no defence, because they innocently have unlawful drugs in their physical possession. Various circumstances which could produce this result have been envisaged in argument. If, on the other hand, knowledge or guilty mind must be proved this is difficult for the prosecution to prove and it is much easier for the drug peddler to escape by some story which is just plausible enough to raise some doubt. These considerations are well set out, together with the various authorities, in the conflicting judgments in Beaver v. Regina (123) in the Supreme Court of Canada, a case concerned with "being in possession of a drug" under the Canadian Opium and Narcotic Act, 1952.

The express words of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964, "have in his possession" admittedly connote knowledge of some sort. It is conceded by the Crown that these words do not include goods slipped into a man's pocket without his knowledge. In Lockyer v. Gibb (124) an offence under the Dangerous

(118) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. at p. 1169; [1895] 1 Q.B. at p. 921.

(119) [1948] 1 All E.R. at p. 286; [1948] 1 K.B. at p. 704.

(120) (1951), 2 T.L.R. 285.

(121) [1963] 1 All E.R. at p. 228; [1963] A.C. at p. 173.

(122) [1935] 1 All E.R. 1 at p. 8; [1935] A.C. 462 at p. 481.

(123) [1957] S.C.R. 531.

(124) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243.

- A Drugs Act 1964 (and regulations made thereunder) was held to be absolute; but LORD PARKER, C.J., there rightly said (125):

“ In my judgment, it is quite clear that a person cannot be said to be in possession of some article which he or she does not realise is, or maybe, in her handbag, in her room, or in some other place over which she has control. That I should have thought is elementary; if something were slipped into one’s basket and one had not the vaguest notion it was there at all, one could not possibly be said to be in possession of it.”

- B The difficulty comes when a “ possessor ” knows that he has something, but is either unaware what it is or is completely mistaken as to its qualities, e.g., thinks that the package contains scent (as was suggested here) or thinks that the tablets are innocent aspirin when really they are guilty heroin. On the Crown’s contention it is enough if a man knows that he physically possesses a thing even though he does not know its nature or is mistaken in its qualities.

- C For the purposes of the crime of larceny there are many intricate authorities dealing with possession. In R. v. Ashwell (126) a full court of fourteen judges was evenly divided. The main point of the dispute was whether for the purposes of larceny the recipient of a coin which both he and the giver thought to be a shilling but which the recipient later found to be a sovereign took possession of the coin at the earlier time when he first received it in ignorance of its true nature, or at the later time when he discovered that it was a sovereign. CAVE, J., after referring to earlier authorities said (127):

- E “ If these cases are rightly decided, as I believe them to be, they establish the principle that a man has not possession of that of the existence of which he is unaware.”

- When, however, a man knows that he physically has an article in his possession, how far does a mistake as to its essential attributes nullify the apparent possession? It would be, for instance, quite unreal (and particularly in such a context as one is here considering) to say that a man who bought and kept a so-called authentic Rembrandt for years, never had it in his possession because he later found by X-ray examination that it was a skilful fake. When once one draws a distinction between a thing and its qualities, one gets involved in philosophic intricacies which are not very appropriate to a blunt Act of Parliament intended to curb the drug traffic. R. v. Ashwell (126) was concerned with the transfer of ownership and no relevant deductions can be drawn from it in the present case. I agree with my noble and learned friend, LORD WILBERFORCE, in his analysis of the concept of possession and, indeed, with the whole of his opinion in this matter.

- G LORD READING, C.J., in Webb v. Baker (128) said that the word “ possession ” should be given a popular and not a narrow construction for the purpose of the provision there in question (Public Health Act, 1875, s. 117). VISCOUNT CALDECOTE, C.J., in Oliver v. Goodger (129) also remarked that it was not a term of art. Again, LORD PARKER, C.J., in Towers & Co., Ltd. v. Gray (130) after observing that the term “ possession ” is always giving rise to trouble, and after considering various cases there cited, concluded, rightly as I think, that in each case its meaning must depend on the context in which it was used.

- H One must, therefore, attempt from the apparent intention of the Act itself to reach a construction of the word “ possession ” which is not so narrow as to stultify the practical efficacy of the Act or so broad that it creates absurdity or injustice.

(125) [1966] 2 All E.R. at p. 655; [1967] 2 Q.B. at p. 248.

(126) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 190.

(127) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. at p. 201.

(128) [1916] 2 K.B. 753 at p. 759.

(129) [1944] 2 All E.R. 481 at p. 482.

(130) [1961] 2 All E.R. 68 at p. 71; [1961] 2 Q.B. 351 at p. 361.

Parliament was clearly intending to prevent or curtail the drug traffic. Having defined a series of persons who may lawfully possess the drugs, it makes possession by all others unlawful, thus putting the drugs out of the reach of unauthorised persons. It was not merely forbidding them to possess drugs for unlawful or guilty objects. It was forbidding them to possess the drugs at all. Thus it would block up all unauthorised channels through which drugs might flow and would thereby establish a strict control of their dissemination. It was forbidding unauthorised possession even for worthy motives, e.g., by the person who, though not authorised, volunteers to carry them from the chemist (who is entitled to sell them) to the patient (who is entitled to consume them). This is made clear by the exemption (in s. 1 (4)) of "any servant of Her Majesty or constable acting in the course of his duty as such". There is an assumption that the Act of 1964 was intending to penalise those with no guilty intentions, since otherwise such an exemption would be unnecessary and absurd. As soon as everyone who has a good motive may with impunity possess them, the efficacy of the control is injured. For that reason it cannot, I think, have been intended that it should be a defence for an unauthorised person to show that he may have possessed the drugs for a laudable object or with no guilty intentions. For the unauthorised person is simply not allowed to have them for any object whatever.

For the same reason I do not think that possession was intended to be limited by legal technicalities to one of two alternatives, namely, either to mere physical possession or to mere legal possession. Both are forbidden. A man may not lawfully own the drugs of which his servant or his bailee has physical possession or control. Nor may he lawfully have physical possession or control as servant or bailee of drugs which are owned by others. By physical possession or control I include things in his pocket, in his car, in his room and so forth. That seems to me to accord with the general popular wide meaning of the word "possession" and to be in accordance with the intention of the Act.

On the other hand, I do not think that Parliament intended to make a man guilty of possessing something when he did not know that he had the thing at all. It is here that the real difficulties begin.

LORD PARKER, C.J., in Lockyer v. Gibb (131) was right (and this is conceded by both sides) in taking the view that a person did not have possession of something which had been "slipped into his bag" without his knowledge. One may, therefore, exclude from the "possession" intended by the Act of 1964 the physical control of articles which have been "planted" on him without his knowledge; but how much further is one to go? If one goes to the extreme length of requiring the prosecution to prove that "possession" implies a full knowledge of the name and nature of the drug concerned, the efficacy of the Act is seriously impaired, since many drug peddlars may in truth be unaware of this. I think that the term "possession" is satisfied by a knowledge only of the existence of the thing itself and not its qualities, and that ignorance or mistake as to its qualities is not an excuse. This would comply with the general understanding of the word "possess". Though I reasonably believe the tablets which I possess to be aspirin, yet if they turn out to be heroin I am in possession of heroin tablets. This would be so I think even if I believed them to be sweets. It would be otherwise if I believed them to be something of a wholly different nature. At this point a question of degree arises as to when a difference in qualities amounts to a difference in kind. That is a matter for a jury who would probably decide it sensibly in favour of the genuinely innocent but against the guilty.

The situation with regard to containers presents further problems. If a man is in possession of the contents of a package, prima facie his possession of the package leads to the strong inference that he is in possession of its contents;

- A but can this be rebutted by evidence that he was mistaken as to its contents? As in the case of goods that have been "planted" in his pocket without his knowledge, so I do not think that he is in possession of contents which are quite different in kind from what he believed. Thus the prima facie assumption is discharged if he proves (or raises a real doubt in the matter) either (a) that he was a servant or bailee who had no right to open it and no reason to suspect
- B that its contents were illicit or were drugs or (b) that although he was the owner he had no knowledge of (including a genuine mistake as to) its actual contents or of their illicit nature and that he received them innocently and also that he had had no reasonable opportunity since receiving the package of acquainting himself with its actual contents. For a man takes over a package or suit-case at risk as to its contents being unlawful if he does not immediately examine it
- C (if he is entitled to do so). As soon as may be he should examine it and if he finds the contents suspicious reject possession by either throwing them away or by taking immediate sensible steps for their disposal.

So to read the Act of 1964 would, I think, accord with what Parliament intended and would give it a sense which would accord with the practical views of a jury, although I realise that a deeper investigation of the legal implications

- D of possession might support various differing views. It would leave some unfortunate victims of circumstances who move innocently but rashly in shady surroundings and who carry packages or tablets for strangers or unreliable friends. I think, however, that even they would have an opportunity of ventilating their story and in some cases, if innocent of any knowledge and bad motives, obtaining an acquittal. Some of the persons in some of the rather far-fetched
- E circumstances which have been envisaged in argument would still be left in difficulties; but I do not think that Parliament intended to cater for them in its efforts to stop a serious evil.

Lockyer v. Gibb (132) held that a similar offence under the Dangerous Drugs Act 1964, was an absolute offence. The fact that in that case there was a regulation made under the Act with regard to the meaning of the word "possession" cannot affect the question whether the Act was creating an absolute offence. Moreover in other respects the arguments as to whether an absolute offence was intended are the same under both Acts. I think under both Acts an absolute offence was intended.

- F Had there been a minimum penalty imposed, as under the Canadian Act considered in Beaver v. Reginam (133) that would have been a strong argument
- G in favour of the offence not being absolute. But here there is no minimum penalty. In an appropriate case the judge may inflict no penalty.

- Again, if the meaning of the words "unlawful possession" included articles which had been "planted" on a man, or insinuated into his possession without his knowledge, that would be a very strong argument indeed against the offence being absolute. Since, however, there is, in my opinion, some limited element
- H of knowledge in the word "possession" the force of that argument is lessened.

- The gravity of the evil which the Act of 1964 is seeking to prevent and the dangers which are presented by the passing of drugs through informal or unauthorised channels, even where some of the unauthorised persons have no improper motives or are merely careless or indifferent, indicate the importance
- I of closing them altogether. The Act forbids them. It expressly exempts certain persons who would obviously have no mens rea. The further exemption from the Act of all those who cannot be shown to have a guilty intention would seriously impair its effectiveness and the express exemptions show that this was not intended. While appreciating the force of the arguments which have been put against it, I am of opinion that the Act of 1964 comes within the class of

(132) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243.

(133) [1957] S.C.R. 531.

Acts referred to by WRIGHT, J. in Sherras v. de Rutzen (134) in which the offence is absolute. A

It would, I think, be an improvement of a difficult position if Parliament were to enact that when a person has ownership or physical possession of drugs he shall be guilty unless he proves on a balance of probabilities that he was unaware of their nature or had reasonable excuse for their possession. In the present case, therefore, there was a very strong prima facie inference of fact B that the accused was in possession of the drugs; but he was entitled to try to rebut (or raise a doubt as to) that inference by putting before the jury his defence that, although the package itself was clearly in his possession, the contents were not. He could have sought to persuade them in spite of his lies and evasions that he received the contents innocently, that he genuinely believed the package to contain scent, and that he had no reasonable opportunity of examining its C contents. The chairman, however, told the jury:

"If you think the evidence is, he does not dispute it, that he had control of that box which in fact turned out to be full of amphetamine sulphate, that creates the original offence; it is only mitigation that he did not know."

The direction to which the appellant was entitled would, in my opinion, be approximately as follows. The Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964 forbids D possession of these drugs. Whether he possessed them with an innocent or guilty mind or for a laudable or improper purpose is immaterial, since he is not allowed to possess them. If he possessed them, he is guilty. If a man has physical control or possession of a thing that is sufficient possession under the Act of 1964 provided that he knows that he has the thing; but a man does not (within E the meaning of the Act of 1964) possess things of whose existence he is unaware. The prosecution have here proved that he possessed the parcel, but have they proved that he possessed its contents also? There is a very strong inference of fact in any normal case that a man who possesses a parcel also possesses its contents, an inference on which a jury would in a normal case be justified in finding possession. A man who accepts possession of a parcel normally accepts F possession of the contents. That inference, however, can be disproved or shaken by evidence that, although a man was in possession of a parcel, he was completely mistaken as to its contents and would not have accepted possession had he known what kind of thing the contents were. A mistake as to the qualities of the contents, however, does not negative possession. Many people possess things of whose exact qualities they are unaware. If the accused knew that the contents G were drugs or were tablets, he was in possession of them, though he was mistaken as to their qualities. Again if, though unaware of the contents, he did not open them at the first opportunity to ascertain (as he was entitled to do in this case) what they were, the proper inference is that he was accepting possession of them. (It would be otherwise if he had no right to open the parcel.) Again, if he suspected that there was anything wrong about the contents when he received H the parcel, the proper inference is that he was accepting possession of the contents by not immediately verifying them. (This would, in my opinion, apply also to a bailee.)

In the present case you may think that the difference between scent and I tablets is a sufficient difference in kind to entitle the accused to an acquittal if on the whole of the evidence it appears that he may have genuinely believed that the parcel contained scent, and that he may not have had any suspicions that there was anything illicit in the parcel, and that he had no opportunity of verifying its contents. For in that case it is not proved that he was in possession of the contents of the parcel.

The appellant has, therefore, been deprived of the chance of putting before the jury a defence which was in theory open to him on the facts of this case; but

A the evidence against him was so strong that no jury properly directed would have acquitted him. In my opinion, therefore, the proviso should be applied and I would dismiss the appeal.

B LORD WILBERFORCE: My Lords, the appellant was charged with an offence under s. 1 of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964. This section provides that:

“Subject to any exemptions for which provision may be made by regulations made by the Secretary of State and to the following provisions of this section, it shall not be lawful for a person to have in his possession a substance for the time being specified in the Schedule to this Act unless . . .”

C There follow conditions as to possession by virtue of a medical prescription. Subsection (2) gives a considerable list of exempted persons, possession by whom is not prohibited, and more exemptions are stated in sub-s. (3) and sub-s. (4). The Secretary of State has exercised his power of further exemption under sub-s. (1) by statutory instrument.

The question certified as fit for the decision of this House is:

D “Whether for the purposes of s. 1 of the Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964, a defendant is deemed to be in possession of a prohibited substance when to his knowledge he is physically in possession of the substance but is unaware of its true nature.”

E I take this as raising the general question as to the nature and extent of knowledge, or awareness, which must be shown against an accused person found in actual control of a prohibited substance, in order that the section may apply.

When a person is found, as was the appellant, having control of a prohibited drug (I use control to describe a purely physical situation, including that of having control of a container or package in which the drug may be discovered), the question whether, in order to found a charge under the section, any degree of knowledge that he had the drug must be shown may be raised in two ways.

F It may be asked whether in order to constitute possession some intention or knowledge must be shown in addition to the fact of control, or the question may be whether, in order that the statutory offence may be committed, some guilty intention or knowledge, or mens rea, must be proved. It is obvious that these two questions are related. For if one comes to the conclusion that knowledge is required for possession, then in proving possession a sufficient mens rea is

G likely to have been established, and no second stage is needed. Conversely if one believes that mens rea is necessary in order to constitute an offence, then it cannot be said that mere ignorant control would satisfy the section. In my opinion, rather than split up the section into two separate parts, it should be regarded as a whole and one single question should be asked—what kind of control with that mental element does the Act intend to prohibit?

H I can say at once that I am strongly disinclined, unless compelled to do so, to place a meaning on the Act of 1964 which would involve the conviction of a person consequent on mere physical control, without consideration, or the opportunity for consideration, of any mental element. The offence created by the Act of 1964 is a serious one and even though nominal sentences, or conditional discharges, may meet some cases, there may be others of entirely innocent

I control where anything less than acquittal would be unjust. This legislation against a social evil is intended to be strict, even severe, but there is no reason why it should not at the same time be substantially just. One may venture to regret that Parliament has not, in defining this and other offences relating to the possession of drugs, been more specific—as it has, for example, in relation to explosives—as to the facts required to be proved to show guilt or innocence.

The Act of 1964 refers to possession, a concept which is both central in many areas of our legal system, and also lacking in definition. As Viscount Jowitt has said of it “the English law has never worked out a completely logical and exhaustive definition of possession" (United States of America v. Dollfus Mieg et Compagnie S.A. (135)). In relation to it we find English law, as so often, working by description rather than by definition. Ideally, a possessor of a thing has complete physical control over it; he has knowledge of its existence, its situation and its qualities; he has received it from a person who intends to confer possession of it and he has himself the intention to possess it exclusively of others. But these elements are seldom all present in situations with which the courts have to deal, and where one or more of them is lacking, or incompletely present, it has to be decided whether the given approximation is such that possession may be held sufficiently established to satisfy the relevant rule of law. As it is put by POLLOCK AND WRIGHT (136), possession is defined by modes or events in which it commences or ceases, and by the legal incidents attached to it.

Naturally this has led to a number of distinctions and even inconsistencies in borderline cases, such as where a person receives something without knowledge of either the existence or character of other things contained in it, or where he receives one thing thinking that it is something else, or that it has a different value or a different character from what it really has. It is not surprising that this has led to differences of opinion. So we find varying solutions adopted according to whether the question to be solved is one of dishonest intent, as in the larceny cases (R. v. Ashwell (137); R. v. Hehir (138)), intention to pass property as in the secret drawer cases (Cartwright v. Green (139); Merry v. Green (140)), intention to control property as in cases about finders of goods on premises (Bridges v. Hawkesworth (141); South Staffordshire Water Co. v. Sharman (142); Hibbert v. McKiernan (143)) or in relation to sovereign immunity (United States of America v. Dollfus Mieg et Compagnie S.A. (144)). That the solution adopted ultimately depends on the need justly and adequately to meet the requirements of the relevant legal rule is well shown in the words of WILLS, J., in a case about finding on premises—"a decision to the contrary effect would . . . be a great encouragement to dishonesty" (South Staffordshire Water Co. v. Sharman (145)). We are in that field here, for too close an insistence that all the ideal constituents of possession should be present would encourage the distribution of drugs: correspondingly, we must reckon that too great a departure from them might lead to the conviction of the patently innocent.

The Drugs (Prevention of Misuse) Act 1964, penalises the "possession" of drugs; it makes it unlawful to "have in possession" a specified substance. Significantly, it provides, both through a comprehensive list, and through the mechanism of regulations which may be made, for exemptions designed to preserve from penalty many obvious cases of innocent possession, for example under prescription. The effect of this is to reduce the area within which the statutory prohibition of possession is to apply. It still leaves an area, which includes, in effect, the ordinary members of the public, within which the critical question arises.

What is prohibited is possession—a term which is inconclusive as to the final shades of mental intention needed, leaving these to be fixed in relation to the legal context in which the term is used. How should the determination be made?

(135) [1952] 1 All E.R. 572 at p. 581; [1952] A.C. 582 at p. 605.

(136) An Essay on Possession to the Common Law by Frederick Pollock and Robert Samuel Wright, (1888), Part III, Ch. 1, p. 119, per R. S. Wright.

(137) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 190.

(138) [1895] 2 I.R. 709.

(139) (1803), 2 Leach, 952.

(140) (1841), 7 M. & W. 623.

(141) [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 122.

(142) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. 259; [1896] 2 Q.B. 44.

(143) [1948] 1 All E.R. 860; [1948] 2 K.B. 142.

(144) [1952] 1 All E.R. 572; [1952] A.C. 582.

(145) [1895-99] All E.R. Rep. at p. 261; [1896] 2 Q.B. at p. 48.

- A If room is to be found, as in my opinion it should, in legislation of this degree of severity, for acquittal of persons in whose case there is not present a minimum of the mental element, a line must be drawn which juries can distinguish. The question to which an answer is required, and in the end a jury must answer it, is whether in the circumstances the accused should be held to have possession of the substance rather than mere control. In order to decide between these two, the
- B jury should, in my opinion, be invited to consider all the circumstances—to use again the words of POLLOCK AND WRIGHT—the “modes or events” by which the custody commences and the legal incident in which it is held. By these I mean relating them to typical situations, that they must consider the manner and circumstances in which the substance, or something which contains it, has been received, what knowledge or means of knowledge or guilty knowledge as to the
- C presence of the substance, or as to the nature of what has been received, the accused had at the time of receipt or thereafter up to the moment when he is found with it, his legal relation to the substance or package (including his right of access to it). On such matters as these (not exhaustively stated) they must make the decision whether, in addition to physical control, he has, or ought to have imputed to him the intention to possess, or knowledge that he does possess, what is in fact a
- D prohibited substance. If he has this intention or knowledge, it is not additionally necessary that he should know the nature of the substance. I see no difficulty in making clear to the jury what is required in order to establish possession and on this point I desire to associate myself with the observations of my noble and learned friend LORD PEARCE.

- To illustrate by some examples. There is no difficulty in the case of wholly
- E ignorant control, put by LORD PARKER, C.J., in Lockyer v. Gibb (146), where something is slipped into a person's custody without his knowing it is there. This is the classic case of the money in the sacks of Joseph's brethren brought into the law by GIBSON, J., in R. v. Hehir (147). In the same category, in my opinion, would be a case such as that put by CARTWRIGHT, J., in the Canadian appeal of Beaver v. Reginam (148), where a man asks for a harmless remedy and is given by
- F mistake a package containing a prohibited substance: this should not be possession under the Act at least until he knew or possibly had the opportunity of knowing what he had received.

- On this same basis, the actual decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal in Lockyer v. Gibb (146) was, I think, correct, for there the accused had, and knew that she had, control of the tablets, but possibly did not know what they were.
- G She was held to be in possession of them. One can only hold this decision to be wrong if the view is taken that to constitute possession under this legislation knowledge not merely of the presence of the thing is required, but also knowledge of its attributes or qualities. Nevertheless (except perhaps under the old law of larceny) no definition or theory of possession requires so much, nor does the language or scheme of the Act postulate that such a degree of knowledge should
- H exist. I think that the line was drawn here at the right point. On the same lines is the South African decision of R. v. Langa (149). There the drug (“dagga”) was contained in a suitcase. The court held that mere physical control of it was not enough but, it was the opinion of WATERMEYER, J., that the necessary knowledge—viz., guilty knowledge—might have been inferred from the fact that the accused took the suitcase to a witness by night and asked him to keep it,
- I and that on arrest he told an implausible story about the suitcase and later in the box denied all knowledge of it. The Canadian case of Beaver v. Reginam (150) was another package case, and, as here, the question for the court was whether mere

---

(146) [1966] 2 All E.R. 653; [1967] 2 Q.B. 243.

(147) [1895] 2 I.R. 709.

(148) [1957] S.C.R. at p. 536.

(149) [1936] S.A.L.R. (C.P. Div.) 158.

(150) [1957] S.C.R. 531.

custody (control) was sufficient. The accused's story was that he believed the package to contain an innocent substance. The majority of the Supreme Court, with whose judgment I agree, held that mere custody (control) was not sufficient and it was clearly their view that if the accused had proved that he honestly believed the contents of the package to be innocent, he should have been acquitted of the charge of possession. A

I would also agree with the decision (so far as comprehensible from the brief report) of the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Carpenter (151). The terminology ascribed to the court is perhaps not scientific, but the distinction between possession in a strictly legal sense (i.e., control) and "conscious possession" or "positive possession" appears to correspond with that drawn in the other authorities which I have cited. B

Other typical package cases can be similarly resolved. A package is handed to a bailee whose business it is to receive and hold it for reward. Possession is certainly taken of the package, but the bailee has no right to open it and would commit a wrong if he did so. No possession of the contents should be imputed to him. A package is handed over by an unknown man, at an unusual rendezvous, with no, or no satisfactory, explanation and for no explained purpose; the inference may well be drawn either that it was accepted with whatever it contained, or that it was handed over so that the holder had the right to possess himself of the contents. D

In either case possession might be found.

In all such cases, the starting point will be that the accused had physical control of something—a package, a bottle, a container—found to contain the substance. This is evidence—generally strong evidence—of possession. It calls for an explanation. The explanation will be heard and the jury must decide whether there is genuine ignorance of the presence of the substance, or such an acceptance of the package with all that it might contain, or with such opportunity to ascertain what it did contain or such guilty knowledge with regard to it as to make up the statutory possession. Of course it would not be right, or consistent with the terms of the Act of 1964, to say that the onus of showing innocent custody rests on the accused. The prosecution must prove the offence, and establish its ingredients. E

But one starts from the point that the Act itself has exempted the great majority of cases of innocent possession, so that once the prosecution has proved the fact of physical control in circumstances not covered by an exemption and something of the circumstances in which this was acquired or held, this, in the absence of explanation, may be sufficient to enable a finding of possession to be made. On the other hand, the duty to submit the question of possession to the jury in this way does give the opportunity of acquittal to innocent carriers and custodians, who can put forward an explanation of the physical fact which a jury accepts. F

If this analysis is right, two things follow. First, in my opinion, there is no need, and no room, for an enquiry whether any separate requirement of mens rea is to be imported into the statutory offence. We have a statute, absolute in its terms, exempting a large number of "innocent" cases, prohibiting and penalising cases which remain for a possession which involves to the extent that I have endeavoured to describe knowledge or means of knowledge, or guilty knowledge. G

No separate problem of the mental element in criminal offences in my opinion arises; the statute contains its own solution as to the kind of control penalised by the Act of 1964. H

Secondly, it follows that the direction to the jury in the present case was not correct, for they were told in effect that possession meant control, that control was shown and not denied, and that they need not enquire any further. If this was the basis on which they were asked to decide—and they may well have thought so—it was insufficient, and the verdict would not be sustainable. The summing-up, however, did in fact, in addition, put before them, as, in my view it should have done, the circumstances in which the package was received by the I

A accused and found in his custody and the unsatisfactory explanations which he offered to the police. These were just what the jury should have been asked to consider on the question of possession. If the direction was defective, the facts were such, in my opinion, that a properly directed jury must have found the accused guilty and I would apply the proviso.

On this basis I would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

B Solicitors: Sampson & Co. (for the appellant); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the Crown).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C Re DUNCAN (deceased). GARFIELD v. FAY.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Ormrod, J.), March 20, 1968.]

Discovery—Production of documents—Privilege—Communications with foreign lawyers—Documents coming into existence for the purposes of proceedings contemplated in foreign courts—Action in England—Contemplated foreign litigation relating to same subject of dispute—English proceedings not contemplated until a date after that at which foreign proceedings were first contemplated—R.S.C., Ord. 24, r. 7.

D The defendant was the executor and the universal legatee of a will dated July 19, 1961, and made in Rome by the testator, who was not domiciled in England and who died in 1964. On Feb. 12, 1965, the defendant was granted letters of administration with the will annexed. The plaintiff, a partner in a firm of solicitors who were acting as his solicitor, claimed to be an executor of two earlier wills made in 1960 by the testator at Berne and Montreux. From the time of the testator's death onwards, the plaintiff and other people contemplated proceedings in Switzerland, France and Monaco relating to the testator's estate and to the validity of the wills made in Rome and Berne. On Feb. 23, 1965, the plaintiff first contemplated proceedings in England, having discovered that there was a small part of the estate in England; and on Feb. 25, 1965, the writ in the present action was issued by the plaintiff, claiming revocation of the grant of letters of administration to the defendant. On a summons by the defendant for an order under R.S.C., Ord. 24, r. 7, that the plaintiff should give discovery of certain classes of documents, questions arose (a) whether privilege from production extended to documents passing between a client and his foreign legal advisers and whether the position was different once foreign legal proceedings were started, and (b) whether the privilege extended to documents coming into existence for the purposes of foreign proceedings but before proceedings in England were contemplated.

H Held: (i) all the documents which were communications passing between the plaintiff and his foreign legal advisers were privileged, whether or not proceedings in this or any other court were or were not contemplated when the documents came into existence (see p. 399, letter C, post).

Dictum of LORD COTTENHAM, L.C., in Reid v. Langlois ((1849), 1 Mac. & G. at p. 638) applied.

I (ii) if the documents which came into existence after proceedings in any foreign court were first contemplated were prepared in connexion with proposed or actual litigation in a foreign court or courts (being litigation relating to the same subject as that involved in the present action), they would be just as entitled to privilege in the present action as if they were prepared for it (see p. 400, letter E, post).

Dicta of JAMES, L.J., in Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia ((1876), 2 Ch.D. at p. 656) and of LINDLEY, L.J., and A. L. SMITH, L.J., in Re Strachan ([1895] 1 Ch. at pp. 445, 447, 448) applied.

[As to privilege from production of documents between client and legal adviser, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 42, 43, para. 59; and for cases on the subject, see 18 DIGEST (Repl.) 94-98, 770-818.]

Cases referred to:

- Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia*, [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 396; (1876), 2 Ch.D. 644; 45 L.J.Ch. 449; 35 L.T. 76; 18 Digest (Repl.) 102, 863. B
- Brooks v. Prescott*, [1948] 1 All E.R. 907; [1948] 2 K.B. 133; 112 J.P. 312; 18 Digest (Repl.) 120, 1037.
- Bunbury v. Bunbury*, (1839), 2 Beav. 173; 9 L.J.Ch. 1; 48 E.R. 1146; 18 Digest (Repl.) 102, 860.
- Goldstone v. Williams, Deacon & Co.*, [1899] 1 Ch. 47; 68 L.J.Ch. 24; 79 L.T. 373; 18 Digest (Repl.) 93, 762.
- Lawrence v. Campbell*, (1859), 4 Drew. 485; 28 L.J.Ch. 780; 62 E.R. 186; sub nom. Laurence v. Campbell, 33 L.T.O.S. 355; 18 Digest (Repl.) 102, 861. C
- Minet v. Morgan*, (1873), 8 Ch. App. 361; 42 L.J.Ch. 627; 28 L.T. 573; 18 Digest (Repl.) 96, 793.
- Reid v. Langlois*, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 627; 19 L.J.Ch. 337; 41 E.R. 1408; 18 Digest (Repl.) 102, 868. D
- Strachan, Re*, [1895] 1 Ch. 439; 64 L.J.Ch. 321; 72 L.T. 175; 59 J.P. 102; 60 J.P. 36; 18 Digest (Repl.) 27, 205.
- U.S.A. v. Macrae*, (1867), 3 Ch. App. 79; 37 L.J.Ch. 129; 17 L.T. 428; 18 Digest (Repl.) 160, 1428.
- Wheeler v. Le Marchant*, (1881), 17 Ch.D. 675; 50 L.J.Ch. 793; 44 L.T. 632; 45 J.P. 728; 18 Digest (Repl.) 90, 743. E

Summons.

This was a summons by the defendant, Miss Elizabeth Marie-Pauline Fay, for an order under R.S.C., Ord. 24, r. 7, that the plaintiff, Herbert Sidney Garfield, give discovery of three classes of specified documents described in the summons. The summons was referred to the judge by the registrar under R.S.C., Ord. 32, r. 12. The facts are set out in the judgment which was delivered in open court. F

S. A. Stamler for the plaintiff.

A. L. J. Lincoln for the defendant.

ORMROD, J.: This is a summons by the defendant asking for an order under R.S.C., Ord. 24, r. 7, that the plaintiff do give discovery of three classes of specific documents which are fully described in the summons. The matter originally came before the learned registrar who, very properly, referred it to the judge under R.S.C., Ord. 32, r. 12. [His LORDSHIP referred to certain amendments and the adjournment of further argument on para. 1, stated that he was about to give judgment on para. 3 of the summons as there was no longer a live issue on para. 2 of the summons and continued:] This is an action by the plaintiff, Mr. Herbert Sidney Garfield, a solicitor of the Supreme Court and a partner in Herbert Oppenheimer, Nathan & Vandyk, who are acting as his solicitors, to revoke a grant dated Feb. 12, 1965, of letters of administration with a will, dated July 19, 1961, annexed, to the defendant, Miss Fay. Miss Fay is the executor and the universal legatee of a will bearing this date and made in Rome by the testator, Sir Oliver Duncan, who died on Sept. 20, 1964. This will may for convenience be called the Rome will. The plaintiff claims to be an executor of two earlier wills made by Sir Oliver Duncan on July 13, 1960, at Montreux and July 29, 1960, at Berne, called, respectively, the Montreux will, and the Berne will. The plaintiff's case is that the defendant and her associates persuaded the testator to execute the Rome will by fraud, undue influence and compulsion, of which elaborate details appear in the statement of claim. The will is attacked on other grounds also, which are not material to this judgment. Sir Oliver Duncan died in Rome. G
H
I

- A His actual domicile is in issue, but it is common ground that he was not domiciled in England. He left a very large fortune indeed, almost all of which is not in this country. He had married at the age of sixty-eight in 1958 and, at the times when all three wills were executed, he was on the worst possible terms with his wife. At the date of his death, divorce proceedings between them were still pending in Switzerland. The plaintiff was well aware that, some time before
- B Sir Oliver's death, a serious change had occurred in the relationship between them. Sir Oliver had ceased to instruct him or his firm who had acted as his English solicitors for many years. The reasons for this change are the central matter in issue in this action. It appears from the plaintiff's affidavit of Jan. 12, 1968, that, from the time of Sir Oliver's death on Sept. 20, 1964, onwards, he and other people contemplated proceedings in Switzerland, France and Monaco relating to Sir Oliver's estate and to the validity of the Rome will and the Berne will. It is common ground that he did not contemplate proceedings in England until Feb. 23, 1965, on which date he discovered for the first time that there was a small part of the estate, amounting in value to about £17,000, in England. On Feb. 25, 1965, the writ in this action was issued, some twelve or thirteen days after the defendant had obtained a grant of administration in common form in this court. It is unnecessary to refer to the terms of the will except to say that Lady Duncan had a comparatively trifling interest under the Berne will and none at all under the Rome will.

The documents specified in para. 3 of the summons are:

- E "All correspondence before or since the death of the deceased, Sir Oliver Duncan touching the questions in issue herein passing between the plaintiff and all or any of the following persons:—(a) Lady Duncan, her agents and lawyers, including Messrs. Payne, Hicks, Beach & Co., solicitors and Mr. Leigh-Howard, a partner in such firm; (b) his agents and legal advisers."

- In his original list of documents the plaintiff disclosed documents of this description in Part 2 of Sch. 1 in the usual omnibus form in which privilege is claimed
- F for documents coming into existence as part of the preparation of the case. It is admitted that this was inadequate, but it has been put right in para. 13 of his affidavit in which he now claims privilege in proper form. It is agreed by counsel that, in order to save time, the two formal stages of discovery and production for inspection can be telescoped together and that I should now decide the real issue between them, namely, whether the documents specified are
- G privileged from production. There is also a subsidiary question, namely, whether the court ought, in the exercise of any discretionary powers which it may have, to decline to order discovery of these documents. It is common ground that documents in class 3 coming into existence after the date on which proceedings in England were first contemplated by the plaintiff, that is, Feb. 23, 1965, are privileged in the usual way. The issue between the parties is whether
- H privilege extends to documents coming into existence after proceedings in any foreign court were first contemplated. There is also an issue as to the extent of the privilege covering communications between the plaintiff and his English solicitors and various foreign lawyers acting on his behalf in the relation of lawyer and client. It is a matter of some surprise that neither counsel, in spite of exhaustive researches, have been able to find any reported case on these points,
- I in particular on the effect of foreign proceedings between the same parties relating to the same subject-matter, on the question of privilege in litigation in this country.

Counsel for the plaintiff, in his very lucid argument, submitted that there are two basic heads of privilege relevant to this case which differ in extent and in the stage when they become operative. He submits, first, that confidential communications between a client and his solicitors, made for the purpose of obtaining legal advice, are privileged, no matter when the communication was made; in other words, that this area of privilege exists independently of the contemplation of litigation but is restricted to communications between solicitor and client, although it includes communication to intermediaries between them. He concedes that this head of privilege does not cover communications to or from other parties connected with the obtaining of such legal advice. Secondly, he submits that, once proceedings are contemplated, the privilege extends to communications to and from third parties in the course of preparing the case for the contemplated litigation. Counsel for the defendant concedes that communications between solicitor and client are privileged whenever they were made, but argues that this does not extend to communications between client and foreign lawyers where such communications are not privileged by the municipal law of the forum of the foreign lawyer. In other words, if the foreign lawyer's own court insists on disclosure of communications between him and his client in litigation in that country, this court will not regard such communications as privileged in litigation in this country.

In stating the proposition in this loose form, I trust that I do no injustice to the argument of counsel for the defendants. He cited no authority in support of it, and, in my judgment, it is inconsistent with the tenor of the judgment of SIR RICHARD KINDERSLEY, V.-C., in Lawrence v. Campbell (1). In that case, SIR RICHARD KINDERSLEY held that communications between the defendant, a Scotsman living in Scotland, and his Scots solicitors, practising in London, about debts due to him in England, were privileged in subsequent litigation in England. At the conclusion of his judgment, he said (2):

"A question has been raised as to whether the privilege in the present case is an English or a Scotch privilege; but sitting in an English court, I can only apply the English rule as to privilege, and I think that the English rule as to privilege applies to a Scotch solicitor and law agent practising in London, and therefore the letters in question are privileged from production."

The mere fact that the Scots lawyers were practising in England was clearly not a relevant consideration and SIR RICHARD KINDERSLEY expressly rejected the suggestion that the Scots law of privilege had any bearing on his decision. The essence of the judgment is that privilege attaches to communications between professional legal advisers and their clients. In Wheeler v. Le Marchant (3), BRETT, L.J., in the course of argument said: "Scotch legal advisers stand on the same footing as English legal advisers." In Bunbury v. Bunbury (4) it was held that a case prepared for submission to counsel in Holland for his opinion, was privileged. In this case, it is true that the document was prepared after the institution of the proceedings in England, but it is to be remembered that, formerly, communications between client and English solicitor, ante litem motam, were not privileged; see Lawrence v. Campbell (5). The basis on which this head of privilege rests was stated by LORD COTTENHAM, L.C., in Reid v. Langlois (6) in these words:

"... the object is to protect the party who wishes to take the advice of professional men, and he would be prevented from taking such advice if there was the hazard of having it revealed on entering into a contest with an opponent."

In Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia (7), SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., adopted this statement of principle with the gloss that, by "professional men", LORD COTTENHAM meant members of the legal profession, a phrase which he uses interchangeably with "professional lawyers".

There is nothing in these judgments to suggest that either learned judge intended to limit the rule to legal advisers whose names appear on the Roll of

(1) (1859), 4 Drew. 485.

(3) (1881), 17 Ch.D. 675 at p. 679.

(5) (1859), 4 Drew at p. 490.

(2) (1859), 4 Drew. at p. 491.

(4) (1839), 2 Beav. 173.

(6) (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 627 at p. 638.

(7) (1876), 2 Ch.D. 644 at p. 650.

A Solicitors to the Supreme Court or who are members of the English Bar. The basis of the privilege is just as apt to cover foreign legal advisers as English lawyers, provided only that the relationship of lawyer and client subsists between them. Any other conclusion would lead to an impossible position for, if this court were required to investigate the position of such communications in foreign law, it must first determine the foreign law, but what law governs the relationship of English client and foreign lawyer, at any rate when no proceedings are in contemplation? There is no forum and, therefore, no lex fori. The nationality of the foreign lawyer is as irrelevant as his address for this purpose.

C It only remains to consider the position where proceedings are already on foot in a foreign court. If disclosure is required by the law of such a court, the other side will see the documents in dispute and so gain an advantage. Is that a reason for making an exception to our lex fori? In my judgment, it is not. These matters are matters to be decided according to the practice of this court. I, therefore, hold that all the documents which are communications passing between the plaintiff and his foreign legal advisers are privileged, whether or not proceedings in this or any other court were or were not contemplated when they came into existence.

D I now turn to counsel for the plaintiff's second head of privilege, namely, that which comes into operation post litem motam. Here the question is whether documents prepared in connexion with litigation in a foreign court, but before proceedings in this country were contemplated, are privileged or not. On this point there is, as I have already said, no direct authority. My decision must, therefore rest on principle. At the risk of over-simplifying, the position may be

E stated quite briefly. Discovery was the invention of the courts of equity as part of their historic function of ensuring that justice was done inter parties. To achieve this, it was considered necessary to mitigate the rigours of the adversary system which was operated by the courts of common law, in order to prevent a party from concealing documents which might impeach his own case or assist his opponent in proving his case. It could not, however, be carried to the extreme length of insisting on disclosure of all relevant documents, because the ends of justice might be defeated in other ways. From this consideration the traditional categories of privilege have developed. The category which comprises communications between client and lawyer has been dealt with. The second category consists of documents prepared for the purpose of litigation. The principle is summarised by JAMES, L.J., in Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia (8):

G "Looking at the dicta and the judgments cited, they might require to be fully considered, but I think they may possibly all be based upon this, which is an intelligible principle, that as you have no right to see your adversary's brief, you have no right to see that which comes into existence merely as the materials for the brief."

H It is stated in a different way in Re Strachan (9), by LINDLEY, L.J.:

I "In England it is considered contrary to the interests of justice to compel a litigant to disclose to his opponent before trial the evidence to be adduced against him . . . It is considered that so to do would give undue advantages for cross-examination and lead to endless side issues; and would enable witnesses to be tampered with, and give unfair advantage to the unscrupulous. It is very true that an honest and fair-dealing litigant, on seeing how strong a case his opponent had, might at once withdraw from further litigation. But our rules of evidence and of discovery are not based upon the theory that it is advantageous to let each side know what the other can prove, but rather the reverse."

(8) (1876), 2 Ch.D. at p. 656; [1874-80] All E.R. Rep. 396 at p. 399.

(9) [1895] 1 Ch. 439 at p. 445.

And by A. L. SMITH, L.J. (10):

"... to allow one side to see the parol evidence about to be given by the other, and who his witnesses are and where they reside, is not, in my opinion, the means by which the real truth will ordinarily be arrived at at nisi prius, or in any other hostile litigation. To give one side the opportunity of knowing what the other side's witnesses are about to say, and who they are, will give an advantage to that side which, from experience, I say would be most unjust to the other side. If each side, before trial, were to see the evidence of his opponent, and each side were to be told who the witnesses on the other side were to be, and where they resided, well and good, for in such a case, each side would at any rate be upon an equality of advantage; but that is not our practice, and I need not discuss its advisability..."

Many other variants on these statements of the principle could be cited, but they all come to the same thing, namely, that a party is not obliged to disclose to the other side names, addresses and statements of witnesses or potential witnesses or other documents coming into existence as part of his preparation for trial. In nearly every case, the crucial test of the proper categorisation of such documents is the date on which each came into existence and the date on which it can properly be said that the litigation was first contemplated. Where more than one form of litigation is in process or in contemplation, the test is not so simple. In my judgment, the correct approach to this problem is to look at the substance or reality of the matter and not to allow oneself to sink into formalism. If a party prepares his case for one type of litigation but proposes to use it in another, it is no less his case, and he will be no less damnified by its disclosure. Here, the defendant is plainly attempting to see the whole of the case which the plaintiff will put before the court at the hearing. It is mere chance that proceedings on the continent were first in contemplation. If the order of the various proceedings had been reversed, all these documents would have been privileged. In my judgment, if they were prepared in connexion with proposed or actual litigation in a foreign court or courts, they are just as entitled to privilege in the present action as if they had been prepared for it.

This conclusion is the converse of such cases as Goldstone v. Williams, Deacon & Co. (11), which illustrates the rule "once privileged, always privileged", i.e., documents which were privileged in a previous action are privileged in subsequent proceedings. It is also consonant with cases like U.S.A. v. Macrae (12), where privilege was allowed under the heading of risk of incrimination or forfeiture although the risk lay not in this country but in the United States. In my judgment, territoriality has little or nothing to do with the matter which I have to consider in this case. Had it been necessary to do so, I would have been inclined to apply the principle of cases such as Minet v. Morgan (13) and Brooks v. Prescott (14) and refuse to order discovery on the ground that the plaintiff had sworn that the documents related to his own case and did not in any way impeach it. In the circumstances, it is unnecessary to examine the extent of the residual discretion of the court to refuse to order production even when all the categories of privilege have been exhausted.

The conclusion is that I hold that the privilege claimed in respect to documents under para. 3 succeeds.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Herbert Oppenheimer, Nathan & Vandyk (for the plaintiff); Herbert Smith & Co. (for the defendant).

[Reported by ALICE BLOOMFIELD, Barrister-at-Law.]

(10) [1895] 1 Ch. at pp. 447, 448.

(12) (1867), 3 Ch. App. 79.

(11) [1899] 1 Ch. 47.

(13) [1873] 8 Ch. App. 361.

(14) [1948] 1 All E.R. 907; [1948] 2 K.B. 133.

A LONDON BOROUGH OF ENFIELD v. LAVENDER GARDEN PROPERTIES, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Danckwerts and Diplock, L.J.J., Cairns, J.),
March 21, 22, 1968.]

B Compulsory Purchase — Compensation — Purchase notice — Permission for additional development — Permission within five years of acquisition — Additional compensation — Land possessing certificate for residential development — Development at fifty-five habitable rooms per acre — Acquiring authority obtaining permission for one hundred rooms per acre — Increase constituting additional development — Land Compensation Act, 1961 (9 & 10 Eliz. 2 c. 33), s. 23 (1), (2), s. 29 (1).

C After several unsuccessful attempts to obtain planning permission for residential development of their 12.2 acres of land zoned for allotment purposes, the claimants were given in July, 1963, a certificate of alternative development by the Minister of Housing and Local Government under s. 17 of the Land Compensation Act, 1961. The certificate was to the effect that "planning permission for the class of development specified in the . . . [a schedule thereto] might reasonably have been expected to be granted in respect of the said land if the land were not proposed to be acquired by any authority", and the development specified was "residential development at a density comparable with that of neighbouring development". That density was agreed to be fifty-five habitable rooms per acre. The claimants made a further application for planning permission in respect of the land and on its refusal served a purchase notice on the council in December, 1963. The purchase notice was accepted by the council and a price of £240,000 was agreed in respect of the acquisition. The council resolved to develop the land for residential purposes and were given planning permission on Nov. 1, 1965, by the Minister of Housing and Local Government for its development with twelve-storey tower blocks at a density of one hundred habitable rooms per acre. The claimants made a claim for further compensation under s. 23 (1) of the Land Compensation Act, 1961, in respect of "permission for the carrying out of additional development" of the land granted within five years of the date of completion of the council's acquisition. The Lands Tribunal upheld the claim and assessed the compensation at £60,000. On appeal,

G Held: (i) the development authorised by the Minister's decision of Nov. 1, 1965, constituted additional development because the permission of Nov. 1, 1965, extended to a density of one hundred habitable rooms per acre whereas the development permitted by the Minister's certificate of July, 1963 (permission being assumed pursuant to s. 15 (5) of the Act of 1961) was limited to fifty-five habitable rooms per acre (see p. 405, letters G and I, and p. 407, letter A, post).

H (ii) it was a question of fact for the Lands Tribunal whether a buyer of land in the open market after the Minister's decision of Nov. 1, 1965, would have estimated that his chances of getting planning permission at the most economical density above fifty-five habitable rooms per acre were higher than before the Minister's decision; the tribunal concluded that a buyer would have taken that view, and accordingly the claimants were entitled to additional compensation (by virtue of s. 5, r. (2)* and s. 14 (3)† of the Act of 1961) attributable to the estimated improvement (see p. 405, letter G, p. 406, letter I, to p. 407, letter A, and p. 407, letter A, post).

I Appeal dismissed.

[ Editorial Note. In relation to notices to treat served on or after Jan. 1,

* For s. 5, r. (2), see p. 406, letter A, post.

† For s. 14 (3), see p. 404, footnote *, post.

1967, Part 4 of the Land Compensation Act, 1961, which includes s. 23, is repealed by the Land Commission Act 1967, ss. 86, 101 and Sch. 17. Claims under notices to treat served before that date in respect of decisions giving permission for additional development within five years from the date of completion of the acquisition remain unaffected. A

As to additional compensation for new planning permission after acquisition, see SUPPLEMENT to 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.), para. 212F. B

For the Land Compensation Act, 1961, s. 5, s. 14, s. 15 (5), s. 23 (1), (2) and s. 29 (1), see 41 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 49, 57, 59, 68 and 74.]

Case Stated.

The London Borough of Enfield (herein called "the council") appealed to the Court of Appeal by way of Case Stated against a decision of the Lands Tribunal (SIR MICHAEL E. ROWE, Q.C., President, and JOHN WATSON, Esq.) given on Apr. 4, 1967, whereby the tribunal decided that the respondents, Lavender Garden Properties, Ltd. (herein called "the claimants") were entitled to compensation (£60,000) under s. 23 of the Land Compensation Act, 1961, in respect of permission for carrying out additional development, such permission being given by a decision of the Minister of Housing and Local Government dated Nov. 1, 1965. The piece of land concerned was at Lavender Hill in the borough of Enfield; its area was 12.2 acres, and it was owned originally by the churchwardens of the parish and let to the council for the purposes of allotments. The land was purchased by the claimants for the sum of £7,500 in July, 1961. It was zoned in the Middlesex County development plan for allotment purposes, with a school symbol. On July 4, 1963, the claimants obtained from the Minister of Housing and Local Government under s. 17 of the Land Compensation Act, 1961, a certificate in the following terms: C

"The Minister of Housing and Local Government in pursuance of his powers under s. 17 of the Land Compensation Act 1961, (i) cancels the certificate of appropriate development issued by the Middlesex County Council on Nov. 15, 1962, in respect of the land described in Sch. 1; (ii) certifies that planning permission for the class of development specified in Part 1 of Sch. 2 hereto subject to the condition set out in Part 2 of the said schedule might reasonably have been expected to be granted in respect of the said land if that land were not proposed to be acquired by any authority to whom the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919 applies. Schedule 1: Land situate on the north side of Lavender Hill fronting also on Cedar Road and Brigadier Hill, Enfield, Middlesex, being approximately twelve acres. Schedule 2: Part 1: Residential development at a density comparable with that of neighbouring residential development. Part 2: The siting, design, number of dwelling units, external appearance of the buildings and the means of access from the site to the highway shall be as may be agreed with the local planning authority, or, in default of agreement, as shall be determined by the Minister." D

Paragraphs 11 to 19 of the Case Stated included the following: E

"11. On Dec. 20, 1963, the [claimants] served a purchase notice* on the council under s. 129 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962, based on the refusal of planning consent dated Dec. 13, 1963. F

"12. The council eventually decided to purchase the appeal site and by notice dated Mar. 5, 1964, served upon the [claimants] under s. 130 (1) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962, the council indicated its willingness to comply with the purchase notice which had been served. G

"13. Thereafter lengthy negotiations took place between the valuers and eventually agreement was reached at a figure of £240,000 plus proper legal H

* The claimants had made several attempts to obtain planning permission for residential purposes in respect of the land, and had been refused permission. I

A costs and surveyors' fees for the appeal site. For the purpose of the negotiations the valuers agreed that the density referred to in the Minister's previous certificate could be assumed to be fifty-five habitable rooms per acre. The price of £240,000* was approved by the district valuer and the council completed its purchase at that figure on June 24, 1964.

B "18. On Nov. 30, 1965, the [claimants] served notice on the council under s. 23 of the Land Compensation Act 1961, claiming compensation from the council as the acquiring authority in respect of the increased value of the additional planning consent granted to the council.

"19. The council did not accept that the [claimants] had any such claim and were not prepared to negotiate any figure as a result of which on Mar. 30, 1966, the [claimants] made the present reference to the Lands Tribunal."

C The letter of Nov. 1, 1965, from the Ministry, which is referred to in para. 17 of the Case Stated, was in the following terms:

"I am directed by the Minister of Housing and Local Government to refer to your letter of Oct. 8, 1965, concerning the council's application of that date for planning permission for the development described in the heading of this letter, and to say that he has decided to approve the proposal.

D Accordingly he hereby grants planning permission for residential development on land at Lavender Hill, Enfield, in accordance with [a drawing No. 6, a copy of which was before the Court of Appeal] which accompanied the application dated Oct. 8, 1965, subject to the following conditions: (i) that the design and external appearance of the building shall be as may be agreed with the local planning authority or, in default of agreement, as shall be determined by the Minister; (ii) facilities for the parking and turning of vehicles shall be provided within the site, as may be agreed with the local planning authority, or, in default of agreement, as shall be determined by the Minister."

E At the hearing before the Lands Tribunal the contention of the council that there was not additional development was rejected. The tribunal stated the contentions as follows:

"First, the acquiring authority contended that no additional compensation at all was payable because as a matter of law the planning decision contained in the Minister's certificate of Nov. 1, 1965, did not grant permission for any 'additional development'. Second, the authority further contended that upon the proper construction of s. 23 (2) the valuation to be made in accordance with the requirements of that subsection must represent the value of the land for development in accordance, and only in accordance, with the Minister's letter of Nov. 1, 1965. The claimants' contention was that the land should be valued at the price which it would have commanded in the market in the light of that decision. Third, what was the additional value of the land (if any) on either of these bases?"

H At the hearing the claim put forward by the claimants was for about an additional £332,000. The tribunal held that there was additional development, and that the additional payment should be £60,000. From that decision the council appealed to the Court of Appeal by notice of appeal seeking that the decision of the tribunal should be quashed and dismissing the claimants' claim to additional compensation. The grounds of appeal were as follows: (i) that the tribunal erred on both points mentioned in the last paragraph of its decision, and that on a correct direction in law on either point it would have held that no compensation was payable (the points referred to in the decision were the tribunal's holding that the Minister's second certificate (or decision) did grant permission for

* By reason of some additional payments the price actually paid by the council amounted to over £253,000.

"additional development", and that the tribunal was not restricted to a consideration of any additional value which would accrue from a development by reference to a particular drawing which had accompanied the claimants' application to the Minister); (ii) that the Minister's decision of Nov. 1, 1965, did not grant permission for additional development; (iii) that the tribunal misinterpreted s. 29 of the Act of 1961, and misdirected itself in so far as it accepted the claimants' contentions on the purpose and effect of the section; (iv) that the permission of Nov. 1, 1965, did not add to the value of the land and would not have done so if in force on the relevant date in 1964; (v) that the tribunal should have held that the amount referred to in s. 23 (2) of the Act did not exceed £240,000 (the amount of compensation originally agreed) and the council relied on the alternative finding to that effect in the last sentence of the decision; and (vi) that the valuation from which the tribunal derived its award of £60,000 additional compensation was not in accordance with s. 23 (2), but was based on a supposed permission, which had not been granted, at a density between sixty and eighty persons or habitable rooms per acre.

D. P. Kerrigan, Q.C., and J. D. James, for the council.

H. Marnham, Q.C., and J. A. R. Grove, for the claimants.

DANCKWERTS, L.J., stated the nature of the appeal and, having read the passages from the Case Stated set out at p. 402, letter H, to p. 403, letters C and G, ante, and the Ministry's letter dated Nov. 1, 1965, having stated the amount of the claimants' claim and the decision of the Lands Tribunal, read s. 14 (3) (*) and s. 23 (†) of the Land Compensation Act, 1961, and continued: The contentions on behalf of the council are, first, that this was not a case of an additional development, because it was simply a case where some variation of the planning permission already received was allowed, and, secondly, that in any case, if it did come within s. 23 and there was an additional development, there was no additional value which had been gained by the permission in question.

It is necessary, of course, first of all to ascertain what is additional development and, indeed, what is development. The meaning of "development" for present purposes is contained in the general definition section of the Land Compensation Act, 1961, s. 39. That takes one, by reference, to s. 12 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, which is now to be found in s. 12 (1) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1962. What it comes to is this, that "development" means the provision of buildings, engineering works, and that sort of thing. For present

(*) Section 14 (3) provides: "Nothing in those provisions shall be construed as requiring it to be assumed that planning permission would necessarily be refused for any development which is not development for which, in accordance with those provisions, the granting of planning permission is to be assumed; but, in determining whether planning permission for any development could in any particular circumstances reasonably have been expected to be granted in respect of any land, regard shall be had to any contrary opinion expressed in relation to that land in any certificate issued under Part 3 of this Act."

(†) Section 23, to which the marginal note is "Compensation for new planning permission granted after acquisition of land" provides, so far as relevant, as follows—(1) Where (a) any interest in land is compulsorily acquired or is sold to an authority possessing compulsory purchase powers and, before the end of the period of five years beginning with the date of completion, a planning decision is made granting permission for the carrying out of additional development of any of the land; and (b) the principal amount of the compensation which was payable in respect of the compulsory acquisition or, in the case of a sale by agreement, the amount of the purchase price, was less than the amount specified in sub-s. (2) of this section, then subject to the following provisions of this section, the person to whom the compensation or purchase price was payable shall be entitled, on a claim duly made by him, to compensation from the acquiring authority of an amount equal to the difference. (2) The amount referred to in para. (b) of sub-s. (1) of this section is the principal amount of the compensation which would have been payable in respect of a compulsory acquisition of the said interest by the acquiring authority, in pursuance of a notice to treat served on the relevant date, if the planning decision mentioned in para. (a) of the said sub-s. (1) had been made before that date and the permission granted thereby had been in force on that date."

A purposes, therefore, it is simply a question of buildings. In the Land Compensation Act, 1961, the definition of "additional development" is contained in s. 29 (1) and is as follows:

B "In this Part of this Act: 'additional development', in relation to an acquisition or sale of an interest in land, means any development of the land other than the following, that is to say:—(a) where the acquiring authority are a local authority, and acquired the interest for the purposes of any of their functions, development for the purposes of the functions for which they acquired it; (b) where the acquiring authority are not a local authority, development for the purposes of the project in connexion with which they acquired the interest."

C It is plain that the present case does not fall within either (a) or (b); (c), only, was regarded as a matter of some interest. Paragraph (c) reads "development for which planning permission was in force on the relevant date". The relevant date is the date of the notice to treat, as is provided in the definition of "relevant date" in s. 29 (1). Paragraph (d) of the definition of "additional development" is the one on which I think counsel for the council really rely. That provides as follows:

D " (d) development for which—(i) in the case of compulsory acquisition, it was, for the purpose of assessing compensation in respect thereof, assumed (in accordance with the provisions of ss. 14 to 16 of this Act) that planning permission would be granted, or (ii) in the case of a sale by agreement it would have been so assumed that planning permission would be granted if the interest (instead of being sold by agreement) had been compulsorily acquired by the acquiring authority in pursuance of a notice to treat served on the relevant date."

E Both counsel for the council relied on that provision for the argument which they put before this court. It is also said, with regard to para. (c) that, unless it was of some relevance to the issue which we had to decide, it would be otiose. It may be that it is otiose, but I do not find that it has any compelling force merely by reason of that. The Lands Tribunal came to the conclusion that para. (d) did not help the council, and, of course, if the council are not able to bring themselves within any of these exceptions then it becomes additional development under the definition. In my view, the tribunal reached the right conclusion, and I do not think that any of the exceptions contained in s. 29 apply. Therefore, so it seems to me, there was additional development in the present case. Accordingly, the question whether there was any additional value arises for consideration. I think that the conclusion reached by the tribunal on that point, also, was correct, and accordingly I would dismiss the appeal from its decision.

H DIPLOCK, L.J.: I agree. So far as the first point is concerned, viz., whether the development authorised by the Minister's decision of Nov. 1, 1965, was additional development, it seems to me that under the definition of additional development contained in s. 29 (1) of the Act, so far as is relevant to this case, the test was: would the development authorised by the Minister's decision of Nov. 1, 1965, have been permitted under planning permission granted in the terms set out in the Minister's certificate of July 4, 1964? The development authorised I by the Minister's decision of Nov. 1, 1965, was a specific development relating to the buildings allowed to be erected on the land and provided for a density of one hundred habitable rooms per acre. The development referred to in the Minister's certificate of July 4, 1963, was limited to development providing for fifty-five habitable rooms per acre. Therefore it seems to me to be plain that the development permitted by the decision of Nov. 1, 1965, was additional development. I agree, therefore, with the tribunal's decision on that point.

The second point raised by counsel for the council is whether or not that additional development entitled the claimants to further compensation on top of that which they had already received. The general principle on which compensation is to be assessed is to be found in s. 5, r. (2) of the Land Compensation Act, 1961: A

“(2) The value of land shall, subject as hereinafter provided, be taken to be the amount which the land if sold in the open market by a willing seller might be expected to realise.” B

In the ordinary way if land is sold on the open market by a willing seller the price which the buyer is prepared to pay depends on the use which he thinks he will be able to make of it. If the land is already the subject of planning permission he knows that he will be able, if he wishes, to make use of it in accordance with that permission. He may also have an expectation that he may be able to get planning permission for a more profitable use and in so far as that expectation is a serious one then the price which he is prepared to give for the land will be increased in order to allow for the chance, though not the certainty, of his being able to make the more profitable use of it. C

That is what the position would be apart from the provisions of s. 14 to s. 17 of the Act of 1961. What those provisions do is to say that in valuing the land it may be assumed in certain circumstances that planning permission will in fact be granted for some development other than that for which planning permission already exists, i.e., that what would otherwise be no more than a chance may be treated as a certainty. One of those circumstances is set out in s. 15 (5) of the Act of 1961 and provides that in valuing the land one may assume that planning permission would be granted for any development which is set out in a certificate obtained from the planning authority, or the Minister, under Part 3 of the Act of 1961. D E

At the time that this land was originally valued the position therefore was that the buyer of the land, for the purposes of compensation, was entitled to assume that he could use it either for its then present purpose, which, I think, was as allotments, or for housing development subject to the conditions set out in the Minister's certificate of July 4, 1963, i.e., housing development at a density of fifty-five habitable rooms per acre. He would also be entitled to take into consideration the chance that he might be able to use the land for housing development at a higher density, but at that time the chance would no doubt have been treated as small having regard to the fact that the Minister had already set out in the certificate the limit of density which it is common ground was for fifty-five habitable rooms per acre. F G

What happened when the Minister's decision of Nov. 1, 1965, was given was this: a revaluation on the assumption that that decision was already in existence involved making the assumption, first, that the land could be used for the particular development, the subject of the Minister's decision; secondly, that planning permission would be obtained for the development at a density of fifty-five habitable rooms per acre; and, thirdly, the chance, whatever it might be, that a permission could be obtained for a density between fifty-five and one hundred per acre, which would be the most economical development for the site. That one has to take into consideration the chance of getting permission for development, for which planning permission has neither been granted nor is to be assumed, is made clear from s. 5 (1) of the Act to which I have referred, and s. 14 (3) of the Act to which my lord has referred. H I

It therefore follows that, if the Lands Tribunal—and this was a question of fact for it—came to the conclusion that a buyer of the land, after the Minister's decision enabling specific development involving one hundred habitable rooms to the acre had been granted, would estimate his chances of getting a planning permission for a development at the most economical density more than fifty-five to the acre as being higher than before that planning permission was given, then the claimants were entitled to the added sum due to the estimated improvement of that chance in the mind of the intending buyer. The tribunal came to the

- A conclusion that a buyer on the open market would take that view. It was a question of fact for it and I, not without some regret, agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

CAIRNS, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

- B Solicitors: Town Clerk, Enfield (for the council); H. B. Wedlake, Saint & Co. (for the claimants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

COHEN v. DAILY TELEGRAPH, LTD.

- C [COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Lord Denning, M.R., Davies and Russell, L.JJ.), April 2, 1968.]

Libel—Fair comment—Facts relied on to support plea must be facts existing at date of publication—Particulars pleaded in support of defence of fair comment included events occurring after publication of alleged libel—Particulars struck out.

- D In an action brought for alleged libel in a newspaper article the defendants pleaded fair comment on a matter of public interest. The particulars of facts on which the comment was based included two paragraphs that related to events which occurred after the article was published. On appeal from an order striking out the two paragraphs,

- E Held: the facts on which a plea of fair comment was based must be facts existing at the time when the comment was made; and accordingly the two paragraphs relating to events that occurred after publication of the alleged libel had been rightly struck out (see p. 409, letters E, H and I, and p. 410, letter E, post).

Appeal dismissed.

- F [ Editorial Note. The matters stated in the particulars that were struck out might nevertheless be admissible in evidence at the trial, as tending to support an inference that the comment had been fair, but that did not justify their being pleaded, as evidence should not be pleaded (see p. 409, letter G, and p. 410, letter G, post). Moreover, particulars of matters that did not exist until after the comment was made might, presumably, be required by R.S.C., Ord. 82, r. 7 to be furnished to the plaintiff in an appropriate case.

- G As to particulars of facts on which fair comment is based, see 24 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 95, 96, para. 170; and for cases on the subject, see 32 DIGEST (Repl.) 182, 183, 1955-1964.]

Cases referred to:

- H Cunningham-Howie v. F. W. Dimpleby & Sons, Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 882; [1951] 1 K.B. 360; 32 Digest (Repl.) 183, 1964.
Godman v. Times Publishing Co., Ltd., [1926] 2 K.B. 273; 95 L.J.K.B. 747; 135 L.T. 291; 32 Digest (Repl.) 116, 1380.
Maisel v. Financial Times, Ltd., [1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 671; [1915] 3 K.B. 336; 84 L.J.K.B. 2145; 112 L.T. 953; 32 Digest (Repl.) 77, 993.
Wheatley v. Anderson and Miller, 1927 S.C. 133; 32 Digest (Repl.) 183, *787.

- I Interlocutory Appeal.

By writ issued on June 12, 1967, the plaintiff, Mr. Benjamin Cohen, claimed from the defendants, The Daily Telegraph, Ltd., damages for alleged libel contained in an article entitled "The sad state of Dr. Benjamin Cohen's other patient" published in the issue of the Daily Telegraph newspaper for May 19, 1967, and an injunction to restrain the defendants from publishing further the alleged libel. By their defence, served on Aug. 25, 1967, the defendants, among other matters, admitted publication in the newspaper, but pleaded that the words were not defamatory and, in the alternative, pleaded by para. 6 that, if and in so far as the words were defamatory of the plaintiff, they were fair comment made in good faith and without malice on a matter of public interest, namely the schemes of arrangement instituted and operated by the plaintiff in relation to two public companies, Pinnock Finance Co. (Great Britain), Ltd. and Federal Consolidated Investments, Ltd. In para. 6 of the defence particulars were given of the facts on which the words were alleged to be fair comment. These particulars, which extended to thirty-one sub-paragraphs, included the sub-para. (5) and the sub-para. (6), the relevant parts of which are set out at letter I, infra, and p. 409, letters A and B, post. By order of Master ELTON, dated Jan. 15, 1968, that part of the particulars contained in para. 6 (v), which is set out at p. 409, letter A, post, and the whole of sub-para. (vi) were ordered to be struck out pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 18, r. 19 (a) and (c). The defendants appealed from this order and on Feb. 26, 1968, BLAIN, J., dismissed their appeal. The plaintiffs appealed to the Court of Appeal, the grounds of appeal being that the particulars struck out were valid in law and that in any event there was no sufficient ground for striking them out.

H. M. Davidson for the defendants.

Michael Kempster for the plaintiff.

LORD DENNING, M.R.: The plaintiff, Dr. Benjamin Cohen, brings a libel action against the defendants, the Daily Telegraph, Ltd. He is skilled in mending companies which are in difficulties. He has been called a "company doctor". In 1960 he sought to rescue a company called Federal Consolidated Investments which crashed owing nearly £2 million to five thousand depositors. In 1967 another company called Pinnock Finance, Ltd., got into difficulties owing £9 million to nine thousand depositors. The plaintiff had a scheme for saving that company from liquidation. On May 19, 1967, the Daily Telegraph in their financial columns published the article which the plaintiff says was a libel on him. It ran thus:

"The sad state of Dr. Benjamin Cohen's other patient. Initial support for Dr. Benjamin Cohen's scheme to save Pinnock Finance from liquidation was strong. Since then a growing number of depositors have changed their minds. They doubt his ability to deliver the goods . . . [After going through many details, the article concluded] Pinnock depositors should take the Federal Consolidated to heart. It does not inspire confidence in Dr. Cohen's remedial powers."

The statement of claim set out the article in full. The defendants pleaded by way of defence that it was fair comment made in good faith on a matter of public interest. In addition, in accordance with Cunningham-Howie v. F. W. Dimpleby & Sons, Ltd. (1), they gave particulars of the facts on which they said that the comment was based. They set out many facts in several pages. Most of the facts pleaded took place before this article was published on May 19, 1967, but in two of the paragraphs the pleader set out matters which took place after the article was published. Thereupon the plaintiffs took out a summons to strike out those parts. They said that on a plea of fair comment, the comment must be on existing facts, not on future events. No ordinary human person can look into the future and comment on facts which have not yet happened.

The article, it will be remembered, was published on May 19, 1967. The first part of sub-para. (v) deals with matters before that date:

"At a meeting of the Pinnock Depositors Association held at Caxton Hall, London, on May 4, 1967, opposition to the said scheme of arrangement was voiced by members. There was also opposition to the scheme on the part of the said committee of creditors, a majority of whom were in favour of liquidation."

(1) [1950] 2 All E.R. 882; [1951] 1 K.B. 360.

A But then the paragraph goes on to deal with matters which happened after May 19, 1967. It reads:

“ On June 13, 1967, the said committee by a majority of four to three voted in favour of liquidation, and again on July 14, 1967, by a majority of five to two voted in favour of liquidation. On July 14, 1967, the said committee handed to the board of directors of Pinnock a circular and requested the board to send the circular to depositors and creditors.”

B The next sub-para. (vi) also refers to matters after May 19. It reads:

“ Early in June 1967 the plaintiff, following a visit to overseas interests of Pinnock, presented a report to the board of Pinnock and the said committee of creditors. The report showed that [then it gives the details of the report] the total realistic value of Pinnocks’ assets was now put at only £1,250,000 as against the previous estimate of £2,500,000, and it stated that the position was ‘grimly serious’ . . . ”

C Counsel for the defendants sought to support those particulars. He says that on a plea of justification the pleader can rely on facts which happened subsequently; and that a similar rule should apply to a plea of fair comment. He drew our attention to Maisel v. Financial Times, Ltd. (2), and Godman v. Times Publishing Co., Ltd. (3). Those cases show that, in order to prove that the words are true, particulars can be given of subsequent facts which go to support the charge. Thus, if a libel accuses a man of being a “ scoundrel ”, the particulars of justification can include facts which show him to be a scoundrel, whether they occurred before or after the publication. Such particulars are admissible because they enable him to know the case he has to meet and open the way to discovery.

E The judge thought that those cases had no application to a plea of fair comment. I agree with him. In order to make good a plea of fair comment, it must be a comment on facts existing at the time. No man can comment on facts which may happen in the future. There is a passage in GATLEY ON LIBEL AND SLANDER (6th Edn.) para. 724, which goes further. It states:

F “ The facts which the defendant seeks to prove as the basis of his comment must have been known to him when he made the comment.”

I do not know that I would go quite so far as that. A man may comment on existing facts without having them all in the forefront of his mind at the time. Nevertheless it must be a comment on existing facts. I think that the matters stated in those particulars may well be admissible in evidence at the trial, but that does not mean that they should be pleaded. It is a settled rule of pleading that evidence is not to be pleaded. R.S.C., Ord. 18, r. 7 (1) provides:

G “ . . . every pleading must contain, and contain only, a statement in a summary form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved . . . ”

H The facts pleaded in these two paragraphs are at most evidence. They are not material facts which needed to be pleaded. It was erroneous to include them. The master and the judge were right in striking them out. I would dismiss the appeal accordingly.

I DAVIES, L.J.: I agree. It seems to me quite clear that the plea of fair comment must be one of fair comment on existing facts. It is said in FRASER ON LIBEL AND SLANDER LAW AND PRACTICE (7th Edn.), p. 110 note (s):

“ Semble the comment must be upon facts which were present to the mind of the commentator at the time it was made not upon facts which were subsequently discovered.”

(2) [1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 671; [1915] 3 K.B. 336.

(3) [1926] 2 K.B. 273.

That note is supported by a reference to a Scottish case, Wheatley v. Anderson and Miller (4), and the relevant passage in the judgment of LORD ANDERSON stated (5):

“The jury are entitled to know what was in a defender’s mind at the time he made the comment, otherwise they will not be properly equipped for the discharge of their duty. It seems to me, however, to be quite incompetent for a defender, in support of a plea of fair comment, to aver and substantiate facts which were not in his mind at the time the comment was made, but which were discovered at a later date.”

For the purposes of this case it is not necessary to go quite as far as that. For what was sought to be done by the particulars delivered in the defence by the defendants here was to set out facts which were not merely unknown to the commentator at the time when he wrote the article but which had not yet happened. If it is necessary for the man making the comment to know the facts at the time he makes it, it follows as the night follows the day that it is impossible for him to rely on events which at that time had not happened. There is a singular absence of English authority on this point, and it may be that the reason for that is that it is so obvious that authority is not required. Justification of course, as was pointed out by counsel for the plaintiff in his argument, is quite different. A person raising the plea of justification is entitled to rely on facts subsequent to the publication of the libel. That is entirely different from the position in regard to fair comment.

I agree with LORD DENNING, M.R., that the decision of the judge and the master was quite right and the appeal should be dismissed.

RUSSELL, L.J.: I too agree. It is not disputed by counsel for the defendants that the facts on which the defence of fair comment is based can only be those known at the time of the publication. Nor does he dispute that the facts struck out from the particulars are in terms events that took place after the publication and ex hypothesi were not known at the time of publication. The best that can be said of these struck-out facts is that they may be evidence of the existence of a state of affairs or a trend at the time of the publication, e.g., the then attitude of relevant people to the proposed scheme for the avoiding of a liquidation. What is mere evidence from which the relevant fact may be inferred or proved, however, is not proper to be pleaded. Counsel for the defendants says that he is entitled to plead such matters as being, as he describes it, “evidential”, and he relies on two cases relating to a plea of justification. I can only say that I am not prepared to extend those cases to cover a departure from the ordinary rules as is suggested in the present case. I too would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Simmons & Simmons (for the defendants); M. A. Jacobs & Sons (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(4) 1927 S.C. 133;

(5) 1927 S.C. at pp. 147, 148.

A FOX AND OTHERS v. ADAMSON.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Dilhorne, Lord Hodson, Lord Guest, Lord Devlin and Lord Upjohn), March 27, May 9, 1968.]

B Gaming—Amusements with prizes—Permit obtained under s. 49 (1) of, and Sch. 6, to the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 for installation of gaming machines—These gaming machines complied with the conditions of s. 49 (3)—Previously existing activities, lawful under s. 32 and s. 33, comprising bingo, French boule and two gaming machines were continued—Whether these previously existing activities were “amusements with prizes” and whether their continuance contravened s. 49 (2)—Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 (c. 2) s. 32, s. 33, s. 49—Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1964 (c. 78) s. 2.

C Gaming activities were carried on at a club. These comprised bingo, French boule and two fruit machines. The activities were lawful under s. 32 and s. 33 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963. The club introduced additionally six Gold Award machines under a permit granted under s. 49 (1)* of, and Sch. 6 to, the Act of 1963. Taken in isolation D these machines satisfied the conditions under s. 49 (3) of the Act of 1963 as amended. The previously existing activities, however, which were continued, did not come within the conditions under s. 49 (3). On appeal from a decision upholding convictions under s. 49 (2) for contravening the provisions of s. 49 (3), as amended†,

E Held: the justices’ finding that the provision of the bingo, French boule and two fruit machines, constituted the provision of amusements with prizes was a finding of fact; and accordingly, as the conditions under s. 49 (3) of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 were not complied with in respect of those amusements, the convictions under s. 49 (2) of contravening those conditions should stand, for the offence enacted by s. 49 (2) applied to amusements notwithstanding that they had been lawful F before the grant of a permit under s. 49 (1) and Sch. 6 for other amusements (see p. 414, letter E, p. 416, letter I, to p. 417, letter A, and p. 417, letters A and B, post).

Decision of the Divisional Court ([1967] 3 All E.R. 902) affirmed, but on grounds put somewhat differently.

G [As to gaming with gaming machines, and as to licence duty, see SUPPLEMENT to 18 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) para. 369B.

For the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 s. 32, s. 33 and s. 49, see 43 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 343, 345, 361; and for the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1964 s. 2, see 44 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 296.]

Case referred to:

H McCollom v. Wrightson, [1968] 1 All E.R. 514; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 578.

Appeal.

I This was an appeal by the appellants, Colin Edward Fox, Sandra Madeline Gillett, Leslie Gillett and Kent and Thanet Casinos, Ltd., from the judgment of the Divisional Court (LORD PARKER, C.J., SALMON, L.J., and WIDGERY, J.) dated Oct. 24, 1967, and reported [1967] 3 All E.R. 902, dismissing their appeal against their conviction by the justices for the petty sessional division of Edmonton, in the Middlesex area of Greater London, on Dec. 30, 1966, at the hearing of informations laid on June 24, 1966, by the respondent, Louis Joseph Adamson, a superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Force that on Mar. 9, Mar. 10, Apr. 29, May 3, May 4 at the Legalite Casino Club, 18, Station Road, London, N.22, the appellants were concerned in the provision, on premises in respect of * Section 49 is set out at p. 414, letter H, to p. 415, letter E, post.

† Viz., as amended by the Licensing Act 1964 s. 2. Section 2 came into operation on Oct. 31, 1965 (ibid., s. 4 (3)).

which a permit under s. 49 (1) of, and Sch. 6 to, the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963, had been granted, of amusements with money prizes in excess of 1s. (five separate offences being alleged against each of the appellants) contrary to s. 49 (2) of the Act of 1963. The Divisional Court refused leave to appeal but certified that points of law of general public importance were involved:—(i) whether games of bingo, French boule and the two fruit machines, were amusements with prizes within the meaning of s. 49 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963; (ii) whether the effect of s. 49 (2) of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 was to establish a separate code in respect of the provision of amusements on premises in respect to which a permit under Sch. 6 to the Act of 1963 had been granted and was for the time being in force, or whether on its true construction the subsection did not in any way affect gaming or gaming machines on such premises which was or were being conducted or used lawfully in compliance with s. 32 and s. 33 of the Act.

D. Weitzman, Q.C., and R. R. Russell for the appellants.

J. H. Buzzard and J. W. Rogers for the respondent.

Their lordships took time for consideration.

May 9. The following opinions were delivered.

VISCOUNT DILHORNE: My Lords, the appellants, Kent and Thanet Casinos, Ltd. were in 1966 the owners and occupiers of 18, Station Road, London, N.22, and there managed a club called the Legalite Casino Club. The appellant, Leslie Gillett, was a director and the chairman of Kent and Thanet Casinos, Ltd. The appellant, Sandra Gillett, was also a director of that company and she had been nominated to hold the justices' licence and the excise licence for the club premises. The appellant, Fox, was a manager employed by Kent and Thanet Casinos, Ltd. and was responsible for running the club.

On Aug. 26, 1964, Kent and Thanet Casinos, Ltd. applied to the Wood Green Borough Council for a permit under s. 49 of, and Sch. 6 to, the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 (hereafter referred to as "the Act") for the provision at the club of amusements with prizes. On Oct. 26, 1964, they were given a permit to do so for the period ending on Sept. 30, 1967. On June 24, 1966, informations were laid charging the appellants with breaches of s. 49 of the Act of 1963 by providing at the club on Mar. 9 and 10, Apr. 29, and May 3 and 4, 1966, amusements with prizes at which money prizes in excess of 1s. were offered. The appellants were convicted. They appealed to the Divisional Court (1). Their appeal was dismissed but that court, while refusing leave to appeal, certified (2) that there was a point of law of general public importance. They now appeal with the leave of this House.

Section 49 of the Act of 1963, so far as material, reads as follows:

"49 (1). The provisions of this section shall have effect for the purpose of permitting the provisions of amusements with prizes—(a) on any premises in respect of which a permit for the provision thereon of such amusements has been granted by the local authority, and is for the time being in force, under Sch. 6 to this Act: and . . . (b) . . .

"(2) Nothing in ss. 32, 33, 34, 41 or 42 of this Act shall apply in relation to amusements with prizes provided on such premises as are mentioned in sub-s. (1) (a) or . . . but, in relation to any such amusement to which any of those sections would apply but for this subsection, the conditions set out in sub-s. (3) of this section shall be observed, and if any of those conditions is contravened every person concerned in the provision or conduct of that amusement shall be guilty of an offence unless he proves that the contravention occurred without his consent or connivance and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent it.

(1) [1967] 3 All E.R. 902.

(2) [1967] 3 All E.R. at p. 907.

- A “(3) The conditions referred to in the last foregoing subsection are . . .
 (c) that no money prize is distributed or offered which exceeds 1s. . .”

The justices found as a fact that on the dates in question bingo was played at the club “at which the prizes ranged from £5 to £18” and also French boule, a game, they said, resembling roulette, at which “the prizes were at times about 10s. or £1”. They also found that there were on the club premises two fruit machines “on which the prizes ranged up to 9s. and on which there was also a jackpot prize of a sum possibly of about £4”; and six “Gold Award” machines on which the maximum prize in money was one shilling. The fruit machines and the “Gold Award” machines were gaming machines within the definition in s. 33 (3) (a) of the Act of 1963. The justices assumed, and the Case Stated says, that it was conceded by the respondent that the playing of bingo and French boule complied with s. 32 of the Act and that the fruit machines complied with s. 33. They held, however, that the bingo, the French boule and the two fruit machines were amusements with prizes within the meaning of s. 49 and that all the conditions prescribed by s. 49 (3) were not complied with.

- The first point certified by the Divisional Court (3) as a point of law of general public importance was whether “the games of bingo, French boule and the two fruit machines . . . were amusements with prizes within the meaning of s. 49” of the Act. The words “amusements with prizes” are not defined in s. 49 or elsewhere in the Act. In my opinion, they must be given their ordinary natural meaning. Whether the playing of a particular game or the use of a particular machine is or is not an amusement with a prize is a question of fact. There is nothing in the Case Stated to indicate that the justices did not give the ordinary and natural meaning to these words. Counsel for the respondent, during the argument in this House was prepared to concede that the game of French boule was not an amusement with a prize, as the playing of the game did not result in the winning of a prize. However this may be, the justices found that on the dates in question it was played for a prize, and one must proceed on that basis.

- F The second point certified by the Divisional Court (3) was:

- “Whether the effect of s. 49 (2) of the . . . Act was to establish a separate code in respect of the provision of amusements with prizes including games and gaming machines on premises in respect to which a permit under Sch. 6 to the Act of 1963 had been granted and was for the time being in force, or whether on its true construction the said subsection did not in any way affect gaming or gaming machines on such premises which was or were being conducted or used lawfully in compliance with s. 32 and s. 33 of the Act of 1963.”

- Section 49 (2) begins with the words “Nothing in ss. 32, 33, 34, 41 or 42 of this Act shall apply in relation to amusements with prizes provided on” premises in relation to which such a permit has been granted and was in force.

- Section 32 provides that gaming shall be lawful if, but only if, it is conducted in accordance with the conditions prescribed in the section. Section 33 provides that s. 32 shall not apply to gaming machines. It distinguishes between the use of those machines on premises to which the public have access or which are used wholly and mainly by persons under eighteen and use on other premises. Use of the machines on those other premises must comply with the conditions laid down in s. 33 (2).

Section 41 provides that subject to the provisions of the Act all lotteries are unlawful; and s. 42 makes participation in the running of a lottery an offence. It also provides that it shall be a defence to proceedings under that section to prove that the lottery was one declared not to be unlawful by ss. 43, 44, 45 and 46 of the Act, and that the person charged believed and had reasonable cause for believing that none of the conditions required to be observed in respect of those lotteries had been broken. A

If the provision of an amusement with a prize could not involve gaming, the use of gaming machines or a lottery, this part of s. 49 would serve no useful purpose. The statute recognises that an amusement with a prize may do so by the insertion of these words in s. 49. If there are amusements with prizes which involve gaming the use of gaming machines or a lottery and which are provided on premises in respect of which such a permit is in force, there can be no prosecution for an offence under the gaming sections or in respect of the running of a lottery. B

In the Legalite Casino Club there were no less than eight gaming machines. It is a breach of a condition imposed by s. 33 (2) to have more than two available for play in any one building such as a club, but if the provision of those gaming machines amounted to the provision of amusements with prizes, as the justices found, then there could be no prosecution for an offence under s. 33. The exclusion of the operation of ss. 32, 33, 34, 41 and 42 only applies in relation to amusements with prizes on premises in respect of which such a permit is in force. If on such premises there was gaming, or the use of gaming machines or a lottery which did not constitute the provision of amusements with prizes, these sections would continue to operate. Section 49 (2) goes on to provide that in relation to an amusement with a prize to which any of those sections would apply but for s. 49 (2), the conditions set out in s. 49 (3) must be observed. C D

So the answer to the question posed by the Divisional Court (4) appears to me to depend on the answer to the question, did what was provided on such premises amount to the provision of an amusement with a prize? If it did not, then ss. 32, 33, 34, 41 and 42 continue to operate and the legality of any gaming, use of gaming machines and of a lottery will depend on the provisions of those sections. If it did, then the conditions prescribed in s. 49 (3) apply. E

In this case there was a permit in force in relation to the premises in which the Legalite Casino Club was run. The justices found as a fact that amusements with prizes were provided. So, in my opinion, they were right in holding that s. 49 (3) applied. It was not disputed that if that subsection applied, one of the conditions prescribed was not complied with. F

In my opinion, the justices came to the right conclusion and this appeal should be dismissed.

LORD HODSON: My Lords, the appellants were each and all convicted as being concerned in the provision of premises (in respect of which a permit under Sch. 6 to the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963, had been granted) where amusements with prizes were provided in respect of which money prizes were offered contrary to s. 49 (2) of the Act. Section 49 of the Act provides: G

“ 49.—(1) The provisions of this section shall have effect for the purpose of permitting the provision of amusements with prizes: H

“ (a) on any premises in respect of which a permit for the provision thereon of such amusements has been granted by the local authority, and is for the time being in force, under Sch. 6 to this Act; and

“ (b) at any pleasure fair consisting wholly or mainly of amusements provided by travelling showmen which is held on any day of a year on premises not previously used in that year on more than twenty-seven days for the holding of such a pleasure fair. I

“ (2) Nothing in ss. 32, 33, 34, 41 or 42 of this Act shall apply in relation to amusements with prizes provided on such premises as are mentioned in sub-s. (1) (a) or at such a pleasure fair as is mentioned in sub-s. (1) (b) of this section; but, in relation to any such amusement to which any of those sections would apply but for this subsection, the conditions set out in

- A sub-s. (3) of this section shall be observed, and if any of those conditions is contravened every person concerned in the provision or conduct of that amusement shall be guilty of an offence unless he proves that the contravention occurred without his consent or connivance and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent it.
- B “(3) The conditions referred to in the last foregoing subsection are—“(a) that the amount paid by any person for any one chance to win a prize does not exceed 1s.;
 “(b) that the aggregate amount taken by way of the sale of chances in any one determination of winners, if any, of prizes does not exceed 50s., and that the sale of those chances and the declaration of the result take place on the same day and on the premises on which, and during the time when, the amusement is provided;
 “(c) that no money prize is distributed or offered which exceeds 1s.;
 “(d) that the winning of, or the purchase of a chance to win, a prize does not entitle any person, whether or not subject to a further payment by him, to any further opportunity to win money or money's worth by taking part in any amusement with prizes or in any gaming or lottery;
 “(e) in the case of such a pleasure fair as is mentioned in sub-s. (1) (b) of this section, that the opportunity to win prizes at amusements to which this subsection applies is not the only, or the only substantial, inducement to persons to attend the fair.
 “(4) Where any amusement with prizes takes the form of a game played by means of a machine, being a game which is made playable by the insertion of a coin or coins into the machine, then, notwithstanding that, in addition to a money prize, a successful player receives the opportunity to play the game again without the insertion of another coin, the condition set out in sub-s. (3) (d) of this section shall not be deemed to be contravened if the aggregate amount which can be won by the player without inserting another coin does not exceed 1s.”
- E
- F A permit was issued pursuant to the provisions of Sch. 6 to the Act on Oct. 26, 1964, by the council of the Borough of Wood Green, being the relevant local authority, to the appellant Kent and Thanet Casinos, Ltd. This was to provide amusements with prizes at the Legalite Casino Club, 18, Station Road, London, N.22, and had been applied for in order that six Gold Award machines might be used lawfully on the premises. A licence had been granted to the club as from
- G Oct. 1, 1966, under the provisions of the Finance Act 1966, for the use of the premises for gaming otherwise than by gaming machines. This licence expired on Sept. 30, 1967, and cost £500. Two licences effective between the same dates had been granted to this club under the provisions of the same Act in order to permit a gaming machine appropriate to the rate of duty paid to be made available for play on the premises. £75 was paid for each of these licences. The
- H gaming or amusements with prizes as found in the Case Stated were: (i) bingo with prizes ranging from £5 to £18; (ii) French boule with stakes ranging from 2s. to 10s. and prizes either about 10s. or £1; (iii) two fruit machines operated on insertion of 6d. on which prizes varied up to 9s. and on which there was a jackpot prize of about £1; (iv) six Gold Award machines operated on insertion of a 6d. on which the maximum prize was 1s. and in money's worth 5s.
- I The first point taken by the appellants is that the above mentioned activities were not amusements with prizes. As LORD PARKER, C.J., pointed out (5), there is no definition of amusements with prizes (which are the subject of Part 4 of the Act) but Part 2 of the Act which deals with “gaming”, contains the three sections, ss. 32, 33, 34, which are among those expressly excluded from the operation of s. 49. This is an indication that there is no reason to limit the activities which are covered by the words “amusements with prizes” to any narrow field, and I see no ground for saying that the justices erred in law in finding that they were amusements with prizes. A

The main point argued on the appeal before your lordships depends on the construction of s. 49 itself. The appellants appear to have applied for the permit in order that they might acquire the six Gold Award machines in addition to the machines they already used lawfully under s. 33 of the Act of 1963 which permitted not more than two gaming machines available for play in any one building. B

The six Gold Award machines satisfy the conditions of s. 49 (3) as amended by s. 2 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1964. The appellants contended that they could continue lawfully to carry on their former activities in compliance with the earlier sections of the Act and that s. 49 was only relevant so far as the six Gold Award machines were concerned. Since these complied with the conditions they argued that no offence had been committed. C

The contention of the respondent, on the other hand, was, and is, that if an occupier of premises obtains a permit under s. 49 (1) (a) of the Act, that introduces a new code of rules in relation to the premises. The opening words of s. 49 (2) are these:

“ Nothing in ss. 32, 33, 34, 41 or 42 of this Act shall apply in relation to amusements with prizes provided on such premises as are mentioned in sub-s. (1) (a) [i.e., premises in respect of which a permit has been granted] or at such a pleasure fair as is mentioned in sub-s. (1) (b) . . . ” D

Sections 32, 33 and 34 are contained in Part 2 of the Act which deals with gaming and s. 41 and s. 42 are contained in Part 3 of the Act which deals with lotteries and offences in connexion with lotteries. E

If the opening words of s. 49 (2) exclude the sections enumerated above so that they do not apply to amusements with prizes carried on at the premises the offences are made out for the activities, apart from those of the Gold Award machines, which were not within and could not come within the conditions in s. 49 (3). F

The appellants can only succeed if they are right in saying that s. 49 is directed to allowing something which is otherwise illegal. They rely first on the word “permitting” which appears in the opening sentence. Little weight can, however, be given to the use of the word “permitting” which appears in this section as also in the preceding s. 48 as introducing provisions irrespective of legality or illegality. I think that the corresponding phrase in s. 49 is introductory also and no more. Reliance was placed on an argument that s. 49 (2) which contains the words excluding the enumerated sections is itself only concerned to exclude cases where there has been a breach of these sections. It is said that the conditions in s. 49 are to be imposed only when there is an activity which would fall foul of s. 32 and s. 33 and requires to be saved by some other provision. This is to give a limited meaning to the word “apply” in the subsection, so that it relates not to the sections in relation to their content and subject matter but only to their operation when breached. It is said that “apply” is to be read as meaning “apply so as to make unlawful”. G H

This is a tortuous approach to the words of the section which seems to me to be impossible to accept, and I see no escape from the plain meaning of the word “apply” in the context as relating to the subject matter of the enumerated sections. True that the section might have been differently drafted by referring simply to amusements with prizes in relation to gaming lotteries instead of referring, by their numbers, to the sections dealing with these subjects; but the result is the same for the sections are identified so that by reference to them their subject matter can be ascertained. If these sections would apply but for s. 49 (2), the conditions set out in s. 49 (3) must be observed. These conditions were not observed and could not be observed in relation to the activities on the premises apart from those relating to the Gold Award machines. Accordingly, I agree I

A with the Divisional Court (6) that the justices came to the right conclusion and I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD GUEST: My Lords, I have read the opinion of my noble and learned friend, VISCOUNT DILHORNE, and I agree with it. I would dismiss the appeal.

B LORD DEVLIN: My Lords, I concur.

LORD UPJOHN: My Lords, the appellants, Kent and Thanet Casinos, Ltd., were at all material times the owners and occupiers of certain premises in North London on which was established the Legalite Casino Club organised and managed by the individual appellants. Various playing activities (to use
C a neutral phrase) were carried on in the club, namely, bingo, French boule and two fruit machines. The justices found that substantial rewards were obtainable by the players, up to £18 at bingo, up to £1 at French boule and the jackpot on the fruit machines was about £4. All these playing activities were organised and conducted in accordance with s. 32 and s. 33 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 (the Act) and were perfectly legal.

D The appellants applied for and obtained from the local authority in October, 1964, a permit under s. 49 (1) (a) of the Act to provide "amusements with prizes", and they then installed six "Gold Award" machines, a type of fruit machine which complied in every relevant respect with the conditions laid down in s. 49 (3) as amended by the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1964, namely,
E no prize could lawfully exceed 1s. in money or 5s. in kind. So that playing activity was also perfectly lawful. However, the appellants were prosecuted before the Edmonton magistrates for an offence under s. 49 (2) in respect of the playing activities, perfectly legal under s. 32 and s. 33, which I have previously mentioned. They were convicted and the conviction was upheld by the Divisional Court (7) on a Case Stated by the magistrates.

F At first sight it may seem strange that if two closely related playing activities can lawfully be carried on in isolation one becomes unlawful when carried on in combination with the others, but it was argued that this was not surprising for while Part 2 of the Act, which includes s. 32 and s. 33, deals with gaming where high rewards are permitted to the players who in general will be over eighteen years of age, Part 4 dealing with amusements with prizes, is concerned only with small prizes up to 5s. in kind at pleasure fairs or amusement parks authorised
G by the local authority which may be attended by those of tender years. The truth is, however, that these general considerations form no sound guide to the interpretation of the provisions of an Act of Parliament which must depend on the exact wording that Parliament has used. Furthermore, the Act creates offences and provides heavy penalties for contravention of its provisions and the appellants naturally rely on the well-known principle that in such cases, if the H Act is ambiguous, the ambiguity should be resolved in favour of the subject.

I My lords, the question in the end turns on the true construction of a few words in s. 49 (2), but before I consider that section I propose to review briefly the general scheme of the relevant parts of the Act. Part 2 of the Act (ss. 32-40) is entitled "Gaming", that is a playing activity defined in s. 55 of the Act as the playing of a game of chance for winnings in money or money's worth. By s. 32 gaming is made lawful provided it is conducted in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

No limit is placed on the rewards that may be gained by gaming but there are stringent provisions to ensure that all odds are equally favourable to all the players and that all money paid by way of stakes must be returned by way of winnings. There are other stringent conditions which I need not set out. Section 33 exempts the provisions of s. 32 from gaming machines defined in language

(6) [1967] 3 All E.R. 907.

(7) [1967] 3 All E.R. 902.

familiar to your lordships and means "fruit machines", but there is no limit to the rewards of playing, though not more than 6d. may be hazarded on any one game and all stakes must be applied in payment of winnings to a player or applied otherwise than for the purpose of private gain. Section 34 prohibits gaming in a street or place to which the public have access. Part 3 of the Act (ss. 41-47) is entitled "Lotteries and Prize Competitions" and makes all lotteries unlawful, but makes exceptions, in ss. 43, 44 and 45 respectively, for certain small, private and charitable lotteries.

Part 4 (ss. 48-50) is entitled "Amusements with Prizes", a phrase nowhere defined, and as the decision in this case depends on the construction of s. 49 I must set out sub-s. (1) and sub-s. (2). [HIS LORDSHIP read s. 49 (1) and (2), which have been printed at p. 414, letter H, to p. 415, letter A, ante, and continued:] I have already summarised sufficiently the conditions prescribed by sub-s. (3). All that need be said is that while the "Gold Award" machines plainly complied with the prescribed conditions, the other playing activities carried on on the premises equally plainly did not. It is to be noted that the permit to be granted is in respect of "premises".

The question of construction may be very shortly stated. Subsection (2) makes it clear that in respect of a playing activity properly described as "amusements with prizes" carried on on the premises in respect of which a permit is granted the provisions and conditions set out in ss. 32, 33, 34, 41 and 42 do not apply; they may be ignored, but in their place "in relation to any such amusement to which any of those sections would apply but for this subsection" then sub-s. (3) applies. The question is whether those words refer to amusements with prizes the legality of which would fall to be considered as gaming under Part 2 or as a lottery under Part 3 but for the opening words of s. 49 (2), or whether the section is directed only to those amusements with prizes which would contravene one or more of the sections mentioned and so be unlawful thereunder. That has been the question to which both sides have addressed their arguments before this House, though it does not precisely fit the questions of law as formulated by the Divisional Court (8).

My lords, I have not found this an easy question to answer. On the whole I have reached the conclusion that the Divisional Court (9) were right. I think that the natural meaning of the words "would apply" is "fall to be considered" rather than "contravene" or "fall foul of" to use the words of WIDGERY, J., in the Divisional Court (10). This view is supported by the very similar wording in s. 48 where it seems to me reasonably plain that the words "would apply" have that meaning. Furthermore, it would be unusual, to say the least of it, but it is a necessary consequence of the appellants' argument that to establish an offence under s. 49 it would be necessary to prove not only a contravention of sub-s. (3) of that section as amended but also a contravention of one of the sections mentioned at the beginning of sub-s. (2).

My lords, this appeal lies in a very small compass depending as it does substantially on the meaning of the words "would apply" in s. 49 (2). But the success of the prosecution in my opinion depends entirely on the view of the justices expressed in para. 6 (b) of the Case Stated that "the said bingo, the said French boule and the two said fruit machines were amusements with prizes within the meaning of s. 49". That finding was not challenged in the Divisional Court (9) or before your lordships.

Whether such a finding is a question of fact for the justices to determine, or whether it is a question of mixed fact and law and so open to review may one day have to be determined. Your lordships have recently had to determine the meaning of the words "gaming" and "winnings" in the Act (see McCullom v. Wrightson (11)), and I would think that what are "amusements with prizes"

(8) [1967] 3 All E.R. at p. 907.

(10) [1967] 3 All E.R. at p. 906, letter C.

(9) [1967] 3 All E.R. 902.

(11) [1968] 1 All E.R. 514.

A must involve the proper interpretation of the words "amusements" and "prizes" in the Act.

Thus counsel for the respondent conceded that games of chemin de fer or roulette could not properly be described as amusements with prizes. As a matter of colloquial language that is clearly right and it may also be true of parliamentary language. Then I would think that according to the circumstances in which it is played bingo may be an amusement with prizes or not, as the case may be. Of course, by the use of its language in s. 49 (2) Parliament recognises that amusements with prizes may also involve gaming or a lottery; it is a question to be determined, as it at present seems to me, on the facts of each case on a proper interpretation of the Act whether a given playing activity is properly described as an amusement with prizes; that is essential for the commission of an offence under s. 49. None of those questions arise in the present appeal for, as I have already said, the justices' finding in para. 6 (b) has not been challenged, so my observations are entirely tentative.

My lords, for the reasons I have given earlier, I would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

D Solicitors: Gale & Phelps (for the appellants); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the respondent).

[Reported by S. A. HATTEEA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

E THOMPSON v. ANDREWS.

[COURT OF APPEAL, CIVIL DIVISION (Harman, Salmon and Winn, L.JJ.), March 22, 1968.]

F *Court of Appeal—Judge's note—Substitution of note taken by solicitors—Appeal from official referee—Official referee's note available—Fuller note taken by appellant's solicitors—Application by appellant to substitute solicitors' note for official referee's—Agreement by official referee but objection by respondent—Discretion—In absence of agreement official referee's note should be the note used by the Court of Appeal—R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 12 (1)*.*

G [As to bringing evidence taken in the court below before the Court of Appeal, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS 472, 473, para. 887; and for cases on the subject, see DIGEST (Practice) 817, 3729-3737.

For R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 12, see SUPREME COURT PRACTICE 1967, p. 769.]

Application.

H On the hearing of an appeal by the defendant, Edward Andrews (trading as Birchwood Boatcentre), from the decision of His Honour PERCY LAMB, Q.C., Official Referee, given on Dec. 12, 1967, in an action brought by the plaintiff, Phyllis Mary Thompson (trading as Newark Caravans), the defendant applied to substitute his solicitors' note of the evidence given before the official referee for the official referee's own shorter note of the evidence. This application was opposed by the plaintiff.

I W. C. Woodward for the defendant.
R. L. Johnson for the plaintiff.

HARMAN, L.J.: This is an appeal from an official referee, and of course an appeal from that official is only on questions of law: he enjoys that privilege. The appeal, therefore, must rest on this, that there was no evidence to justify the official referee in the findings to which he came. He came to various conclusions for damages, for this item and that. It is not in accordance with the practice, as I understand it, in the official referee's court to take a shorthand note, and there was not a shorthand note taken on this occasion. The official referee had been asked for his note: that he has produced, and I have it before me; but it is said on behalf of the defendant that it is a wholly inadequate note, and he has produced a note by a member of the firm of solicitors instructing him, taken in court, so he says, which, instead of being twenty-five pages long, is seventy pages long, and we are asked to substitute the solicitors' note for that of the official referee. He was communicated with on the subject and was asked to approve of that procedure. He wrote on the bottom of the letter asking him to do so "I agree to this proposal". The proposal was that the solicitors' note should be substituted for his own. On the front of the note as sent him he wrote the words "I certify these", or words to that effect. What that meant I do not know at all. Whether he really had looked through them, how much recollection he had, and so on, is unknown to me. An important feature seems to me, however, to be this, that the other side, being told of this project, objected to it and would not agree; but the official referee was not told that. What his reaction would have been if he had known there was a contest over this is left in doubt.

* R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 12 (1), so far as material, is set out at p. 420, letter D, post.

Now that being the position, one looks at R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 12 (1):

"Where any question of fact is involved in an appeal, the evidence taken in the court below shall . . . subject to any direction of the Court of Appeal, be brought before that court as follows: . . . (b) in the case of evidence given orally, by a copy of so much of the transcript of the official shorthand note as is relevant or by a copy of the judge's note, where he has intimated that in the event of an appeal his note will be sufficient, or by such other means as the Court of Appeal may direct."

There was no shorthand note: the judge has not certified or intimated that his note will be sufficient: but I think the last words would give jurisdiction to this court to direct otherwise, namely, to direct that the solicitors' note should be substituted for the judge's note. In this case that is not a course we ought to take. It would produce very strange results, or may do, in future cases before official referees where there would be presumably a competition of notes taken by the solicitors on each side and either side objecting to the other. It seems to me that in the absence of agreement we must stick to what we have got and abide by the judge's note so far as it goes. It may be that if counsel had taken a note there might be something to be said for looking at that, but apparently they did not, or anyway no note that would help us.

I am against admitting the solicitors' note as a substitute for the judge's note and would rule accordingly.

SALMON, L.J.: I agree. I go still further. If the note had been counsel's note and was not agreed between counsel as being accurate and it was different from the note taken by the judge, I would even in those circumstances be inclined to stick to the judge's note. The normal practice is that, save in the most exceptional circumstances, if this court is asked to look at something other than the shorthand note or the judge's note, it usually will only look at an agreed note of the evidence. Whether it be taken by solicitor or counsel seems to me to be immaterial.

WINN, L.J.: I agree with both judgments which my lords have delivered.

Application refused.

Solicitors: Denton, Hall & Burgin, agents for Shacklock, Bosworth & Hooton, Kirkby-in-Ashfield, Notts. (for the defendant); Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for Larken & Co., Newark (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PARTRIDGE v. CRITTENDEN.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Blain, J.J.), April 5, 1968.]

Animal—Bird—Protection—Advertisement of Bramblefinch hens, at 25s. each, in periodical under classified advertisements—No words saying offer for sale—Whether the advertisement constituted an “offer for sale”—Bird's ring could be removed without breaking or damaging it—Inference that bird not close-ringed and bred in captivity—Protection of Birds Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2 c. 30), s. 6 (1), Sch. 4.

The appellant inserted an advertisement in the issue for Apr. 13, 1967, of a periodical “Cage and Aviary Birds” containing the words “Quality British A.B.C.R. . . . Bramblefinch cocks, Bramblefinch hens, 25s. each”. It was inserted under the general heading “Classified Advertisements”. In no place was there any direct use of the words “offer for sale”. T., having seen the advertisement, wrote for a hen, which was sent to him and arrived on May 2, 1967, wearing a closed-ring. T. was able to remove the ring without injury to the bird. The appellant was charged with unlawfully offering for sale a certain wild live bird, viz., a brambling, other than a close-ringed specimen bred in captivity, contrary to s. 6 (1)* of, and Sch. 4 to, the Protection of Birds Act, 1954. The justices were of opinion that the advertisement was an offer for sale, and that the brambling was not a close-ringed specimen bred in captivity because it was possible to remove the bird's ring. On appeal against conviction,

Held: the advertisement in the present case constituted in law an invitation to treat, not an offer for sale, and the offence which was charged against the appellant was not, therefore, established (see p. 424, letters D and G, post).

Fisher v. Bell ([1960] 3 All E.R. 731) applied.

Per CURIAM: if the only issue were whether the bird was a close-ringed specimen, the justices inference from the evidence that it was not would have been upheld (see p. 423, letter I, post).

Appeal allowed.

[As to the protection of wild birds, see SUPPLEMENT to 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) para. 1340.

As to the meaning of offer in the law of contract, see 8 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 69, para. 119; and for cases on the subject, see 12 DIGEST (Repl.) 57, 314-316, 59-62, 323-337.

For the Protection of Birds Act, 1954, s. 6, Sch. 4, see 34 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 30, 41.]

Cases referred to:

Fisher v. Bell, [1960] 3 All E.R. 731; [1961] 1 Q.B. 394; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 919; 125 J.P. 101; Digest (Cont. Vol. A) 409, 7358c.

Grainger & Son v. Gough (Surveyor of Taxes), [1896] A.C. 325; 65 L.J.Q.B. 410; 74 L.T. 435; 60 J.P. 692; 45 Digest (Repl.) 382, 8.

Mella v. Monahan, [1961] Crim. L.R. 175.

Case Stated.

This was a Case Stated by justices for the county of Chester acting in and for the petty sessional division of Chester Castle and Ellesmere Port in respect of their adjudication as a magistrates' court sitting at the Castle, Chester, on July 19, 1967.

* Section 6, so far as material, provides: “(1) If . . . any person sells, offers for sale . . . (a) any live wild bird . . . included in Sch. 4 to this Act of a species which is resident in or visits the British Isles in a wild state, other than a close-ringed specimen bred in captivity; . . . he shall be guilty of an offence . . .” Schedule 4 has the heading: “Wild birds which may not be sold alive unless close-ringed and bred in captivity” and amongst the names in the schedule is “brambling”.

On June 19, 1967, an information was preferred by the respondent, Anthony Ian Crittenden, on behalf of the R.S.P.C.A. against the appellant, Arthur Robert Partridge, charging that the appellant did unlawfully offer for sale a certain live wild bird, to wit a brambling, being a bird included in Sch. 4 to the Protection of Birds Act, 1954, of a species which was resident in or visited the British Isles in a wild state, other than a close-ringed specimen bred in captivity, contrary to s. 6 (1) of the Act of 1954.

The following facts, so far as it is necessary to state them in this report, were found: (a) on Apr. 13, 1967, there appeared in the periodical "Cage and Aviary Birds" an advertisement inserted by the appellant containing, inter alia, the words "Quality British A.B.C.R. . . . Bramblefinch cocks, Bramblefinch hens 25s. each"; (b) by letter to the appellant dated Apr. 22, 1967, Thomas Shaw Thompson, of 16, Long Lane, Hoole, Chester requested the dispatch to himself of an A.B.C.R. bramblefinch hen as advertised in "Cage and Aviary Birds" and enclosed a cheque for 30s.; (c) on May 1, 1967, the appellant dispatched a bramblefinch hen which was wearing a closed-ring to Mr. Thompson in a box by British Rail. Mr. Thompson received the said bird on May 2, 1967; the box was opened by Mr. Thompson in the presence of the respondent. Mr. Thompson attempted to and was, in fact, able to remove the said ring without injury to the bird. Even taking into account that the bird had travelled from Leicester in a box on British Rail its condition was rough, it was extremely nervous, had no perching sense at all and its plumage was rough.

It was contended before the justices by the appellant (a) that there was no offer for sale in the county of Chester as alleged since the advertisement in "Cage and Aviary Birds" was merely an invitation to treat; and (b) that an offence was not committed under the aforesaid section merely because it was possible to remove the ring from the bird's leg.

It was contended before the justices by the respondent (a) that the said advertisement was an offer for sale in Chester; and (b) that a bird was not a close-ringed specimen bred in captivity if it was possible to remove the ring from its leg.

The justices were of opinion that the said advertisement was an offer for sale in Chester on Apr. 22, 1967, and that the brambling so offered for sale by the appellant was not a close-ringed specimen bred in captivity because it was possible to remove the ring. They, accordingly, found the case proved and fined the appellant £5 and ordered him to pay £5 5s. advocate's fee and £4 9s. 6d. witnesses' expenses. The appellant appealed.

The question for the opinion of the High Court was whether the justices were right in law in holding that the advertisement was an offer for sale in Chester on May 1, 1967, and that a bird was not a close-ringed specimen bred in captivity within the meaning of the Act of 1954 if it were possible to remove the ring from its leg.

The cases noted below* were cited during the argument in addition to those referred to in the judgments.

C. J. Pitchers for the appellant.

R. M. D. Havers, Q.C., and D. J. Lloyd-Jones for the respondent.

ASHWORTH, J.: The case arose because in the issue for Apr. 13, 1967, of a periodical known as "Cage and Aviary Birds", there appeared an advertisement inserted by the appellant containing, inter alia, the words "Quality British A.B.C.R. . . . Bramblefinch cocks, Bramblefinch hens 25s. each". In the Case Stated the full advertisement is not set out, but by the agreement of counsel this court has seen a copy of the issue in question, and what is perhaps to be noted in passing is that on the page there is a whole list of different birds under the general heading of "Classified Advertisements". In no place, so far as I * Spencer v. Harding, (1870), L.R. 5 C.P. 561; Harris v. Nickerson, (1873), L.R. 8 Q.B. 286; Rooke v. Dawson, [1895] 1 Ch. 480.

A can see, is there any direct use of the words "offers for sale". I ought to say I am not for my part deciding that that would have the result of making this judgment any different, but at least it strengthens the case for the appellant that there is no such expression on the page. Having seen that advertisement, Mr. Thompson wrote to the appellant and asked for a hen and enclosed a cheque for 30s. A hen, according to the Case, was sent to him on May 1, which was
B wearing a closed-ring, and he received it on May 2. The box was opened by Mr. Thompson in the presence of the respondent, and the Case finds that Mr. Thompson was able to remove the ring without injury to the bird, and, even taking into account that the bird had travelled from Leicester in a box on the railway, its condition was rough, it was extremely nervous, it had no perching sense at all and its plumage was rough. Stopping there, the inference from that
C finding is that the justices were taking the view, or could take the view, that from its appearance, at any rate, this was not such a bird as a person can legitimately sell within the Act of 1954. The Case goes on to find:

"The expression 'close-ringed' is nowhere defined nor is there any universally recommended size ring for a brambling; (g) The ring is placed on the bird's leg at the age of three to ten days at which time it is D not possible to determine what the eventual girth of the bird's leg will be."

Having been referred to the decision of this court in Fisher v. Bell (1) the justices nonetheless took the view that the advertisement did constitute an offer for sale; they went on further to find that the bird was not a close-ringed specimen bred
E in captivity, because it was possible to remove the ring. Before this court counsel for the appellant, has taken two points, first that this was not an offer for sale, and secondly that the justices' reason for finding that it was not a close-ringed bird was plainly wrong, because the fact that one could remove the ring did not render it a non-close-ringed bird.

It is convenient, perhaps, to deal with the question of the ring first. For my F part I confess that I was in ignorance, and in some state of confusion, as to the real meaning and effect of this particular phrase in the section, and I express my indebtedness to counsel for the respondent, for having made the matter, as far as I am concerned, perfectly clear. I would say, if one was looking for a definition of the phrase "close-ringed", that it means ringed by a complete ring, which is not capable of being forced apart or broken except, of course, with the G intention of damaging it. I contrast a closed-ring of that sort—it might take the form, I suppose, of an elastic band or of a metal circle ring—with the type of ring which sometimes exists which is made into a ring when a tongue is placed through a slot and then drawn back; that is a ring which can be undone and is not close-ringed. In this case what is contemplated, according to counsel, and I accept it, is that with a young bird of this sort between three and ten days after
H hatching a closed-ring of the type described is forced over its claws, which are obviously brought together so as to admit the passage of the ring, and it is then permanently on or around the bird's leg, and as it grows, it would be impossible to take that ring off, because the claws and the like would have rendered a repetition of the earlier manoeuvre impossible.

Therefore, approaching the matter this way, I can well understand how the I justices came to the conclusion that this was not a close-ringed specimen, because they could take the ring off. If that were the only issue, I should not find any difficulty in upholding their decision. But the real point of substance in this case arose from the words "offer for sale", and it is to be noted in s. 6 of the Act of 1954 that the operative words are "any person sells, offers for sale or has in his possession for sale". For some reason which counsel for the respondent has not been able to explain, those responsible for the prosecution in this case chose, out of the trio of possible offences, the one which could not succeed. There was a sale here, in my view, because Mr. Thompson sent his cheque and the bird was sent in reply; and a completed sale. On the evidence there was also a plain case of the appellant having in possession for sale this particular bird; but they chose to prosecute him for offering for sale, and they relied on the advertisement.

A similar point arose before this court in 1960 dealing, it is true, with a different statute but with the same words, that is Fisher v. Bell (2). The relevant words of the Act (3) in that case were: "Any person who offers for sale any knife." LORD PARKER, C.J., in giving judgment said this (4):

"The sole question is whether the exhibition of that knife in the window with the ticket constituted an offer for sale within the statute. I think that most lay people would be inclined to the view (as, indeed, I was myself when I first read these papers), that if a knife were displayed in a window like that with a price attached to it, it was nonsense to say that that was not offering it for sale. The knife is there inviting people to buy it, and in ordinary language it is for sale; but any statute must be looked at in the light of the general law of the country . . ."

The words are the same here "offer for sale", and in my judgment the law of the country is equally plain as it was in regard to articles in a shop window, namely that the insertion of an advertisement in the form adopted here under the title "Classified Advertisements" is simply an invitation to treat. That is really sufficient to dispose of this case. I should perhaps in passing observe that the editors of the publication Criminal Law Review had an article dealing with Fisher v. Bell (5) in which a way round that decision was at least contemplated, suggesting that, while there might be one meaning of the phrase "offer for sale" in the law of contract, a criminal court might take a stricter view, particularly having in mind the purpose of the Act, which in Fisher v. Bell (2) was directed to the stocking of flick knives, and in this case is directed to the selling of wild birds. For my part, however, that is met entirely by the quotation which appears in LORD PARKER, C.J.'s judgment in Fisher v. Bell (6), that (7): "It appears to me to be a naked usurpation of the legislative function under the thin disguise of interpretation . . .". For my part I would allow this appeal and quash the conviction.

BLAIN, J.: I agree.

LORD PARKER, C.J.: I agree and with less reluctance than in Fisher v. Bell (2), to which ASHWORTH, J., has referred, and the case of Mella v. Monahan (8). I say "with less reluctance" because I think that when one is dealing with advertisements and circulars, unless they indeed come from manufacturers, there is business sense in their being construed as invitations to treat and not offers for sale. In a very different context LORD HERSCHELL in Grainger & Son v. Gough (Surveyor of Taxes) (9), said this in dealing with a price-list (9):

"The transmission of such a price-list does not amount to an offer to supply an unlimited quantity of the wine described at the price named, so that as soon as an order is given there is a binding contract to supply that quantity. If it were so, the merchant might find himself involved in any number of contractual obligations to supply wine of a particular description which

(2) [1960] 3 All E.R. 731; [1961] 1 Q.B. 394.

(3) Restriction of Offensive Weapons Act, 1959, s. 1 (1); 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 260.

(4) [1960] 3 All E.R. at pp. 732, 733; [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 399.

(5) [1960] 3 All E.R. 731; [1961] 1 Q.B. 394; see [1961] Crim. L.R. at pp. 181-182.

(6) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 733; [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 400.

(7) Quoting LORD SIMONDS in Magor and St. Mellons Rural District Council v. Newport Corpn., [1951] 2 All E.R. 839 at p. 841; [1952] A.C. 189 at p. 191.

(8) [1961] Crim. L.R. 175.

(9) [1896] A.C. 325 at p. 334.

A he would be quite unable to carry out, his stock of wine of that description being necessarily limited."

It seems to me accordingly that not only is that the law, but common sense supports it.

Appeal allowed. Conviction quashed.

B Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard, agents for R. G. Frisby & Small, Leicester (for the appellant); Rex Taylor & Meadows, West Kirby (for the respondent).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C
Re A DEBTOR (No. 12 OF 1958). Ex parte THE TRUSTEE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE DEBTOR v. CLEGG AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Stamp and Goff, J.J.), February 12, 13, 14, 1968.]

D Bankruptcy—Inquiry as to debtor's dealings and property—Summons to persons deemed capable of giving information—Discharged bankrupt—Summons to his personal representatives after his death—Executors were former partner of bankrupt, his accountant and his solicitor—Statement rendered by discharged bankrupt in his lifetime containing material for inquiry—Whether jurisdiction to make order against executors—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5 c. 59), s. 25 (1)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952 No. 2113), r. 236.

E T. was adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition on July, 1958. He obtained his discharge on Nov. 10, 1961, on condition of judgment being entered against him for £5,000 and costs. By Nov. 10, 1965, T. had satisfied the judgment. On Dec. 21, 1965, he filed a statement or account at the request of the Official Receiver (cf., r. 236 (2) of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952). This showed that on Nov. 4, 1965, T. had assets amounting at cost to £81,000 and liabilities of £34,900; his disclosed receipts during the four years succeeding his discharge were also remarkable in comparison with his disclosed position prior to discharge. The trustee in his bankruptcy wrote to T. making further enquiry, but T. did not reply. The trustee applied under s. 25* of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, for the examination of T. but, on Nov. 18, 1966, before the summons was served, T. died. There were three executors of his will, who were his surveyor (a partner of T.), his accountant and his solicitor. In May, 1967, the trustee applied ex parte to the county court where the bankruptcy proceedings had taken place for the examination of T.'s executors. Most of the matters sought to be investigated related to conduct after T.'s discharge. The registrar made an order on June 7, 1967, that the executors be summoned to attend for examination under s. 25. On motion to discharge the order, the registrar on Oct. 11, 1967 discharged it. On appeal by the trustee,

H Held: (i) the power of the court under s. 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, survived the discharge of the bankrupt, and was not limited to cases within s. 26 (9) (see p. 428, letters C and H, and p. 435, letter H, post).

I Re F. A. Coulson, Ex parte Official Receiver (Trustee in Bankruptcy) ([1933] All E. R. Rep. 544) explained and followed.

Dictum of SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., in Re A Debtor (No. 946 of 1926) ([1939] 1 All E.R. at p. 742) applied.

(ii) the statement or account rendered by T. in December, 1965, provided good ground for supposing that the information sought by the trustee might lead to recovery of assets or income which T. should have disclosed on making his application for discharge, and, as the executors were persons whom the court deemed capable of giving information about T.'s property and as none of the executors had deposed that he had no such records as those of which the trustee sought production, an order under s. 25 for their examination should be made (see p. 433, letter I, p. 435, letters C and D, and p. 437, letters B and H, post).

* Section 25 (1) is printed at p. 427, letter I, to p. 428, letter A, post.

Re Maundy Gregory, Ex p. Norton v. Trustee ([1934] All E.R. Rep. 429) distinguished.

Appeal allowed.

[As to the private examination of the debtor and others, see 2 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 405, 406, para. 814; and for cases on the subject, see 5 DIGEST (Repl.) 662-665, 5806-5843.]

For the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 25 (1) see 2 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 352.

For the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952, r. 236, see 3 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS (Second Re-Issue) 251.]

Cases referred to:

Coulson (F. A.), Re, Ex p. Official Receiver (Trustee in Bankruptcy), [1933] All E.R. Rep. 544; [1934] Ch. 45; 103 L.J.Ch. 31; 150 L.T. 5; 5 Digest (Repl.) 663, 5813.

Debtor, A, Re, (No. 3 of 1909), Ex p. Goldstein, [1917] 1 K.B. 558; 86 L.J.K.B. 705; 116 L.T. 379; 5 Digest (Repl.) 664, 5833.

Debtor, A, Re, (No. 946 of 1926), The Debtor v. Official Receiver, [1939] 1 All E.R. 735; [1939] Ch. 489; 108 L.J.Ch. 225; 160 L.T. 349; 4 Digest (Repl.) 628, 5598.

Gold, Co., Re, (1879), 12 Ch.D. 77; 48 L.J.Ch. 650; 90 L.T. 865; 10 Digest (Repl.) 936, 6403.

Gregory (Maundy) Re, Ex p. Norton v. Trustee, [1934] All E.R. Rep. 429; [1935] Ch. 65; 104 L.J.Ch. 1; 152 L.T. 58; 5 Digest (Repl.) 667, 5855.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by notice dated Oct. 31, 1967, by Richard Alfred Coleman Mordant, the trustee of the property of Kenneth Thorne, a debtor. The appeal was from an order of Mr. Registrar RIEU made on Oct. 11, 1967, setting aside an order previously made by him on June 7, 1967, on the application of the trustee, for the examination under s. 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and/or under r. 236 (2) of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952, of the respondents, the executors. The trustee sought that the order dated Oct. 11, 1967, should be set aside or varied, and that the executors John Armitage Clegg, Eric Thomas George Terrell and Allan Edward Moxham Janes should be ordered to attend the St. Albans county court in bankruptcy to be examined under s. 25 and r. 236. The grounds of appeal were (i) that the registrar was wrong in law in holding that there was no jurisdiction to order an examination under s. 25 of the Act of 1914 and/or r. 236 (2) of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952, in relation to the affairs of a debtor after he had obtained his discharge; (ii) that the registrar was wrong in law in holding that there was no jurisdiction to order the said examination in relation to the affairs of a debtor who had obtained his discharge and thereafter had died; and (iii) that the registrar misdirected himself in ruling that even if he was wrong on the two above mentioned points he would, in the exercise of his discretion, arrive at the conclusion that the trustee was not entitled to an order for the examination for the reason that an executor was not a person capable of giving information relating to a debtor's dealings or property. The facts are set out in the judgment of STAMP, J.

Allan Heyman for the trustee in bankruptcy.

Muir Hunter, Q.C., and A. L. Figgis for the executors.

STAMP, J.: The late Mr. Kenneth Thorne was a bankrupt who obtained his discharge (subject to a condition, which, shortly afterwards, was complied

A with) on Nov. 10, 1961. Subsequently to the discharge, the trustee in bankruptcy obtained information from the bankrupt, in circumstances which I shall have to relate, leading him to suspect that the bankrupt had concealed assets to which he, the trustee in bankruptcy, was entitled. He thereupon set in motion an application under s. 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, for the examination of the bankrupt. Before the summons was served the bankrupt died. His
B executors are the present respondents to this appeal, namely, Mr. John Armitage Clegg, who is described in the bankrupt's will as his surveyor, Mr. Eric Thomas George Torrell, who is described in the bankrupt's will as his accountant, and Mr. Allan Edward Moxham Jones, who was at the time of his death and at the time of the will his solicitor.

C Following the death, on an ex parte application to the St. Albans county court, where the bankruptcy proceedings had taken place, the registrar made an order, on June 7, 1967, ordering that the three executors be severally summoned to attend for examination under s. 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and under r. 236 (2) of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (1). On the same day, the three
D executors were summoned to attend and give evidence and produce documents, in terms to which I will refer later in this judgment. Before the date fixed for the examination, a motion was launched to discharge the registrar's order, and on Oct. 11 last, the registrar did discharge the order. This is an appeal by the trustee in bankruptcy against the order of Oct. 11.

It is, I think, convenient that I should say at once that before this court the point was taken that the executors had no locus standi on their motion to set aside the registrar's order of June 7 to do more than object to the jurisdiction
E to make the order, it being said that they could not, assuming there was jurisdiction to make it, object to the propriety of making it on the facts of this particular case. In my view, that point is, on the authority of Re A Debtor (No. 3 of 1909), Ex p. Goldstein (2), and the case on which it is founded, not well taken.

The remaining issues on this appeal are, as I say, first, whether the registrar was right in holding, as he did, that he had no jurisdiction to make an order
F under s. 25 against the executors of the bankrupt, who had obtained his discharge before his death, except in limited circumstances; secondly, whether, on the facts of this case, the executors of the deceased are persons who, on the true construction of s. 25, are persons against whom an order under that section can be made; thirdly, whether the registrar, on the view which he took when
G the motion came before him ought to have made the order which the trustee sought—the view referred to being his view, whether he had jurisdiction and whether the executors were persons falling within s. 25. That question can perhaps be put in another way, by asking whether, in expressing his opinion why he ought not in any event to exercise the discretion sought by the trustee, he took a wrong view of the facts, or the law, or acted upon wrong principles.

A further issue was raised by the executors' notice. The order of June 7, 1967,
H as I have already indicated, was made not only under s. 25, but also under r. 236 (2) of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952. The executors before the registrar objected that he had no power to make an order under that rule against anyone except the bankrupt himself. In this court the trustee does not pursue the claim for relief under r. 236 and the court is not concerned with it except that, speaking for myself, it appears to me that the rule has been something of a red herring
I which, I think, may have coloured the registrar's views on the application in other respects.

Section 25 (1) is in these terms:

“The court may, on the application of the official receiver or trustee, at any time after a receiving order has been made against a debtor, summon before it the debtor or his wife, or any person known or suspected to have in

(1) S.I. 1952 No. 2113.

(2) [1917] 1 K.B. 558.

his possession any of the estate or effects belonging to the debtor, or supposed to be indebted to the debtor, or any person whom the court may deem capable of giving information respecting the debtor, his dealings or property, and the court may require any such person to produce any documents in his custody or power relating to the debtor, his dealings or property.”

It was held, in Re F. A. Coulson, Ex p. Official Receiver (Trustee in Bankruptcy) (3) that the power under that section survived the discharge of the debtor from his bankruptcy. A duty still remains on the trustee to collect, realise and distribute such of the debtor's assets as were vested, before the discharge, in the trustee. In coming to that conclusion, the Court of Appeal derived assistance from s. 26 (9) of the Act of 1914, and the registrar in the present case thought that Re Coulson (3) was limited to cases to which s. 26 (9) applied. I do not think that this view of the matter is well founded.

Counsel for the executors, in seeking to escape from the effect of Re Coulson (3) brought attention to the fact that the case was decided on an appeal ex parte, but it is binding on this court and is, in my judgment, a clear decision that s. 25 survived the discharge of the bankrupt and can properly be invoked to assist the trustee to collect, realise and distribute such of the debtor's assets as are vested in the trustee before the discharge.

What the registrar said about this, after following the red herring which had been drawn across his path, was this. He obviously did not at all approve of the decision in Re Coulson (3). He said:

“With regard to the court's power under s. 25, the first question is can it be invoked after discharge. In this respect I am bound by Re Coulson (3), although it surprises me that this extension was given. However, in Re Coulson (3) the Court of Appeal did allow an order for examination after discharge; but the facts in Re Coulson (3) fell within s. 26 (9) in that examination was directed to property which had vested in the trustee. That is the only case in which it has been decided that an order for examination could be made after discharge and it is limited, in my opinion, to a case which falls under s. 26 (9). It would be quite wrong for this court to extend it still further. It is clear in this case that the subject matter does not fall within s. 26 (9). This, in my view, is quite clear as to its limits—the realisation and distribution of property vested in the trustee. There is no question in this case of the personal representatives giving assistance to the trustee as to property vested in the trustee. In my view Re Coulson (3) does not fit in with the facts of this case. I am quite satisfied that the court had no power to make an order for examination of the bankrupt, or the subsequent order for the examination of his executors.”

As I have already indicated, in my view Re Coulson (3) is clear authority for the proposition that s. 25 is not limited to the period before the debtor is discharged from his bankruptcy. If, however, it was the fact that there was no question of the executors giving assistance to the trustee as to property vested in the trustee, then I will accept that it might not be right to bring s. 25 into operation. What the trustee said, however, in the report which he made to the registrar at the time when he was asking for an order against the bankrupt, was that he had reason to believe, on grounds which he advanced, that the answers to the questions which he wished to have put at that time to the bankrupt might disclose assets or income which the bankrupt should have included in the statement made by him in support of his application for his discharge. Whether that submission is well founded goes to the question, not whether the registrar had jurisdiction, but whether a case had been made out for its exercise in this case; and, in my view, the registrar, in dealing with the question of jurisdiction, misdirected himself as to the case which was being put. As I shall

A indicate when I come to that part of his judgment where he decides that in any event he would not, if he could, exercise his discretion in favour of the trustee, I think that the same misconception remains.

I turn to consider whether, on the facts of this case, an order under s. 25 against the three executors ought to have been made. First, however, I must consider the principles to be applied. As has been pointed out, the power under s. 25 is a very extraordinary power, which ought to be very carefully exercised and the court must deem a witness who has to be summoned, capable of giving information, within the meaning of the section, on some grounds which have a foundation. It ought not to be exercised for the purpose of "fishing out" a case (see Re Maundy Gregory, Ex p. Norton v. Trustee (4)), but that does not mean that before an order can be made under s. 25 one must decide that the enquiry which is sought will lead almost certainly, or even most probably, to obtaining information to prove a case of which you are really aware. So to construe the section would, in my view, be to stultify its purpose. It cannot be required of a section which speaks of suspicion and supposition, that it requires proof. Re Maundy Gregory (5) itself was something of an extreme case, because what was sought there was information which might impugn a transaction D which there was no ground for supposing was otherwise than a proper one, and as was pointed out by LORD HANWORTH, M.R., in that case it would not be wise to attempt a definition of the limits within which an order for examination can be made or an answer compelled under s. 25. I would add this; that in this field, nothing can, in my judgment, be more dangerous than to take dicta of judges out of their context and to seek to apply such dicta to the widely E different facts of other cases.

The facts which appear to me to be relevant for the purposes of the present case are these. The receiving order was made on July 7, 1958, on the bankrupt's own petition and he was adjudged bankrupt on the same day. According to the official receiver's report, made on Oct. 31, 1961, the bankrupt, who started life in a rather simple way, had, prior to his bankruptcy, become associated F with a number of family companies. There was a company called Provis Thorne, Ltd., who, I think, are builders. The bankrupt had been employed by that firm, prior to 1944, for a number of years, and then, in that year, he became a shareholder. By November, 1946, he was bound as a guarantor of the bank overdraft of that company. Unfortunately, in March, 1958, the company went into voluntary liquidation with liabilities of £13,210 and assets of £5,314 and the bankrupt's liability under his guarantee was nearly £9,000. G

Then there is a company called Thorne's Sawmills, Ltd., formed in April, 1941, by the bankrupt's father and another person. The bankrupt became a shareholder in that company. In 1941 he became a director and he received remuneration which rose to £1,000 a year, plus expenses. That company's trading was at first successful, but, again, unfortunately, on Feb. 3, 1958, a compulsory winding-up order was made against the company on the petition H of a finance company to which it was indebted. According to the statement of affairs in the liquidation, the liabilities were £233,000 and the assets just a little over £5,000. Again, the bankrupt had entered into guarantees of the company's indebtedness and on those guarantees the deceased became liable to the tune of over £120,000.

I In January, 1946, the bankrupt and another formed a company called Thorne and Grant, Ltd., and then, on Apr. 21, 1958, it was compulsorily wound up with liabilities amounting to £56,000 and assets of only £10,000. Again, the bankrupt was liable on guarantees of the company's bank account. There were a number of other companies, which play no significant part in the bankrupt's history. According to the bankrupt's statement of affairs, his gross liabilities were estimated at about £131,000. The assets at the time of the official receiver's report had realised about £1,100 and there were some debts due of an insignificant kind. At the end of the official receiver's report he said this. A

(4) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 429 at p. 433; [1936] Ch. 65 at p. 74.

(5) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 429; [1935] Ch. 65.

"According to the bankrupt, from July, 1958, to December, 1960, he was employed as a sawmill manager at a salary of £1,092 a year to March, 1959, and thereafter at £546 a year. At the same time he has carried on business as a valuer and negotiator of woodlands and property and estimates his profit at £2,600 a year." B

Some ten days after the date of that report, namely, on Nov. 10, 1961, the bankrupt obtained his discharge, on the terms set out in the order of that date. The order was in these terms.

"It is ordered that the bankrupt be discharged subject to the following condition to be fulfilled before his discharge takes effect—namely: he shall, before the signing of this order, consent to judgment being entered against him in the St. Albans County Court by the trustee for the sum of £5,000, being part of the balance of the debts provable in the bankruptcy which is not satisfied at the date of this order, and for £1 10s. costs of judgment. C

"And it is further ordered, without prejudice and subject to any execution which may be issued on the said judgment with the leave of the court, that the said sum of £5,000, and £1 10s. costs be paid out of the future earnings or after-acquired property of the bankrupt in manner following: payable as to £1,000 and £1 10s. costs in three months and the balance by payments of £75 a month, first payment of £75 to be paid on Mar. 10, 1962, thereafter payments on the 10th of each succeeding month." D

The £75 a month was no doubt fixed with regard to the fact that the bankrupt was understood to be earning something over £3,000 a year. The condition on which the bankrupt was discharged was fulfilled on Dec. 1, 1961, when judgment was entered in the sum of £5,000, and costs. Four years later, on Nov. 10, 1965, the bankrupt had fully satisfied the judgment. E

Under r. 236 (1), it is provided that F

"Where a bankrupt is discharged conditionally upon consenting to judgment being entered against him, or upon payments being made out of his future earnings or after-acquired property, he shall, until the judgment or condition is satisfied, give the official receiver such information as he may from time to time require with respect to his earnings and after-acquired property and income, and not less than once a year file in court a statement, verified by affidavit, showing particulars of any property or income acquired by him after his discharge." G

The bankrupt did not in fact file a statement once a year verified by affidavit, in the terms of r. 236, and counsel for the executors indicated in this court that if necessary he would have submitted an argument that the rule did not apply in the particular circumstances of this case to require him to do so. In view of the fact, however, that that rule is not now relied on, it is unnecessary for us to express any view about it. H

In point of fact the bankrupt did, on being requested so to do by the official receiver, file an account on Dec. 20, 1965. That account revealed a remarkable state of affairs. It showed that on Nov. 4, 1965, the bankrupt had assets put in at cost amounting to no less than £81,000. Those assets included shares in and loans to about a dozen family or private companies, brought in at cost at a figure of about £45,000. Also included were two houses and a share in a farm, which together amounted to £21,000. These were miscellaneous assets, making up a total of over £80,000. Against these assets, the bankrupt stated that there were liabilities of £34,900. As remarkable were the particulars of the bankrupt's receipts during the four years immediately succeeding the discharge. He claimed to have received income from professional activities as a land agent, valuer and I

- A negotiator from Nov. 10, 1961, to Dec. 18, 1963, when those activities, he said, ceased, a period, that is to say, of just over two years, amounting to £32,050. The account also showed income from employment with Kenneth Thorne, Ltd. during the four years, amounting to no less than £17,700. The account showed a sum of £18,963 as received on the sale of part of the mineral rights in a concern called Bramshill Gravel Trust. The account had other less remarkable features.
- B Not unnaturally, the trustee in bankruptcy opened his eyes rather widely when he saw those details. How could so much capital wealth have been acquired in so short a time and was it credible that a man who had been carrying on a business as valuer and negotiator in woodland property at £2,600 a year immediately before his discharge, immediately afterwards start receiving remuneration which produced £16,000 a year. Were the statements which he made
- C regarding his income true, or were they made up in order to account for the ownership of capital assets which belonged to the trustee at the time of the discharge? If, on the other hand the debtor had, in truth, during the years immediately succeeding the bankruptcy, earned the enormous sums which he had, were there no grounds for thinking that he might have misled the official receiver as to his earlier comparatively modest income? There were, in my
- D judgment, grounds for suspecting that the bankrupt had concealed assets and I do not doubt that the trustee was right to make further enquiries. The position was made stronger by the fact that the bankrupt, who took advice about the matter, refused to answer the trustee's enquiries, and so have the executors.

In a letter dated June 27, 1966, the trustee wrote to the bankrupt—the letter is in evidence and I will read some extracts. He refers to the affidavit to which I

E have just referred and asks for the following additional information.

- “ 1. In question No. 1 of the statement in support of your application for discharge you stated that your present means of livelihood and the amount of your income as at July 31, 1961, were as follows: ‘ Valuer and negotiator of woodlands property. Profit since July, 1958, as far as ascertainable average about £2,600 per annum.’ In the statement exhibited to your affidavit
- F you state that details of receipts from Nov. 10, 1961 to Nov. 4, 1965, amounted to £32,200, an average of £8,000 per year. It appears that your income from your professional activities as a land agent ceased on Dec. 18, 1963, and one is therefore left with an income of something over £16,000 per annum during the two years immediately succeeding the date of your discharge. Would you please let me have full accounts, together with all
- G documents and a full description of your income from all your activities during this period resulting in this income. Would you also let me know the date from which the income started to accrue.

- “ 2. Your statement shows that your income from Kenneth Thorne, Ltd. subsequent to Nov. 10, 1961, as being £16,750. Would you please let me have a sight of the accounts of this company to date together with details
- H of the various years into which the income falls.

- “ 3. Your statement shows income from investments of £1,564, would you please let me have schedules showing the date and the amount of each of the loans which were made, together with any repayments. The dates and amounts of any deposits with the building societies together with dates of repayments and the dates of purchase and the costs of the shares on
- I which you received dividends, together with any movements on those shares.

“ 4. Your statement shows profits of a capital nature would you please let me have details of the money advanced or cost of shares, together with any movements and the appropriate dates in each case. Would you also let me have details of the individual amount of realisations and dates.

“ 5. Your statement shows capital receipts of £22,963 would you please let me have the date of the acquisition of the mineral rights and the date of the acquisition of the shares in Greenwoods (St. Ives), Ltd. together with any movements of shares, the source from which you found the money to pay for these acquisitions and the amounts and dates received, together with full particulars of the transactions.” A

Then the trustee in bankruptcy asks for particulars of the bankrupt's shareholding in various companies, and he asks for details of the purchase of certain properties and information as to the length of time for which the bankrupt had held those properties. The bankrupt refused to answer any of those enquiries. No reply was made to the trustee to explain the discrepancies or dates to which the trustee drew attention, and if now it is said that the enquiry which is being made is of an excessively wide character, I can only say that the bankrupt brought this on himself and his executors. B

A report dated Jan. 4, 1967, was made when the trustee was unaware of the death of the deceased, pursuant to s. 25 and in support of the application to summon the bankrupt to give the required information. The report was before the registrar on the subsequent hearing when he gave the judgment now under appeal, and it is a report to which I think far too little attention has been paid. In that report the trustee in bankruptcy summed-up his case as follows. C

“I have reason to believe that the answers to the questions so put to the [bankrupt] . . . [at that point it refers to the letter which I have just read] may disclose or lead to the disclosure of information leading to the recovery of further assets or income which the [bankrupt] should have included in the statement made by him in connexion with and in support of his application for discharge on July 31, 1961.” D

That is the basis on which, as I understand it, the present application is made, and I do not think that the grounds of the application could be put very much more clearly. Is there reason to believe that the answers to the questions which the trustee seeks to put to the executors may disclose or lead to disclosure of information leading to the recovery of further assets or income which the bankrupt should have included in the statement made by him in support of his application for discharge? The report then goes on to say why the trustee thinks the answer to be in the affirmative. He says this: E

“An instance of a matter which in my opinion calls for further information from the [bankrupt] is that in his statement of July 31, 1961, he declared that his then means of livelihood was as a valuer and negotiator of woodlands and property which had since July, 1958, the date of the receiving order produced ‘so far as was then ascertainable’ about £2,600 per annum; whereas in his statement as at Nov. 4, 1965, income from this source is stated by the debtor to have been £32,050 for the period Nov. 10, 1961, to Dec. 18, 1963, that is to say at a rate of about £16,000 per annum.” G

He then gives other examples of matters on which, in his submission, information should be provided. The report ends

“I therefore ask that an order be made for the examination of the [bankrupt] under s. 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and or alternatively under r. 236 (2) of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952, he being in my submission capable of giving information, which may lead to the discovery of further assets for his creditors.” H

The bankrupt in fact died on Nov. 18, 1966. According to the inland revenue affidavit, leading to the grant of probate, the gross value of the estate was £81,132, but the net value amounted to as little as £5,251. Whereas between the date of discharge, in November, 1961, and November, 1965, the bankrupt, if he was to be believed, had accumulated assets of the value of £81,000 odd and debts of £34,000, giving a net estate of over £45,000, by the time of his death a year later, the net estate had dwindled to about £5,000. A satisfactory explanation of the appearance and disappearance of the bankrupt's capital there may well be, but in the absence of some explanation the mystery is reminiscent I

A of that of the Cheshire cat, and one cannot help suspecting that it may have been there all the time.

On May 30, 1967, the trustee in bankruptcy made application ex parte for examination of the three executors, under s. 25 and/or r. 236. On June 7, 1967, the registrar made an order on that application, and at the same time the summonses were issued against each of the executors. They were all in similar form and

B I will refer only to one of them. Mr. Clegg was called on to attend, on a date specified,

“ to give evidence and to produce all ledgers and books of account, invoices, statements of account, letters, books, papers and documents of every kind, in any manner relating to: (a) the partnership of [the bankrupt] in the C firm of Clegg & Co., and (b) the income of the [bankrupt] from professional activities as a land agent and valuer and negotiator, and (c) all the several dealings of the [bankrupt] from Nov. 10, 1961 to Nov. 4, 1965, and (d) all the several transactions referred to in the exhibit to the affidavit of the (bankrupt] sworn on Dec. 20, 1965, and (e) the livelihood of the [bankrupt] as a valuer and negotiator of woodland and property between July, 1958,
D and Nov. 10, 1961, and (f) the returns for income tax and assessments for income tax and surtax made by and against the [bankrupt] from the date of the receiving order until Nov. 4, 1965, and (g) a copy of the inland revenue affidavit and accompanying schedules deposed to by you as an executor for the purpose of obtaining a grant of probate of the will of the [bankrupt].”

I am bound to say that when my attention was called to the details for which
E the trustee was asking in that summons, it seemed to me that some of the heads of enquiry might be open to some objection, but that is not the ground which the executors, as I understand it, put before the registrar, which would go only to the summons and not to the order made under s. 25. It may be that the summonses are too wide, but on that I shall express no view. If, when the time comes, any of the executors takes objection to a particular question under F a particular head, that matter can be dealt with. It is not a matter which is at present before this court.

What is said in the evidence filed on behalf of the executors is that most of the matters sought to be investigated relate to conduct of the bankrupt's affairs after he obtained his discharge. As a matter of language, this is no doubt true, but the enquiries are nevertheless directed to establishing whether in truth the G assets which the bankrupt had were acquired out of income or profits earned or made after his discharge, or whether they, or some of them, represented income or are assets concealed from the trustee at the time of the discharge.

It is said that none of the executors is a person that the court can deem capable of giving information respecting the bankrupt, his dealings or property. I will assume, in considering this question, as I think to be the case that the reference to the property of the bankrupt is a reference, in the case of a bankrupt who
H has been adjudicated, to the property of the bankrupt which vested in the trustee, and does not include property acquired after the discharge. I have, however, confessed to having failed to appreciate how the executors, one of whom was the bankrupt's accountant, another was his solicitor and the third a partner with him, can be said to be persons whom the court cannot deem capable
I of giving information about the property which may or may not have been vested in the trustee in bankruptcy.

The enquiry, however, goes wider than that, because one is not limited to enquire whether the executors have knowledge of the property itself but of the dealings by the debtor with that property. Moreover, the executors, it seems to me, are persons who must be deemed to be fully aware of the dealings with such property as the bankrupt may have had at the moment of his discharge. There must be income tax returns and records of all kinds in the hands of the executors going back to the time of the discharge and before that date and none of the executors has come before the court to say that he has no such records. A

Then it is said that the executors were not party or privy to the bankrupt's dealings at the relevant time. This was one of the grounds on which the registrar was persuaded that he ought not to exercise his discretion to make the order for which the trustee asked. It is not, in my judgment, a requirement of s. 25 that the person sought to be questioned should have been party or privy to the bankrupt's dealings at the relevant time. All that is required is that he should be, in the wording of the section, one "whom the court may deem capable of giving information respecting the debtor, his dealings or property". B

Then it is said that the court ought not to interfere with the discretion of the registrar. It is on this point that I must, I think, refer to the note of the registrar's judgment—pausing to observe that whatever degree of deference this court ought to show to the views of a registrar of a county court, who has so much greater knowledge of the practice in bankruptcy than the judges in this court can be expected to have, this court, if it comes to the conclusion that the registrar has acted on a wrong principle or has misunderstood the case, must in my judgment act accordingly and express its own views about the matter. C

I have already drawn attention to the remark which the registrar made when discussing the effect of Re Coulson (6). There is no question in this case of the executors giving assistance to the trustee as to property vested in the trustee. I also emphasize again, whether on grounds good, bad or indifferent the information which is required, is information which could lead to the recovery of assets or income which the bankrupt should have disclosed in the bankruptcy and on his application for his discharge. The registrar, after expressing the view that Re Coulson (6) was wrongly decided, went on as follows: D

"In case I should be held to be wrong in this view, I should have to consider whether I should exercise my discretion in favour of making the order. Here I have to consider a number of different matters. First I will consider the object of such examination and what might be achieved by it—in this case it could only be rescission of the discharge and reopening of the matter. It seems to me at this time that rescission is out of the question; there would have to be strong evidence of fraud which there is not. This discharge was made on a consent basis—the [bankrupt] consented to judgment and the condition was satisfied. This is not an adequate reason for ordering an examination. I have to consider whether the [executors] can give information concerning the debtor, his dealings or property (see Re Maundy Gregory (7). The executors do not seem to me to have been party or privy to the [bankrupt's] dealings. They take over where he left off—at death. They can not, as executors, be party or privy to the dealings of the [bankrupt]."

In the first part of the paragraph which I have read the fallacy to which I have already referred is again, I think, repeated, and it is a fallacy which has been repeated in the submissions advanced on behalf of the executors in this court. The argument confuses the purpose of requiring the information from the executors and the possible results of obtaining it. Of course, on the facts at present known an order could not be made rescinding the discharge or amending its conditions. Of course, there is no strong evidence of fraud and, of course, counsel for the executors is right when he said that on the facts at present known it would be oppressive for the trustee to claim the whole of the bankrupt's estate. If one accepts the submission, however, that there is solid ground for thinking that the information sought may lead to discovery of assets which ought to have been disclosed, and if the information does in the event disclose such assets, that will be the moment to decide whether the non-disclosure was H

(6) [1933] All E.R. Rep. 544; [1934] Ch. 45.

(7) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 429; [1935] Ch. 65. I

A fraudulent or not, or whether, in the circumstances, some further order ought to be made. It is, moreover in my judgment, wrong to pre-judge that question. It is only at the point of time when the information has been ascertained that the question arises whether it would or would not be oppressive or unjust to proceed further in the matter. Again it is, in my judgment, quite impossible to say in advance whether that will or will not be so. With all respect to counsel's argument, it is putting the cart before the horse to say that an order under s. 25 should not be made unless the trustee in bankruptcy is prepared to swear that he verily believes the bankrupt in this case to have fraudulently concealed assets.

In my judgment, the learned registrar, in coming to the conclusion that he ought not in any event to allow the enquiry, misdirected himself as to the purpose of the enquiry and exercised his discretion on a wrong principle. The accounts delivered by the bankrupt of his income and additions to capital in the four years succeeding his discharge as compared with the situation as described to the trustee before his discharge, impose so great a strain on one's credulity that it leads to the prima facie inference that at some point he has not told the truth and is solid ground for the view that the information sought may lead to recovery of assets or income which the bankrupt should have disclosed on making his application for discharge.

There is one other matter. Counsel for the executors submitted that whatever order might have been made against the bankrupt before his death, it would be oppressive to make an order under s. 25 against his executors. Of this, I can only say that I cannot follow why the trustee or the unpaid creditors of the bankrupt should be in any worse position, in making this application, by reason of the death of the bankrupt. I would allow the appeal.

GOFF, J.: STAMP, J., has dealt with this matter very fully and I do not think that it would be right for me to cover the ground again at length. I would probably only say, in less felicitous language, what he has said already and I entirely agree with his conclusion and his reasoning.

I would, however, just like to express my reasons, briefly, in my own words. In my judgment, it is quite clear that the fact that the bankrupt had obtained his discharge does not prevent an order being made under s. 25 of the Bankruptcy Act 1914. In the first place, it was decided in Re A Debtor (No. 946 of 1926), The Debtor v. Official Receiver (8), that the discharge does not put an end to the bankruptcy for all purposes. There, SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., said (8):

"The court had jurisdiction in bankruptcy under the Act. The order of discharge did not take away the jurisdiction of the Court in Bankruptcy, because admittedly the discharge of the bankrupt does not put an end to the bankruptcy regarded as a series of judicial and administrative acts and rights and powers."

In the second place, it was expressly decided by the Court of Appeal in Re F. A. Coulson, Ex p. Official Receiver (Trustee to Bankruptcy) (9) that an order may be made under that very section after the discharge of the bankrupt. I cannot accept the view that that was a decision limited in its application to cases falling within s. 26 (9). The Court of Appeal referred to that sub-section by way of emphasis, but the decision was, in my judgment, quite general. Nor is jurisdiction excluded, in my view, by the fact that the bankrupt has died, since that matter is covered by s. 112 of the Act of 1914, which provides that "If a debtor by or against whom a bankruptcy petition has been presented dies, the proceedings in the matter shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be continued as if he were alive."

Then it is said that there is here no property within the meaning of s. 25 and, I suppose, no dealings either, and that, in any event, the executors cannot be deemed capable of giving information respecting the bankrupt, his dealings or property. It is argued that the only relevant property is the net assets at the bankrupt's death, which is not property vesting in the trustee in bankruptcy and is outside the ambit of s. 25. If, in the result, the order of discharge can be and is rescinded or varied, then those net assets would in themselves be property within the meaning of the section. In my judgment, however, it is not necessary to go that far, because there is a clear suspicion that there was property of the bankrupt at the time of his discharge which he failed to disclose to the court and the trustee, and that is property within the meaning of the section on any showing. Moreover, the executors are not mere third parties; they stand in the shoes of the bankrupt; they are his personal representatives and they have his documents and papers. Not only so, but these particular executors are his solicitor, his accountant and his partner. I think it is quite impossible to say that they are persons who cannot be deemed capable of giving information respecting the bankrupt, his dealings or property. A

(8) [1939] 1 All E.R. 735 at p. 742; [1939] Ch. 489 at p. 501.

(9) [1933] All E.R. Rep. 544; [1934] Ch. 45.

Counsel for the executors relied on Re Maundy Gregory, Ex p. Norton v. Trustee (10) which appears also largely to have influenced the registrar, but that case, in my judgment, is plainly distinguishable. There, one had a compromise and no reasonable ground for supposing it could be set aside. Moreover, the persons to be examined were not personal representatives of the debtor. It is true that in that case the court pointed out that they were not parties or privy to the dealings, but, in my judgment, that was only significant having regard to the facts of the particular case, and the enquiry in those circumstances and on those facts was properly characterised as "fishing." B

The present case is entirely different, in that there are strong grounds for suspicion based on the bankrupt's own affidavit of Dec. 20, 1965, a suspicion by no means allayed by his failure to afford any explanation when called on in his lifetime to do so and by the resistance of his executors. One has only to look at that affidavit and the statement to find one's credulity at once strained to the limit. There is the very remarkable and almost fantastic increase in the bankrupt's earnings as valuer and negotiator of woodlands, in addition to some £16,000 earned over four years from his employment with Kenneth Thorne, Ltd. There is the incredibly large acquisition of capital assets, even allowing for the £34,000 odd liabilities, and there is further the question of the sale of the mineral rights in the Bramshill Gravel Trust, which was in fact another matter to which the trustee adverted in para. 6 of his report. I do not, of course, overlook the fact that the power under s. 25 is one which is not to be lightly used and one must consider carefully that the case is a proper one for its exercise. On the other hand, it was pointed out in Re Gold Co. (11), that it is not necessary, in order to invoke the assistance of the court under s. 25, to show a prima facie case. SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in that case, said (11): C

"We must recollect also that it is not necessary to make out a prima facie case—the probability of a case is enough. A fair suspicion may be well worthy of further investigation, and it may well be worth the expense and trouble of examining witnesses to see whether it is well founded." D

There is also the further somewhat remarkable feature, which may be capable of explanation but at the moment stands as a surprising factor, that between Dec. 20, 1965, and the death of the bankrupt, whilst his assets remained virtually at the same amount, within, I think, about £100, the liabilities so very largely increased that the net estate was reduced to the order of something like £5,000. there may be an explanation of these matters and the bankrupt had the opportunity of producing it, of which he declined to avail himself, but on the information as it stands I have no doubt that the trustee was perfectly justified in saying, as he did, in his report, E

(10) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 429; [1935] Ch. 65.

(11) (1879), 12 Ch.D. 77 at p. 84.

- A "I have reason to believe that the answers to the questions so put to the [bankrupt] may disclose or lead to the disclosure of information leading to the recovery of further assets or income which the [bankrupt] should have included in the statement made by him in connexion with and in support of his application for discharge on the July 31, 1961."
- B In my judgment, therefore, there was both jurisdiction to make an order and it was a proper case for making it. The registrar, however, having decided that he had no jurisdiction, did not leave the matter there, but went on to say what he would have done if he had thought that he had jurisdiction. Therefore, he has, in a sense, exercised his discretion and it is said that this court cannot or ought not to interfere with it. Now, of course, it is well settled that an appellate court will not ordinarily interfere with the discretion of the judge below, but
- C it can and ought to do so if it appears that the judge below has in fact exercised his discretion on wrong principles; and I agree with STAMP, J., that the reasons which the registrar gave do show that he had in fact acted on wrong principles. He said, as STAMP, J., pointed out when he was dealing with jurisdiction, that there was no question in the case of the executors giving assistance to the trustee as to property vested in the trustee. Then, on discretion, he said,
- D

"First I will consider the object of such examination and what might be achieved by it—in this case it could only be rescission of the discharge and reopening of the matter."

- In my judgment, it was wrong to say that that could be the only object of the examination. The object of the examination was clearly stated to be, in para. 6,
- E that it might "disclose or lead to the disclosure of information leading to the recovery of further assets or income which the [bankrupt] should have included in the statement . . ." What consequences will follow if, in the result, it does so lead, is a matter to be considered hereafter; but the registrar, in my judgment, failed properly to direct his mind to the real object of the exercise, and in that he was acting on a wrong principle.

- F Then he went on further to consider the position of the executors and he said:

"I have to consider whether the executors can give information concerning the [bankrupt], his dealings or property (see Re Maundy Gregory (12)). The executors do not seem to me to have been party or privy to the debtor's dealings. They take over where he left off—at death. They can not, as executors, be party or privy to the dealings of the [bankrupt]."

- G With great respect, that seems to me to be clearly directing one's mind to the wrong point. As I have said, the question of the executors being party or privy was relevant on the facts of Re Maundy Gregory (12), but the question which the registrar had to consider, and which we have to consider, is whether these executors may be deemed to be capable of giving information respecting the bankrupt, his dealings or property. On the facts of this case and for the reasons
- H which I have already given, I cannot have the slightest doubt that they can be and ought to be so deemed.

I agree, therefore, for the reasons given by STAMP, J., and for the reasons which I have shortly stated, that this appeal ought to be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

- I Solicitors: Sidney Pearlman (for the trustee in bankruptcy); Allan James, Britnell & Co., High Wycombe (for the executors).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BALL'S SETTLEMENT.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Megarry, J.), March 4, 5, 1968.]

Trust and Trustee—Variation of trusts by the court—Revocation of beneficial trusts and rescission—Rescission of clauses declaring beneficial interests and substitution of new clauses—Settlor's life interest—Testamentary power of appointment and interests in default of appointment removed—Whether arrangement leaving a substratum but effecting the purpose of the original trusts by other means was an arrangement "varying" the original trusts—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (6 & 7 Eliz. 2 c. 53), s. 1 (1).

If an arrangement proposed for the approval of the court under s. 1 (1)* of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, changes the whole substratum of the trust, then it may well be that it cannot be regarded merely as "varying" that trust; but if the arrangement, while leaving the substratum, effectuates the purpose of the original trust by other means, it may still be possible to regard that arrangement as merely varying the original trust, even though the means employed are wholly different and even though the form is completely changed (see p. 442, letter G, post).

Dictum of MARTIN, J., in Re Dyer, ([1935] V.L.R. at p. 290) adopted.

Under a settlement of personalty dated Feb. 6, 1958, the settlor had a life interest; the trust fund was subject to a testamentary power for the settlor to appoint to each of two named sons, or to the wife of any such son, or to his children or grandchildren whether by adoption or otherwise. Not more than half the fund was to be appointed to either family. In default of appointment the fund was to go in equal moieties to the two sons absolutely with a proviso, if a son predeceased the settlor, in favour of his issue stirpically. An arrangement proposed for approval of the court under s. 1 of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, would rescind all beneficial and administrative trusts of the settlement, substituting new clauses. The new beneficial trusts would divide the trust fund into two halves, each for one son for life, and subject thereto in equal shares for such of his children as were alive on, or born before, a certain date. Provision was to be made by insurance policies for certain persons who might, but for the proposed arrangement, have taken an interest under the settlement in default of appointment. The settlor's life interest, the power of appointment, and the provisions in default of appointment would disappear. The proposal, as initially put before the court, was revised by releasing the power of appointment†. The application, which originally was for the approval of the arrangement as revoking the trusts and re-settling the trust fund, was amended so as to omit the word "re-settling" (which did not occur in s. 1 of the Act of 1958) and by substituting "varying" for "revoking". In effect all that would remain of the old trusts was that a moiety of the trust fund was to be held on certain trusts for each son and his issue, with defined interests for the sons and their children in place of the power of appointment and the interests in default of appointment.

Held: in the events likely to happen the difference between the provisions of the settlement and those of the revised arrangement lay in detail rather than in substance, and in accordance with the principle stated at letter C, above, the revised arrangement could properly be regarded as "varying" the trust settlement; accordingly the court would approve the revised arrangement under s. 1 (1) of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (see p. 443, letter B, post).

Re Holt's Settlement ([1968] 1 All E.R. 470) considered.

Re Towler's Settlement Trusts ([1963] 3 All E.R. 759) distinguished.

* Section 1 (1), so far as material, is set out at p. 441, letter A, post.

† See p. 440, letters F and H, post.

- A [As to the jurisdiction of the court to vary trusts under the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, see 38 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 1029, 1030, para. 1772; and for cases on the subject, see 47 DIGEST (Repl.) 332-338, 2993-3018.

For the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, s. 1, see 38 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1130.]

Cases referred to:

- B Courtauld's Settlement, Re, Courtauld v. Farrer, [1965] 2 All E.R. 544, n.; [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1385; 47 Digest (Repl.) 338, 3018.
Dyer, Re, Dyer v. Trustees, Executors and Agency Co., Ltd., [1935] V.L.R. 273; 8 Digest (Repl.) 438, *455.
Holmden's Settlement Trusts, Re, Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Holmden, [1968] 1 All E.R. 148; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 300.
- C Holt's Settlement, Re, Wilson v. Holt, [1968] 1 All E.R. 470; [1968] 2 W.L.R. 653.
Towler's Settlement Trusts, Re, [1963] 3 All E.R. 759; sub nom., Re T.'s Settlement Trusts, [1964] Ch. 158; [1963] 3 W.L.R. 987; 47 Digest (Repl.) 337, 3014.

D Adjourned Summons.

By originating summons dated May 23, 1967, the plaintiff, James Ball, the settlor and tenant for life under a settlement dated Feb. 6, 1958, made between the plaintiff and the first and second defendants, James Maurice Ball and Norman Leonard Ball, applied to the court, pursuant to s. 1 of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, for approval of an arrangement revoking the trusts of the settlement and re-settling the subject matter thereof, such approval being sought on behalf of the three infant defendants and of all persons unknown or unascertained who might thereafter become beneficially interested under the trusts of the settlement. In addition to the first and second defendants, who were both trustees and beneficiaries under the settlement, there were five other defendants of whom the last three, the fifth to seventh defendants, were infants. At the hearing the summons was amended so as to substitute "varying" for "revoking" and by deleting the reference to re-settling the subject matter of the settlement.

C. Drake for the plaintiff settlor.

L. J. M. Smith for the first and second defendants.

O. R. Smith for the third to seventh defendants.

- G MEGARRY, J.: This is a summons under the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958. It previously came before UNGOED-THOMAS, J., who raised certain points on insurance policies involved in the proposed arrangement and also on the investment clause. These points have been dealt with and the restored summons now comes before me. The settlement is a settlement of pure personalty, made on Feb. 6, 1958. It is notable for its brevity.

- H In essence, the trusts are as follows. By cl. 2 the settlor is given a life interest. He is still living, but is some seventy-six years of age. By cl. 3 the property is subject to a testamentary power for the settlor to appoint to each of his two named sons or to the wife of any such son "or to his children or to his grandchildren whether by adoption or otherwise"; and it is provided that not more than half of the fund may be appointed to either family. By cl. 4 in default of appointment the fund is to go in equal moieties to the two sons absolutely, with a proviso that if either or both shall predecease the settlor "his or their share shall be transferred to such of their respective issue as shall survive the settlor and if more than one equally between them per stirpes". Clauses 5, 6 and 7 contain certain administrative provisions.

I The proposed arrangement leaves standing cl. 1 of the settlement, which merely contains the declaration of trust. It rescinds all the remaining clauses of the settlement, thus putting an end to the beneficial and the administrative provisions alike. For them it substitutes new clauses numbered 2 to 4. Under these, the settlor's life interest disappears and so do the power of appointment and the provisions for the persons entitled in default of appointment. Instead, the trust fund is divided into two halves. Each half is to be held in trust for one of the sons for life, and subject thereto in equal shares for such of his children as were alive on Oct. 1, 1967, or are born before Oct. 1, 1977. The arrangement provides for certain insurance policies which will meet estate duty on the settlor's death, and for two other insurance policies, each securing the payment of £5,000 if there is any "excluded person" among the issue of each son. The "excluded persons" are, in effect, defined as being those who take no interest in the trust fund under the arrangement but would otherwise in default of appointment have taken part of the trust fund, as in certain circumstances a child of a son might have done if born after Oct. 1, 1977.

Two questions arise on this arrangement. First, there are certain objects of the power of appointment for whom the arrangement provides no benefit. Thus, the objects include the wife of each son and also his grandchildren by adoption; but the arrangement makes no provision for them. The present wives of the sons are not parties to these proceedings, and I am asked by the summons to approve the arrangement "on behalf of all persons unknown or unascertained who may hereafter become beneficially interested under the trusts of the said settlement". By the proviso to s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1958, however, I am prohibited from approving any arrangement on behalf of any person "unless the carrying out thereof would be for the benefit of that person". On the facts as they stand, the prospects of any such appointment being made to any particular object may indeed be remote; but I cannot see how it could be said that it is for the benefit of a person to destroy even the smallest hope of receiving a beneficial interest if nothing is put in its place.

The difficulty, of course, would be readily surmounted if the power of appointment were to be released. No question of a fraud on a power can arise on a mere release, and in any case the settlor here will obtain no benefit from the arrangement. At one stage it was suggested that the arrangement met the difficulty in that, by revoking the power, the arrangement thereby released it. Plainly, such a revocation could not amount to an express release, because for an express release, the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 155, makes a deed requisite. The arrangement is clearly not a deed; it is not worded like a deed, nor does it make any provision for execution like a deed. It is, however, possible to release a power by implication; and for this it suffices if there is any dealing with the property by the donee of the power which is inconsistent with the exercise of the power. Thus in Re Courtauld's Settlement, Courtauld v. Farrer (1), PLOWMAN, J., had before him a case in which there was an arrangement which he held would extinguish the power. The difficulty in such cases may be, however, that an implied release will not, as in Re Courtauld's Settlement (1), necessarily bind all persons. It seemed to me plainly preferable that the power should be expressly released so as to be effective for all purposes in putting an end to the existence of the power; and the arrangement has now been revised so as to make provision for the execution of an express release before the arrangement takes effect. Accordingly, there will now be no question of the arrangement taking away from any person the possibility of benefit without providing compensation for him. Instead, by deleting the power of appointment, the arrangement will now merely remove dead wood, in that the power will have already ceased to exist for all purposes by the execution of the deed of release. In this way, it seems to me, all difficulties will be avoided.

The second point in this case concerns the jurisdiction of the court. The originating summons asks for the approval of the court to an arrangement "revoking the trusts of the above-mentioned settlement and resettling the

(1) [1965] 2 All E.R. 544n.

A subject matter of the above-mentioned settlement". What s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1958 authorises the court to approve is "any arrangement . . . varying or revoking all or any of the trusts, or enlarging the powers of the trustees of managing or administering any of the property subject to the trusts."

B The word "resettling" or its equivalent nowhere appears. Accordingly, while there is plainly jurisdiction to approve the arrangement insofar as it revokes the trusts, in my view there is equally plainly no jurisdiction to approve the arrangement as regards "resettling" the property, at any rate eo nomine. In this connexion, I bear in mind the words of WILBERFORCE, J., in Re Towler's Settlement Trusts (2). He there said:

C "... I have no desire to cut down the very useful jurisdiction which this Act has conferred on the court, but I am satisfied that the proposal as originally made to me falls outside it. Though presented as 'a variation' it is in truth a complete new re-settlement. The former trust funds were to be got in from the former trustee and held on totally new trusts such as might be made by an absolute owner of the funds. I do not think that the court can approve this."

D It seems to me that the originating summons correctly describes what is sought to be done in this case, and as so described there is clearly no jurisdiction for the court to approve the arrangement. But it does not follow that merely because an arrangement can correctly be described as effecting a revocation and resettlement, it cannot also be correctly described as effecting a variation of the trusts. E The question then is whether the arrangement in this case can be so described. In the course of argument I indicated that it seemed desirable for the summons to be amended by substituting the word "varying" for the word "revoking" and deleting the reference to "resettling", and that I would give leave for this amendment to be made. On the summons as so amended the question is thus whether the arrangement can fairly be said to be covered by the word F "varying" so that the court has power to approve it.

There was some discussion of the ambit of this word in Re Holt's Settlement, Wilson v. Holt (3). It was there held that if in substance the new trusts were recognisable as the former trusts, though with variations, the change was comprehended within the word "varying", even if it had been achieved by a process of revocation and new declaration. In that case, the new trusts were plainly G recognisable as the old trusts with variations. In the present case, the new trusts are very different from the old. The settlor's life interest vanishes; so does the power of appointment, though that will now be released. In place of the provision in default of appointment for absolute interests for the two sons if they survived the settlor, and if not, for their issue stirpically, there is now a life interest for each son, and vested absolute interests for the children of the H sons born before Oct. 1, 1977. There is a clean sweep of the somewhat exiguous administrative provisions and an equally exiguous new set in their place. The arrangement also makes altogether new provisions for insurance policies, both those which provide for death duties and are to be added to the trust fund, and those which provide for the excluded persons and are to be held on separate trusts; but these portions of the arrangement, I should say, are not made part I of the settlement as revised, but are to operate independently and outside its terms. All that remains of the old trusts are what I may call the general drift or purport, namely that a moiety of the trust fund is to be held on certain trusts for each son and certain of his issue. Is the word "varying" wide enough to embrace so categorical a change?

In answering this question I have derived some assistance from an Australian

(2) [1963] 3 All E.R. 759 at p. 762; [1964] Ch. 158 at p. 162.

(3) [1968] 1 All E.R. 470.

case, Re Dyer, Dyer v. Trustees, Executors and Agency Co., Ltd. (4), to which I referred counsel. This was decided by a full court of the Supreme Court of Victoria. It concerned a trust deed settling £10,000 in trust to establish and maintain a permanent orchestra in Victoria. The trust deed provided that the settlor might, from time to time and at any time or times, by deed "vary all or any part of the trusts and powers hereinbefore declared and created". The trust fund proved inadequate for the purposes stated, and so the settlor executed a deed purporting to vary the trusts so that accumulated income and future income should be paid to certain named musical societies. The question was whether this variation was effective. There was a similar question concerning another variation of this nature. The full court, affirming MACFARLAN, J., held that the variations were ineffective. SIR WILLIAM IRVINE, C.J., and GAVAN DUFFY, J., said this (5)

" 'Vary', itself, is apt enough to describe the substitution of one trust for another. The deed, however, has to be read as a whole, and on consideration we agree with the views expressed by MACFARLAN, J."

MARTIN, J., said (6):

"It would be strange if the donor who desired to help in founding a fund for a particular purpose, and who expected others to contribute to that fund, attempted to reserve to himself a power to change the whole substratum of the gift, not only as regards his own donation, but also the donations of others who subscribed money for the particular purpose. A power to revoke is common in deeds of this nature, and I cannot believe that the draftsman would not have included such a power had it been intended that the donor was to be entitled to benefit an object other than the one nominated in the deed. What are the limits of the power to vary is a very difficult question, which does not call for determination here, but I consider none of the draft deeds submitted falls within those limits, and that MACFARLAN, J., was right in holding that 'it was impossible to use the moneys in such a way as will depart from the original purpose of the gift'."

That case, of course, is very different from this. No question arises here of other people subscribing to the trust funds, nor is there here present the form of wording on which MACFARLAN, J., to some extent depended. But I borrow with gratitude from the language of MARTIN, J. If an arrangement changes the whole substratum of the trust, then it may well be that it cannot be regarded merely as varying that trust. But if an arrangement, while leaving the substratum, effectuates the purpose of the original trust by other means, it may still be possible to regard that arrangement as merely varying the original trusts, even though the means employed are wholly different and even though the form is completely changed.

I am, of course, well aware that this view carries me a good deal farther than I went in Re Holt (7). I have felt some hesitation in the matter, but on the whole I consider that this is a proper step to take. The jurisdiction of the Act of 1958 is beneficial and, in my judgment, the court should construe it widely and not be astute to confine its beneficent operation. I must remember that in essence the court is merely contributing on behalf of infants and unborn and unascertained persons the binding assents to the arrangement which they, unlike an adult beneficiary, cannot give. So far as is proper, the power of the court to give that assent should be assimilated to the wide powers which the ascertained adults have.

In this case, it seems to me that the substratum of the original trusts remains. True, the settlor's life interest disappears; but the remaining trusts are still in

(4) [1935] V.L.R. 273.

(5) [1935] V.L.R. at p. 287.

(6) [1935] V.L.R. at p. 290.

(7) [1968] 1 All E.R. 470.

- A essence trusts of half of the fund for each of the two named sons and their families, with defined interests for the sons and their children in place of the former provisions for a power of appointment among the sons and their children and grandchildren and for the sons to take absolutely in default of appointment. In the events which are likely to occur, the differences between the old provisions and the new may, I think, fairly be said to lie in detail rather than in substance.
- B Accordingly, in my judgment, the arrangement here proposed, with the various revisions to it made in the course of argument, can properly be described as varying the trusts of the settlement. Subject to the summons being duly amended, I therefore approve the revised arrangement. I may add that since the hearing of this case I have considered the speeches of their lordships in Re Holmden's Settlement Trusts, Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Holmden (8), but
- C although these suggest certain questions of interest and difficulty, I find in them nothing to make me resile from the views that I have expressed.

Arrangement (set forth in the schedule to the order) approved on behalf of the infant defendants and of all persons unknown or unascertained who might thereafter become beneficially interested under the trusts of the settlement.

- D Solicitors: Jaques & Co., agents for Robinson, Jarvis & Rolf, Ryde, Isle of Wight (for the plaintiff settlor); Jaques & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. W. FARRIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

---

F

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (DIVORCE).

- G Legal Aid—Costs—Taxation—Judgment or final order must include direction for taxation of costs of assisted person unless otherwise directed—Matrimonial causes—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1962 (S.I. 1962 No. 148), reg. 19 (3).

Attention is drawn to reg. 19 (3) of the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1962 (1).

- H A direction that the costs of any assisted person shall be taxed in accordance with the provisions of Sch. 3 to the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, must be included in any judgment or final order in a matrimonial cause in which the assisted person is a party, unless the judge or registrar who gave the judgment or made the order otherwise directs. It is the responsibility of the officer drawing the decree or order to include such a direction.

Direction issued with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor and the President.

- I May 9, 1968.

COMPTON MILLER,
Senior Registrar.

---

(8) [1968] 1 All E.R. 148.

(1) S.I. 1962 No. 148; 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS (First Re-Issue) 246.

HENRY KENDALL & SONS (a firm) v. WILLIAM LILICO & SONS, LTD. AND OTHERS. A

HOLLAND COLOMBO TRADING SOCIETY, LTD.
v. GRIMSDALE & SONS, LTD.

[CONSOLIDATED APPEALS.]

GRIMSDALE & SONS, LTD. v. SUFFOLK AGRICULTURAL AND POULTRY PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION, LTD. B

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Reid, Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest, Lord Guest, Lord Pearce and Lord Wilberforce), January 15, 16, 17, 18, 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 30, 31, February 1, 5, 6, 7, May 8, 1968.]

Agriculture—Feeding stuffs—Sale for use as an ingredient in poultry food—Imported ground nut extractions unfit for purpose—Compound meal fed to young pheasants which were poisoned thereby—C.i.f. contracts by wholesalers for importing ground nut extractions—Sale by transfer of c.i.f. documents—Whether pheasants were “poultry”—Whether warranty of feeding stuffs applied—Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5 c. 45), s. 2 (2). C

Sale of Goods—Implied condition of fitness—Merchantable quality—Exception clause for latent defects—Incorporation of such clause inferred from course of bargaining—Buyers and sellers members of London Cattle Food Association—Whether inference that buyers relied on sellers’ skill and judgment should be made—Condition of fitness of ground nut extracts for re-sale for use for food for cattle or poultry—Unfit for food for poultry—Whether implied condition broken—Compounded food fed to pheasants—Remoteness of damage—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (1), (2). D

K., Ltd., who were wholesale dealers and members of the London Cattle Food Trade Association, bought ground nuts early in 1960, their description being “Brazilian ground nut extractions”, on c.i.f. contracts with shipment from Brazilian ports. At that time the purchase of these goods from Brazil was purchase from a new source. Some of the ground nut extractions were sold to G., Ltd. (who were also members of the same trade association), sales being effected on contract form No. 6 of the association, being a form for the purchase of imported supplies on c.i.f. contract. Form No. 6 provided that the goods were not warranted free from defects rendering them unmerchantable which would not be apparent on reasonable examination. The purpose for which G., Ltd. required the goods, viz., re-sale in smaller quantities for compounding as food for cattle and poultry, was known to K., Ltd. The goods imported were in fact affected by a toxic condition and were unfit for use as food for poultry, though a proportion of five per cent. or so could be compounded (as became well-known by the date of the trial) in cattle food without rendering the compound unfit for cattle. G., Ltd. sold some of the goods to S., Ltd., by oral bargain followed by sold notes which bore on the back the condition that the buyer took responsibility for latent defects. There had been a long course of dealing between G., Ltd. and S., Ltd. by such bargains followed by sold notes containing this condition. S., Ltd. made known to G., Ltd. that the goods were required for compounding into food for pigs and poultry. S., Ltd. compounded the ground nut extraction so bought into food for birds and sold it to H., proprietors of a game farm, who fed it to pheasants, many of which died in consequence of the poison in the ground nut extraction. S., Ltd. admitted liability under s. 14* of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, to H. and negotiated a settlement at a sum accepted by all persons as reasonable. S., Ltd. sued their suppliers, G., Ltd., who sued their suppliers, K., Ltd., the claim being for breach of implied E F G H I * Section 14 (1), (2), is set out at p. 449, letters E to G, post.

A condition of fitness under s. 14 (1), or of unmerchable quality on the sale of goods by description (s. 14 (2)), and for breach of warranty under s. 2 (2)* of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926. G., Ltd., contested, in particular, liability to S., Ltd. unless G., Ltd. could recover from K., Ltd. There was evidence at the trial that contamination of goods to the extent to which these goods were contaminated was not then usually regarded commercially as a ground for rejecting the goods, though a claim for rebate in price might be based on it. On ultimate appeal,

Held: (i) in regard to the position between G., Ltd. and S., Ltd.—

(a) G., Ltd. was liable to S., Ltd., whether or not G., Ltd. could recover from K., Ltd. for breach of condition of fitness implied by virtue of s. 14 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, in the contracts for sale to S., Ltd., because the purpose for which the goods were required, viz., for use in compounding into pig and poultry food, was a “particular purpose” (see (ii) (a) below) and because it was to be inferred in the circumstances that S., Ltd. relied on G., Ltd.’s skill or judgment (see p. 463, letter F, p. 474, letter C, p. 481, letter E, and p. 496, letter D, post, LORD REID not deciding this ground of liability, cf., however (ii) (a) below).

(b) (LORD REID not deciding this) the latent defect condition in the sold notes did not exempt G., Ltd. from liability (see p. 463, letters A and F, p. 475, letter A, p. 482, letter E, and p. 496, letter E, post).

(c) the statutory warranty under s. 2 (2) of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926, applied to the sale by G., Ltd. to S., Ltd. and breach of the warranty was established, because the ground nut extraction was not suitable for the purpose of being fed to poultry, and thus was unsuitable for use when delivered to S., Ltd., and the facts that the compounded meal was fed to pheasants and that pheasants were not poultry did not render the damage to the pheasants too remote (see p. 459, letters C, E and F, p. 461, letter C, p. 469, letter G, p. 473, letter I, p. 489, letter D, and p. 493, letter I, post; and cf. (ii) (b) below).

(ii) in regard to the position between K., Ltd. and G., Ltd.—

(a) K., Ltd. was liable to G., Ltd. for breach of condition of fitness implied by s. 14 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, because the purpose for which the goods were required, viz., for compounding into food for cattle and poultry, of which purpose K., Ltd. knew, was a sufficient particular purpose (per LORD REID a sufficient particular purpose in the year 1960 (see p. 457, letter C, post)), and in the circumstances (per LORD REID, the evidence showing that K., Ltd. were recommending the goods) G., Ltd. had relied on K., Ltd.’s skill and judgment (LORD GUEST dissenting from this finding) notwithstanding that they were both members of the same trade association, that some of the goods were bought when afloat, and that the defect was latent (see p. 457, letters G and I, p. 458, letter B, p. 461, letter B, p. 465, letter D, p. 466, letter D, p. 467, letter G, p. 473, letter I, p. 482, letter I, p. 484, letter F, post; cf. p. 476, letter G, p. 484, letter F, and p. 492, letters E and I, post).

(b) the statutory warranty under s. 2 (2) of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926, applied to a sale of goods for the purpose of re-sale as ingredients for use in compounding food for cattle or poultry (see p. 458, letter F, p. 470, letter D, p. 487, letter F, and p. 493, letter H, post); and (LORD REID and LORD GUEST dissenting) applied to the sales by K., Ltd. to G., Ltd., even though the contracts were for the sale of goods on c.i.f. terms and although goods were sold afloat (see p. 472, letter H, p. 489, letter D, p. 496, letter B, post; cf. p. 461, letter B, and p. 479, letter H, post); and K., Ltd. was in breach of the statutory warranty as the goods were not fit for poultry food and was liable in damages notwithstanding that the compounded meal was ultimately fed to pheasants, which were not poultry (see p. 458, letter G, p. 473, letters E and H, p. 480, letters F and H, p. 485, letter B, p. 487, letter F, p. 493, letter A, and p. 493, letters D and G, post).

* Section 2 (2) is set out at p. 469, letter F, post.

Per LORD REID, LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST and LORD GUEST, LORD PEARCE and LORD WILBERFORCE not concurring: the ground nut extractions, sold under the ordinary description quoted at p. 444, letter F, ante, were of merchantable quality for the purposes of s. 14 (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, though contaminated, the question whether contaminated quality was merchantable quality being determined as at the date of trial (see p. 450, letter I, p. 453, letter F, p. 469, letter D, and p. 478, letter D, post; cf., p. 487, letter E, and p. 493, letter C, post).

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL (sub nom. Hardwick Game Farm v. Suffolk Agricultural and Poultry Producers Association, Ltd., [1966] 1 All E.R. 309) affirmed in the result, but reversed on (ii) (b), p. 445, ante, except as to the meaning of poultry.

[As to the statutory warranty on a sale of an article for use as food for cattle or poultry, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 453, para. 887; and for cases on the subject, see 2 DIGEST (Repl.) 159, 1164-1166. As to the meaning of poultry, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 452, para. 886, note (t).

As to the implied condition as to fitness on a sale of goods, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 51-54, para. 77; and for cases on this subject, see 39 DIGEST (Repl.) 573-575, 988-1001.

For the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926, s. 2, see 1 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 492.

For the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 14, s. 16, see 22 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 993, 995.]

Cases referred to:

Adamasto Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Co., Ltd., [1958] 1 All E.R. 725; [1959] A.C. 133; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 688; [1958] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 73, reversing sub nom. Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Co., Ltd. v. Adamastos Shipping Co., Ltd., [1957] 2 All E.R. 311; [1957] 2 Q.B. at p. 255; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 968; [1957] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 271; 41 Digest (Repl.) 315, 1198.

Baldry v. Marshall, [1924] All E.R. Rep. 155; [1925] 1 K.B. 260; 94 L.J.K.B. 208; 132 L.T. 326; 39 Digest (Repl.) 551, 827.

Barker (William) (Junior) & Co., Ltd. v. Ed. T. Agius, Ltd., (1927), 43 T.L.R. 751; 33 Com. Cas. 120; 28 Lloyd L.R. 282; 39 Digest (Repl.) 576, 1011.

Bartlett v. Sidney Marcus, Ltd., [1965] 2 All E.R. 753; [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1013; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 630, 781a.

Beecham (H.) & Co. Pty., Ltd. v. Francis Howard & Co. Pty., Ltd., [1921] V.L.R. 428; 27 Argus L.R. 275; 39 Digest (Repl.) 555, *446.

Biddell Brothers v. E. Clemens Horst Co., [1911] 1 K.B. 214; on appeal, [1911-13] All E.R. Rep. 93; [1911] 1 K.B. 934; reversing, H.L., sub nom. Clemens (E.) Horst & Co. v. Biddell Bros., [1911-13] All E.R. Rep. 93; [1912] A.C. 18; 81 L.J.K.B. 42; 105 L.T. 563; 12 Asp. M.L.C. 90; 39 Digest (Repl.) 704, 1945.

Bigge v. Parkinson, (1862), 7 H. & N. 955; 31 L.J.Ex. 301; 158 E.R. 758; sub nom. Smith v. Parkinson, 7 L.T. 92; 39 Digest (Repl.) 574, 992.

Bristol Tramways, etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., [1908-10] All E.R. Rep. 113; [1910] 2 K.B. 831; 79 L.J.K.B. 1107; 103 L.T. 443; 39 Digest (Repl.) 511, 541.

Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd. v. Manganese Bronze and Brass Co., Ltd., [1934] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1934] A.C. 402; 103 L.J.K.B. 289; 151 L.T. 142; 39 Digest (Repl.) 544, 784.

Canada Atlantic Grain Export Co., Inc. v. Eilers, (1929), 35 Lloyd L.R. 206; 35 Com. Cas. 90; 39 Digest (Repl.) 574, 1001.

- A Clarke v. Army & Navy Co-operative Society, [1903] 1 K.B. 155; 72 L.J.K.B. 153; 88 L.T. 1; 39 Digest (Repl.) 563, 923.
Comptoir D'Achat et de Vente du Boerenbond Belge S/A. v. Luis de Ridder, Limitado, [1949] 1 All E.R. 269; [1949] A.C. 293; [1949] L.J.K.B. 513; 39 Digest (Repl.) 640, 1488.
- B Dobell (G. C.) & Co., Ltd. v. Barber and Garratt, [1931] 1 K.B. 219; 100 L.J.K.B. 65; 144 L.T. 266; 2 Digest (Repl.) 159, 1164.
Draper (C. E. B.) & Son, Ltd. v. Edward Turner & Son, Ltd., [1964] 3 All E.R. 148; [1965] 1 Q.B. 424; [1964] 3 W.L.R. 783; [1964] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 91; revsg., [1964] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 169; 44 Digest (Repl.) 277, 1054.
Drummond v. Van Ingen, (1887), 12 App. Cas. 284; 56 L.J.Q.B. 563; 57 L.T. 1; 39 Digest (Repl.) 559, 885.
- C Flynn v. Scott, 1949 S.C. 442; 39 Digest (Repl.) 546, *379.
Gardiner v. Gray, (1815), 4 Camp. 144; 171 E.R. 46; 39 Digest (Repl.) 556, 861.
Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills, Ltd., (1933), 50 C.L.R. 387; on appeal, [1935] All E.R. Rep. 209; [1936] A.C. 85; 105 L.J.P.C. 6; 154 L.T. 18; 39 Digest (Repl.) 541, 762.
- D Hudley v. Barendale, [1843-60] All E.R. Rep. 461; (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 156 E.R. 145; 8 Digest (Repl.) 151, 956.
Heron II, The, Koufos v. C. Czarnikow, Ltd., [1967] 3 All E.R. 686; [1967] 3 W.L.R. 1491; Digest (Repl.) Supp.
Ireland v. Livingston, [1861-73] All E.R. Rep. 585; (1872), L.R. 5 H.L. 395; 41 L.J.Q.B. 201; 27 L.T. 79; 1 Asp. M.L.C. 389; revsg. (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 516 Exch.; revsg. (1866), L.R. 2 Q.B. 99; 39 Digest (Repl.) 686, 1810.
- E Jackson v. Rotax Motor & Cycle Co., [1910] 2 K.B. 937; 80 L.J.K.B. 38; 103 L.T. 411; 39 Digest (Repl.) 555, 856.
Jones v. Bright, (1829), 5 Bing. 533; Dan. & Ll. 304; 7 L.J.O.S.C.P. 213; 130 E.R. 1167; 39 Digest (Repl.) 553, 832.
- F Jones v. Just, (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 197; 9 B. & S. 141; 37 L.J.Q.B. 89; 18 L.T. 208; 39 Digest (Repl.) 531, 675.
Jones v. Padgett, (1890), 24 Q.B.D. 650; 59 L.J.Q.B. 261; 62 L.T. 934; 39 Digest (Repl.) 544, 783.
- G Lambert v. Rowe, [1914] 1 K.B. 38; 83 L.J.K.B. 274; 109 L.T. 939; 78 J.P. 20; 33 Digest (Repl.) 482, 366.
M'Callum v. Mason, 1956 S.C. 50; [1956] S.L.T. 50; 39 Digest (Repl.) 546, *369.
McCutcheon v. David Macbrayne, Ltd., [1964] 1 All E.R. 430; [1964] 1 W.L.R. 125; [1964] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 16; Digest (Cont. Vol. B) 71, 254b.
- H Manbré Saccharine Co. v. Corn Products Co., [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. 980; [1919] 1 K.B. 198; 120 L.T. 113; sub nom. Mambre Saccharine Co. v. Corn Products Co., 88 L.J.K.B. 402; 39 Digest (Repl.) 705, 1951.
Manchester Liners, Ltd. v. Rea, Ltd., [1922] All E.R. Rep. 605; [1922] A.C. 74; 91 L.J.K.B. 504; 127 L.T. 405; 39 Digest (Repl.) 547, 804.
- I Mash & Murrell, Ltd. v. Joseph I. Emanuel, Ltd., [1961] 1 All E.R. 485; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 862; revsd. C.A., [1962] 1 All E.R. 77; [1962] 1 W.L.R. 16; 39 Digest (Repl.) 545, 788.
Medway Oil & Storage Co., Ltd. v. Silica Gel Corpn., (1928), 33 Com.Cas. 195; 39 Digest (Repl.) 538, 806.
Morelli v. Fitch & Gibbons, [1928] All E.R. Rep. 610; [1928] 2 K.B. 636; 97 L.J.K.B. 812; 140 L.T. 21; 39 Digest (Repl.) 528, 658.
Niblett, Ltd. v. Confectioners' Materials Co., Ltd., [1921] All E.R. Rep. 459; [1921] 3 K.B. 387; 90 L.J.K.B. 984; 125 L.T. 552; 39 Digest (Repl.) 527, 648.

- Pinnock Brothers v. Lewis & Peat, Ltd.*, [1923] 1 K.B. 690; 92 L.J.K.B. 695; A 129 L.T. 320; 39 Digest (Repl.) 594, 1124.
- Preist v. Last*, [1903] 2 K.B. 148; 72 L.J.K.B. 657; 89 L.T. 33; 39 Digest (Repl.) 545, 785.
- R. v. Garham*, (1861), 2 F. & F. 347; 175 E.R. 1090; 8 Cox, C.C. 451; 15
Digest (Repl.) 1078, 10,654.
- R. v. Head*, (1857), 1 F. & F. 350; 175 E.R. 759; 15 Digest (Repl.) 1078, B 10,653.
- Sanders v. Maclean*, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 327; 52 L.J.Q.B. 481; 49 L.T. 462;
5 Asp. M.L.C. 160; 39 Digest (Repl.) 518, 591.
- Shields v. Honeywell and Stein, Ltd.*, [1953] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 357.
- Smyth (Ross T.) & Co., Ltd. v. T. D. Bailey, Son & Co.*, [1940] 3 All E.R. 60;
164 L.T. 102; 39 Digest (Repl.) 611, 1239. C
- Stretch v. White*, (1861), 25 J.P. 485; 33 Digest (Repl.) 482, 363.
- Wallis v. Russell*, [1902] 2 I.R. 585; 39 Digest (Repl.) 546, *374.
- Wallis, Son & Wells v. Pratt and Haynes*, [1910] 2 K.B. 1003; reversd. H.L., [1911-13] All E.R. Rep. 989; [1911] A.C. 394; 80 L.J.K.B. 1058;
105 L.T. 146; 39 Digest (Repl.) 588, 1089.
- Ward v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Ltd.*, (1918), 231 Mas. 90. D

Appeals.

These were two consolidated appeals by leave by the appellants, Henry Kenddall & Sons (a firm), against William Lillico & Sons, Ltd. and Grimsdale & Sons, Ltd., and the appellants, Holland Colombo Trading Society, Ltd. against Grims-dale & Sons, Ltd. and another appeal by Grimsdale & Sons, Ltd. against the Suffolk Agricultural & Poultry Producers Association, Ltd. The two consolidated appeals were against the judgment of the Court of Appeal (SELLERS, DAVIES and DIPLOCK, L.JJ.), dated Dec. 20, 1965, and reported [1966] 1 All E.R.
309 confirming in parts the judgment of HAVERS, J., dated July 30, 1964. The facts are set out in the opinion of LORD REID. E

R. J. Parker, Q.C., and Adrian Hamilton for the appellants Henry Kendall &
Sons and Holland Colombo Trading Society, Ltd. F

R. A. MacCrindle, Q.C., Leo Clark and M. O. Saville for the respondents
William Lillico & Sons, Ltd. and Grimsdale & Sons, Ltd.

R. A. MacCrindle, Q.C., and M. O. Saville for the appellants Grimsdale & Sons, Ltd.

A. J. L. Lloyd, Q.C., and Barry Chedlow for the respondents, Suffolk Agricultural and Poultry Producers Association, Ltd. G

Their lordships took time for consideration.

May 8. The following opinions were delivered.

LORD REID: My Lords, in the summer of 1960 very large numbers of young turkeys died in what appeared to be an epidemic of an unknown disease; H but the outbreaks were curiously patchy and the trouble was soon traced to feeding stuffs. Such birds are generally fed on mixtures of various ingredients. It was common to include up to about ten per cent. of ground nut extractions, and it was found that in the mixture fed to these birds there had been a proportion of ground nut extractions imported from Brazil. Then it was found that much of this Brazilian food was contaminated by a poison Aflatoxin to amounts up to five parts per million. Then it appeared that owing to climatic conditions in Brazil spores of a fungus aspergillus flavus had caused a mould to grow on the ground nuts and secrete this poison. Ground nut extractions had for many years been imported from India. It has now been found that the Indian product sometimes contains some of this poison, though generally in smaller amounts, but in 1960 there was no reason to suspect that any ground nut extractions might contain this poison. I

The plaintiffs, Hardwick Game Farm, had about two thousand breeding

- A pheasants. The eggs were collected and hatched and the young pheasants reared in much the same way as chickens or turkeys. A large number of them died in 1960 from this poison, and it is not disputed that it was contained in compound feeding stuffs supplied by a local compounder referred to in this case as S.A.P.P.A. They sued S.A.P.P.A. and S.A.P.P.A. agreed to pay £3,000 damages. That settlement is admitted to have been reasonable and proper. S.A.P.P.A., however, brought in their suppliers Grimsdale and Lillico and they in turn brought in their suppliers, Kendall and Holland Colombo. It has been held that Grimsdale and Lillico are liable to S.A.P.P.A. and that Kendall and Holland Colombo are liable to Grimsdale and Lillico. In the first appeal Kendall and Holland Colombo maintain that they are not liable. Lillico do not appeal; but Grimsdale in effect maintain in the second appeal that, if they cannot recover from Kendall and Holland Colombo, then S.A.P.P.A. cannot recover from them. I need make no further mention of Lillico and Holland Colombo and it will be clearer simply to have in mind the chain Kendall to Grimsdale to S.A.P.P.A. to the game farm.

Kendall and Grimsdale are both members of the London Cattle Food Traders' Association. Brazilian ground nuts had not been imported until 1959, but early in 1960 there were large shipments. Kendall had acquired a large quantity and, while the goods were afloat, Kendall sold a considerable quantity in the London Market to Grimsdale. Then Grimsdale sold a part of this to S.A.P.P.A. at the market at Bury St. Edmunds; S.A.P.P.A. took delivery shortly after the arrival of the goods in London.

The case raises a number of points and I shall first consider the position under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 14. The relevant subsections are:

- E " (1) Where the buyer, expressly or by implication, makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, so as to show that the buyer relies upon the seller's skill or judgment, and the goods are of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply (whether he be the manufacturer or not), there is an implied condition that the goods shall be reasonable fit for such purpose, provided that in the case of a contract for the sale of a specified article under its patent or other trade name, there is no implied condition as to its fitness for any particular purpose.
- F " (2) Where goods are bought by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description (whether he be the manufacturer or not) there is an implied condition that the goods shall be of merchantable quality: provided that if the buyer has examined the goods there shall be no implied condition as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed."

G Conflicting arguments have been submitted about the meaning of almost every part of these subsections. If one puts aside for the moment the encrustations of authority, their meaning appears to me to be reasonably clear. If, however, a whole chapter of the law is compressed into one section of a code, one cannot expect its words to apply to unusual cases without expansion or adaptation. That is the task of the court; but it is not in my view legitimate to substitute for the words of the code some general words used by an eminent judge in a particular case and to treat them as a test of universal application. Where that has been done in other chapters of the law it has led to trouble, and there has been a tendency to do that here.

H I take first sub-s. (2), because it is of more general application. It applies to all sales by description where the seller deals in such goods. There may be a question whether the sale of a particular article is not really a sale by description but that does not arise here. These are clearly sales by description. Then it is a condition (unless excluded by the contract) that the goods must be of merchantable quality. Merchantable can only mean commercially saleable. If the description is a familiar one, it may be that in practice only one quality of goods answers that description—then that quality and only that quality is merchantable quality. Or it may be that various qualities of goods are commonly sold under that description—then it is not disputed that the lowest quality commonly so sold is what is meant by merchantable quality; it is commercially saleable under that description. I need not consider here what expansion or adaptation of the statutory words is required where there is a sale of a particular article or a sale under a novel description. Here the description ground nut extractions had been in common use. A

The novel feature of this case is that whereas in 1960 there appears to have been thought to be only one quality of this product, subject to minor variations, it has now been discovered that particular parcels though apparently of the usual quality may really be of a very different quality because they are contaminated by minute quantities of a powerful poison. So the question at once arises—do you judge merchantable quality in the light of what was known at the time of the sale or in the light of later knowledge? It is quite clear that some later knowledge must be brought in for otherwise it would never be possible to hold that goods were unmerchantable by reason of a latent defect. By definition a latent defect is something that could not have been discovered at the time by any examination which in the light of then existing knowledge it was reasonable to make; but there is a question as to how much later knowledge ought to be brought in. In the present case it had become well known before the date of the trial that the defect was that these Brazilian ground nut extractions were contaminated by poison; but it had also become well known that, while this poison made the goods unsuitable for inclusion in food for poultry, it was generally regarded as proper to include such extractions in cattle food provided that the proportion included did not exceed five per cent. of the whole. The question is whether this latter fact should be taken into account in deciding whether these goods were of merchantable quality in 1960. B C D E

I think it would be very artificial to bring in some part of the later knowledge and exclude other parts. In this case it is quite true that there was a period, after the nature and effect of this contamination had been discovered but before it had become accepted that small quantities of contaminated goods could safely be included in cattle foods, during which contaminated ground nut extractions were virtually unsaleable. Suppose, however, that in this case it had been discovered at an early stage that these goods could be used for cattle food, so that there never was a period during which they were unsaleable. In that case I would not think it possible to take into account the nature of the defect but to exclude from consideration the effect which knowledge of the defect had on the market. F G

There is clear evidence that before the date of the trial Indian ground nut extractions so contaminated were sold under the ordinary description and were not rejected by the buyers when the contamination was discovered; a director of British Oil and Cake Mills who are by far the largest compounders in this country said that they bought these goods untested and then tested them. If they were found to be very highly contaminated they were destroyed; but otherwise they were included in feeding stuffs for cattle. This company apparently did not claim any relief on the ground that such goods were of defective quality or were of no use if highly contaminated; and it appears that other buyers who who found poison in the goods which they bought did not try to reject the goods, but merely asked for rebates on the price. They never got any rebates and the evidence is that they did not press their claims. So I think that it sufficiently appears that ground nut extractions contaminated to an extent not said to be different from the contamination of the Brazilian product were regarded as of merchantable quality under the ordinary description at the date of the trial. H I

I do not think that I am precluded from taking this view of the meaning of s. 14 (2) by any of the authorities.

A statement with regard to the meaning of s. 14 (2) which has been commonly

- A accepted is that of LORD WRIGHT in Cammell Laird Co., Ltd. v. Manganese Bronze and Brass Co., Ltd. (1). In that case the respondents contracted to supply two specially designed ship's propellers. They first supplied propellers which were unsatisfactory and it was only at a third attempt that they supplied propellers which were satisfactory. Camunell Laird sued for damages caused by the delay. They succeeded on the terms of the contract and under s. 14 (1); but LORD
- B WRIGHT went on to consider the application of s. 14 (2). Apart from a short general statement at the end of the speech of LORD TOMLIN none of the other noble and learned lords said anything about s. 14 (2) or LORD WRIGHT's gloss on it. LORD WRIGHT said (2):

C "In earlier times the rule of caveat emptor applied save only where an action could be sustained in deceit on the ground that the seller knew of the defect or for breach of express warranty (warrantizando vendidit). But with the growing complexity of trade dealings increased in what are now called 'unascertained or future goods' and more generally 'goods sold by description'. As early as 1815 in Gardiner v. Gray (3), LORD ELLENBOROUGH stated the rule. Goods had been sold as waste silk; a breach was held to have

D been committed on the ground that the goods were unfit for the purpose of waste silk and of such quality that they could not be sold under that denomination. What sub-s. (2) now means by 'merchantable quality' is that the goods in the form in which they were tendered were of no use for any purpose for which such goods would normally be used and hence were not saleable under that description."

- E I feel sure that LORD WRIGHT did not really mean this to be a test of universal application in the form in which he stated it. If he did, I disagree for reasons which I shall state. In the Cammell Laird case (1), if the propellers were of no use for the ship for which they had been designed it was true to say that they were of no use for any other ship and therefore unsaleable as propellers. There are many cases, however, in which different qualities of a particular kind of
- F goods are commonly sold under different descriptions. Suppose goods are sold under the description commonly used to denote a high quality and the goods delivered are not of that high quality but are of a lower quality which is commonly sold under a different description, then it could not possibly be said that the goods in the form in which they were tendered were of no use for any purpose for which those goods would normally be used. They would be readily saleable
- G under the appropriate description for the lower quality. But surely LORD WRIGHT did not mean to say that therefore they were merchantable under the description which was appropriate for the higher quality. They plainly were not. LORD WRIGHT said: "no use for any purpose for which such goods would normally be used." Grammatically "such goods" refers back to "the goods in the form in which they were tendered"; but what he must have meant by "such goods"
- H were goods which complied with the description in the contract under which they were sold. Otherwise the last part of the sentence "and hence were not saleable under that description" involves a non sequitur. If I now set out what I am sure that he meant to say, I think it would be accurate for a great many cases though it would be dangerous to say that it must be universally accurate. The amended version would be "What sub-s. (2) now means by 'merchantable
- I quality' is that the goods in the form in which they were tendered were of no use for any purpose for which goods which complied with the description under which these goods were sold would normally be used, and hence were not saleable under that description." This is an objective test: "were of no use for any purpose . . ." must mean "would not have been used by a reasonable man for any purpose . . .".

(1) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1934] A.C. 402.

(2) [1934] All E.R. Rep. at p. 14; [1934] A.C. at p. 430.

(3) (1815), 4 Camp. 144.

That would produce a sensible result. If the description in the contract was so limited that goods sold under it would normally be used for only one purpose then the goods would be unmerchantable under that description if they were of no use for that purpose. If, however, the description was so general that goods sold under it were normally used for several purposes then goods would be merchantable under that description if they were fit for any one of these purposes. If the buyer wanted the goods for one of those several purposes for which the goods delivered did not happen to be suitable, though they were suitable for other purposes for which goods bought under that description were normally bought, then he could not complain. He ought either to have taken the necessary steps to bring sub-s. (1) into operation or to have insisted that a more specific description must be inserted in the contract. That would be in line with the judgment of MELLOR, J., in Jones v. Just (4) which has always been regarded as high authority. He said (5):

"It appears to us that, in every contract to supply goods of a specified description which the buyer has no opportunity to inspect, the goods must not only in fact answer the specific description, but must also be saleable or merchantable under that description."

The buyer bought manilla hemp. On arrival the goods were found to be damaged to such an extent as not to be saleable under that description, and the buyer resold under the description "Manilla hemp with all faults" and received about seventy-five per cent. of what merchantable manilla hemp would have fetched. So it certainly could not be said that the goods were of no use; but the buyer recovered, as damages for breach of the implied warranty, the difference between what the hemp would have been worth if merchantable as manilla hemp and what he was able to get for it when sold "with all faults".

It would also be in line with what LORD WRIGHT said in Canada Atlantic Grain Export Co., Inc. v. Eilers (6). He said (7):

"If goods are sold under a description which they fulfil, and if goods under that description are reasonably capable in ordinary user of several purposes, they are of merchantable quality within s. 14 (2) of the Act if they are reasonably capable of being used for any one or more of such purposes even if unfit for use for that one of those purposes which the particular buyer intended."

There is another statement by LORD WRIGHT regarding s. 14 (2) in Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills, Ltd. (8). He said (9):

"The second exception [i.e., s. 14 (2)] in a case like this in truth overlaps in its application the first exception [i.e., s. 14 (1)]; whatever else 'merchantable' may mean, it does mean that the article sold, if only meant for one particular use in ordinary course, is fit for that use. 'Merchantable' does not mean that the thing is saleable in the market simply because it looks all right . . ."

That too appears to me to be in line with my amended version of what he said in the Cammell Laird case (10). Another explanation of the phrase "merchantable quality" which has frequently been quoted is that of FARWELL, L.J., in Bristol Tramways, etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd. (11). He said (12):

"The phrase in s. 14 (2) is, in my opinion, used as meaning that the article

(4) (1869), L.R. 3 Q.B. 197.

(5) (1869), L.R. 3 Q.B. at p. 205.

(6) (1929), 35 Lloyd L.R. 206.

(7) (1929), 35 Lloyd L.R. at p. 213.

(8) [1935] All E.R. Rep. 209; [1936] A.C. 85.

(9) [1935] All E.R. Rep. at p. 215; [1936] A.C. at pp. 99, 100.

(10) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1934] A.C. 402.

(11) [1908-10] All E.R. Rep. 113; [1910] 2 K.B. 831.

(12) [1908-10] All E.R. Rep. at pp. 117, 118; [1910] 2 K.B. at p. 841.

A is of such quality and in such condition that a reasonable man acting reasonably would, after a full examination, accept it under the circumstances of the case in performance of his offer to buy that article and, whether he buys for his own use or to sell again . . .”

I do not find this entirely satisfactory. I think what is meant is that a reasonable man in the shoes of the actual buyer would accept the goods as fulfilling the contract which was in fact made. But if the description was so wide that goods required for different purposes were commonly bought under it, and if these goods were suitable for some of those purposes, but not for the purpose for which the buyer bought them, it would have to be a very reasonable buyer indeed who admitted that the goods were merchantable, and that it was his own fault for not realising that goods might be merchantable under that description although unsuitable for his particular purpose.

There was also another explanation brought to our attention. In Australian Knitting Mills, Ltd. v. Grant (13), DIXON, J., said (14):

“The condition that goods are of merchantable quality requires that they should be in such an actual state that a buyer fully acquainted with the facts and therefore, knowing what hidden defects exist and not being limited to their apparent condition would buy them without abatement of the price obtainable for such goods if in reasonable sound order and condition and without special terms.”

I would only qualify this by substituting “some buyers” for “a buyer”. “A buyer” might mean any buyer. Moreover for the purposes for which some buyers wanted the goods the defects might make the goods useless, whereas for the purposes for which other buyers wanted them the existence of the defects would make little or no difference. That is in fact the position in the present case. I think that it must be inferred from the evidence that buyers who include ground nut extractions in their cattle foods are prepared to pay a full price for goods which may be contaminated; but buyers who only compound poultry foods would obviously not be prepared to buy contaminated goods at any price. Nevertheless contaminated ground nut extractions are merchantable under the general description of ground nut extractions because, rather surprisingly, some buyers appear to be ready to buy them under that description and to pay the ordinary market price for them. On the face of it s. 14 (1) of the Act of 1893 has a narrower scope. It requires that the buyers shall have required the goods for a particular purpose, that that purpose shall have been made known to the seller, and that it shall have been made known to him in such circumstances that he realised or ought to have realised that the buyer was relying on his using his skill or judgment to select goods fit for that purpose. Many cases in which the seller has been held liable under this subsection might equally well and more logically have been decided under s. 14 (2); but there has been a tendency to construe sub-s. (2) too narrowly and to compensate for that by giving a wide construction to sub-s. (1).

If the object of the disclosure of the particular purpose is, as I think it must be, to give to the seller an opportunity to exercise his skill or judgment in making or selecting appropriate goods, then it is difficult to see how a stated purpose can be a “particular” purpose if it is stated so widely that it would cover different qualities of goods, because carrying out the purpose in one way would only require a lower quality of goods whereas carrying it out in another way would require a higher quality. Different qualities normally sell at different prices. If a customer sought from a manufacturer or dealer cloth for the purpose of making overcoats, the dealer could not know what quality was required. A cut price tailor would not want to pay the price of cloth used in Savile Row, and the tailor in Savile Row would not use the quality which the cut price tailor wants. Unless the seller knew the nature of the buyer's business, his only clue to the quality which the buyer wanted would be the price which the buyer was prepared to pay. If a high price was offered it might no doubt be right to hold that he must supply goods suitable for high quality coats; but it could not be right that if the cloth was sold at a price appropriate for the lower quality, the dealer would have to supply a higher quality simply because the buyer had stated that his purpose was to make overcoats and the lower quality would not always be reasonably fit for making every kind of overcoat. A

(13) (1933), 50 C.L.R. 387.

(14) (1933), 50 C.L.R. at p. 418.

B

It was argued that, whenever any purpose is stated so as to bring this subsection into operation, the seller must supply goods reasonably fit to enable the buyer to carry out his purpose in any normal way. That can only be right however, if the purpose is stated with sufficient particularity to enable the seller to exercise his skill or judgment in making or selecting appropriate goods. The seller may know or be told that the merchant who is buying from him is buying for the purpose of reselling the goods in the course of his business. That may be sufficient to enable the seller to select appropriate goods or it may not. If the buyer's trade is such that some of his customers will want goods of the description which he is buying from the seller for one purpose or of one quality, and others of his customers will want goods of that description of another quality for another purpose, it could not be right that the buyer, merely by stating that he wants the goods for resale in the course of his business, could impose on the seller the obligation to supply goods reasonably fit for resale to every ordinary customer of the buyer no matter what his requirements might be. C
D

Perhaps the solution of this problem is to be found in the application of the requirement of the section that the particular purpose must be made known "so as to show that the buyer relied upon the seller's skill or judgment". A buyer who is buying for the purpose—known to the seller—of re-selling in the course of his business may want superior goods for which some of his customers will pay a high price, or he may want goods of lower quality to sell to less demanding customers. If he does not say which he wants, or at least indicate which he wants by the price which he is offering, how can he be relying on the seller to supply something reasonably fit for his purpose? The leading case is Manchester Liners, Ltd. v. Rea, Ltd. (15); but it is not a very satisfactory source from which to extract general principles. LORD BUCKMASTER began his speech by saying (16): E
F

"When the circumstances in which this appeal has arisen are examined, it will be found that its determination really depends upon the proper aspect of the facts rather than on an examination of uncertain principles of law." G

Rea were coal merchants and the shipowner's order was for "five hundred tons South Wales coal for the steamship Manchester Importer". It might seem from LORD BUCKMASTER's speech that there was something unusual about the furnaces in this ship, but LORD ATKINSON (17) quoted the findings of the trial judge that H

"coal actually delivered was not reasonably fit for an ordinary average Manchester steamer like the Manchester Importer in the hands of average officers and crew."

So one would assume that coal merchants could easily have found out, if they did not know already, what kind of coal was needed. LORD DUNEDIN said (18): I

"It was not the buyer who was going to find the coal. He says to the seller: 'I want five hundred tons for a special purpose, will you give it to me?' The seller could easily have guarded himself, but he merely answers 'Yes'

(15) [1922] All E.R. Rep. 605; [1922] A.C. 74.

(16) [1922] All E.R. Rep. at p. 606; [1922] A.C. at p. 77.

(17) [1922] All E.R. Rep. at pp. 609, 610; [1922] A.C. at p. 83.

(18) [1922] All E.R. Rep. at p. 609; [1922] A.C. at p. 82.

A by confirming the proposal as made. Not only so, but he came into court asserting that he did supply Welsh coal of suitable quality."

The passages in LORD BUCKMASTER'S speech usually quoted are (19):

B "It is plain that the order was expressed for the use of a particular steamship, and it must, therefore, be assumed that the respondents knew the nature of her furnaces and the character of the coal she used, for it was this coal they contracted to supply . . . If goods are ordered for a special purpose, and that purpose is disclosed to the vendor, so that in accepting it he undertakes to supply goods which are suitable for the object required, such a contract is, in my opinion, sufficient to establish that the buyer has shown that he relies on the seller's skill and judgment."

C I think that importance was attached to the fact that the seller was expressly told for what ship the coal was wanted. It is certainly not necessary in many cases that the buyer should state his purpose expressly, but in a doubtful case it is much easier to infer that the seller ought to have realised that the buyer was relying on him if the purpose is stated expressly. I am not at all convinced that that inference would have been drawn if Rea had merely happened to know—
D still less if he had merely assumed—that the coal was wanted for the Manchester Importer. I do not think that this case is any authority for the view, which has sometimes been expressed, that if the seller knows the purpose for which the buyer wants the goods it will be presumed that the buyer relied on his skill and judgment. LORD SUMNER said (20):

E "The words of s. 14 (1) are 'so as to show' not 'and also shows'. They are satisfied, if reliance is a matter of reasonable inference to the seller and to the court, and in this case I think the evidence supports the finding of SALTER, J., that the inference ought to be drawn."

LORD WRIGHT might appear to be going further when he said in the Cammell Laird case (21):

F "Such a reliance must be affirmatively shown; the buyer must bring home to the mind of the seller that he is relying on him in such a way that the seller can be taken to have contracted on that footing. The reliance is to be the basis of a contractual obligation."

I do not think, however, that he meant more than that in the whole circumstances a reasonable man in the shoes of the seller would have realised that he was being

G relied on. In Grant's case (22) he said (23):

H "It is clear that the reliance must be brought home to the mind of the seller, expressly or by implication. The reliance will seldom be express: it will usually arise by implication from the circumstances; thus to take a case like that in question of a purchase from a retailer the reliance will be in general inferred from the fact that a buyer goes to the shop in the confidence that the tradesman has selected his stock with skill and judgment: the retailer need know nothing about the process of manufacture; it is immaterial whether he be manufacturer or not; the main inducement to deal with a good retail shop is the expectation that the tradesman will have bought the right goods of a good make . . ."

I A shopkeeper's goodwill consists largely in his reputation of being reliable—the better the shop the easier it is to draw this inference.

Drummond v. Van Ingen (24) was decided at a time when there was no clear distinction between the two implied conditions which are now set out in s. 14 (1)

(19) [1922] All E.R. Rep. at p. 607; [1922] A.C. at p. 79.

(20) [1922] All E.R. Rep. at p. 613; [1922] A.C. at p. 90.

(21) [1934] All E.R. Rep. at p. 11; [1934] A.C. at p. 423.

(22) [1935] All E.R. Rep. 209; [1936] A.C. 85.

(23) [1935] All E.R. Rep. at p. 215; [1936] A.C. at p. 99.

(24) (1887), 12 App. Cas. 284.

and (2) of the Act of 1893. The contract was for "mixt worsted coatings" equal in quality and weight to samples. The goods were exported by Van Ingen but rejected by the buyers, returned and resold at a loss. Van Ingen claimed damages on the ground that the goods were not merchantable. The trial judge found that there was an implied warranty that the cloth should be merchantable generally as worsted coatings, should be properly manufactured and should be suitable to be made up into coats in the ordinary course of tailor's work, but that the cloth was not merchantable as worsted coating and was not properly manufactured and suitable to be made up into coats in the ordinary course of tailoring. The EARL OF SELBORNE said (25):

"I think your lordships must . . . take the existence of the defect, to a degree sufficient to render the cloth unmerchantable for the purposes for which goods of the same general class had previously been used in the trade, to have been sufficiently established."

He went on (26) to discuss the degree of knowledge of the trade to be expected of the manufacturer—but still I think in connexion with merchantability—for he said that the respondents had (27):

". . . a right to assume that the appellants, accepting the order, could and would produce and deliver a good article, having the weight and all the other apparent qualities of the samples, which would be as merchantable for coatings as other articles of the same class previously known in the trade."

LORD HERSCHELL and LORD MACNAGHTEN come nearer to applying the condition now set out in s. 14 (1). Indeed LORD MACNAGHTEN says (28):

"But the question is not were they saleable, but were they fit for the purpose for which they were known to have been ordered."

This was a case of the goods being bought from the manufacturer. It can only be in unusual circumstances that a buyer does not rely in part at least on the skill or judgment of the manufacturer, or that a manufacturer is entitled to assume that the buyer is not relying on him at least to some extent.

The difference between the two conditions—they were called warranties in these cases—is illustrated by the decision in Jones v. Padgett (29). The plaintiff was a wollen merchant and he ordered a quantity of "indigo blue cloth". He also had a tailor's business and he intended to use and did use the cloth for making servants' liveries. It proved to be not strong enough for that purpose and he sued for breach of an implied warranty that the cloth should be merchantable. He failed. The cloth was suitable for other purposes for which cloth of that description was ordinarily used, and he had not told the defendant the particular purpose for which he wanted it.

There is some Scottish authority for giving a restricted meaning to the phrase "particular purpose". In Flynn v. Scott (30) (an Outer House case) LORD MACKINTOSH followed an earlier view that decisions under the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, were applicable to s. 14 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. I think that this was wrong. The Act of 1856 required that the goods should have been "expressly sold for a specified and particular purpose"—words which seem to me to be much narrower than those in s. 14 (1). In Flynn's case (30) the buyer of a second hand motor van had informed the seller that he wanted it for the purposes of a haulage contractor and intended to use it for the carriage of articles such as furniture and livestock. That purpose appears to me to have been stated with sufficient particularity to enable the seller to use his skill and judgment and therefore to come within the scope of s. 14 (1).

We were also referred to a more recent case M'Callum v. Mason (31) where a nurseryman bought fertiliser for application to his 1952 tomato crop. It contained

(25) (1887), 12 App. Cas. at p. 287.

(26) (1887), 12 App. Cas. at p. 288.

(27) (1887), 12 App. Cas. at p. 289.

(28) (1887), 12 App. Cas. at p. 296.

(29) (1890), 24 Q.B.D. 650.

(30) 1949 S.C. 442.

(31) 1956 S.C. 50.

A poison and damaged both his 1952 and 1953 crops. The Second Division upheld that he could rely on s. 14 (1) of the Act of 1893 as regards the 1952 crop but not as regards the 1953 crop, because application to the later crop was not within the particular purpose for which he bought it. The court did not, however, consider the matter from the point of view of measure of damages—whether the seller ought to have known that it was not unlikely that some of the poisoned goods would remain and be used the next year without the buyer realising that the 1952 damage had been caused by this fertiliser. There appears to have been no doubt that the later damage was in fact caused by the breach of contract in delivering poisoned goods.

C There is no doubt that in this case Kendall knew that Grimsdale were buying the goods to resell to compounders of animal feeding stuffs. In 1960 that was, in my view, a particular purpose, because there is no evidence to show that it was not sufficiently particular to enable Kendall to exercise skill and judgment. It would not have helped Kendall to be told that the goods were ultimately to be fed to any particular kind or age of animal, because at that time nobody knew that what was suitable for one kind of animal might not be suitable for another. D Both Kendall and Grimsdale would assume that Grimsdale's customers would only include a suitable proportion in the particular food that they were compounding. If they caused damage by using a wrong formula for their product, neither Grimsdale nor Kendall would be responsible for that.

E The difficult question is whether the circumstances were such as to show that Grimsdale were relying on Kendall's skill and judgment. Before I come to that there are two other matters which require some explanation. If the law were always logical, one would suppose that a buyer, who has obtained a right to rely on the seller's skill and judgment, would only obtain thereby an assurance that proper skill and judgment had been exercised, and would only be entitled to a remedy, if a defect in the goods was due to failure to exercise such skill and judgment; but the law has always gone farther than that. By getting the seller F to undertake to use his skill and judgment the buyer gets under s. 14 (1) of the Act of 1893 an assurance that the goods will be reasonably fit for his purpose, and that covers not only defects which the seller ought to have detected but also defects which are latent in the sense that even the utmost skill and judgment on the part of the seller would not have detected them. It is for that reason that, if s. 14 (1) applies, Grimsdale are entitled to relief even although Kendall had no G reason to suspect that the goods might be poisoned.

Secondly, it is not necessary to decide whether today it would be a sufficiently particular purpose for Kendall to know that Grimsdale intended to resell to compounders of feeding stuffs. Today some compounders are willing to buy infected goods but presumably some are not, and I doubt whether mere knowledge on the part of Kendall that Grimsdale intended to re-sell would oblige Kendall to H supply goods free from this poison. I would readily accept that a customer, buying from an apparently reputable shopkeeper or from a manufacturer, will normally as a matter of fact be relying on the seller's skill and judgment, unless there is something to exclude the inference. I do not think, however, that the same can be said when two merchants equally knowledgeable deal with each other. Then I can see no reason in law or in fact for any presumption either way.

I If one merchant merely acquired from an importer by buying on c.i.f. documents goods from a normal source and then re-sold to another merchant by transfer of the c.i.f. documents before taking delivery, there might then be little or no reason to suppose that the former merchant had exercised or could have exercised any skill or judgment with regard to the quality of the goods or that the latter was relying on him; but that was not the position in this case. Kendall had acquired these goods from a new source and, one would suppose, must have exercised skill and judgment in deciding to buy them and put them on the market. Moreover, the evidence appears to me to show that Kendall were recommending them to Grimsdale. In order to bring this subsection into operation it is not necessary to show that the parties consciously applied their minds to the question. It is enough that a reasonable seller in the shoes of Kendall would have realised that he was inviting Grimsdale to rely on his skill and judgment, and that is what I think that in fact Kendall were doing; and the same applies to Holland Colombo. If that is right, then s. 14 (1) did apply to this case. I agree with your lordships that the clause in the contract on which Kendall rely as exempting them from liability does not apply. A

B

I turn now to the claims under the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926. Section 2 (2) provides:

“On the sale for use as food for cattle or poultry of an article included in the first column of Sch. 1 or Sch. 2 to this Act there shall be implied, notwithstanding any contract or notice to the contrary, a warranty by the seller that the article is suitable to be used as such, and does not, except as otherwise expressly stated in the statutory statement, contain any ingredient included in Sch. 3 to the Act.” C

In each case the buyers maintain against the sellers that the ground nut extractions (which are an article included in the Schedule) were sold to them for use as food for cattle or poultry, that therefore there was a warranty by the sellers that the goods were suitable to be used as such, that the goods were not suitable and that this defect caused the death of the pheasants for which S.A.P.P.A. had to pay damages to Hardwick Game Farm. So S.A.P.P.A. claim relief against Grimsdale, and Grimsdale in turn claim relief against Kendall. In each case the sellers have two answers. In the first place they put forward what has been called the “ingredients” point: they say that they did not sell for use as food because ground nut extractions are always compounded with other ingredients before being fed to animals. They argue that the Act of 1926 distinguishes between articles used as food and ingredients of such articles. I agree with your lordships that there is no substance in this argument. If a miller sells to a baker flour which is to be made into bread, or if a grocer sells dried fruit, eggs and butter which are to be made into a cake, all these articles are sold for use as food for human consumption, though none of them is to be eaten in the form in which it is sold; the fact that the Act of 1926 makes some distinctions between articles and ingredients does not in my view indicate any intention to limit the generality of the provision in this section. Any such limitation would produce capricious results and would go far to thwart the obvious purpose of this legislation. D
E
F

The second argument requires more consideration. In the first place they say that pheasants are not poultry, and that therefore the subsection does not apply. I do not think that these pheasants were poultry. They were reared for the purpose of being released to serve as targets for sportsmen, and pheasants which have never been in captivity are clearly not poultry. It may well be that, if it should prove profitable to rear and keep pheasants in captivity until killed for human consumption, such pheasants should be regarded as poultry. The mere fact, however, that these pheasants like other game will come to the table after they have been shot seems to me to be immaterial. It would not in my view be in accordance with the ordinary use of language to say that they were poultry until released and then became game. They were game throughout, and the farm where they were reared was properly called a game farm. G
H

The next question is whether the subsection applies when the damage is done to some animals other than cattle or poultry. The argument is that this Act of 1926 was passed for the protection of cattle and poultry and their owners, and cannot have been intended to confer rights when other animals have been harmed. I would accept that if this provision were reasonably capable of that interpretation, but I do not think that it is. It may be that, if a customer states that his purpose is to feed the goods to some other animals, or even if the seller happens to know that, the section does not apply because the food was not sold for use I

A as food for cattle or poultry and the mere fact that the bag is labelled "poultry food" would not matter; but that is not this case.

The main purpose for which S.A.P.P.A. bought was, as Grimsdale knew, to include these goods in compound foods for pigs and poultry (pigs are included in the definition of cattle), and it would appear that only a small part of their production was sold to the game farm for pheasants. So one must construe the

B subsection. Does it mean that the warranty is to the effect that if the goods are fed to cattle or poultry they are guaranteed to be suitable, or does it mean that they are guaranteed to be of a quality suitable for cattle and poultry? If the former is right then no warranty would operate until the goods are fed to these animals; if the latter then the warranty is broken as soon as the goods are delivered and damages can be claimed before the goods are fed to any animals

C on proof of their defective quality. I cannot avoid the conclusion that the latter is the true meaning.

So in this case this statutory warranty was broken when Grimsdale delivered the goods to S.A.P.P.A. because they were by reason of the poison unsuitable to be used as food for poultry; and it becomes an ordinary question of remoteness of damage whether damage suffered by loss of pheasants is recoverable. The

D question then is whether Grimsdale knew or as reasonable traders in this market ought to have known that it was not unlikely that part of the goods which they sold would ultimately be fed to pheasants. There is no evidence that they did know, but other traders in the market certainly knew that, and poultry food has been fed to pheasants for many years. I cannot avoid the conclusion that, if Grimsdale had thought about it, they would have realised that compounds

E sold by country compounders like S.A.P.P.A. were quite likely to be fed to pheasants. If that is so then this damage was not too remote. I agree with your lordships that the clause in the contract which purports to exclude Grimsdale's liability in certain cases does not apply to this case. I am therefore of opinion that Grimsdale's appeal against S.A.P.P.A. ought to be dismissed and I return to Kendall's appeal against Grimsdale.

F The question whether the statutory warranty under the Act of 1926 attached to the contract between Kendall and Grimsdale raises another question of quite a different character. Kendall held various c.i.f. documents which gave them a right to large quantities of these Brazilian goods which were in transit in various vessels. In particular they held such documents for 750 tons, and these they sold to Grimsdale, who took delivery of the appropriate c.i.f. documents. Counsel

G were agreed about the general legal effect of that sale. When goods are shipped c.i.f., there is a contract of affreightment under which the master of the vessel is bound to deliver the goods to whoever produces the documents at the end of the voyage. While the goods are in transit the first holder of the documents can sell the goods to a buyer by delivering the documents in exchange for payment of the price, and there may be a chain of such sales. None of the sellers knows for certain

H whether his buyer will take delivery or will re-sell the goods by delivering the documents to another buyer. None of these sales is intimated to the master of the vessel. He has no concern with them, and once a seller has delivered the documents and received the price he has no concern with further sales or with the ultimate delivery of the goods. He does not deliver the goods either actually or fictionally to his buyer on their arrival. The only delivery of the goods is by the master to

I the ultimate buyer who presents the documents to him.

Kendall contend that the statutory warranty never attaches to any sale by delivery of c.i.f. documents. This matter was considered by the Court of Appeal in C. E. B. Draper & Son, Ltd. v. Edward Turner & Son, Ltd. (32) but I agree with my noble and learned friend LORD WILBERFORCE that the reasoning in that decision cannot be supported. Accordingly I must go back to the Act of 1926 and examine its purpose and effect. It attaches the warranty to sales of feeding stuffs for cattle or poultry. That is obviously intended to protect livestock and its owners and Parliament must have had in mind primarily at least livestock in this country. There is a general presumption that Parliament does not intend to legislate with regard to things done abroad; and this provision cannot be held to apply to a foreign sale which has no other connexion with this country than that it was the buyer's intention to bring the feeding stuffs here for use in this country. Farther, I do not think that Parliament can have intended the warranty to attach to an English contract for the sale of feeding stuffs which are in transit to a foreign country. What then if the seller knows that the buyer intends to take delivery of goods consigned to a British port and immediately ship them abroad? It does not seem to be within the purpose of the Act of 1926 that this warranty should be compulsorily attached to that contract. The warranty will not attach to further sales to the farmer in the foreign country. There must be many sales by delivery of c.i.f. documents where neither the seller nor the buyer knows for certain how or where the goods will ultimately be used, because the buyers may intend to re-sell to the highest bidder before the goods are delivered. It is sufficient to attract the warranty that the parties to such a sale know that there is a probability that the goods will ultimately be used as food for cattle or poultry in this country? The operation of s. 2 (2) of the Act of 1926 is certainly not confined to sales to farmers or others who intend to feed the goods to their own livestock, however with regard to imported goods its operation must stop somewhere, and where it is to stop must be determined by examining the terms of the Act of 1926.

Section 1 requires the seller to deliver to the buyer a statement in writing regarding the nature, substance and quality of the goods before or as soon as reasonably practicable after delivery. I do not see how that section can apply to a seller on c.i.f. documents. Even if he knows enough to enable him to complete the statement, he never delivers the goods to the buyer, and if the buyer re-sells on the documents he never takes delivery of the goods. Section 3 entitles the purchaser to have a sample taken within fourteen days after delivery to him; that cannot apply, if neither the seller nor the buyer has ever taken delivery of the goods. Failure to comply with these and other requirements of the Act of 1926 involves criminal liability. There are obvious difficulties in the way of enforcing criminal liability against c.i.f. sellers. Leaving aside s. 2 and s. 5 it appears to me that the operation of the Act of 1926 is confined to sales of goods where the seller can make delivery to the buyer in this country.

Section 5 applies where the goods are delivered from a ship or quay to the purchaser. It appears to assume that the delivery will be made by or on behalf of the seller, for it imposes duties on the seller to keep a register of certain particulars; but the last buyer on c.i.f. documents does not take delivery from the seller, and the master does not deliver as the agent of the last c.i.f. seller. That seller has no concern with the goods at that stage and I do not see how he can keep this register. Unless the buyer from him or the master chooses to give him information, he cannot make out this register. I cannot read into the Act of 1926 provisions which would be necessary to enable or require the last c.i.f. seller to comply with the provisions of this section. Any c.i.f. seller may be the last because his buyer may take delivery, or he may not be the last because his buyer may resell on the documents. I can find nothing in the Act of 1926 to require or to enable every c.i.f. seller to find out whether his buyer has re-sold on the documents or has taken delivery of the goods.

So it appears to me to be clear that no part of the Act of 1926 other than s. 2 (2) can apply to a seller who sells by delivery of the documents. Why should s. 2 (2) alone apply to him? To hold that it did would do no good to the farmer or the person who feeds the goods to his livestock. It would only be of advantage to the merchant like Grimsdale, who was the last buyer who took delivery of the c.i.f. documents. Some merchant has to bear the ultimate liability because it cannot go back to the person who was primarily responsible—the producer in

- A Brazil. It seems to me that all the arguments are in favour of construing s. 2 so that this warranty attaches to sellers who have duties to perform under the Act of 1926, but that it does not attach to contracts made by sellers who are not otherwise affected by the Act of 1926. In my view Kendall had no duties to perform under the Act of 1926 and the warranty did not attach to the contract of sale which they made with Grimsdale by delivery of the c.i.f. documents to
- B Grimsdale. The same must apply to Holland Colombo. I would dismiss the appeals of Kendall and Holland Colombo because, and only because, there attached to the contracts made by them conditions in terms of s. 14 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and the appellants were in breach of these conditions.

- I have already stated that I would dismiss the second appeal because Grimsdale were liable to S.A.P.P.A. by reason of a breach of the statutory warranty under
- C the Act of 1926.

- LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST: My Lords, after Hardwick Game Farm fed certain compounded meal to their pheasants and partridges and poults and chicks the consequences were disastrous and alarming. Many of the young birds died, many were made ill, many were permanently affected. The
- D litigation which resulted has involved many parties and has raised varied and diverse legal issues. The compounded meal had been bought by Hardwicks from S.A.P.P.A. It undoubtedly contained a deleterious substance which, as has been held, undoubtedly was the cause of the havoc. Invoking the provisions of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926, and s. 14 (1) and (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, Hardwicks sued S.A.P.P.A. S.A.P.P.A. had compounded
- E the meal and in doing so had used as an ingredient some Brazilian fifty per cent. fine ground extracted ground nut meal, some of which they had bought from Lillico and some of which they had bought from Grimsdale. So those two companies were brought in by S.A.P.P.A. as third parties. Lillico had bought ground nut meal (to a larger extent) from Kendalls; Grimsdale had bought ground nut meal (to a larger extent) partly from Kendalls and partly from Holland Colombo.
- F So Kendalls and Holland Colombo who imported the meal were brought in as fourth parties.

- Before the litigation came on for trial S.A.P.P.A. compromised the claim of Hardwicks and agreed to pay a certain sum. All parties have recognised that the settlement was wise and reasonable, and the issues between S.A.P.P.A. and the third parties and those between the third and fourth parties have been fought
- G on the basis that any liability should be related to the sum which S.A.P.P.A. agreed to pay.

- It is now known that the deleterious substance in the compounded meal which S.A.P.P.A. sold to Hardwicks was a toxin, which has been given the name "aflatoxin". In the careful judgment of HAVERS, J., his finding (resulting from a consideration of much detailed evidence) is recorded that the toxin was in the
- H ground nut meal before it was shipped from Brazil and was therefore in the ground nut meal bought by S.A.P.P.A. Its presence was not visible and was not known to any of the parties.

- It was held by the learned judge that when S.A.P.P.A. bought the ground nut meal from Lillico they made it known to Lillico that their purpose in buying the meal was so that it should be compounded into feeding stuffs for various kinds of poultry and pigs. They had previously bought ground nut meal from Lillico, though not Brazilian ground nut meal. Brazilian ground nut meal had not been imported into this country before 1959. S.A.P.P.A. had previously
- I also bought ground nut meal from Grimsdale. The judge held that S.A.P.P.A. also made known to Grimsdale that their purpose in buying the meal was so that they would use it in their compounds for pig and poultry rations. On these facts it was held by the judge and unanimously in the Court of Appeal (33) that S.A.P.P.A. could successfully rely on s. 14 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, as against Lillico and Grimsdale. It was in the course of the latter's business to supply meal and S.A.P.P.A. had made known their particular purpose in buying, so as to show that they relied on the skill and judgment of Lillico and Grimsdale. Lillico did not appeal against the finding of the learned judge that they were liable to S.A.P.P.A.

